35-7-135

We believe in the Welfare state and in no other kind of state. We believe that the Social Planning long carried on by oligarchies in private industry for private profit should be taken over by the State and carried on by open and public organs responsible to democracy and not to monopolized wealth.

As Negroes, we are workers and proud to work and not live luxuriously on the cheap toil of others. As laborers we greet labor of all colors, in every land and clime: in Russia and New China; in Europe before and behind the Iron Curtain and here in America. We demand freedom to organize without court injunctions and we deplore the surrender of our courts to wealth and class.

We ask the extention of government in industry by projects like the TVA and its extention to the Missouri-Mississippi valleys and the Saint Lawrence. We want government aid to education, socialized medicine and social security. Down with witch-hunting and down with War. Out with the insane idea that we ~~xhaxxxxxxxxxpxxixexxMxxxxxxxxx

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

Leading Editorial Apr 1

35-7-186

Since this particular Crow began his wandering and muttering in 1929, he has found many and varied nests and answering winds and hurricanes. His cries have been interspersed with silences and shoutings and even with threats; still my restless meandering has continued. Even the gag applied securely in 1948, by a singularly unpleasant fool, now falls away.

First came the Fall of 1929 and the fall of the system of capitalism, which with new technology and new materials based on African slave labor, ruled more of the world than ever before bowed to one master. Once our own mulatto Pushkin wrote:

> My father sees in money neither friend
> Nor servant, but a master--whom he serves.
> And serves him how? Like an Algerian slave,
> Like a chained dog. Within his fireless hovel
> He lives, drinks water, eats cry crusts of bread,
> Ne'er sleeps at night, but runs about and barks.
> The gold meanwhile is sleeping in the chests
> All quietly. But hush! the day will come
> When 't will serve me and forget to sleep.
> Yes, at his lordship's funeral will flow
> More gold than tears. And may God make you now
> His heir as soon as possible.

We are still too near the event to see the world significance of the crash of 1929, to most of us it was but another of those financial crises which have visited us about every ten years since 183 . It was a bigger one, with more suicides, more distress and more men out of work. But the future was clear: we must restore the system of world industry. We did not. We could not. We saw in 1929, not another crises but the end of an era and the beginning of a new deal.

First came the aftermath of the revolution in Russia, for ten years Europe and America tried to beat back Bolshevism in Russia. Fourteen nations including the United States invaded her. The depression stopped their efforts. The world market ceased to function--that intricate system of manufacture, trade and colonies which regulated this world market was based on the Gold Standard disappeared when Gold was devalued everywhere.

35-7-187

Then came the dictators, Hitler and Mussolini and Franco, who tried to restore the capitalist system with new masters among men and nations. Every effortt was made by Britain, France and the United States to join with these dictators in this restoration, but the dictators wanted first too large a share and when this was offered, then they demanded dictatorship of the world. This had to be refused and in a Second World War, to the astonishment of mankind, it was Russia, with 15 million dead, who saved Britain, France and the United States.

Meantime a new series of events led to the rise of Asia to a position never dreamed since the European conquest of India. Japan had developed in the 19th century to a powerful empire, overcoming both Czarist Russia and China in war. The West regarded her at first as sport of nature; then as an impudent nuisance and at last as a rival. This rivalry arose to partnership in the First World War. But ambitious Japan became not only an industrial competitor of Europe but eventually demanded control of colonial Asia. She joined the German and Italian dictatore to enforce this demand and then suddenly attacked the colonial possessions of the United States, Britain, France and Holland. In a whirlwind war, she stretched her empire 6000 miles from the Aleutian Islands to Australia and rolled west in China toward India. It took the combining efforts of Europe and America, and finally the threat of Russia and the atom bomb to subdue her.

Then came effort through world organization to restore Peace. But it met two difficulties; first the Asia which Japan conquered with that which she tried to conquer and that which her success inspired, all demanded freedom from European control. Now a restored col nial imperialism without colonial Asia was unthinkable. Moreover Russia and the Balkans demanded not simply restoration but entire re-building of the industrial world on new lines and with new methods.

35-7-188

The United Nations began to split into two irreconcilible parts, each of which began to arm against the other on a scale unheard of in history; so that not only a third world war was threatened, but because of the knowledge of atomic power, the collapse of the very body of modern culture. Here we stand today and every thinking human being is faced by the query: what can we or should we do about this situation?

And now to other matters, if there are other matters. Where do American Negroes stand? Our unity of thought and programme l ng forced on us by segregation and discrimination is beginning to disappear by the slow but certain success of escaping from our physical and spiritual ghetto. As we become merged more and more with white Americans, we begin to imitate them and give up all independence of thought or action. And we choose for our guides in this attitude the class of Americans with most power and prestige. Thus unconsciously we reinforce the most dangerous elements in America: the conspicious spenders, the gamblers, the rich, the big employers, the monopolists. Remember the story of the Chicago white man weeping on the curb:

"What's wrong friend?"

"I wish I was colored so I could get a Cadillac."

And so far as industrial reform is concerned, most Negroes have no dream of such a thing. Socialism? What's that? Social Medicine? No, sir, it won't work; Security? We agree with the great Eisenhower, that is possible only in jail.

Manifestly American Negroes as a group need a new race loyalty, a new cultural unity to guide them and their white friends out of this wilderness.

Mailed to Hope - 4/3/50

AS THE CROW FLIES

By

W. E. B. DU BOIS

WAR

The present desperate effort to force the American people into war is simply mass hysteria. It is comparable to the European insanity in the year 1000 A.D., when all good Christians thought the world was coming to an end. They gave away property, fled to mountains and deserts, and spent in prayer the time they should have spent in work. They damned the devil, committed suicide and acted far and wide like fools. So too in 1755, an earthquake and tidal wave killed nearly 20,000 persons in Lisbon and scared Europe into religious frenzy and revolt. Voltaire's Candide was written to restore the world's reason.

35-7-183

So today after two horrible wars which have destroyed modern industry we want a war to restore it. Above the bloody dead we scream for more murder. We mush arms and coco-cola to Europe. We drive some of our best men to suicide; we smear all men who ever dared to be liberal with lies and they yell back that they never were liberal and never will be and then we appropriate $15 billions for war while Eisenhower yells for $15,600,000, and Baruch wants to draft everybody for immediate war. The nation has gone crazy.

LASKI

The death of Harold Laski is a calamity to the world. He was a great scholar, a scientific socialist, an inspiring teacher and a Jew. The last time I visited him in the University of London, he was rejoicing at the appointment of a Negro to a chair in a British University. That he knew and studied the American Negro problem, is shown from one passage in his last book, "The American Democracy" (1948): "Let us begin by realising that we confront a condition and not a theory. Whatever be the small improvements made here and there in the treatment of the Negro, he is, in general, as ruthlessly exploited as the contempt and ingenuity of the South permit. He is exploited as citizen, as consumer, as producer. Whatever institutions can be so operated as to effect his being driven to a consciousness of inferiority and a sense of hopelessness, they are so operated. Even for the educated or wealthy Negro the South is a prison. Attempts by liberal-minded men and women to mitigate the barbarity of the present situation are always timed and utter disproportionate to the scale of the problem."

35-7-184

FREDERICK DOUGLASS

At last Philip S. Foner has given the world a definitive "Life and Writings of Frederick Douglass." His life has long since been written, in his own classic "Narrative;" in many editions of his "Life and Times." But now for the first time his writings--his contributions to the "North Star"; his speeches and letters, are available after ~~sixty~~ years of toil, travel and tireless inquiry. Foner says in his preface: " Six years ago I undertook to collect and prepare for publication the writings and speeches of Frederick Douglass. Through the kindness and help of a large number of historical societies and libraries as well as private individuals, I was not only able to obtain copies of all of Douglass' speeches and letters now available, but I was also able to assemble most of the issues of the paper which Douglass believed had disappeared forever.

"The Life and Writings of Frederick Douglass" will, in four volumes entitled, EARLY YEARS, THE PRE-CIVIL WAR DECADE, THE CIVIL WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION AND AFTER. Each volume includes the most important of Dougless' writings and speeches, letters, and editorials covering the period indicated, preceded by a study of the man and his times covering the same period."

Dr. Foner is a young white man who has devoted strength and enthusiasm to this labor of love. Every Negro in the United States should buy and read this monumental work.

ETHIOPIA

35-7-185

The Emperor of Ethiopia has sent out this appeal to the world, which the American press has ignored: "I, Haile Sellassie, Emperor of Ethiopia, faithful member of the United Nations, feel it to be my duty again to raise my voice in true humility and out of a deep sense of obligation to my people and to the preservation of justice and human relationship.

"I can say, with perhaps pardonable pride, that I have been the only sovereign of an independent people, in its hour of destiny, to voice to the world a prophecy, proved by subsequent history to have been only too true, to the catastrophic events which would, and which in fact, did lead o to the Second World War.

"By decision of the Assembly, Italy has been entrusted with the administration of Somaliland, and ~~through that decision~~ again becomes a neighbour of Ethiopia. Italian administration brought to Somaliland poverty, misery, and racial discrimination, corruption and favours for the few. These are facts clearly stated in official records for the study of all. How can the same Italy, who during sixty years occupation of the territory, did nothing to the inhabitants save to use them for her imperialistic exploitation, be expected to prepare them in ten years for independence?

"Who knows, who can tell, in the fantastic pace with which humanity is now rushing forward through new permutations of power, what other consequences may follow this fateful decision? As for Ethiopia, we cannot, so help us God, for the sake of our national security forget or close our eyes to those lessons, nor can that be asked of us. We are fighting for our sacred rights, for the rights of Ethiopia so brutally violated in the past and for the natural rights of those, our peoples , separated from us by acts of Imperialism.

Mailed April 7, 19 50

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

NEGRO AND LABOR

It has been difficult to sell labor alliance to the Negro people. Nourished in the slave-born hatred of the poor whites and envy of the master class, the Negro made approach to labor after Reconstruction, when the new post-war labor movement tried to attract the freedmen. The Knights of Labor had a growing Negro membership. But the American Federation of Labor, which succeeded it, was always anti-Negro in in some respects still is. It was built as a bourgeois organization and not as one which recognised a permanent laboring class. Each worker in the more skilled trades or leader of outstanding gifts looked forward to escaping from the ranks of labor into that of employer; or even into the white collar and professional class in the case of his children. He had not respect for laborers as such and was not fighting to raise labor to a decent standard of life and respectable soical status; no what he wanted was to escape from the laboring class altogether.

35-7-196

This ambition corresponded exactly with the ambition of the rising Negro. His leaders too wanted to escape from the working and servile class. Booker Washington pointed a way of escape, and wanted them, as many as possible to escape. He was against labor unions, not only those who discriminated against Negroes, but against all who fought capital for he saw salvation only in capitalism. It was the CIO which first envisaged a broad union of all labor as a class, to raise that class to a high standard of living as laborers.

THE NEGRO AS CAPITALIST

When the CIO came on the scene, there was already a small Negro capitalist class, employers of labor and allied with an intelligentia of professional man. From such a Talented Tenth, I had in earlier days looked for leadership of the laboring masses, capable not only of raising the living standards and social significance of black workers, but also of producing a Negro art and literature, and although a socialist, tended to ignore the roots of art in work. I lived to see, therefore, the emerging upper class among Negroes become more and more a part of the employing and expl iting class, and moving away in body and spirit from the toilers. Labor became in this third generation increadingly a badge of former slavery and present discrimination. Labor unionism enforced this movement by the alliance of both CIO and AFL with wealth to suppress the welfare state , refrain from political action, and to refuse to see in the New Deal the future increasing socialization of industry, with its inevitable uplift of labor as labor. We are thus fronted today with a reactionary Negro leadership, which worships wealth, goes in for conspicuous expenditure, glorifies riches even if rooted in gambling and crime, and recoils from the labor movement, white or black. Alliance with Big Business and monopoly. Industry is its ideal. It is against social medicine, government in business, and a planned economy. It has interest in the world-wide development of socialism.

35-7-167

THAT FOURTH POINT

President is a great guy for promises. Suppose they never come to fruition? That is not his responsibility and he was elected President on promises. So in his Inaugural Address the President expressed his intention of making "the benefits of our scientific advances and industrial progress available for the improvement and growth of undeveloped areas." Of course we who have grown sceptical when white people get philanthropic, were afraid we saw in this gesture the old missionary spirit which always ushers in European exploitation even with the most sincere missionaries. But we waited to be shown. We are still waiting. The departments of government took a year to work out a plan to implement Point Four and then instead of making it a function of the UNITED NATIONS, as Truman planned, it was to be run by the United States and investments "guaranteed". The State department then planned "economic, engineering, medical and educational assiatance" at a cost of $45 million. This was reduced to $20 million and some congressmen insisted that this be a single country program and not general. Here we rest. If anything comes of Point Four, it will probably be another effort to make profit for Americans out of cheap col nial labor and materials, or to see Coco-Cola to the wine making lands. So much for the Promising President.

PEACE AND ATOMS

35-7-198

There is wide-spread feeling among Negroes that the more the white world fights, the more the black world profits. Quite a list of gains from two world wars, not to include the Civil War, might be made to support this thesis. But with the changing character of war this belief is less to be trusted than ever, if indeed it was at all valid in the past.

Our lot is cast with modern European civilization. It is possible that if African and Asiatic cultures had not been so ruthlessly destroyed by 18th and 19th century Europe a far better world would be ours to live in than Europe presents us today. But the European hodge-podge is here and here we must live and deal. What hurts that world then then hurts us, no matter how many temporal advantages we may reap in world disaster. With the measureless threat of the Atom we are in grave dang r. War changes from the struggle of armies to mass destruction with the resultant moral and physical degeneration which two world wars already show. The world is sick and crazy from mass murder and we cannot thrive in a crazy and sick world. America began it. The United States made the first bomb and killed in two blows 150,000 unarmed civilians. This was the cruelest case of mass murder ever perpetrated. If it happens again, it will kill the souls of men. The world is soulless enough as it is. We should make every effort for Peace.

As the Crow Flies

NEGRO AND LABOR

It has been difficult to sell labor alliance to the Negro people. Nourished in the slave-born hatred of the poor whites and envy of the master class, the Negro made approach to labor after Reconstruction, when the new post-war labor movement tried to attract the freedmen. The Knights of Labor had a growing Negro membership. But the American Federation of Labor, which succeeded it, was always anti-Negro and in some respects still is. It was built as a bourgeois organization and not as one which recognized a permanent laboring class. Each worker of the more skilled trades or of outstanding gifts of leadership, looked forward to escaping from the ranks of labor into that of employer; or even into the white collar and professional class in the case of his children. He had no respect for laborers as such and was not fighting to raise labor to a decent standard of life and respectable social status; no, what he wanted was to escape from the laboring class altogether. This ambition corresponded exactly with the ambitions of the rising Negro. His leaders too wanted to escape from the working and servile class. Booker Washington pointed a way of escape, and wanted them as many as found escape, and was against labor unions, not only those who discriminated against Negroes, but against all who fought capital. It was the CIO which first envisaged a broad union of all labor as a class, to raise that class to a high standard of living as laborers

42-6D-1

THE NEGRO AS CAPITALIST

When the CIO came on the scene, there was already a small Negro capitalist class, employers of labor and allied with an intelligentia of professional men. From such a Talented Tenth, I had in earlier days looked for leadership of the laboring masses, capable not only of raising the living standards and social significance of black workers, but also of producing a Negro art and literature. But in my thinking I stressed the role of the artist and writer above that of the worker, and although a socialist, tended to ignore the roots of art in work. I lived to see, therefore, the emerging upper class among Negroes become more and more a part of the employing and exploiting class, and moving away in body and spirit from the toilers. Labor became in this third generation increasingly a badge of former slavery and present discrimination. Labor unionism enforced this separation by alliance with wealth to suppress the welfare state and refuse to see in the New Deal the future socialization of industry, with its inevitable uplift of labor as labor. We are thus fronted today with a reactionary Negro leadership, which worships wealth, goes in for conspicuous expenditure, glorifies riches even if rooted in gambling and crime, and recoils from the labor movement, white or black. Alliance with Big Business and monopoly Industry is its ideal.

It is against social medicine, government in business, a planned economy. It has interest and sees no alliance with the World-Wide development of socialism over the world

THAT FOURTH POINT

President is a great guy for promises. Suppose they never come to fruition? That is not his responsibility and he was elected President on promises. So in his Inaugural address the President expressed his intention of making "the benefits of our scientific advances and industrial progress available for the improvement and growth of undeveloped areas". Of course we who have grown sceptical when white people get philanthropic, were afraid we saw in this gesture the old missionary spirit which always so as to usher in the same kind of European exploitation that invariably followed even well the most sincere missionaries. But we waited to be shown. We are still waiting. The departments of government took a year six months to work out a plan to implement Point Four and then instead of making it a function of UN, as Truman planned, it was to be run by the United States and investments "guaranteed" The State department then planned " economic, engineering, medica l and eaducational assist ance at an initial cost of $45 million . This was the House has reduced to $20 million and some congressmen insist that this be a single country program and not general. Here we reach If anything comes of Point Four, it will probably be another effort to make profit for Americans out of cheap colonial labor and materials. So much for the Promising President or 2) see Coca-Cola & the wine mining Lands

PEACE AND ATOMS

There is wide-spread feeling among Negroes that the more the white world fights, the more the black world profits. Quite a list of gains from two world wars, not to include the Civil War, might be made to support this thesis. But with the changing character of war this belief is less to be trusted than ever, if indeed it was at all valid in the past.

Our lot is cast with modern European civilization. It is possible that if African and Asiatic cultures had not been so ruthlessly distroyed by 18th and 19 century Europe a far better world would have been evolved than Europe presents us today. But the European hodge-podge is now our world and here we must live in it and deal with it. What hurts that world then hurts us, no matter how many little advantages we might temporal reap by world disaster. With the measureless threat of the Atom we are in grave danger. War changes from the struggle of armies to mass destruction with the resultant moral and physical debeneration which two world wars already show, The world is sick and crazy from mass murder and America began it. The United States made the first bomb and killed 150,000 xxxxxxxxxx unarmed civilians This was the cruelest case of mass murder ever perpetrated. If it happens again, it will kill the souls of men. The world is soulless enough as it is. We should make every effort for Peace.

42-6D-2

April 12, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

ECONOMIC TEACHING

I am convinced that school children today are denied adequate teaching covering the main facts of work and wage, income and property. Now if this is true in elementary education, what does the college do to remedy this lack? First of all, most citizens do not attend college and therefore their training in economics ends before it begins. Moreover, even the colleges touch this matter of work and income gingerly. It was a hot subject in my day, and in these days it is a dangerous one. Many a professor has lost his job by talking too frankly on these matters. Yet this is the problem before us. This is why we today are a frightened nation, afraid of our jobs and our reputations and looking over our shoulder for spies. Above all we know that the world today is in sight of the most horrible of three horrible wars, even though nine out of ten of the world's inhabitants are passionately against war. And at the basis of this proposed war is the question of changing our industrial system about which we are abysmally ignorant. For three centuries we have given our thought , ingenuity and energy, to technical conquest of the physical universe. Our success has been miraculous and driven us mad with pride of power. But since the beginning of our era; since the Industrial Revolution, based on American Negro slavery, made white Europe arbiter of the destiny of the world, wise men have warned that technique and wealth would choke civilisation, unless we rationalized and controlled production and distribution. This wisdom has been deliberately ignored. It has not been taught in our schools save by exception nor mentioned often in our pulpits. Those men today who are swearing before God that they never advocated changing our industrial system from its present contradictions and injustice to something better should remember that in that case they are the only men of sense and insight in the last 300 years who have not advocated reform and even revolution in our industrial organization. The passionate cry for reform did not begin with Karl Marx, nor will it end with Joseph Stalin. It cannot in the long run be murdered by war nor scared to death by witch hunts. It will endure as long as civilisation endures because it is founded on science, justice, and commonsense.

35-4-14

MY ADVENTURE IN INDUSTRY

After graduating from high school I remained in my home town awaiting a chance to go to college. I found work that year on a project which threw me into close contact with industry. A daughter of our town had gone West and married one of the builders of the Union Pacific railroad, who had become rich by methods not to be too narrowly investigated. After his death she came home and determined to build a mansion on one of the broadest of our green meadows and out of our blue granite nestling in our mountains. A noted firm of builders and an aristocratic English architect came to do the job. Because a great uncle of mine had worked for this family years before and received no pay, I was given a place as timekeeper on the job at a dollar a day which was fabulous wage for me. I felt quite like a capitalist as I distributed pay checks and kept track of working hours. Here began my education in applied economics. I was not so sure that hard work brought high pay. I wondered what happened when with no previous notice I handed a mason a card of dismissal. In high school I had learned that Unions among workers were useless in practice and wrong in concept. Strikes interfered with freedom and I had never seen one in my life. But I did notice that on this job the worker who complained or was fired had absolutely no chance to explain. That did not seem quite fair. Then to this came a crowning event. Suddenly the aristocratic but penniless architect married the rich widow. The steward who had served her many years and whom I knew well, committed suicide. Eventually the widow died and the architect inherited her millions. This affronted even the conservative economics of my town. We had considered property a strictly private matter, because, we argued, if a man made his money it was his to do with as he pleased. No one had a right to inquire or interfere. But in this peculiar case a man who certainly did not make this fortune had the unquestioned right to it. That sent me further afield. It was easy to go on from there. No man makes his fortune. He merely helps in greater or lesser degree to make wealth. "We" are the ones who make fortunes. All who join in the intricate and related work that appears in the final product as clothes, shoes, homes and railroads. So that division of the end result covering years of work, thousands of workers and hundreds of middlemen ~~was~~ a matter of intricacy and mystery. Certainly it had been a mystery to us school children and was mentioned less often than the creation of the universe, in which we were fairly wellversed.

35-4-15

35-4-16

DREW

The world has lost a great and valuable healer of men in Charles Drew. He died because of an American custom which must be discarded. He attended an official banquet for the athletes of Howard, Thursday night and made the main address. On Friday, he attended an banquet for the faculty of the Howard Medical School, and of course he worked the days between. He could not get away until two o'clock Saturday morning, but without sleep he started to drive 800 miles from Washington to Tuskegee. At 7:30 Saturday morning he nodded at the wheel of his big car; it ran off the concrete highway onto the soft shoulder of the road, sharply he jerked it back and two tons of steel hurtled over and over, crushing his shoulders, legs, arms and chest. He died thirty minutes later.

Why? Ehy? Why? What was the hurry, the rush? He could have gone comfortably by Pullman to Cheehaw, he could have flown quickly by airplane to Montgomery. I know how tempting a trip by automobile is. I know what it means to feel the purr of that smooth, mighty mechanism and to be free of world and sky and even land. For thirty years I drove my car over nearly all the United States, Canada and Cuba. But I never forgot that my powerful machine was servant only as long as I was master. When I was tired I did not drive; when I drove I did not drink. When my friends jeered because it took me three days to get from New York to Atlanta, I laught too. But I still did but 300 miles a day and slept peacefully each night. Drew had a treasure in himself for mankind. He had served humanity tremendously in a short life. His own continued work was precious beyond calculation. Why was there no one by his side to say: "You are too tired to drive. You are too valuable to risk your life!" No one spoke; no one warned a genius too weary to realize. And so the Father of the blook bank which gave life to thousands is himself dead.

35-4-17

PADMORE

George Padmore who lives in London is one of the best informed writers on economic subjects in the world. He is a West Indian who has lived in the United States, Russia and Germany, and for the last ten or fifteen years, ~~has lived~~ in London. He has written six books of which the best known is, "How Britain Rules Africa". This year he has published his seventh book, "Africa Britain's Third Empire." It is a splendid piece of work and calls for wide reading. I am going to refer to it often, but this time I am quoting three paragraphs in the Introduction: "This book originated in a request from the Pan-African Congress for a brief over-all survey of the Colonial Problem in British Africa, in the light of the new Economic Imperialism, euphemistically described as Colonial Development and Welfare.

"Parliament, the press and radio--politicians, journalists and broadcasters--vie with one another in assuring the British people that what they have lost in Asia they will recover in Africa. Truly, 'The sun of Empire will not set while Empire nuts abound'. [i.e. palm nuts + oil] Two factors are largely responsible for this post-war interest in the African El Dorado. The first is the decline of British Imperial power in the East. For centuries Asia, the largest, richest and most densely populated of the continents, was Britain's chief milch-cow. Now that India and Burma have broken the fetters of Imperialism, Ceylon has attained qualified Dominion status, and Malaya is straining at the leash, the British ruling class have been forced to look elsewhere for new sources of profits.

35-4-18

"Strategically, Africa has been cast for the role of 'savior' of Western European Christian Civilization against Asiatic Communism--ex Africa semper aliquid novi."

CARTER WOODSON

Carter Wo dson was a dynamic character, whose chief fame will rest on his initiation of Negro History Week and his "Journal of Negro History," first published in January 1916, and now in its 34th volume. Woodson represents the kind of man who concentrated his life on one object. He never flatered. He seldom hesitated. He was turned aside at times by need of earning a living, by teaching and collegiate work; but that did not tempt him long from his main work, the study of Negro history; and this his life object he accomplished splendidly.

On the other hand, this devotion to one ideal cost him and the world something. He was not a companionable man; he did not have a large circle of friends. He had an independence and austerity which often repelled people, even those who had for him the greatest admiration. He never married and had no family ties, his income was always meager; but his output in books and articles war large. It was an astonishing task which he accomplished in making the United States , white and black stop once a year and remember that the American Negro had done things: had thought, and toiled and sang and contributed to the development of the nation. It would of course have been logical if he had received generous sppport for his work. When we think of the wealth of America; when we remember the number of foundations today which have sums that they do not know how to use, it is no credit to the nation that they helped Woodson so little. Many of them of course will declare that they were willing to help, ut that Woodson was not exactly to be "trusted"; he would not come to heel when shistled to, and fawn. Their willingness to help was therefore always accompanied by a desire, unobtrusively, of course, to control or at least direct in general lines the work which Woodson was doing. This Woodson absolutely and definitively refused to allow. In this refusal he probably went to extremes; there might have been much help available, where the control would have been at a minimum and where he would have had large freedom of work; this he did not believe and therefore he went forward in his own way, a lonely, austere figure, with bitter individuality and independence but with absolute sincerity and unceasing work.

35-4-19

Twice I tried to see if I could not arrange for the continuity of his work after death and the lightening of his burden of self-support. Once I almost got his consent to join my department of Publications and Research, in the NAACP; but he finally decided that if he came to the NAACP, he must have a separate and independent department. This I could not guarantee him, because I knew that the Organization was not disposed to set up another department. Then later, I tried to use what little influence I had so that his work would be intergrated with that of Howard University. He went there in the capacity of Dean and very naturally did not like executive work. It was probably well that he did not stay; if he had, it would have been another case where a scholar was turned into doing chores. So that it happened, and this in itself was an accomplishment, that his work was mainly supported by colored people; people of small income and limited erudition, who gave to the Association of Negro Life and History in order to keep the work going. This meant of course that his funds were always limited, that he had difficulty in paying for publication and that he could not hire the help and assistence and do the research which he needed to do, and which would of been of so great help to his main object. But that is was possible for a Negro scholar to support himself from the small contributions mainly from his own people and perform the miracle of making a small scientific journal on an upopular subject self-supporting for a generation is a tribute to Carter Woodson, and to the American Negro.

No white university ever recognised his work; no white scientific society ever honored him. Perhaps this was his greatest award.

35-4-20

April 21, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

WEALTH

I could have been today a rich man; not fabulously wealthy, but with $10,000 to $25,000 a year and no work to do, save what I chose. Once I was riding with a successful colored physician in Charleston, South Carolina. He pointedto some cheap, drab cabins, strung along in a row, bare and bleak. "There", he said , "is where I make my money. They pay good rents." I imagine he took in a thousand dollars a month form such "investments." I did not look twice. It seemed to me a dirty business.

But with such gains I might later have had money to join my friend in "insurance." He was a hard working carpenter, with little education but shrewd. He had scores of one and two-room tenements and now he proposed to buy a tottering insurance society where men collected weekly dimes from poor laborers to insure them against sickness. Shrewdly run it was a goldmine. Today it has added respectable life insurance and its assets run into the millions. My friend died a millionaire by selling insurance at twice the amount it cost him. I liked him; he was a good church member, but I did not like his methods of getting rich. I refused to join the venture. Several of my friends did join. Some became well-to-do; others, rich. I remained poor; not from virtue, but from distaste. I don't like thieves. I am more interested in other things.

DEMOCRACY

There are certain large words which we use confidently and often, but which need continual definition, so that we and others may be certain just what we are talking about. "Democracy" is one. It means the rule of the people. Who are "the people?" Children are not so considered; idiots are not included. Until late in the 19th century, we did not include women.

Mississippi does not usually include Negroes. But if we include sane adults, the next query is what is their will and how do we ascertain it? It is hard to know what people desire; often they themselves do not know. First it is difficult to get the truth, because so many newspaperd deliberately lie or are silent on the facts; and only picked stooges today get the public platform. But if by reading and listening and thinking, persons decide what they want, how can they get it done?

35-7-78

In a small village they may come together and decide what shall be done and who shall do it. In a city or nation, they may elect representatives to act for them. Here in our day and in this land, comes the rub: voters are kept from the polls; elections are dishonest and instead of one man casting one vote, one in a little backwoods Georgia county may cast twenty votes while a man in Atlanta casts one. But that is wrong, you fume! The Supreme Court has just said, it is legal. So this is democracy, A. D. 1950.

COURTS

We are using a fine technique in our courts today, which shows how slick we are. Al Capone goes to jail; but not for murder; O, no! For not paying his income tax. Eleven communist leaders go to jail. But not for communism. O, no! For belonging to an organization which believes that our government needs fundamental change. Did they attempt to change it? No, George Washington did, and we made him president. The communist did not. They did not commit a single illegal act such as Benjamin Franklin did. The court never said they did. It said they wanted change. So did Thomas Jefferson. For thinking about change, and talking of its necessity, communists went to jail, while Jefferson stands serenly on his Memorial, amid Japanese cherry blossoms. So with Harry Bridges: he is going to jail not for lying, but for telling the truth about the employers who gouge and mistreat longshoremen. Ain't Justice wonderful!

April 28, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

WAR

There is no Russian plan of attacking the United States; on the other hand, the United States and practically all the countries of Europe have attacked Russia repeatedly; but she is clearly on the defensive. On the other hand, our navy and airplanes are roaming the world. Our organization for "intelligence" is know to be everywhere and costing us millions of money. All that is needed today in the world, is a vital attack upon fear and increase of faith in mankind and the determination to let other people live as they will and not compel them or try to compel them to live as we will.

35-7-179

THE UNITED NATIONS

Five years ago, I was in San Francisco attending the meetings which resulted in the organization known as The United Nations. Everybody in the world was in high hopes; even though The League of Nations had failed it was a failure of a great idea. I remember the preparations in Paris before The League of Nations met; I had the privilege of talking with many of the great leaders who helped to formulate the idea and bring it to fruition. Then I was at Geneva when the first Assembly of The League of Nations met in that little gallaried church. It was an event that made my heart beat high. So with the United Nations was a great idea and a great accomplishment, and it is the United States and not Russia which is ruining it. It was the idea not only of Russia but of America to establish the veto, so that in all great decisions there should be unanimity among the leading powers of the world. Otherwise the United Nations could not have been formed. The right then of any member of the United Nations to veto any proposition is perfectly clear. But on the other hand, the right of the United States and Great Britain to keep China from a seat in the Security Council is wrong and it is that, and that alone that is making the United Nations today ineffective and threatening its end.

BRITAIN AND LABOR

The Labor Party in Great Britain is having a hard row to hoe. That is partly, although not entirely, its own fault. The basic difficulty is that while labor sought to introduce socialism into Great Britain and did succeed in nationalizing some of the great industries, it never tried to bring socialism to the colonies or to change the attitude of Britain toward colonial workers. Great Britain today under Atlee and Bevin, is the same Britain which for decades has been exploiting colonial labor and securing a monopoly of raw materials which were used in her home manufacture. Her ability to do this in Asia has been seriously curtailed although she is stribing hard to keep Malaya; but she is concentrating upon Africa; and it is this combination of socialism and commercial exploitation which is spoiling the ideology of British labor and making her unable to convince mankind of her integrity and her aims. After all, neither a man nor a nation can profess honesty when it is openly and decidedly dishonest.

35-7-80

VIET NAM

The continued and stubborn attempt of the French government under its reactionary leaders to retain the French Colonial Empire, is one of the most serious mistakes that modern civilization can make. After the Second World War the French put forward a scheme of national union. They proposed to integrate the various parts of the French empire, giving large autonomy to the great colonial group in North and Equatorial Africa and in Asia. The scheme of the French Union was planned, but at the crucial election it was not adopted. Nevertheless in many parts of the empire the organization went on, and various units in Africa and Asia awaited the implementation of the scheme; but French commercialism with its tremendous power and world-wide ramifications vetoed it and has since tried to keep the French colonies in their old relation to France or to reduce them to that. In Viet Nam, they have made partial escape. Large sums of money which ought to be spent on the rebuilding of France are being spent and have been spent upon subjugating those brave people in Indo-China who are determined to have autonomy and not be reduced to furnishing cheap labor and raw materials for French Capitalists.

35-2-181

I remember at the Paris Peace Conference hearing a woman from Viet-Nam speak. It was a brave and splendid speech; no one hearing it could doubt the essential rightness of the things for which Viet-Nam is striving. Let us hope they will continue to fight.

STRIKES

Everytime a strike is called in the United States, one senses opposition to it and dislike for it. There is still wide-spread the idea that a strike is essentially wrong and many colored people share this idea. There is no doubt but what the refusal to work on ones' job is rebellion and if a whole group refuses and backs that refusal by attempts to stop other people from working, here you have the beginning of labor war. And yet what else is to be done? The laborer who has to sell his physical exertions for a wage cannot sit down and leisurely make a contract; he cannot wait; he has to eat every day. So that calm, cool and long negotiations simply cannot be carried on without organization of trade unions; without a strike fund and without picketing which may go to the length of actual physical conflict. It is only in this way that labor has won what few rights it has in modern civilised countries.

Among us Negroes however, once in a while, there comes a strike with which it is hard for us to be sympathetic; and this is true in the threatened strike of firemen. The A.F.L. union of firemen, more than any other union in the United States, has opposed Negroes, has cut them out of jobs, has cheated them and deliberately murdered them. I believe today they are beginning to repudiate something of these attitudes; but they have not done enough. It will be necessary for them to convince Negroes of a new sincerity if they want the sympathy of our large working class.

COMMUNISTS IN THE GOVERNMENT

35-7-82

It must be remembered that the real essence of the charges and countercharges concerning Communists in the State Department and other places in government has not been brought out. The truth is that ten years, twenty years ago, there was no man of sense, intelligence and education who did not sympathize to a degree with socialism and with the communism established by the Russian Revolution. They were not in all cases and probably in a few cases members of the communist party; but they were liberals and socialists. I have no doubt but what Secretary Acheson, Algernon Hiss and scores of others belong to this group. They did not plan to overthrow the government by violence and neither did the communist party. But many were sympathetic with certain fundamental changes which would allow this country to escape the domination of Big Business.

Then came the witch-hunt and the hysteria, and practically all these men hastily tried to disassociate themselves form any connection with communism. But this meant that always it was possible for somebody to come and point to the past and show by speech, by writing, by attitude that these men had been sympathetic with socialism; and this instead of being a charge which they should deny, ought to be an accusation which they would be proud to say was true.

HAINAN

The Chaing-Kai-Shek government has been caught again in a clear lie. Recently a furtive little expedition to the coast of China, ran away almost before they got there, and advertised to the world the new fighting qualities of Nationalist China. And all the time they had firmly declared that the great island of Hainan was theirs and theirs forever; and from this island and Formosa they were preparing to reconquer China. Even while the communists silently and without fanfare were invading the island, the West got continuous report of victories and repulsions. They even went so far as to celebrate "a victory" and then came the blow. Practically without fighting, the island was surrendered to the Communists, which meant that the mass of the people there were sympathetic with the New Chinese Republic.

35-2-183

We wonder now just what the American Press is going to say. Certainly this conquest was not the work of foreigners, it was accomplished by Chinese; and also it is just as certain that this is but the forerunner of the conquest of Formosa. Then when Chiang Kai Shek and his wife have no place to go except to their newly purchased property in the United States, will their representatives still sit in the United Nations to represent the nation which they have lost?

F.E.P.C.

The present situation of civil rights legislation for American Negroes reminds me of the old status of 1890 to 1900. The Republican Party regularly made promises, more or less vague, as to Negro disfranchisement and caste. Then after the National Convention they did nothing about it and did not intend to. They were yanked up by the refusal of all groups of Negroes to vote for a Republican candidate. Evidences of such revolt came in 1908 and 1912. Then at last with war and depression, the Negroes almost en masse went over to the support of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the Negro vote became largely/more democratic than republican. The Republicans were furious and declared that the Negroes had been bought with bread. That is no disgrace; any man who is starving and homeless will sell his work and his vote for bread or die. But since that there came the question as to how this status was to be implemented, and it was then that Franklin Roosevelt took the great step of trying to equalize for Negroes security for jobs. It was a magnificent gesture and Negroes had hopes that this war-time measure could be enacted into permanent law.

35-7-84

President Truman promised this. Many of us and certainly I myself were greatly encouraged by this promise, which seemed almost too good to be true. This proved a fact. I doubt if any intelligent Negro now believes that President Truman ever meant to put through the Civil Rights Program. Beyond lip service he has actually done nothing and he does not propose to do anything. The sooner we realize this the better. Truman and his followers and stooges must be put out of power at the first opportunity. So far there is nothing to hope for from Republicans as a party. Taft has never shown the slightest interest in Negroes and occupies practically the same platform as his father. Humphries has done excellent work, but he has done it alone. In a new Third Party, like the Progressives lies our only hope.

Mailed - May 1, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-136

A STRIKE

In New York City, one of the most effective strikes ever planned has recently been settled. It was a strike of the elevator men and janitors in the wealthiest apartment houses along Fifth and Park Avenues. The strike was quiet but complete. It practically shut off service in a thousand houses.

Mayor O'Dwyer tried to bluster at the Secretary of the union and said that he had told police to allow no disorder. The Secretary looked him in the eye and said: "Mr. Mayor, the members of my union pay your policemen!" So the strike went on quietly for 85 hours until finally on May 1, it was settled by arbitration and 12,000 workers went back to work.

The real leader of this strike was Thomas Young, the Secretary, and he happens to be colored.

INDO-CHINA

The French Empire is in a bad way, but perhaps the worst situation is in Indo-China. Indo-China is about the size of Texas and has 25 million brown people and 42,000 Europeans. A Nationalist Movement began during the Second World War. The French have tried to regain control of the country by setting up a puppet emperor, who really prefers to gamble on the Riviera, but was forced to go home and it was hoped, assume the throne. He has not been successful, although of course the United States has recognised him! But the real ruler of Viet-Nam, the native name for this territory, is Ho Chi Minh. He has succeeded in keeping the whole French army at bay for several years and with the help of China may win his war for independence.

ERITREA

The British after giving their consent to Italian Trusteeship of Eritrea, have at last retreated and are now willing that the larger part of this country including the important port of Massawa shall go to Ethiopia while the Western part goes to the Anglo-British Sudan. If this is finally implemented, it will mean a great triumph for Ethiopia. Through Eritrea, Great Britain and Italy have many times attacked Ethiopia in the past. The country is economically dependent upon Ethiopia and the only reason for its being in foreign hands is as a basis for attacking this black empire. The whole of it ought to go to Ethiopia; but the more important part is that which contains the ports on the Red Sea of which Ethiopia has been deprived for many years. Meantime the Italians are trying to hold on to Somaliland, while the natives there are rioting against them.

35-7-137

THE RECOVERY OF EUROPE

The problem of European recovery after the Second World War is about to enter into a new phase. Through the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Pact, the United States has tried to annex Europe as a market and investment as well as a military ally for the Third World War; but Europe is unwilling to fight. However, through Prime Minister Bidault, of France they are now proposing a new alliance; an alliance which is not primarily military, but economic and political; and which therefore will entail responsibility and expense for the United states, without forcing Europe to fight.

GERMANY

The German people will never consent to permanent disunion. It was the fight to achieve a single nation which stirred the German people during the whole of the 19th century. When after the Franco-Prussian War, this unity was practically accomplished, except in the case of Austria, the Germans for the first time became a great nation. Then unfortunately, being misled into war in order to make themselves the industrial equals of France and Britain, the country was ruined and laid prostrate before the allies and Russia.

35-7-138

In the reorganization since, it has been divided practically into a Russian Germany and a West Germany dominated by the United States, Britain and France. Now comes the question as to how in the future it can be united, and that resolves itself into the question as to whether the new united Germany will be under the control of Russia or the United States. This is one of the questions back of the whole danger of world war.

BELGIUM

Belgium, a land of 8 million people, the most crowded in Europe, is divided into Catholic-French and Protestant-Dutch halves. It annexed under a royal scoundrel, Leopole I, a country 14 times its size, inhabited by 12 million black people in the center of Africa. It now lives happily and well on the cheap labor and valuable raw materials raised by Africans.

The first Leopold was succeeded by his son, and the son by a nephew. The Third Leopold, was sure that the Germans were going to win in the Second World War and therefore surrendered to them. Now living in Switzerland, he would like to come back and reign again and the French-Catholics are willing but the Dutch Protestants are not. So Leopole sits sucking his thumb and the black Congo works for copper and uranium in which the United States heavily invests.

MADAGASCAR

There is a great island the size of Texas inhabited by four or five million black and brown people, east of Africa. It was seized by France who overthrew its independence in 1885, and made it a colony ten years later. Its three million acres are given over to raising rice, vanilla, coffee, cloves and sugar cane. Its forests are rich with valuable wood. But the Madagascans are unhappy. They have rebelled several times and lately, since the Second World War, have been fighting the French for months. Today they are cowed into sullen acquesience, but they may one day regain their freedom. It is a prt of the unfree world which sympathetic people ought to watch.

35-7-2139

TO ALL SEAMEN

The dock workers of Belgium have just sent out an appeal to the seamen of the world in which they say:

"All ships that arrive in our harbours (Antwerp, Ghent, Ostend) loaded with WAR MATERIALS, are faced with strong picket lines of longshoremen (~~Dokkers~~) and peaceful citizens.

"We have resolved not to load or unload a gun, a canon or one single bullet of the deadly war cargoes that are brought to our shores.

"The Sons of the Belgian People were the first to die in World War I and World War II. Many of our cities still lay in ruins. Our soil is drenched with human blood, the blood of our people and that of American soldiers too.

"Our soil is still fresh with this human blood, and again the manufacturers of ammunition, steel autos, shipping, etc, are beating the DRUMS OF WAR.

"These Warmongers are carrying out the designs of Wall Street, to engulf humanity in a Third World War of agression. In our struggle for peace, we are determined that this shall not happen again. We stand united in solidarity with the Italian, Drench, Dutch, Danish and Swedish Harbour, Rail, and factory workers who already have refused to handle one single pound of war materials. Your Union Agreements with the Shipowners gives you the right [redacted] work behind a picket line.

"We guarantee your safety; not a single member of your crew will be molested by going through our picket lines. Attempts will be made to unload your war cargoes with SCABS. Such attempt will endanger the safety of your ship, it will endanger your very life. ENFORCE YOUR UNION AGREEMENT. Don't feed those scabs! Shut off your steam! Go on a sitdown strike! Don't let the captain intimidate you!"

May 10, 1950
(Chicago Globe)

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-175

TRUMAN

The President of the United States is having a jolly time. The reason that he is so happy is that he has no conception of modern history or of the present tensions and suffering in the world. He has reached a position of which he never thought of in his wildest dreams. He dresses well and has frequent vacations, and the fact that he does not keep his word, or that he contradicts himself, or that he is facing a tremendous awakening, does not bother him in the least. His program is to promise everything to everybody, when he is in their territory.

In the Middle West, he is going to tell the people that they need to have their rivers and valleys organized into Western TVA'S. If at any point he happens to come across an audience of colored people, he is going to talk about civil rights. When he comes to little towns who want to fight wars because they do not know what war is, he is going to talk about America's rulling the world! And if he happens to come across any bunch of people who love peace, he will talk peace. After all that, when he returns to Washington, he will the same Truman that left it.

WALLACE

Henry Wallace, on the other hand, is continuing to talk sense. He said just a year ago, "The Atlantic Pact, if ratified by the Senate will put the people of Western Europe into American uniforms. Amid their cathedrals we will pitch the tents of armies; we will cursh their hope of recovery under the burden of our arms. What do we offer them in return? Nothing of the spirit, nothing but anti-comunism! That was not very strong meat for the Chinese to feed on."

Last month, he said in Des Moines: "A greater Hitler may arise during the next 20 years unless the United States in cooperation with Russia, Britain and China, can work out a truly great and practical program of setting up a really powerful World Bank and International Development corporation. These four great nations must mobilize the world for peace and expanded productivity --as it was mobilized for war and destruction. The real enemy is not each other but the unreasoning misery of humanity."

PADMORE

Few people in America have seen or heard of George Padmore's latest book. Padmore is probably the best expert on colonial problems especially in Africa, now writing. His former book, HOW BRITAIN RULES AFRICA, is a masterpiece, and he has also written, AFRICA DND WORLD PEACE, with a forward by Sir Stafford Cripps and HOW RUSSIA TRANSFORMED HER COLONIAL EMPIRE, in conjunction with Dorothy Pizer.

35-7-176

The present book, published in 1949, has 266 pages and its four parts contain eleven chapters. The thesis of the book is: "Parliament, the press and radio--politians, journalists and broadcasters, vie with one another in assuring the British people that what they have lost in Asia they will recover in Africa...Two factors are largely responsible for this post-war interest in the African El Dorado. The first is the decline of British Imperial power in the East. For centuries Asia, the largest, richest and most densely populated of the continents, was Britain's chief milch-cow. Now that India and Burma have broken the fetters of Imperialism, Ceylon has attained qualified Dominion status, and Malaya is straining at the leash, the British ruling class have been forced to look else where for new sources of profits. The second factor is Britain's own desperate economic situation at home, due to her exertions in fighting for self-preservation. Both these factors combined have adversely affected Britain's status as a great World Power in relation to the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

"To redress her unfavourable position at home and abroad, Africa is being called upon to provide the maximum of foodstuffs of all kinds and other essential raw materials for peace and war."

Padmore discusses colonial facism in South Africa, then looks at the Rhodesias, at Kenya, at West Africa and its indirect rule, at the crown colonies and state capitalism, at the rise of nationalism throughout Africa. It is a readable book and should have wide circulation in the United States. Of course, efforts have already been made here to suppress it.

35-7-177

LOGAN AND MANDATES

The best book on the African Mandates and the Trusteeship system has been written by Rayford W. Logan, and naturally the white press has passed it over with wide silence. The book appeared in 1948 and is called, THE AFRICAN MANDATES IN WORLD POLITICS. It has 220 pages and is a history of the rise of the idea of protecting colonies in Africa and developing them under the new international organization called, The "League of Nations" and now known as The "United Nations".

Logan has this to say about Africa in his final chapter: "It is somewhat ironical that Hitler's and Mussolini's desires to safeguard the French Colonial Empire against their enemies were thwarted in the Second place by a black man Felix Eboué, the Governor of Chad Territory in French Equatorial Africa. The Free French movement, as previously indicated, began in Duala, French Cameroons, but it was Eboué and Colonel Marchand who first proclaimed allegiance of French Africa to General De Gaulle on August 26. On August 27, the Cameroons and on August 28, the French Congo declared for de Gualle. An editorial in the London, TIMES pointed out that not only were the Cameroons and the Congo more important than Chad Territory but that these resistance movements had diminished somewhat the pain experienced from seeing so many other Frenchmen resign themselves too quickly to defeat.

"That the Axis Powers still included Mittelafrika in their dreams is manifest in a brochure published in mid-July, 1940 by the German Library of Information of New York which boasted that the "'Steel Axis"' extended from the North Cape in Europe down to the very heart of Africa. Although the major decisions of the war would occur in Europe, the geography of the Southern part of the Axis was not without significance. The'political implications' of the Axis, in the not too distant future, might well reach as far as the Cape of Good Hope. The expansion of the Axis in Africa depended upon more energetic blows at the heart of British power, the English island. Once Britain had been brought to heel, a Europe free from English domination could be created and there would be made available to this new Europe, the 'numerous raw materials of the huge, as yet undeveloped, and sparsely populated dark Continent of Africa.'

35-7-178

This excellent book of reference belongs in all libraries.

GEORGIA DEMOCRACY

The myth that the United States is a democracy or wants to be, received a body blow in April when the Supreme Court refused to interfere with the Georgia county-unit primary election system. Few people in the United States realize what this system is: "Under the Georgia plan, the candidate who polls most votes in a county gets all of that county's unit votes, which vary from two to six, according to the county's population. A county with 1,000,000 voters would have only six unit votes, while the smallest county, with 212 registered voters, would have two unit votes."

By this system, the back rural counties full of ignorant and prejudiced farmers have often 120 times more weight in the state election than those who live in cities. It was pointed out that if this unit system continues it might replace the white primary as an instrument of Negro disfranchisemant.

Mr. Justice Douglas said: "The creation by law of favored groups of citizens and the grant to them of preferred political rights is the worst of all discriminations under a democratic system of government."

The Supreme Court as at present constituted, is probably the worst judicial tribunal that the United States has had for a century.

35-7-179

[redacted]

The proposal by the Soviet Union, that the inhabitants of native territories, who do not have self-government, should have the right to send a representative to the Trusteeship Council's meetings was naturally turned down, by France, Britain, Belgium, New Zealand, Australia and the United States. Recently also, the Human Rights Commission has decided not to allow individual or private organizations to send in petitions!

May 19, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

PEACE

The most important matter before the world today is Peace. A Third World War would make it not only difficult for civilization to survive, but doubly difficult for small nations and minority peoples. Peace should be the first item of importance in the political and social activities of every American citizen and especially citizens of Negro descent. Remember that practically all of the work, which is being done to promote war is the effort of Big Business to make profit.

THE MARSHALL PLAN

Many people are puzzled by the Marshall Plan and they ought to be. It came into being masquerating as an attempt on the part of America to help the hungry and naked of the world. It never was that and was never intended to be that. It is a scheme by which the tax-payers of the United States furnish nations of Western Europe enough funds to purchase certain things in the United States. A committee of business men representing the great corporations of America, have this matter in charge and decides what these countries can purchase. They restrict their purchases to those things which will give the greatest profit to the United States m and refuse to let them import many things which would help reorganization of their fundamental economy. Moreover, the merchants in the United States have raised prices so that the profits go in larger proportion to these merchants; that have charged enormous prices on transportation on American ships which must be used. They have compelled foreign nations in many cases to buy surplus stocks of commodities which the United States wanted to get rid of. Recovery in Europe was beginning and succeeding enormously before the Marshall Plan came into action, since that it has gone forward but slowly and is today reaching a crisis. We are making France buy coco-cola, we are making Austria buy trucks, we are making Italy buy spagetti. We are not trying or succeeding in re-establishing the fundamental economic prosperity of Europe. We are trying so to control and organize European economy as to make Europe and the world a quasi-colony of United States business. Also while we are ostensively furnishing money to rehabilitate the industry of Europe, we aretrying to compel Europe to spend much of the money in arming themselves for a new war.

45-7-177

SOUTHERN LIBERALS

It has happened again, as I have seen it happen time and time again in the past; a wave of liberalism would strike the South; brave young men would stand up and say: We must be forthright and courageous in this problem of the Negroes. Then when the real pinch comes, they scuttle and surrender. At the recent Truman Rally in Chicago, Jonathan Daniels of North Carolina gave new evidence of such surrender. He and Frank B. Graham, North Carolona candidate for senator, once stood in the forefront of Southern liberals, especially in the matter of Negro rights. Now Mr. Graham has given up defense of the FEPC, and Mr. Daniels tried in Chicago to make a dramatic exit from the ranks of liberals. He declared that the FEPC was "vague", that it could not accomplish its object; when in fact, the reason that the South is against it, is because it would give Negroes decent wages and begin that fundamental economic attack upon discrimination, without which the problem can never be solved. We may remember Mr. Daniels and Mr. Graham as distinct losses to the liberal cause.

46-7-178

URANIUM

In order to make atom-bombs and stock-pile them, the United States needs uranium; and the best sorce of uranium today is cheap black labor in the Belgian Congo, therefore, the United States istaking over the Congo; not of course politically, that is old stuff; that is the way colonies were controlled in the 19th century. Today the Bank of England on behalf of the British Government has accepted an offer to buy nearly 700,000 stock shares of the Tanganyika concessions, and this company owns the copper and uranium mines of the Belgian Congo and controls the railway over which these products are hauled to the Atlantic Coast of Africa. It is admitted that these shares eventually will be transferred to the United States through an American Syndicate. The British will make money on this sale and the United States will make war.

THE AMERICAN INDIANS

Official representatives of fifteen Western and Mid-Western states have formed a permanent organization to solve the Indian problem. Most people forget that the mass of Indians are still wards of the nation and not first-class citizens. Although there has been legislation to enable them to become first class citizens, The Bureau of Indian Affairs, however is delaying matters and at the present rate it will be a hundred years before Indians get their rights. Meantime this organization of Fifteen states, is going to push their cause in every way possible.

45-7-179

HUMAN RIGHTS

Ever since the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, under the Chairmanship of Eleanor Roosevelt, was organized, there has been determined effort to see that this international organ should not be used by those who need human rights and whose rights are invaded. At first the Commission refused to received or hear petitions. Since that they have been dodging the main issue by working at an elaborate Human Rights Charter which the various nations in their own good time are supposed to adopt.

They have recently voted, 14 to nothing, that the Committee should be composed of the nationals of states that ratify the covenant, and that complaints of violations may not be made by individuals or non-governmental organizations. In other words, the Commissions proposes to hear no complaint from persons whose own government denies them the rights of human beings. They may apparently "examine" such complaints.

THE MID-CENTURY PEACE CONFERENCE

In May 1949, Thomas Mann, Albert Einstein, Emily Balch and Bishop Walls called a conference in Washington against the Atlantic Pact and the Armaments Program. They have working since that and when the hydrogen bomb was announced the committee worked harder and called a Peace Conference. The call had been distributed to 65,000 people throughout the country and the Mid-Century Peace Conference meets in Chicago, May 29-30. It should receive the support of the people of the United States, black and white.

INDO-CHINA

The United States has added another to its long lists of mistakes. Having helped reactionaries in Greece and Turkey and poured billions into the pockets of Chiang Kai Shek in China, it is now proposing to help Bao Dai in Viet-Nam. The help is not going to be moral, since there is nothing moral about the whole question. We are going to furnish money and guns to make the people of Viet-Nam receive this usurper and paly-boy and administer Indo-China for the benefit of millionaires in France. This is another case where we have taken the side of the oppressor in order to exploit the oppressed.

THE RED CROSS

The International Red Cross has taken a splendid stand against war and pointed out the horrors that mosern war-fare can bring. And quite naturally the United States is affronted by this action. The President has run around the country declaring that nothing is so important as spending most of the money it takes from our empty pockets to prepare for a war which nobody wants and no one need have if they act like human beings instead of generals.

45-7-180

May 19, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. Du Bois

Peace Peace

The most important matter before the world today is a Third World War would make it not only difficult for civilization to survive, but doubly difficult for small nations and minority peoples. Peace should be the first item of importance in the political and social activities of every American citizen and especially citizens of Negro descent. Remember that practically all of the work, which is being done to promote war is the effort of Big Business to make profit.

35-7-102

THE MARSHALL PLAN

Many people are puzzled by the Marshall Plan and they ought to be. It came into being masquerading as an attempt on the part of America to help the hungry and naked of the world. It never was that and was never intended to be that. It is a scheme by which the tax-payers of the United States furnish nations of Western Europe enough funds to purchase certain things in the United States. A committee of business men representing the great corporations of America, have this matter in charge and decides what these countries can purchase. They restrict their purchases to those things which will give the greatest profit to the United States and refuse to let them import many things which would help reorganization of their fundamental economy. Moreover, the merchants in the United States have raised prices so that the profits go in larger proportion to these merchants; they have charged enormous prices for transports on American ships which could be used. They have compelled foreign nations in many cases to buy surplus stocks of commodities which the United States wanted to get rid of . Recovery in Europe was beginning and succeeding enormously before the Marshall Plan came into action, since that it has gone forward but slowly and it is only reaching a crisis. We are making France buy coco-cola, we are making Austria buy trucks, we are making Italy buy spagetti. We are not trying or succeeding in re-establishing the fundamental economic prosperity of Europe. We are trying so to control and organize European economy as to make Europe and the world a quasi-colony of ~~the~~ United States business. Also while we are ostensively furnishing money to rehabilitate the Industry of Europe, we are trying to compel Europe to spend much of the money in arming themselves for a new war.

SOUTHERN LIBERALS

It has happened again, as I have seen it happen time and time again in the past; a wave of liberalism would strike the South, brave young men would stand up and say: We must be forthright and courageous in this problem of the Negroes, ~~and~~ Then when the real pinch comes, they scuttle and surrender. At the recent Truman Rally in Chicago, Jonathan Daniels of North Carolina gave new evidence of such surrender. He and Frank B. Graham, North Carolina candidate for senator, once stood in the forefront of Southern liberals, especially in the matter of Negro rights. Now Mr. Graham has given up defense of the FEPC, and Mr. Daniels tried in Chicago to make a dramatic exit from the ranks of liberals. He declared that the FEPC was "vague," that it could not accomplish its objects; when in fact, the reason that the South is against it, is because it would give Negroes decent wages and begin that fundamantal economic attack upon discrimination, without which the problem can never be solved. We may honorably watch Mr. Daniels and Mr. Graham ~~and count them~~ as distinct losses to the liberal cause.

35-7-103

URANIUM

In order to make atom-bombs and stock-pile them, the United States needs uranium, and the best source of uranium today is cheap black labor in the Belgian Congo, therefore the United States is taking over the Congo; not of course politically, that is old stuff, that is the way colonies were controlled in the ~~[redacted]~~ 19th century. Today the Bank of England on behalf of the British Government has accepted an offer to buy nearly 700,000 stock shares of the Tanganyika concessions, and this company owns the copper and uranium mines of the Belgian Congo and controls the railway over which these products are hauled to the Atlantic Coast of Africa. It is admitted that these shares eventually ~~would~~ will be transferred tothe United States through an American Syndicate. The British will make money on this sale and the United States will make war.

THE AMERICAN INDIANS

Official representatives of fifteen Western and Mid-Western states have formed a permanent organization to solve the Indian problem. Most people forget that the mass of Indians are still wards of the nation and not first-class citizens, although there ~~have~~ has been legislation to enable them to become first class citizens. The Bureau of Indian Affairs, however, is delaying matters and at the present rate it will be a hundred years before Indians get their rights. Meantime ~~the~~ this organization, 715 strong, is going to push their cause in every way possible.

35-7-104

HUMAN RIGHTS

Ever since the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, under the chairmanship of Eleanor Roosevelt, was organized, there has been determined effort to see that this international organ should not be used by those who need human rights and ~~those~~ whose rights are invaded. At first the Commission refused to receive ~~petitions~~ or hear petitions. Since that they have been dodging the main issue by working at an elaborate Human Rights Charter which the various nations in their own good time are supposed to adopt. ~~But in the meantime~~ They have recently voted, 14 to nothing, that the Committee should be composed of the nationals of states that ratify the covenant, and that complaints of violations may not be made by individuals or nongovernmental organizations. In other words, the Commissions proposes to hear no complaint from ~~people~~ persons whose own government denies them the rights of human beings. They may apparently "examine" such complaints.

35-7-105

THE MID-CENTURY PEACE CONFERENCE

In May, 1949, Thomas Mann, Albert Einstein, Emily Balch and Bishop Walls called a conference in Washington against the Atlantic Pact and the Armaments Program. They have been working since that and when the hydrogen bomb was announced the committee worked harder and called a Peace Conference. The call had been distributed to 65,000 people throughout the country and the Mid-Century Peace Conference meets in Chicago, May 29-30. It should receive the support of the people of the United States , black and white.

INDO-CHINA

The United States has added another to its long lists of mistakes, having helped reactionaries in Greece and Turkey and poured billions into the pockets of Chiang Kai Shek in China, it is now proposing to help Bao Dai in Viet-Nam. The help is not going to be moral, since there is nothing moral about the whole question. We are going to furnish money and guns to make the people of Viet-Nam receive this ~~u~~super and play-boy and administer Indo-China for the benefit of ~~investors and~~ millionaires in France. This is another case where we have taken the side of the oppressor in order to enslave the oppressed.

THE RED CROSS

The International Red Cross has taken a splendid stand against war and pointed out the horrors that modern war-fare can bring. And quite naturally the United States is affronted by this action. The President has run ~~run~~ around the country declaring that nothing is so important as spending most of the money it takes from our empty pockets to prepare for a war which nobody wants and no one need have if they act like human beings instead of like generals.

Mailed - Sunday. May 28, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

LIE

There are some signs of promise in the murkey air. The man who occupies the leading position in the world today, a modest man but one who during his office of Secretary General of the United Nations, has kept himself in the background, today steped forth and made a tour of the world; and asked the world if it wanted peace or war; and there was no hesitancy in the answer. Everybody wanted peace, but the United States was quite sure that peace was impossible; in France, practically the whole nation was sure that peace was possible and practical if certain nations would act accordingly. In Great Britain, even the reactionary Bevin had to assent that something could be done toward peace and that as a step Great Britain was going to invite the Chinese Communist Government to sit in the Security Council. And in Moscow, Mr. Lie had a cordial meeting with Stalin, and Stalin also wanted peace and was willing to take steps toward it. What then hinders peace in the world? Only those who make war and who make money out of war. Perhaps they can be persuaded.

CATASTROPHE

One way in which the world may be persuaded of the utter foolishness and crime of war, are the two catastrophes which have taken place in South Amboy, New Jersey and Chicago, Illinois. In South Amboy, we were transshipping carelessly and lightly, weapons of murder and destruction which were going to Asia or the Middle East in order to kill people for the advantage of the United States and Europe. Somebody made an awful mistake and for a few hours South Amboy knew what war really me nt, and that is more than most people in the United States realize. So in Chicago in our careless haste to get rich and to be powerful we do the most stupid and dangerous things. We transport thousands of tons of potential fire through the crowded streets of a great city, knowing that any moment there be be explosion and death. That happened in Chicago and here again people should learn what senseless destruction means, even if we call it war!

65-7-173

THE WRONG SIDE

We have again implemented the fearful Truman Doctrine. After having given aid and comfort to the wrong elements in Greece and Turkey, in China and Korea, we are now going to interfere and send arms and other equipment to the French Colonial Government in South Eastern Asia to stop the spread of Communism. We could stop anything wrong there by the right kind of tactics; but the tactics which we are using today is to help poeple make war, when what they want is peace; and when thefolk who instigate the war live in comfortable parts of great nations like France, and Great Britain. We have no business in Indo-China, except as helpers. We are going there according to the decision of the London conference a s warmongers.

SHIRLEY GRAHAM

The career of a new Negro author in the United States, has been so astonishing that no wonder most people among us do not seem to realize what has happened. Several years ago the city of Cleveland staged an opera "Tom-Tom", written, arranged and conducted by Shirley Graham. It was heard throughout the nation and widely commended. Than naturally we forgot about it. Some years later one of the greatest organizations of the USO was organized in Arizona filled with colored soldiers and Shirley Graham was in command. A more difficult position was hard to imagine. The USO organization was anti-Negro. They willing to pass out food and candy to Negroes but they wanted them in their places and they were not favorable to Negro officers.

45-7-174

Shirley Graham did a job ther that none of the tens of thousands of black soldiers who went through that camp will ever forget. She would not continue to serve because the USO would not give the black soldiers what they were giving the white soldiers. Then again we forgot her existence. Then Shirley Graham took charge of the Federal Theatre Project for Negroes in Chicago. There she organized and gave the "Swing Mikado" which later was revived in New York, under other auspices and other names, and became one of the best known light operas of its day. From there Miss Graham went to study the theatre at Vassar and at Yale and we again forgot her.

A young man in 1943 proposed to the publishing firm of Messner and Company to write a biography of George Washington Carver. They accepted it eagerly, but the young man had no experience in writing, and the work did not go as it should. Then Messner called in Shirley Graham and she wrote a book. This was the first of her five books in rapid succession, which had had extraordinary success: "The Life of George Washington Carver", came out in 1944; in 1946 came, "Paul Robeson, Citizen of the World," which is today being reprinted in nearly every country in Europe. In 1947, came the book, "There was once a Slave," the heroic story of Frederick Douglass. This book brought Miss Graham the Julian Messner "award for combating intolerance in America." The judges were Carl Van Doren, Louis Gannett and Flifton Fadiman. This work was selected from over 600 manuscripts. Miss Graham received a price of $6,500.

In 1949, Miss Graham followed up this record with two books: "The Story of Phyllis Wheatley" and "Your Most Humble Servant", the story of Benjamin Banneker. As a result of this the Historical Society of Maryland asked that Benjamin Banneker be put in the Hall of Fame, and the Annisfield Award gave her $1000 through the "Saturday Review of Literature" for the best book on Negro-white relations for the year.

45-7-175

Finally for her record in these last six years in writing and publishing, The National Institute of Arts and Letters at its 1950 Ceremonial gave her $1000, "in recognition of her admirable and original work, especially as a biographer of Negroes who have contributed to the culture and growth of this country."

Now all this is fine, and there have been a few scattered notices in the Negro papers; but on the whole the American Negro does not anything about it. For instance, it happens that Miss Graham has a nephew of about 12 who attends the colored public schools in Richmond, Virginia. In the school where he attends, annually there has been given a little opgretta called "Little Black Sambo," and on the text is printed: "Music arranged by Shirley Graham." So Shirley's little Nephew, one day took it upon himself to say to the teacher: "Shirley Graham is my Aunt," the teacher looked at him in astonishment and pumished him for lying. She had never heard of Shirley Graham nor dreamed that Shirley Graham was a colored woman.

For which we are moved to remark that a prophet is not without honor.

At that meeting of the Institute where Miss Graham was honored, it was interesting to see in the audience, Paul Robeson, who also a few years ago received a special award from the Institute for diction on the stage. This year Grace George received the similiar award.

AS THE CROW FLIES- 17

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-106

LIE

There are some signs of promise in the murkey air. The man who occupies the leading position in the world today, a modest man but one who during his office of Secretary General of the United Nations, has kept himself in the background, today stepted forth and make a tour of the world; and asked the world if it wanted peace or war, and there was no hesitancy in the answer. Everybody wanted peace, but the United States was quite sure that peace was impossible, in France, practically the whole nation was sure that peace was possible and practical if certain nations would act accordingly. In Great Britain, even the reactionary Bevin had to assent that something could be done toward peace and that as a step ~~xhixk~~ Great Britain was going to invite the Chinese Communist Government to sit in the Security Council. And in Moscow Mr. Lie had a cordial meeting with Stalin , and Stalin also wanted peace and was ~~xiix~~ willing to take steps toward it . What then hinders peace in the world? Only those who make war and who make money out of war. Perhaps they can be persuaded .

CATASTROPHE

One way in which the world may be persuaded of the utter foolishness and crime of war, are the two catastrophes which have taken place in South Amboy New Jersey and Chicago, Illinois . In South Amboy, we were transshipping carelessly and lightly, weapons of murder and destruction which were going to Asia or the Middle East inorder to kill people for the advantage of the United States and Europe, . Somebody made an awful mistake and for a few hours South Amboy knew what war really meant, and that is more than most people in the United States realize. So in Chicago in our careless haste to get rich and to be powerful we do the most stupid and dangerous things. We transport thousands of tons of potential fire through the crowded streets of a great city, knowing that any moment there may be ~~fire and an~~ explosion and death. That happened in Chicago and here again people should learn what senseless destruction means, even if we call it War!

THE WRONG SIDE

We have again implemented the fearful Truman Doctrine. After having given aid and comfort to the wrong elements in Greece and Trukey, in China and Korea, we are now going to interfere and send arms and other equipment to the French Colonial Government in South Eastern Asia to stop the spread of Communism. We could stop anything wrong there by the right kind of tactics, but the tactics which we are using today is to help people make war, when what they want is peace; and when the folk who instigate the war lives in comfortable parts of great nations like France, and Great Britain. We have no business in Indo-China, except as helpers. We are going there according to the decision of the London conference as warmongers.

35-7-107

SHIRLEY GRAHAM

The career of a new Negro author in the United States, has been so astonishing that no wonder ~~that~~ most people among us do not seem to realize what has happened. Several years ago the city of Cleveland staged an opera "TOM*TOM" written, arranged and conducted by Shirley Graham. It was ~~heard~~ heard throughout the nation and widely commended, and then naturally we forgot about it. Some years later one of the greatest organizations of the USO, was organized in Arizona, filled with colored soldiers and Shirley Graham was in command. A more difficult position was hard to imagine. The USO organization was anti-Negro, they were willing to pass out food and candy to Negroes but they wanted ~~Negroes~~ them in their places and they were not favorable to Negro officers.

Shirley Graham did a job there that none of the men of tensions thousands of black soldiers who went through that camp will ever forget, and she would not continue to serve because the USO would not give the black soldiers what they were giving white soldiers. Then again we forgot her existence. Then Shirley Graham took charge of the Federal Theatre Project for Negroes in Chicago. There she organized and gave the Swing Mikado which later was revived in New York, under other auspices and other names, and became one of the best known light operas of its day. From there Miss Graham went to study the theatre at Vassar and at Yale and we again forgot her.

A young man in 1943 proposed to the publishing firm of Messner and Company to write a biography of George Carver. They accepted it eagerly, but the Young Man had not experience in writing, and the work did not go as it should, . Then Messner called in Shirley Graham and she wrote a book. This was the first of her five books in rapid succession, which have had extraordinary success: "The Life of George Carver" came out in 1944 ; in 1946 came "Paul Robeson-Citizen of The World", which is today being reprinted in nearly every country in Europe. In 1947 , came the book, "There was once A Slave", the heroic story of Frederick Douglass. This book brought Miss Graham the Julian Messner award for combating intolerance in America." The judges were Carl van Doren, Louis Gannet and Clifton Fadiman and This work was selected from over 600 manuscripts. Miss Graham received aprize of $6,500 . In 1949, Miss Graham followed up this record with two books: "The Story of Phillis Wheatly" and "Your Most Humble Servant", the Story of Benjamin Banneker. As a result of this the Historical Society of Maryland asked that Benjamin Banneker be put in the Hall of Fame, and the Annisfield Award gave her $1000 through the Saturday Review of Literature for the best book on Negro,-White relations for the year. and finally for her record in these last six years in writing and publishing , the National Institute of Arts and Letters gave her $1000 prize at the 1950 Ceremonies "in recognition of her admirable and original work, especially as a biographer of Negroes, ~~Frederick Douglass, George Washington Carver, Paul Robeson, and Phyllis Wheatley among them~~ who have contributed to the culture and growth of this country."

35-7-108

Now all this fine, and there have been a few scattered notices in the Negro papers; but on the whole the American Negro does not know anything about it. For instance, it happened that Miss Graham has a nephew of about 12 who attends the colored public schools in Richmond Virginia. In the school where he attends, annually there has been given a little operetta called "Little Black Sambo", and on the text is printed: "Music arranged by Shirley Graham". So Shirley's little Nephew, one day took it upon himself to say to the teacher : "Shirley Graham is my Aunt", the teacher looked at him in astonishment and punished him for lying. She has never heard of Shirley Graham or dreamed that Shirley Graham was a colored woman . For which we are moved to remark that a prophet is not without honor, At that meeting of the Institute where Miss Graham was honored , it was interesting to see in the audience, Paul Robeson, who also a few years ago received a special award from the Institute for diction on the stage. This year Grace George received a similiar award.

35-7-109

Sent June 8, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

SENT TO JAIL

Today the United States has done one of the most disgraceful actions which the country has ever been guilty of. It has sent eleven American citizens to jail. Not for crime, but because they refused to tattle upon their fellow citizens, refused to say who gave money to help emancipate Spain. And they did this because they wanted no one to suffer for their good deeds. Yet inspite of this, these people are being sent to prison. I know many of them, they are fine men and women.

Dr. Barsky is a great physician, Howard Fast wrote, FREEDOM ROAD, Professor Bradley is an e cellent teacher. Despite this we are using the machinery of disgrace to smear these men because of our absolutely insensible hysteria during these awful times. The nation is going to look back upon this incident and feel thoroughly ashamed. Six or eight more decent citizens are going to jail in the near future. And these citizens are all going to know why it is that American Negroes are not always yelling or dancing about their love for this country.

45-7-165

DEMOCRACY

There was a bargain after the slaves were freed, and the bargain was that the Southern landholders and slave masters would not join the West and lower the tarif or repudiate the inflated war debt, if the new and growing industrial North would allow them to do as they pleased with the Emancipation Proclamation and the War Amendments . Before this the United States had not been a democracy; since this bargain it could not be a democracy. But there are signs of its creeping slowly toward the democratic ideal. The Supreme Court has taken six steps in our day; not long steps, not complete steps, but six steps which show progress. First they outlawed the grandfather clause, which made voting for illiterate whites hereditary; then they made three decisions about equality in education. The fourth step made it impossible to sue for damages under the race covenants on home owning; and finally discrimination in pullman dining cars cannot be so complete as before. As I have said, these are not definite nor final steps but they are steps and one of these days when the United States screams around the world about her democracy, she may be telling something that approximates the truth much more than it does today.

LIE

Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations is proving himself today the great man of the world. He has dared inspite of every discouragement from the administration in Washington and from the French and the English to talk Peace. Lie tells the world that first we must settle the matter of representation of China in the United Nations. Then he set forth his ten points; regular meetings of the Security-Council, with the heads of States, an attempt at international control of atomic energy; an attempt to control other armaments; agreement on armed forces abailable for the United Nations; admission of all nations to the United Nations who want to come in; technical aid for backward countries and special cooperation with agencies like the World Health Organization; development of the Human Rights Charter and effort for the advancement of colonial and semi-colonial people toward equality; the active use of all powers to the United Nations to develope international law so as to have it eventually enforcable world law in a universal world society. This is getting down to brass tacks. Now let thepeople who have been hesitating, give the world their answer.

SCOTTSBORO

It seems strange to have the Scottsboro Case pop up again. This is the case which for a generation has placed United States justice before the bar of the world. We did an awful crime against these poor, ignorant and helpless boys and even when we acknowledged the crime and knew the injustice that was being done, we stood apparently helpless, unable to do anything to atone. This is the country which is exercised about miscarriage of justice in other nations of the world, beyond the Iron Curtain, in the Middle East, and in the Far East and South America. We like to tell these countries here is free America. And when we begin to tell them, there comes the case again of nine victims of American prejudice, one of whom paroled today was thirteen years old when he was arrested.

GRADUATION

Today again comes the time of graduation and with it comes all of the varying comments and sorts of advice; that this is the beginning of life for youth; that this is the time when people stop pretending to live and get into real life; that youth must not think that they know it all or know everything. All of this of course is quite beside the point, if our system of education is decent and effective, then those who graduate from high school or college are better equiped to cope with life than those who do not; if it is not, much valuable time has been lost. In any case, this is a time and a place which challenges the young. There has not been for many centuries so discouraging a situation in the world; never a time when people were more dishonest and ineffectual and discouraged. Therefore it must also be a time when those who can and will work, when those who know or want to know, when those who have courage or can get hold if it, must stand up and try to remake the world. It is not so marvellous that the attempt to civilise human beings is continually failing, as it is that when it does fail, there have been in the past and there will be in the future people who declare that the verdict is not the last one; that something can be done about things, that are wrong and that they are the ones who are going to try to do it. Let us welcome y ung men and women of this sort into the world today.

45-7-17

ROBESON

Paul Robeson has again made history. First of all he went to London and before a meeting of the World Partisans of the Peace, declared that John Rogge was a paid lobbyist under Tito of Yugoslavia. The meeting was astonished and the world and the United States were equally astonished because they had thought of Rogge as a great defender of civil rights, and not as a man paid to come to conclusions. Then Robeson carried the banner and lead the pickets against the stalling of Truman and his cronies against the FEPC. It is a fine thing that American Negroes in these days can have at least one leader who is not afraid to call his soul his own.

65-7-168

AS THE CROW FLIES

SENT TO JAIL

Today the United States has done one of the most disgraceful actions which the country has ever been guilty of . It has sent 11 American citizens to jail. Not for crime, but because they refused to tattle upon their fellow citizens, refused to say who gave money to help emancipate Spain. And they did this because they wanted no one to suffer for their good deeds. Yet inspite of this, these people are being sent to prison. I know many of them, they are fine men and women. Dr. Barsky is a great physician, Howard Fast wrote FREEDOM ROAD, Professor Bradly is an excellent teacher. Despite this we are using the machinery of disgrace to smear these men because of our absolutely insensible hysteria during these awful times. The nations is going to look back upon this incident and feel thoroughly ashamed. Six or eight more decent citizens are going to jail in the near future. And these citizens are all going to know why it is that American Negroes are not always yelling or dancing about their ~~loyalty to~~ love for this country.

35-7-193

DEMOCRACY

There was a bargain after the slaves were freed, and the bargain was that the Southern landholders and slave masters would not join the West and lower the tarif ~~and~~ or repudiate the inflated war debt, if ~~on the other hand~~ the new and growing industrial North would allow them to do as they pleased with the Emancipation Proclamation and the War Amendments Before this the United States had not been a democracy, since this bargain it could not be a democracy. But there are signs of its creeping slowly toward the democratic ideal. The Supreme Court has taken six steps in our day, not long steps, not complete steps, but six steps which show progress. First they outlawed the grandfather clause, which make voting for illiterate whites hereditary, Then they made three decisions about equality in education. The fourth step ~~was making~~ made it impossible to sue for damages under the race covenants ~~of~~ on home owning, and finally discrimination in pullman dining cars ~~is not to~~ cannot be so complete as before, As I have ~~say~~ said, these are not definite ~~and~~ nor final steps but they are steps and one of these days when the United States ~~yells~~ screams around the world about her democracy, she may be telling something that approximates the truth much more than it does today.

LIE

Trygve Lie, Secretary-General of the United Nations is proving himself today the great man of the world. He has dared inspite of every discouragement from the administration in Washington and from the French and the English, Lie tells the world that first we must settle the matter of representation of China in the United Nations. Then he set forth his ten points: regular meetings of the Security-Council, with the heads of States; an attempt at international control of atomic energy; an attempt to control other armaments; agreement on armed forces available for the United Nations; ~~to force peace~~. Admission of all nations to the United Nations who want to come in; Technical aid for backward countries and special cooperation with agencies like the World Health Organization; Development of the Human Rights Charter and ~~the~~ effort for the advancement of colonial and semi-colonial people toward equality; The active use of all powers to the United Nations to develope international law so as to have it eventually enforcable world law in a universal world society. This is getting down to brass tacks. Now let the people who have been hesitating, give the world their answer.

SCOTTSBORO

It seems strange to have the Scottsboro Case pop up again. This is the case which ~~has stirred the~~ for a generation has placed United States justice before the bar of the world. We did an awful crime against these poor, ignorant and helpless boys and even when we acknowledged the crime and ~~view~~ knew the injustice that was being done, we stood apparently helpless unable to do anything. We alone This is the country which ~~has~~ is exercised about miscarriage of justice in other nations of the world, beyond the Iron Curtain, in the middle East, in the Far East and in South America. We like to tell these countries here ~~in~~ is free America. And when we begin to tell them, there comes the case again of nine victims of American prejudice, one of whom ~~was~~ paroled today was 13 years old when he was arrested.

GRADUATION

Today again comes the time of graduation and with it comes all of the varying comments and sorts of advice; that this is the beginning of life for youth; that this is the time when people stop pretending to live and get into real life; that youth must not think that they know it all or know everything. All this of course is quite beside the point; if ~~the~~ our system of education is decent and effective, then those who graduate from ~~those~~ those who do not; high school or college are better equiped to cope with life, if it is not, much valuable time has been lost. ~~But~~ In any case, this is a time and a place which challenges the young. There has not been for many centuries ~~as~~ discouraging a situation in the world, never a time when people were more dishonest and ineffectual and discouraged. Therefore it must ~~xiii~~ also be a time when those who can and will work, when those who know or want to know, when those who have courage or can get hold of it, must stand up and try to remake the world. It is not so marvellous that the attempt to civilize human beings is continually failing, as it is that when it does fail, there have seem in the past and there will be in the future people who declare that the verdict is not the last one; that something can be done about things that are wrong and that they are the ones ~~that~~ who are going to try to do it. Let us welcome young men and women of this sort into the world ~~their forces as~~ today.

35-7-194

35-7-195

ROBESON

Paul Robeson has again made history. First of all he went to London and before a meeting of the World Partisans of the Peace declared that John Rogge was a paid lobbyist under Tito of Yugoslavia. The meeting was astonished and the world and the United States were equally astonished because they had thought of Rogge as a great defender of civil rights, and not as a man paid to come to conclusions. Then Robeson carried the banner and lead the pickets against the stalling of Truman and his cronys against the FEPC. It is a fine thing that American Negroes in these days can have at least one leader who is not afraid to call his soul his own.

Mailed June 13, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

VIRGINIA UNION UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

It is said that a group of students from Virginia Union University are going to Europe to attack Communism or something of that sort. Of course newspaper reports are probably exaggerated. What is happening doubtless is this: a group of colored students are offered a trip to Europe so that they may testify either by word or deed that Negroes in America are treated well. The Europeans do not believe this. Most of them are quite certain that democracy does not work in America in the case of Negroes. And of course we know this is true; therefore the United States is trying to get Negroes to testify to the contrary. They may not actually ask the students to say this; but if the students do not confirm this attitude, at least they want the students to keep quiet, and by silence give witness to equality in America for the Negroes.

45-7-169

We are sorry to have these students put in this position. We hope that they will refuse to lie. We cannot blame them for simply keeping still, but for Gods' sake don't lie! If you have got to bear testimony, say simply that the Negroes in the United States are not free and equal. That in Virginia they have practically no political representation, no members of the legislature, almost no members of the City Council; that they are segregated on trains and buses and in depots; that they get unequal treatment in stores and on the streets, and that they do not get justice in Virginia and in many other places in the United States. If there is anyone of this group who really has guts, they might tell of the Scottsboro case, of the six boys who are being judicially lynched in Virginia, of the Ingram case in Georgia, and the accused Trenton six in New Jersey. In other words, let these students stand up and tell the truth or keep still. We are sure that under the Presidency of John Gandy and of Lemuel Foster this would have been the advice which you would have received. We trust that President Daniels will not do less.

CHINA

For muddled reasoning the case of China in the United Nations ~~xxxxxx xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~ the United States is doing its best. China, one of the great powers is represented in the Security Council by a proven schoundrel who has lost control over 400,000,000 of the people of China. He represents only a small island where he has to keep killing the leaders in order to keep them from revolt. Yet his representative sits on the Security Council and on all the great committies and commissions. Under those circumstances the Soviet Union has refused to take part, which is perfectly right and which is the peaceful way of making a demand. And what do we say about this? We say that it is the fault of the Soviet Union that the work of the United Nations is not going on! It is not the fault of the Soviet Union. It is the fault of Great Britain, France and the United States, who are still backing Chiang Kai Shek against the overwhelming majority of the Chinese people.

PEACE

Seven hundred delegates representing tens of thousands of people met in the Mid-Century Conference for Peace in Chicago, during May. They said in their final resolutions: "We affirm that war is not inevitable because of the divergent social systems and that peaceful competition is possible as well as necessary between these systems. We praise those American statesmen who have taken the lead in pointing the way toward American-Soviet settlement. We are convinced that the possibilities for negotiations with the Soviet Union have not been adequately and sincerely explored. We hail the call of the International Red Cross for banning the use of atomic weapons. We hail the role of the United Nations Secretary General, Trygve Lie, and we urge ~~the~~ American support to help make the United Nations work as the agency for peaceful settlements."

We trust that American Negroes will immediately try to work for peace during the next year in some of the thirteen different methods which they proposed: Local meetings for peace, study of peace, testimonials for peace, contact with senators and congressmen asking them either to vote for peace or not to expect their votes; delegations to Lake Success, support of the ten-point program of Secretary-General Trgyve Lie; letters to the press; protection of the civil liberties of all peoples, even of those with whom we may disagree, and fighting warmongers wherever they spread their evil propaganda. No people in the world have a greater stake than the American Negroes for a world of peace.

MARCANTONIO

There is coming in the city of New York, a fight by all parties against Congressman Marcantonio, and the reason is Marcantonio has been the one congressman who has fought effectively for the FEPC, for peace, and for civil rights against entrenched wealth and rule by rich corporations and by every device of courage and endurance which could be used for the right. He ought to be re-elected. This situation concerns not simply New York, but the United States. The man who runs against him represents Tammany Hall and Tammany Hall for a hundred years has stood for everything that is low, reactionary, greedy and wrong in American politics.

PLAYING SAFE

This is the time when all careful people are playing safe. That is, they are keeping their mouths shut. They are being careful of their associations. They are trying to do nothing that anybody could criticize, particularly anybody in power and high position. And it must be confessed that they have a good deal of reason back of such action, because today anybody that stands up for what we used to think was right without saying; that is for peace, for courage, for lowering of the taxation on the poor, for raising taxes upon the rich, for better schools, and social security, for social medicine and hospitalization; men who stood for these things were not only standing for their own best interests, but the best interests of mankind. And once in a while there comes a time in the world when if uou stand for the right you are liable to suffer. It is in those crisis that an unusual number of good and honest men play safe. They take to the tall timber, they do nothing. But on the other hand, what you and I are enjoying today is the result of the work and the words of those people who declined to be safe, and who in time of crisis and stress spoke out for what was right. One of these days, and it is not so far off, the man who today is silent when the world is shrieking for peace, who has nothing to say when greed is taking charge of government, will be the man execrated and cursed by the majority of mankind.

45-7-171

INSURANCE

Remember that in the United States today, the great companies which are selling insurance, are charging more than they need to charge. They are not only making it more difficult for poor people to carry the right kind of and amount of protection, but by the huge profits which they are piling up they areputting in the hands of vast insurance societies, power to promote jim-crow, oppression, undue taxation and war. This is the reason that great powers in the United States are today attacking the International Workers Order which has been selling cheap and honest insurance to the people. Do not be misled by the smearing that is trying to overcome this cooperative venture. It is a magnificent success and that is the reason that greet is trying to kill it.

65-7-172

AS THE CROW FLIES

VIRGINIA UNION UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

It is said that a group of students from Virginia Union University are going to Europe to attack Communism or something of that sort. Of course newspaper reports are probably exaggerated. What is happening doubtless is this, a group of colored students are offered a trip to Europe so that they may testify either by word or deed that Negroes in America are treated well. The Europeans do not believe this. Most of them are quite certain that democracy does not work in America in the case of Negroes. And of course we know this is true; therefore the United States is trying to get Negroes to testify to the contrary. They may not actually ask the students to say this, but if the students do not confirm this attitude, at least they want the students to keep quiet, and by silence give witness to equality in America for the Negroes.

We are sorry to have these students put in this position. We hope that they will refuse to lie. We cannot blame them for simply keeping still, but for God's sake don't lie! If you have got to bear testimony, say simply that the Negroes in the United States are not free and equal. That in Virginia they have practically no political representation, no members of the legislature, almost no members of the City Council; that they are segregated on trains and buses and in depots; that they get unequal treatment in stores and on the streets, and that they do not get justice in Virginia and in many other places in the United States. If there is anyone in this group who really has guts, they might tell of the Scottsboro case, of the six boys who are being judicially lynched in Virginia, of the Ingram case in Georgia, and the accused Trenton six in New Jersey. In other words, let these students either keep still or tell the truth. We are sure that under the presidency of John Gandy and of Lemuel Foster this would have been the advice which you would have received. We trust that President Daniels will not do less.

CHINA

For muddled reasoning the case of China in the United Nations is receiving the best specimen in the United States. China, one of the great powers is represented in the Security Council by a proven scoundrel who has lost control of over 400,000,000 of the people of China. He represents only a small island where he has to keep killing the leaders in order to keep them from [illegible]. Yet his representative sits on the Security Council and on all the great committies and commissions. Under those circumstances the Soviet Union has refused to take part, which is perfectly right and which is the peaceful way of making a demand. And what do we say about this ? We say that it is the fault of the Soviet Union that the work of the United Nations is not going on. It is not the fault of the Soviet Union. It is the fault of Great Britain, France and the United States, who are still backing Chiang Kai Shek against the overwhelming majority of the Chinese people.

PEACE

Seven hundred delegates representing tens of thousands of people met in the Mid-Century Conference for Peace in Chicago during May. They said in their final resolutions: (copy) ?. We trust that American Negroes will immediately try to work for peace during the next year in some of the thirteen different methods which they proposed. Local meetings for peace, study of peace, testimonials for peace, contact with senators and congressmen asking them either to vote for peace or not to receive their votes; delegations to Lake Success, support of the ten-point program of Secretary-General Trgyve Lie; letters to the press; the protection of the civil liberties of all peoples, even of those with whom we may disagree, and fighting warmongers whereever they spread their evil propaganda. No people in the world have a greater stake than American Negroes for a world of peace.

MARCANTONIO

There is coming up in the city of New York, a fight of all parties against Congressman Marcantonio, and the reason is Marcantonio has been the one congressman who has fought effectively for the FEPC, for peace, and for civil rights against entrenched wealth and rule by rich corporations and by every device of courage and endurance which could be used for the right. He ought to be reelected. This situation concerns not simply New York, but the United States. The man who runs against him represents Tammany Hall and Tammany Hall for a hundred years has stood for everything that is low, reactionary, greedy and wrong in American politics.

35-7-96

PLAYING SAFE

This is the time when all careful people are playing safe. That is, they are keeping their mouths shut, they are being careful of their associations. They are trying to do nothing that anybody could criticize, particularly anybody in power and high position. And it must be confessed that they have a good deal of reason back of such action, because today anybody that stands up for what we used to think was right without saying; that is for peace, for courage, for lowering of the taxation on the poor, for raising taxes upon the rich, for better schools, and social security, for social medicine and hospitalization; men who stood for these things were not only standing for their own best interests but the best interests of mankind. And once in a while there comes a time in the world when if you stand for the right you are liable to suffer. It is in those crisis that an unusual number of good and honest men play safe. They take to the tall timber, they do nothing. But on the other hand, what you and I are enjoying today is the result of the work and the words of those people who declined to be safe, and who in time of crisis and stress spoke out for what was right. One of these days, and it is not so far off, the man who today is silent when the world is shrieking for peace, who has nothing to say when greed is taking charge of government, will be the man cursed by the majority of mankind.

INSURANCE

Remember that in the United States today, the great companies which are selling insurance, are charging more than they need to charge. They are not only making it more difficult for poor people to carry the right kind of protection, but by the huge profits which they are piling up, they are putting in the hands of vast insurance society, power to promote jim-crow, oppression, undue taxation and war. This is the reason that great powers in the United States are today attacking the International Workers Order which has been selling cheap and honest insurance to the people. Do not be misled by the smearing that is trying to overcome this cooperative insurance venture. It is a magnificent success and that is the reason that greed is trying to kill it.

Mailed June 19, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

RISING YOUTH

In a nationwide competition of pianists, Roy Eaton, a 20 year old colored New Yorker, won a thousand dollar Chopin Scholarship of the Kosciuscko Foundation. Previously he had studied in Switzerland under a City College scholarship and a fellowship from Yale University. The scholarship competition was open to citizens of the United States between 17 and 25 years of age. There were 30 competitors.

Gwendlyn Brooks, of Topeka, Kansas, 33 years old, who published her first volume of verse in 1945 and received a Guggenheim fellowship, and had recently been given a grant from the National Institute of Arts and Letters, and a magazine price. Her last poems, "Annie Allen" were published during the last year. She is married and has one son.

These are only two of the many indications of the continual rise of the American Negroes.

SEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION

The first Southwide Conference on Discrimination in higher education was held at Atlanta University early in April. Franklin Frazier, the key speaker said: "One might ask, how is it possible to have a system of university education based upon racial exclusiveness. The answer to this question is obviously that the very idea of a university precludes all types of exclusiveness based upon race, caste, or class. Not only in western civilization, but throughout the world, scholarship and learning have broken down the barriers of race and the station in which one is born. Even the European colonial powers have made no distinctions where the question of science and scholarship was concerned. More specifically, neither England nor France ever instituted anything resembling what has come to be known as Negro education. A Negro was a doctor or engineer or what have you, but never a Negro doctor or a Negro engineer. These are the peculiar products of that American invention known as "Negro education."

45-7-181

Albert Einstein, the worlds' greatest scientist wrote: " If an individual commits an injustice he is harassed by his conscience. But nobody is apt to feel responsible for misdeeds of a community, in particular, if they are supported by old traditions. Such is the case with discrimination. Every right-minded person will be grateful to you for having united to fight this evil that so grievously injures the dignity and the repute of our country. Only by spreading education among all of our people can we approach the ideals of democracy. Your fight is not easy, but in the end, you will succeed."

FELIX AFRICANUS

Recently the New York press have been remembering a great Negro, whom we must not forget. Felix Eboue, was born in French Guiana, educated in France, took his degree in law at the University of Bordeaux, and was for 35 years in the French Colonial Administration. He became Governor of the Chad, and in August 1940 took his stand against Petain and Vichy France and on the side of De Gaulle. When Eboue became governor of French Equitorial Africa all French Africa went into the balance against the attempt of the Fascist to overcome the French Empire. The conquest of Colonial France by the Germans was made impossible and black Africa fought beside white Britain and America--a fact which history has already forgotten. It was a great loss to the world and to the Negro people when Eboue died of overwork in 1944.

INDIA AND INDONESIA

We have so much news in the world today, that the greatest items often escape American newspapers. For instance, almost no notice has been taken of the visit of the Prime Minister of India to the President of the United States of Indonesia. Yet this visit of courtesy between the heads of five hundred million colored people, was of tremendous significance. Twenty thousand cheering people met Jawaharlal Nehru as he landed in Merdeka Square, Jakarta, to visit the President Soekarno. It was June 7, and the ruler of India was escorted by three Indian warships, and accompanied by his daughter and two grandchildren. The national anthem of both nations were played, and before a special joint session of the Indonesia parliament, Nehru declared that political freedom was an essential condition for the rebirth of Asiatic peoples. He added: "The Asiatic countries have shaken off the colonial yoke, one of the greatest events of our age." Then he went on to say that Asiatic countries should cooperate as closely as possible to support all world peace endeavors, and India especially must cooperate with Indonesia. He spoke of the increasingly important role that India is playing in world affairs. In the past there was the tendency to think of Asia as the outer fringe of the world, but this is an "outmoded concept" and if people do not know it: "They will realise it soon." "Indeed," he declared, "Asia today gradually is becoming the most important center of the various forces at play and in conflict, and it may be that much will depend on the inter-action of these forces for the world."

45-7-183

IN ETHIOPIA

Waizaro Senedu Gabru, a school director has written a book on Ethiopia called "The Book of My Heart." She says, among other things; "The Italians burnt, slew, hanged and beheaded our fathers, imprisoned our mothers, and even burnt small children and babies in the houses that were burnt during the brutal reign of Mussolini that lasted five dark and sorrowful years. Though these brutal cruelties were perpetrated on us, the vales and mountains of Ethiopia hid their patriots and helped them to fight against their enemies. We know that many of our patriots lost their lives fighting against their enemies." Schools and roads are multiplying in Ethiopia and airlines are now reaching it. Tourists are visiting the country. American Negroes should contemplate a trip to this most interesting of African lands.

215-7-184

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

RISING YOUTH

~~Rising youth~~ In a nationwide competition of pianists, Roy Eaton, a 20 year old colored New Yorker, won a thousand dollar Chopin scholarship of the Kosciusko Foundation. Previously he had studied in Switzerland under a City College scholarship and a fellowship from Yale University. The scholarship competition was open to citizens of the United States between 17 and 25 and there were 30 competitors.

35-7-100

Gwendlyn Brooks, of Topeka, Kansas, 33 years old, who published her first volume of verse in 1945, ~~and~~ received a Guggenheim Fellowhsip, and recently has been given a grant from the National Institute of Arts and Letters, and a magazine prize. Her last poems "Annie Allen" were published during the last year. She is married and has one son. These are only two of the many indications of the continued rise of the American Negroes.

SEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION

The first Southwide Conference on Discrimination in higher education was held at Atlanta University early in April. Franklin Frazier, the key speaker said: (INSERT A) Albert Einstein, the worlds' greatest scientist wrote: (Insert B)

Felix Africanus

Recently the New York Press have been remembering a great Negro, whom we must not forget. Felix Eboué, was born in French Guiana, educated in France, took his degree in law at the University of Bordeaux, and was for 35 years in the French Colonial Administration. He became governor of the Chad, and in August 1940 took his stand against Pétain and Vichy France, ~~against Petain~~ and on the side of De Gaulle. Thus all French ~~Equitorial~~ Africa went into the balance against the attempt of the Fascist to overcome the French Empire. When Eboué became governor of French Equitorial Africa, the conquest of Colonial France by the Germans was made impossible. It was a great loss to the world and to the Negro people when Eboue died of overwork in 1944.

India and Indonesia

We have so much news in the world today, that the greatest items often escape ~~the~~ American papers. For instance, almost no notice has been taken of the visit of the Prime Minister of India to the President of the United States of Indonesia. Yet this visit of courtesy between the heads of five hundred million colored people, was of tremendous significance. Twenty thousand cheering people met Jawaharlal Nehru as he landed in Merdeka Square, Jakarta, to visit President Soekarno. It was June 7, and the ruler of India was escorted by three Indian warships, and accompanied by his daughter and two grandchildren. The national anthem of both nations were played, and before a special joint session of the Indonesia parliament, Nehru declared that political freedom was an essential condition for the rebirth of Asiatic poeples. He added: "The Asiatic countries have shaken off the colonial yoke, one of the greatest events of our age." Then he went on to say that Asiatic countries should cooperate as closely as possible to support all world peace endeavors, and India especially must cooperate with Indonesia. He spoke of the increasingly important role that India is playing in world affairs. In the past there was the tendency to think of Asia as the outer fringe of the world, but this is an outmoded concept and if people do not know it: "They will realize it soon." "Indeed", he declared, "Asia today gradually is becoming the most important center of the various forces at play and in conflict, and it may be that much will depend on the inter-action of these forces for the world."

35-7-107

In Ethiopia

Waizaro Senedu Gabru, a school director has written a book, called "The Book of My Heart". She says, among other things, (COPY C) "Airlines are now reaching ~~Ethiopia and~~ Tourists are visiting the country. American Negroes should contemplate a trip to this most interesting ~~country.~~ on Ethiopia

it.

of African lands

Schools and roads are multiplying in Ethiopia and

Mailed June 27, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

A MISSION TO COMMUNISM

I must apologize to Virgina State College for getting it mixed up with Virginia Union University in the matter of that mission to Communism. As I read the details about it, I realize what a mixed up matter it is and of course it was unworthy of Virginia State and could not happen in the college of Gandy, Foster and Daniels. It is quite all right for people who have knowledge to spread it in the world; but for a set of immature students to take advantage of a free trip in order to tell the world about Communism without knowing anything about it or visiting a single communistic country is a piece of stupidity unworthy of a people or a race. The persons who have sent this mission and encouraged it are simply making an exhibition of futility and dishonesty.

4/5-7-185

PEACE

It is the duty of every American to redouble in these hectic days the effort to preserve the peace of the world. There is greater hope for peace today than there has been for months. The difficulties in Korea must not be used as a pretext for throwing the world into disaster. The United Nations has acted promptly as it should, but ought to ascertain the facts before going further. If it will now admit China to her rightful seat as a part of world government, we may hope that the road toward peace willnot be blocked by a local Asiatic quarrel.

BINGA

I am sorry to hear of the death of Jesse Binga. I knew him in his prime when he had just built and opened his beautifully appointed bank.

I remember speaking for his enterprise at the Wendell Phillips High School. He made the mistake which Negro business in America can easily make; and that is to try to build up a small business which depends upon big business of the white United States. In nine cases out of ten such an enterprise will either be betrayed or neglected. Small banks must depend upon big banks. Big Banks are the creaturs of big business. So long as big business in the United States is selfish and rughless and carried on for profit rather than for general welfare, then every little business is at the mercy of these sharks. This Jesse Binga found out to his disaster.

GRAHAM AND PEPPER

Two leaders of the South, who in many respects were friends of the American Negro have been defeated for the election. Their defeat, primarily was at the hands of the enemies of the Negro race. At the same time their greater defeat came because, under pressure, neither of these men were willing to stand up for the complete civil emancipation of American Negroes. In each case, these liberals backtracked and retreated; because of the opposition and hammering which the unreconstructed South put upon them. How soon will the white South learn that there is no use for men to plead liberialism and democracy so long as they try at the same time to placate the race hate and oligarchy of the South. Nothing but a total attack upon this relic of slavery is going to rescue liberalism in the South.

AFRICA

Little by Little news from Africa is seeping into the columns of the American press. This will increase in the future because all that has gone on in Asia is going to increase in Africa. There the last fight for colonialism will take place; and one of the greatest opponents of free Africa will be the United States of America. Along with her propaganda for peace and democracy and her helping of backward nations will go increased investment in cheap African labor and materials, upon which old wealth will be usutained and new fortunes built. This has been the clear object of Great Britain for the last decade; it is beginning to be the clearer object of American business. It calls for thought and attention on the part of those who really want to increase democracy and freedom in the world.

PEEKSKILL

The official whitewash of the mob at Peekskill was expected, but it convinces no one and proves nothing. Here the city and state assaulted and mobbed citizens, whose crime was wanting to hear Paul Robeson. Not reason and democracy but hate, greed and mob rule are gaining the whip hand in America and will triumph until the average citizen awakes and re-enthrones justice.

45-7-187

Send Jue - June 27 to Flora

AS THE CROW FLIES

A MISSION TO COMMUNISM

I must apologize to Virginia State College for getting it mixed up with Virginia Union University in the matter of that mission to Communism. As I read the details about it, I realize what a mixed up matter it is and of course it was unworthy of Virginia State and could not happen in the college of Gandy, Foster and Daniels. It is quite allright for people who have knowledge to spread it in the world, but for a set of immature students to take advantage of a free trip in order to tell the world about Communism without knowing anything about it or visiting a single communistic country is a piece of stupidity unworthy of a people or a race. The persons who have ~~xxix~~ sent this mission and encouraged it are simply making an exibition of fulitility and dishonesty.

35-798

PEACE

It is the duty of every American to redouble in these hectic days the effort to preserve the peace of the world. There is greater hope for peace today than there has been for months. The difficulties in Korea must not be used as a pretext for throwing the world into disaster. The United Nations has acted promptly as it should, but ought to reconsider the decision to keep Red China out of the United Nations. If ~~no~~ it will ~~reconstitute itself and~~ now admit China to her right seat as a part of world government, we may hope that the road toward peace will not be blocked by a local ~~small~~ Asiatic ~~predicament~~ quarrel.

BINGA

I am sorry to hear of the death of Jesse Binga. I knew him in his prime when he had just built and opened ~~that~~ his beautifully appointed bank. I remember speaking for his enterprise at the Wendell Phillips High School. He made the mistake which Negro business men in America can easily make; and that is to try to build up a small business which depends upon big business of the white United States. In nine cases out of ten such an enterprise will either be betrayed or neglected. Small banks must depend upon big banks. Big banks are the creatures of big business. So long as big business in the United States is selfish and ruthless and carried on for profit rather than for general welfare, then every little business is at the mercy of these sharks. This Jesse Binga found out to his disaster.

GRAHAM AND PEPPER

Two leaders of the South, who in many respects were friends of the American Negro have been defeated for the election. Their defeat, primarily, was at the hands of the enemies of the Negro race, and at the same time their greater liberal enemies came because, under pressure, neither of these men were willing to stand up for the complete civil emancipation of American Negroes. In each case, these liberals backtracked and retreated, because of the opposition and hammering which the unreconstructed South put upon them. How soon will the white South learn that there is no use for men pleading liberialism and democracy so long as the same time they try at to placate the reactionaries and the oligarchy of the South. Nothing but a total attack upon this relic of slavery is going to rescue liberalism in the South.

AFRICA

35-7-99

Little by little news from Africa is seeping into the columns of the American press. This will increase in the future because all that has gone on in Asia is going to increase in Africa. There the last fight for colonialism will take place, and one of the greatest opponents of free Africa will be the United States of America, along with her propaganda for peace and democracy and her helping of backward nations will go increased investment in cheap African labor and materials, upon which old wealth will be sustained and new fortunes built. This has been the clear object of Great Britain for the last decade; it is beginning to be the clearer object of American business. It calls for thought and attention on the part of those who really want to increase democracy and freedom in the world.

Peekskill

The official whitewash of the mob at Peekskill was expected, but it convinces no one and proves nothing. Here the city and state assaulted and mobbed citizens, whose crime was wanting to hear Paul Robeson. Not reason and democracy but hate, greed and mob rule are gaining the whip hand in America and will triumph until the average citizen awakes and re-enthrones justice

Mailed July 8, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

I BURY MY WIFE

I have just returned from the town where I was born, Great Barrington, Massachusetts. There I laid to rest, in the sunshine and under the great and beautiful elms, the wife to whom I have been married for 55 years. With all of its sadness it was a beautiful experience, because after a decade of work and years of sickness, the life of this woman was brought to a beautiful end, and the dark fear that shomehow she might outlive me and that I would be unable to care for her until the end--this was gone.

MY MARRIAGE

We had been married over half a century. I met Nina Gomer at Wilberforce, where I first began my life work as a teacher. She was a student there. In appearance, of remarkable beauty with her great mass of coiled black hair and extraordinarily beautiful eyes. People used to stop and stare at her on the street. But she had no consciousness of her beauty and paid little personal attention to it. Indeed her looks were not her chief characteristic and I never thought so even when at the age of 27, I married her. Her great gift was her singularly honest character; her passion for cleanliness and order and her loyalty. That was her contribution to our joint life. Sometimes I felt burdened under it; our home seemed a bit too clean and too carefully kept. I wanted many times to have her forget her housework and throw away her careful plans for daily life and romp and laugh. She seldom did this, because she could not; it was not in her nature. She was always serious and yat a good companion. She held the balance true and her concept of the reality of life kept me from surging and wandering and perhaps from overturning our chariot of life.

45-7-191

MY CONTRIBUTION

I was not, on the whole, what one would describe as a good husband. The family and its interests were never the main center of my life. I was always striving to guide the world and certainly the Negro group, so that always I was ranging away in body or in soul and leaving the home to my wife. She must often have been lonesome and wanted more regular and personal companionship than I gave. And yet on the other hand, she was as avid for the things I thought I was doing and as proud of any accomplishment as I was. One never knows under such circumstances, just what might have been changed for the better. Ours was a pleasant and fruitful partership, not completely ideal for it had ups and downs, but it was peaceful and good. In one respect it was near the ideal, and of this I was proud because according to my bringing up I was a "good provider". My wife was never in financial trouble. We always had a good home, even beautiful; we had food and clothes. We traveled, not only over large parts of the United States, but in England, France and Italy. We saw something of the Good Life; we were never "in want". In fact in all these 55 years, I do not think it once occurred to either of us as probable or possible that we should ever be separated or the family tie broken. Both of us had been brought up under the old fashioned concept of marriage as permanent, "until death do us part."

CHILDREN

We had two children. One, a little boy who came suddenly, unexpectedly miraculously . Physically he was a perfect child and in the few months of his life , vivid in personality. But down in Atlanta, he caught one of those spring intestinal infections, which might easily have been avoided and even stopped had we been persons of greater experience. As it was, at the age of only a year and a half, suddenly he died. And in a sense my wife died too. Never after that was she quite the same in her attitude toward life and the world. Down below was all this great ocean dark bitterness.

It seemed all so unfair. I too, felt the blow. Something was gone from my life which would not come back. [redacted]after all Life was left and the World and I could plunge back into it as she could not. Even when our little girl came two years later, she could not altogether replace the One. So it seemed fitting that at the end of her life, she should go back to the hills of Kerkshire, where the boy had been born and be buried beside him, in soil where my fathers for more than two centuries lived and died. I feel that here she will lie in peace. And I am infinitely glad that I lived long enough to keep her from poverty and worry and excess of pain and to see her die in honor and love.

45-7-193

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

(1)

I BURY MY WIFE

I have just returned from the town where I was born, Great Barrington Massachusetts. There I laid to rest, in the sunshine and under the great and beautiful elms, the wife to whom I have been married for 55 years. With all of its sadness it was a beautiful experience, because after decades ~~years~~ of work and ~~then~~ years of sickness, the life of this woman was brought to a beautiful end, and the dark fear that somehow she might outlive me and that ~~I could not let her end with peace~~ would be unable to care for her until the end — , this was ~~eliminated~~ gone

35-7-91

MY MARRIAGE

We had been married over half a century. I met Nina Gomer at Wilberforce, where I first began my life work as a teacher. She was a student there. In appearance, of remarkable beauty with her great mass of coiled black hair and extraordinarily beautiful eyes. People used to stop on the street to stare at her. But she had no ~~particular~~ consciousness of her beauty and paid little personal attention to it. Indeed her looks were not her chief ~~work~~ characteristic and I never thought so even when I married her at the age of 27. Her great ~~value~~ gift was her singularly honest ~~clear~~ character, her passion for cleanliness and order and her loyalty. That was her contribution to our joint life. Sometimes I ~~was~~ felt burdened under it, our home seemed a bit too clean and too carefully kept. I wanted many times to have her forget her housework, and throw away her careful plans for daily life and romp and laugh. She seldom ~~not often do~~ did this because she could not, it was not in her nature. She was always ~~terribly~~ serious and yet ~~she was~~ a good comapnion. She held the balance true and her concept of the reality of life kept me from surging and wandering and perhaps overturning our ~~path~~ chariot of life.

MY CONTRIBUTION

I was not on the whole, what one would describe as a good husband. The family and its interests were never the main center of my life. I was always striving to guide the world and certainly the Negro group, ~~to which I belonged,~~ so that always I was ~~forgetting~~ ranging away in body or in soul and leaving the home ~~to her.~~ to my wife She must often have been lonesome and wanted more regular and personal companionship than I gave. And yet on the other hand, she was as avid for the things ~~that~~ I thought I was doing and as proud of any accomplishment as I ~~could have been.~~ was One never knows under such circumstances just what might have ~~been added for~~ changed for the better. Ours was ~~not an~~ a pleasant + fruitful partnership, not completely ideal ~~life~~ for it had ups and downs, but ~~there was one thing of which~~ I was proud ~~and that~~ ~~in~~. ~~So far as the economics of life were concerned, the income and expense,~~ my wife ~~she~~ was never in trouble ~~or difficulties~~ demand. We always had a good home, even beautiful, we had food and clothes. We traveled, not only over large parts of the United States, but in England, France and Italy. We saw something of the good life, ~~and~~ in all this 55 years I do not think it once occured to us as ~~either~~ probable or possible that we should ever be separated ~~and~~ or the family tie broken ~~up~~. Both of us had been brought up under the old fashioned concept of marriage as permanent, "until death do us part."

CHILDREN

We had two children. One, a little boy who came suddenly, unexpectedly miraculously. Physically he was a perfect child and in the few months of his life, vivid in personality. But down in Atlanta, he caught one of those spring infections, which might easily have been avoided and even stopped had we been persons of greater experience, ~~but~~ as it was, at the age of only a year and a half, suddenly he died. And in a sense my wife died too. Never after that was she quite the same in her attitude toward life and the world. Down below was all this great ocean of dark bitterness. It seemed all so unfair to her. I ~~of course~~ too felt the blow ~~it but not as~~ deeply ~~as she did~~. Something was gone from my life which would not come back. But after all life was left and the World and I could because according to my ~~husband~~ marriage vows I was to "quote Proverbs"

35-76

It was peaceful and good for me to reflect it was never like that + of this and our achievement + unity + continuance with this effort + enthusiasm with this brick was still strong back as she could not.

plunge into it ~~but not quite so with her~~. Even when our little girl came two years later, she could not replace the one altogether. So it seemed fitting that at the end of her life, she should go back to the hills of Berkshire, where the boy had been born and be buried beside him, in the soil where my fathers for more than two centuries had lived and died. I feel that she will lie here in peace. And I am unfeignedly glad that I lived long enough to keep her from poverty and weary worry and excess of pain & to see her die in honor & love

35-7-93

Mailed July 10, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

VIRGINIA UNION UNIVERSITY

The first sign of sanity among American Negroes and assurance that they are sane and reasonable during this awful world crisis, is the news that the proposed "communist" offensive originating in Virginia Union University has been called off, despite the wide publicity given it; despite the unthinking men who rushed to its promotion. The president has calmly disassociated the institution from the project. He and all of us, would like to have American Negro students visit Europe. We would like to have them study at first hand so far as possible the present situation, but we are opposedto being used as cat-paws for people with ulterior motives. Therefore the University rightly refuses to be made the laughing stock of thoughtful men.

FORCE

The real danger in the present situation is not the war in Korea, bad and senseless as it is. It is not the opposition of ideology between the United States and the Soviet Union; it is rather the deplorable fact, that in this world after a long series of horrible experiences, most intelligent people still believe that the only way to settle differences between nations is Force. You hear men say again and again, there is no use in reasoning; there is no use in conference; you must make people do as you wish. Of course the very statement of such a thesis shows its utter unreasonableness. You cannot force men to agree. In the end, if civilization is to survive, there is but one method by which differences among human beings can be resolved, and that is reason. There will always be differences; most of them small and unimportant and easily explained.

45-7-188

But in addition to that, there will be great and vital disagreements; and there again, it does not make any difference what weapons we may have, it does not make any difference how thoroughly convinced we are of our own right and integrity; nevertheless, force neither of airplanes nor of atom bombs can make people agree with us.

REASON

It would seem that after the expereince of the last two thousand years, the place of reason in the world would have been made clear through religion, education and experience. It has not been, despite the fact that we have tried to settle differences through continuous wars. Is it not time now even in the midst of hositlities, even at the beginning of what may be the third and last world war, is it not possible for large and larger groups of human beings to sit down together and reason the matter our? First of all, we can, all of us, begin with the great Stockholm Pledge of the atom-bomb. This does not give up any principle, rather it establishes a principle which every religion on earth has repeatedly declared is its central idea. The Stockholm Pledge signed by millions and millions of people, demands the outlawing of atoms "as weapons of aggression and mass murder of people." It demands "strict international control to enforce this measure" and it declares "that any government which first uses atom weapons against any other country whatsoever will be committing a crime against humanity and should be dealt with as a war criminal." If there is any country today which refuses this pledge, that country should be considered an outlaw against civilization.

FACTS

Always in the midst of actual war, not only are laws silent, but the facts of the case are also undisclosed. Most people do not know and cannot find out actual conditions in Korea. We should know that, before we take sides; before we come to conclusions, before we persist in the murdering of human beings. Something is wrong in Korea and has been wrong for a thousand years. Instead of trying to right that wrong, we are today trying to say that those people who are protesting against the wrong are themselves representatives of injustice and force. This is not necessarily true and there should be on the part of the world, a demand not simply for cessation of hostilities in Korea but for careful investigation of the facts.

WAR

And here comes war again; without the consent of the people of the United States, of any country in the world, we are fighting, and we are fighting as men have always said, since the beginning of time, for Peace. We are saying that what happened in Korea was a deliberate breach of the peace and we are trying to make the people of the United States believe that back of this deliberate wrong is Russia. But a moment's thought will make it clear that this is not logical. If there is one occurence which Russia could not have wanted it was this Korean war. The stars in their courses were favoring Russia. The Security Council could not long have tontinued to exclude China. In a few months, in all probability the representatives of the Chinese Communist Government would have been seated in the United Nations. No one in their senses can believe that under these circumstances, Russia deliberately instigated war. There has been, so far, absolutely no proof that this is true.

45-7-189

Mailed July 19, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-169

RACE

In a sense my life work is finished and my task done. For have not the embattled scientists declared in the UNESCO:

1. Races are mentally equal.
2. Mulattoes are not inferior.
3. Race is a myth.
4. There are no races.

So all is settled and the Problem to which I have devoted some 50 years of effort is solved. Or is it solved? Is the color caste legislation about to be repealed? Can all black Georgians vote? Is racial inter-marriage legal in Mississippi? Can you find a house to live in? Do you hear the Governor of South Carolina running a mile to say to the Governor of North Carolina: "Hey, it's all off! We're wrong; a Negro is as good as a white man!" No! We are not seeing this and our generation will never see it. Why?

REASON AND RACE

People did not note the inferiority of colored people and then, out of pity, enslave them. Americans did not study crime and immorality, and then in self-defence, make "Jim-Crow" laws to protect civilization and womanhood. O no! That is not the way the human beast works. White men found profit in slaves, reduced Negroes to slavery and then looked about for justification and found it in "race". Race then became the reason for slavery, when in fact slavery was the reason for race. Liberty-loving Americans did not with sorrow, discover that colored folk were not fit for freedom and democracy and then with regret make them segregated serfs, kept "in their places" by lynch-law and by the lofty determination to hold the white race "pure." O no! The South wanted cheap labor on which to erect the Cotton Kingdom and the North wanted Trade and Manufacture; all wanted wealth and power.

35-7-170

Negro slavery gave both what they wanted. They adopted it and straightway sought excuses for this outrageous attack on civilization and religion. They found these excuses so thoroughly plausible as to be able to declare "all men" free and equal. Only Negroes were not men.

ABOLITION

But "they saw their error and set the slaves free," cry all the Polyannas today. "Hoorray for Abe Lincoln! To which we answer soberly: But we are not yet free. Most of us cannot vote. Most of us cannot travel without public insult. Few of us get the work we are fitted to do or the pay others get for the same effort. "But" comes the yell from Maine to Texas: Some can! Some get by. We are better off then we were fifty years ago. That is true. I have said it. I still say it. But the man who has fallen into a well, or been pushed there and held with his head half under the mud, does he burst into jubilation and shout for joy when he is half-way out? Must you blame him for not thanking Ole Massa for not being half a man because he is all of three-quarters free? Is he exactly ungrateful when he fights even more tenatiously, and complains even more bitterly against barriers which his father would have hailed as freedom itself? Can you blame him? Well whether you can or do, just make up your weak minds: the Negro tomorrow is going to raise more Hell and do it more effectively than ever before, until he is not simply making progress toward full citizenship--but has actually and completely reached it. And you white Americans who are counting on sops and half-measures to appease us: Turman promises never meant to be fulfilled; Taft double-talk done with tongue in cheek; coupled with a judgeship or so to stop tongues from wagging--all this will be received with thanks and with determination all the stronger to make the hot seat hotter for all liars and the Voice of America dumb in demanding democracy for the world which it cannot realise at home.

THE FUTURE

Nor will we rest there. The Young Negro is beginning to probe deeper. He is beginning to ask why this pattern of repression, with poverty ignorance and degradation on which gracious and boastful cultures are continually built; and for which rich and pompous religion and ommiscient science is repeatedly martialled to excuse and support human degradation---the young Negro is gong to ask, how far is this pattern going to be repeated again and again in this world? And are we going to be cunningly patted on the back and pulled unctiously over to the side of the rulers of the world, to help sit on the world's degraded, while the holders of power step on the faces of the unfortunate, the ignorant and the poor? This is going to be asked and an answer sought. And don't forget this, my masters. Flattery is not going to keep us from thinking. Long, black Cadillacs driven by sleek and rich Negroes will not lull us to sleep and content; or make us forget the millions of people black, brown, yellow and white who are hungry and sick and tired and would be glad for a chance just to sit still in peace much less to ride in luxury. Beyond the present Negro Problem in the United States lie Asia and Africa. Beyond our remaining slavery lurks the persisting and self-repeating pattern of men rising on the bodies and souls of other men to build what we are fond of calling Civilization. All this rests on the old assumption that men cannot serve each other honestly and efficiently; that they cannot produce enough food and materials to make all comfortable; that poverty is eternal, disease unavoidable, and ignorance deliberate or due to lack of brains. That consequently the Good are saps and the world is for the smart and greedy.

35-7-2171

Mailed July 28, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-172

WAR

The difficulty with war, is that during its continuance, not only are laws silent but thinking is stopped, or at any rate there is strong tendency to discourage discussion. This brings up difficult moral problems. War is a terrible thing, one does not need to emphasize that. When therefore a nation proposes to goto war, there must be differences of opinion. The differences are not always matters of treason or cowardice. Yet the first reaction is to call them one or the other. For instance, an organization with which I am connected, has been active in the last few months, in trying to get as many persons as possible to ask ban of the use of the atom bomb in any war. This organization is not interfering with the war in any way; it is not composed of spies or traitors, it is simply trying to limit this and future wars to civilized and decent tactics. From the beginning of history there has been some sort of law in war-fare. We cannot give that up today. Yet despite our right in law and morals to ask that the atom bomb be banned, we are attacked as enemies of this country. I suppose on the contrary that few organizations have in their membership and cooperating with them, a larger number of persons who believe in the United States, who have served the United States, and who propose now and later to try to make this land the sort of land of which every citizen could be proud. It is therefore of the greatest importance that everybody, no matter what he thinks of the war in Korea, should insist that people have a right to ask for certain moral curbs on warfare.

KOREA

There is of course much beyond this minimum. There is for every man a consideration of the rights of Koreans, and of the moral background of this war. The Korean people have behind them five thousand years of civilization. They have suffered in many ways for centuries, from China, Japan and other nations. They have been defeated, conquered and cheated. After the Second World War, their hopes were raised high. They expected that this little land, about the size of England, would at last have the right to establish its own government and to begin a renewal of culture development. That cultural development had to be based upon fundamental economic change, especially on the re-distribution of the land into the ownership by the farmers and the right of the people to have a voice not simply in choosing of their political leaders, but in determining their wages and conditions of work. This demand was not peculiar to Korea; it is back of the whole problem in the Balkans, in Poland in China and India; in Europe and America. Korea was not allowed to decide for herself what this economic change would be. She became the center of bitter international rivalry. It must be admitted that the United States and the rigime which it supported in South Korea did not undertake the changes which the Koreans, North or South wanted, and for which they had been striving for centuries. It was our fault and no one's else that this change did not take place.

35-7-174

THE PATH OF REFORM

It is easy for us who are far away and do not understand thoroughly the conditions in Korea, to advise the Koreans as to what they outht to have done under the circumstances. We may say that they should have arranged for a general election, so as to settle the matter of the future of the country. But the difficulty with that proposal, was that such an election would have been under the control of the United States government or of the United Nations strongly influenced by our government; and in any case under the control of Syingman Rhee, who is a reactionary and dishonest representative of the landlords. It is not realistic to assume that the majority of Koreans were going to submit to such an election. Whether or not, the remedy which North Korea adopted was best in the long run, it is impossible for an outsider to say; but this is certainly true, the pattern which Korea followed was the pattern laid down in the American Revolution, the French Revolution and the Haitian Revolution. Certainly what ought to have been done was not to meet this situation with force and violence, but rather with call to reason, mediation and promise of ultimate justice; if this had been done there is not question but what the Korean War could have been held back and the future of the world look far brighter than it does today. This of course is wisdom and advice after the fact; and yet what has happened in Korea is going to happen again in the world unless we learn from the past, wisdom for the future.

35-74-73

Mailed - August 4, 1958

35-7-163

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

INDIA

For a long time the relations between Indians and American Negroes were neither close nor sympathetic. This arose because Indian students coming here in the 19th century tried to avoid the caste and condescension of the whites toward colored people; and by wearing their turbans and exploiting their British accent, they drew as far away from the Negroes as possible. Then during the First World War and after, there came centers of acquaintanceship and understanding. It was then that I first met that great Indian, Lajpat Rai. We talked together much and became close friends, until the British killed him horribly for his advocacy for Indian independence.

GHANDI AND NEHRU

With Mohandas Ghandi I had correspondence, and I was gratified, Ghandi asked about me when a prominent American Negro visited India not long ago. Through correspondance too, I knew Nehru, but when he came to America recently I did not try to see him or to make contact with him. I was grievously disappointed at the number of persons in jail in India, because of their political and economic beliefs. I realise what difficulties Nehru faced, but this method of settling them did not seem to me to be right or realistic. I signed a statement which was sent to him, in which I joined others in saying this, at the same time I knew that of all the countries striving for freedom and autonomy, today, India probably faces the most difficult situation, and that is because of two things: religion and illiteracy.

RELIGION IN INDIA

In India two of the worlds' greatest religions have come into contact and complication for a thousand years or more. The Buddha was born in India and out of India went his fateful message to the world, with six black, and six yellow and six brown missionaries. But even Buddhism was not fundamental in India for beneath it lay, what we roughly call Hinduism; a vast body of cultural patterns, prehistoric beliefs and marvelous civilizations, out of which the Indian people had been formed. And then down upon the Buddist, Hindu culture, swooped, Mohammedanism out of the West. Thus India is faced with a problem almost insoluble especially when the Mohammedan, Pakistan deliberately cut off from the mass of India by British machination stands almost ready for civil war against the Hindu East.

35-7-104

EXPLOITATION

And to this must be added the exploitation not simply of continued English and American investment, but the exploitation by native capitalists and landholders. It is a situation that every colored and backward group faces. We are beginning to realise it here in the United States, where the rich Negro is beginning to exploit the poor Negro and gang up under reaction to repress radicals. It is easy for the native if he has help from the white outsider to exploit the native; if he has incentive from the ease through which his relationship to the people enables him to rob them. The Indian capitalist is a strong and threatening figure. Through him the industrial organisation of all India is kept going; without him, India might fall into such distress and squaler that the British empire or the American investor could move in and repossess himself of the land. It is this complicated situation that a man like Nehru faces, add to this poverty and illiteracy. Nehru is a socialist, but he cannot carry out socialism here against capitalists like Patel. One can sense that in the change of relations of India toward America.

MADAME PANDIT

In San Francisco, where I was as consultant of the American Delegation to the United Nations Organization, I saw considerable of Madame Pandit.

35-7-165

She was at the time outside the barriers; she could not, as I could, find rest in a first class hotel. She could not address the public save by meetings which her own people organized. She had neither standing nor recognition; but she fought marvelously and well.

Then recognition came, then India became a nation and in the transition Madame Pandit could fight in the new United Nations for her Indian fellows in South Africa and not only for them but also strongly for the blacks of South Africa. We Negroes of America rose to applaud her. Then came change.

Mrs. Pandit realized that while it was popular here to defend Indians in South Africa, it was never popular to defend Negroes anywhere. It was not long ago that the head of one of our colored sororities invited Madame Pandit to a celebration which was beautifully carried out. There were lovely colored women becomingly gowned and the Basileus, who had fought a good fight for freedom, over many years congratulated Madame Pandit on her defense of Negroes and their cause. Madame Pandit demurred: she said that she had been misunderstood that; she did not go along wholly with what Negroes in America were saying and trying to do; that she advocated patience and waiting, etc. She took the path only too familiar to us. The ladies of the sorority felt insulted and cruelly disillusioned. But all this is perhaps natural and to be expected.

Madame Pandit is now ambassador in Washington, that "Jim-Crow" city; she is flattered and dined by high officials. She feels differently than she did in San Francisco. All this typifies the long hard path which lies before India and calls for our sympathy and help, even though we feel certain unpleasant results. India has a long hard way, in her climbing the cobbled path she has our sympathy and hope.

Mailed August 9, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-166

INDONESIA

Once I was walking along the streets of the Hague in Holland. I was a young student on my way to Germany and I wanted to see everything and know all about it. I wanted direction to some place, I forget which, and seeing a man near me I asked him. He was an officer in uniform; he looked at me and stiffened a bit, and before giving me any directions he said slowly, in carefully mustered English: "Do you not usually raise your hat when you address an officer?" I told him, "No, I do not." I might have explained that in my country at that time we did not hold officers in particularly high esteem; certainly we did not regard them as rulers of the universe. We were looking forward to a continued era of peace. All this I did not explain, but after I had gotten my directions, I raised my hat and thanked the pompass ass courteously. I became aware that here I had ran across another of those peculiar problems of the "color line." This plain sleek little Holland owned several millions of colored people overseas, and expected from them deference and service. It was the first time that I became aware of Indonesia.

ISLES OF THE EASTERN SEAS

Stretched across the waters from Asia from Australia, between the Indian Ocean and the Pacific and occupying a space as large as that of the original thirteen states, live 75 million colored people on a net work of islands from the hug Sumatra through narrow Java to great Borneo and Celebes. North are the Philippines, geographically a part of this group; and south is the vast waste of waters down the South Pole. These are colored people, and deeply colored. They range from Yellow to dark brown, carrying in their veins the blood of Africa and Asia, and forming a great and ancient center of history and civilisation.

I remember once coming in contact with a significant aspect of that civilisation. I had been invited to speak in London and certain patriotic American women objected to my presence at the leading London Womens Club. It was then that Her Highness Ranee of Sarawak took me under her patronage and as reigning [redacted] had me publicly to dinner and brought a most distinguished audience to listen to my speech with its arraignment of the color line in the United States and the British Empire. Now Sarawak is a bit of Borneo which an English official had given to him with the native title, and which the British Empire with malice aforethought continued to recognize until quite recently.

35-7-167

JAPAN AND INDONESIA

In the future we will recognise that the Japanese did not attack the white West in vain. It all came so suddenly and quickly and then was so quickly wiped out by the Second World War that today we are like to forget it. But remember that a great Yellow nation rose up and drove Europe out of Asia in a short time and with miraculous thoroughness, and thereafter Asia did not return docile to the protection of Europe, particularly in Indonesia. These brown people led by Soekarno helped drive the Japanese out, but then objected to the Dutch returning. Thereupon rose war between the Dutch and her colonies. That war from 1947 to 1949 was the effort of the colonies to make the Dutch recognize and put into action a long series of vague promises of autonomy. The East Indians demanded freedom and demanded it now.

Why was it Holland wanted to hold these islands? It was of course the old story, the islands raised rice, coffee, rubber and quinine; they made Holland rich and clean and gleaming; they made life in Holland comfortable; they supplied Holland and the world with bulbs of beautiful tulips. But the colonies starved.

35-7-168

INDONESIAN ART

All that we of the West heard of these East Indies for decades was their art. They and we were drugged by it. Man cannot live without beauty. He has to have song, dance and ornaments; and this the traveler saw in Java and the other islands of the Eastern Indies; but they did not realize that while people need expression of beauty, they must also eat. The peoples of Indonesia like the peoples of Asia, were continually starving. They had schools, but schools for the few. They had some educated men who went to Holland for their training. They had families of mixed white and colored folk and these mulattoes too often became leaders who kept the mass of the darker folk down. All [illegible] began to pall after the meddling which Japan thrust into the arms of these people. There came revolt and self assertion and finally in 1949, there came the recognition of the Indonesian Republic.

THE REPUBLIC OF INDONESIA

So today we have a great nation of brown people, new to the world and struggling with new and intricate problems. These problems are the world old problems of how they may eat and drink and be sheltered and yet not be slaves to their work and slaves to other folk who get riches from their work. The colonial regime is doomed, but it is not gone. Indonesia is trying to take over the control of her industry, trying to let Du[illegible]h capital remain but not rule, trying to assert dominat on of New Guinea which is yet being withheld, trying to have the recognition of the peoples of the world for its [illegible]dependence. It has not accomplished this yet, but it is on its way.

Mailed - Aug. 16, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-85

RICE

In my New England home, no meal was complete without potatoes. They were called "Irish Potatoes," and they became an integral part of our food because of Irish immigrants. In Ireland potatoes could grow when lit le else could and the poor peasants lived almost wholly on them; without the potatoes there was no life. So when the potato famine came in 1845 the Irish in droves migrated to America and brought us the potato habit, although perhaps we had some of it before. As potatoes are in New England, so rice is to the South, and especially to Asia and the islands of the seas. So that when one thinks of life among the larger part of human beings, they think of rice. And Burma hasoften been called the "rice bowl" of Asia, because of the 12 million acres given to its cultivation and its quality in the estimation of the peoples round about.

BURMA

Burma is a country of 17 million people, descendants of orginal Negroids upon whom the Mongolians of the North descended. It has a tropical climate with a rainy season and a dry season and occupies one of the many great river valleys running north and south which makes the sub-continent of India. It raises rice andteak-wood, tin and petroleum. Its rubies, sapphires, and jade are unsurpassed in beauty and quality.

The history of Burma is part of the history of India. The East India company began the subjugation of Burma in the early 17th century, then afterward, Great Britain systematically subdued the country. In 1823 and for three years she managed to beat the Burmese army and make the country pay a large tribute. In 1852, the Burmese were attacked again and their country annexed. In 1885 came the third Burmese war caused by taxation on a rich British trading company. The king was overthrown and the whole country annexed.

SEPARATE BURMA

Meantime, the Burma Oil Company was founded in 1871, by a Scotch merchant. From small beginnings it expanded until in 1928 it had a capital of $50,000,000 and was producing annually 800,000 tons of oil. This company, in association with the iron and steel works of India, made a tremendous and exceptional center of e ploitation. The British thought it well to divide and conquer. Therefore in 1922, Burma was cut off from India and set up as a separate colony under British control. This was looked upon as a thoughtful method of keeping the whole sub-continent in control. Burma was given wider franchise and took part in the First World War. But after the Second World War, Goshal tells us what the British did:

"The government of the United Kingdom advanced a loan of £87 million to Burma, to finance a series of "Projects" under the direction of the Civil Supplies Board. These "Projects" were assigned only to British firms, such as Steel Bros., Imperial Tobacco Co., Lever Bros., etc. The Inland Water Transport Project was assigned to the Irrawaddy Flotill Company under rather startling financial arrangements."

"What all this really amounted to was that the government employed the assets of these companies, provided a large part of new capital necessary, guaranteed the companies' profits, protected them from competition, and, through its control over wages, insured a supply of cheap labor.

"The government guaranteed compensation to British firms for war losses, but made no such provision for the Burmese people whose lands had been destroyed, nor for the families of guerilla fighters who had given their lives in the war. Despite the fact that the rice crop for 1945-46 was 2,700,000 tons as against a normal crop of 7,000,000 tons and that the supply of draft animals had been reduced to half the pre-war number, the government made no request for UNRRA aid. By the beginning of 1947, only rudi entary steps had been taken to aid the peasants of Burma, who consititute the overwhelming majority of the population."

35-1-86

35-7-87

Nevertheless when the crisis came and India gained her independence, Burma became independent too. Today it occupies 250,000 square miles or an area equal to France, Belgium and Holland. It is a republic and became completely independent outside the British Commonwealth by a Treaty which became effective in 1948. It is the 58th member of the United Nations.

But the Burmese are not satisfied . It is a little difficult to know all the details about the basis of their dissatisfaction, but it depends as everywhere in Asia upon the economic situation. The Karens, a people forming less than a tenth of the population have pressed for autonomy; but beyond this, a large number of the Burmese want better control of industry, better division of land and a higher standard of living. So that the country has been rocked with civil war and dissention, since 1948. Many Europeans hope fervently that this civil war will lead to the re-conquest of Burma under British dominion or American influence, but so far they have been disappointed and there is no reason to think that Burma is going to disappear from the new community of nations into the colonial status.

Mailed Aug. 23, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. Du Bois

MALAYA

Not all American Negroes have the thrill which I had when I heard of the fall of Singapore to Japanese arms. I knew that the world had passed a milestone. Singapore was the magnificent playground, brothel and where-house for the white man in the East. As Kipling remarked Jauntily: "There were no ten commandments" in Singapore. The white man was master of the Yellow and [redacted] world about him. It was a magnificent city of a million people. Eighty steamship lines sent thirty thousand ships a year. There were great banks, modern office buildings and stately government palaces. There were prostitutes and gambling Hells; liquor and gold flowed like water. It was a fine place for the rich white masters of the world to play.

35-7-88

THE MALAY STATES

The Malay States are not large as compared with Indone[redacted] They have been gotten together by every kind of theft and lie of which the British Empire was capable. There were the Federated Malay states with only 37 thousand square miles and two million people; there were the Unfederated states of about the same size and population. There was the States Settlements with a million people; and there was Singapore. In addition to this there was rubber, tin, rice and pepper, camphor and palm oil. But above all the Malay states were trading grounds. Here everything from East to West met and was exchanged; and here in the exchange, men and nations made millions. Until after World War II. Then the people of the Malay states determined to take charge of their own country, and Great Britain having lost India and having [redacted]ically lost Burma and having had to give up to America the lucurative trading rights of the world, was determined to keep this trading post. She is fighting there today, and cannot send troops to Korea because too many of her troops are dying in the jungles of Malaya. She is determined to keep Malaya and Malaya is determined not to be kept.

35-7-89

THE LAST OF COLONIALISM

It is often said that colonial imperialism is at an end in this world. We would better say that the end is in sight; or rather in the vision of certain men. It has not yet really ended. There is great and bitter determination on the part of Europe and investors in America, to keep certain colonial outpost, in order to make profits and dominate at least part of world. Remember what the essence of colonialism is: it is the high point of efficiency reached by capitalism. In a single country with the eyes of the people upon the employers and manufacturers, there are distinct and growing limits as to what these owners of industry may do. In most civilized countries they cannot today depress the wages below a certain floor; they must make arrangements with their employees, with their unions, and on the conditions of work and wages; they face strikes and public sympathy when they try to drive their workers below a certain standard of living.

On the contrary, there are no such limitations, when the workers, instead of being in one's own country and before the eyes of public opinion, are across wide seas; have no political rights and little education; and have no way by which they can put their situation before the home country.

The people who are experts upon their condition are employees of the employers and they say what they are told to say or they lose their jobs. Consequently conditions in colonies according to colonial officials are always bright; the colony is always advancing and so long as the profits keep up, the colony loves to be under the domination of the home country! The one great objection to this rosy picture, is that when we really learn of the situation of the colonies, it is absolutely contradicted. In every colony, the people are wretchedly poor and diseased. so that colonial regions are the sick poverty stricken regions of the world. In every country there is determined effort to see that the colonists have no real educated leadership. It is this that makes the colonial question, still the burning question of the world; and in no place is the fight for freedom stronger and with greater excuse than in Malaya today.

35-7-90

THE PEOPLE OF MALAYA

The people of Malaya are yellow Mongolians grafted on Negroes; Negroes who were the greatest sailors of the ancient world and Mongolians who represented the great empires of China. In the 16th century [illegible]tigation and degradation of the Malayian people began when the Portuguese occupied Malacca and began to seek cloves and [illegible]megs. For the next ten years the Portuguese explored and occupied the Archepelago. Then came Spain under Magellan. War and anarchy followed and finally came the English and the Dutch in the 16th century. Gradually the islands of Malaya and India were divided between the Dutch and English and the Portuguese nearly crowded out. The English centered their trade at Malaya, the Dutch in Sumatra and Java. Malaya became early the distributing center of spices on route from India to Europe. Soon the English by treaty and by seisure, by negotiation and by cheating became the paramount power in Malaya with puppet Sultans under their sway. Now the people have begun to fight for freedom.

Chicago Defender Column

AS THE CROW FLIES

42-6-D-2

MALAYA

Not all American Negroes have the thrill which I had when I heard of the fall of Singapore to Japanese arms. I knew that the world had passed a milestone. Singapore was the magnificent playground and brothel and whore-house for the white man in the East. As Kipling remarked jauntily: "There were not ten commandments" in Singapore. The white man was master of the yellow and brown world about him. It was a magnificent city of a million people. Eighty steamship lines sent thirty thousand ships a year. There were great banks, modern office buildings and stately government palaces. There were prostitutes and gambling Hells; liquor and gold flowed like water. It was a fine place for the rich white masters of the world to play.

THE MALAY STATES

The Malay States are not large as compared with Indonesia. They have been gotten toegther by every kind of theft and lie of which the British Empire was capable. The Federated Malay states with only 37,000 square miles and two million people; there were the Unfederated states of about the same size and population. There was the States Settlements with a million people, and there was Singapore. In addition to this there was rubber, tin, rice and pepper, camphor and palm oil. But above all the Malay states were trading grounds. Here everything from East to West met and was exchanged, and here in the exchange, men and natives made millions, until after World war II. Then the people of the Malay states determined to take charge of their own country, and Great Britain having lost India and having partially lost Burma and having had to give up to America the lucurative trading rights of the world, was determined to keep this trading post. She is fighting there today, and cannot send troops to Korea because too many of her troops are lying in the jungles of Malaya. She is determined to keep Malaya and Malaya is determined not to be kept.

THE LAST OF COLONIALISM

It is often said that colonial imperialism is at an end in this world. We would better say that the end is in sight, or rather in the visbon of certain men. It has not yet really ended. There is great and bitter determination on the part of Europe and investors in America, to keep certain colonial outposts, in order to make profits and dominate at least part of the world. Remember what the essence of colonialism is: it is the high point of efficiency reached by capitalism. In a single country with the eyes of the people upon the employers and manufacturers, there are distinct and growing limits as to what these owners of industry may do. In most civilized countries they cannot today depress the wages below a certain floor; they must make arrangements with their employees, with their unions, and the conditions of work and wages; they face strikes and public sympathy when they try to drive their workers below a certain standard of living. On the contrary, there are no such limitations, when the workers, instead of being in ones own country and before the eyes of public opinion, are across wide seas; have no political rights and little education and have no way by which they can put their situation before the home country. The people who are experts upon their condition are employees of the employers and they say what they are told to say or they lose their jobs. Consequently conditions in colonies accordy to official reports are always bright; the colony is always advancing and so long as the profits keep up, the colony loves to be under the domination of the home country. The one great objection to this rosy picture, is that when we really learn of the situation of the colonies, it is absolutely contradicted. In every colony the people are wretchedly poor and diseased, so that colonial regions are the most poverty-stricken regions of the world. In every country there is determined effort to see that the colonists have no real educated leadership. It is this that makes the colonial question still the burning question of the world; and in no place is the fight for freedom stronger and with greater excuse than in Malaya today.

42-6-9

THE PEOPLE OF MALAYA

The people of Malaya are yellow Mongolians grafted on Negroes; Negroes who were the greatest saliors of the ancient world and Mongolians who represented the great empires of China. In the 16th century the castigation and degradation of the Malayian people began when the Portuguese occupied Malacca and began to seek cloves and nutmegs. For the next ten years the Portuguese explored and occupied the Archepelago. Then came Spain under Magellan. War and anarchy followed and finally came the English and the Dutch in the 16th century. Gradually the islands of Malaya and India were divided between the Dutch and English and the Portuguese nearly crowded out. The English centered their trade at Malaya, the Dutch in Sumatra and Java.

Malaya
~~It~~ became early the distributing center of ~~the~~ spices on route from India to Europe. Soon the English by treaty and by seizure, by negotiation and by cheating, became the paramount power in Malaya with ~~public~~ puppet Sultan under them. in sway Now the people have begun to fight for freedom

42-6D-10

Mailed August 30, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-140

SIX VISITS

During the last 25 years I have made six visits to nations where Socialism is the method of government. I have made three visits to Russia in 1926, 1936 and 1949; two visits to Polant in 1949, (not mentioning a visit made as a student in 1893) three visits to Czechoslovakia (in that same 1893 and) in 1949 and 1950. Also I have seen the partial socialism in Britain and the work of the strong socialist movements in France and Italy. My visits have, in the main, been brief; in no case have I seen the whole nor even the main area of any of these lands. But on the other hand, I have been an experienced traveller and student of social conditions since 1892. While I have not seen everything where I have visited, yet I have seen a great deal, quite enough, in my opion, to justify my judgments.

SOCIALISM

After all which I have seen, I firmly believe, that some form of the socialistic state is the inevitable state of the future; that no other form of government can or will survive. I believe the time is coming and is indeed on us, when men will begin to ask how good, educated and experienced men could have ever thought that a sound civilisation could be built on the anarchy of free enterprise or the selfish greed of private profit. When one sees a statement like this, it meets incredulity, if not bitter disbelief; because the average citizen has been given no opportunity to understand what socialism means; and on the contrary, has had his ears filled with deliberate propaganda, if not lies, about this highest philosophy of organized industry. Never before our day, has religion, art, the press and current books, not to mention radio and lecture platf rms so deliberately and persistently misled the world on the facts concerning the socialistic state.

THE SOCIALISTIC STATE

The socialistic state seeks to substitute a planned economy for industry based on chance and selfishness. We long believed that industry was too complicated to be rationally planned; and we had firm faith that in some hidden way, if men were allowed and encouraged to follow their own selfish interests unhindered, in some mysterious way, out of this muddle would emerge the best possible interests of all. This was the predominant philosophy of the Nineteenth Century, and as proof, the triumphs of Science, Wealth and Empire were pointed to. It was in vain that wise and earnest men pointed out that the progress of the 19th century of mankind, not only in Asia, Africa and South America, but even in England France and the United States. We refused to listen to the voices of those prophets, until in the Twentieth Century the world fell in our faces. War, murder and destruction, on a scale never dreamed of outside of Hell, overwhelmed our culture, our religion, our families and friends. It was then that the Socialistic state arose, not as a perfect thing, but as a pitiful, striving and groping effort toward the fact that our work must be planned and not left to greed.

35-7-141

THE IRON CURTAIN

That sinister statesman, evil genius of reform since the Boer War and chief leader today back toward death and destruct on of human civilization, Winston Churchill, invented the phrase "Iron Curtain" to persuade the world that here lurked the Evil which was ruining the finest dreams of our culture. This was a lie. I challenge the man of truth and justice today to visit, as I have, the Socialistic states of the world, and not be convinced that here at last is the real push toward human culture; no poverty even if no strident wealth; no unemployment, even if no idle and resplendent rich; a fight on disease by state physicians, hospitals for everybody, sanitaria for all, no fear of destitute old age; free universal education such as no western land ever dreamed of. And in addition, a joy of life, an enthusiasm for creative effort, an unselfish regard for labor as work and not as a step to wealth and idleness, such as no American ever is allowed to feel.

35-7-1422

AS THE CROW FLIES

By W.E.B. Du BOIS

SIX VISITS

During the last 25 years I have made six visits to nations where Socialism is the method of government. I have made three visits to Russia in 1926, 1936 and 1949; two visits to Poland in 1949, (not mentioning a visit made as a student in 1893;) three visits to Czechoslovakia (in that same 1893 and) in 1949 and 1950. Also I have seen the partial socialism in Britain and the work of the strong socialist movements in France and Italy. My visits have in the main been brief; in no case have I seen the whole nor even the main area of any of these lands. But on the other hand, I have been an experienced traveller and student of social conditions since 1892. While I have not seen everything where I have visited, yet I have seen a great deal, quite enough, in my opinion, to justify my judgements

35-7-143

SOCIALISM

After all which I have seen, I firmly believe, that some form of the socialistic state is the inevitable state of the future; that no other form of government can or will survive. I believe the time is coming and is indeed on us, when men will begin to ask how (good, educated and experienced men could have ever ~~believed~~ thought that a sound civilization could be built on the anarchy of free enterprize or the selfish greed of private profit. When one ~~meets~~ reads a statement like this, it meets incredulity, if not bitter disbelief; because the average citizen has been given no opportunity as to understand what socialism means; and on the contrary, has had his ears filled with deliberate propaganda, if not lies, about this highest philosophy of organized industry. Never before our day, has religion, art, the press and current books, not to mention radio and lecture platform so deliberately and persistently misled the world on the facts concerning the socialist state.

THE SOCIALIST STATE

The socialist state seeks to substitute a planned economy for industry based on chance and selfishness. We long believed that industry was too complicated to be rationally planned, and we had firm faith that in some hidden way, if men were allowed and encouraged to follow their own selfish interests unhindered, in some mysterious way, out of this muddle would emerge the best possible interests of all. This was the predominant philosophy of the Nineteenth Century, and as proof, the triumphs of Science, Wealth and Empire were pointed to. It was ~~long~~ in vain that wise and earnest men pointed out that the progress of the Nineteenth Century was built on ~~exrnext~~ ignorance, poverty and disease for the vast majority of mankind, not only in Asia ~~and~~ Africa and South America, but even in England France and the United States. We refused to listen to the voices of these prophets, until im the Twentieth Centurey the world fell in our faces. War, murder and destruction, on a scale never dreamed of outside Hell, overwhelmed our culture, our religion, our families and friends. It was then ~~tant~~ that the Socialist state arose, not as a perfect thing, but as a pitiful, striving and groping effort toward the ~~light of the~~ fact that our work must be planned and not left to greed.

35-7-144

The Iron Curtain

That sinister statesman, evil genious of reform since the Boer War and chief leader today each toward death and destruction of human civilization, — Winston Churchhill, invented the phrase "Iron Curtain" to persuade the world that here lurked the Evil which was ruining the finest dreams of our ~~civilization~~ culture. This was a lie. I challenge the man of truth and justice today to visit, as I have, the Socialistic states of the world, and not be convinced that here at last is the real push toward human culture: no poverty even if no strident wealth; no unemployment, even if no idle and resplendent rich; a fight on ddsease by state physicians, hospitals for eveybody, sanitaria for all, no fear of destitute old age; free universal education such as no western land ever dreamed of. And in addition, a joy of life, an enthusiasm for creativde effort, an unselfish regard for labor as work and not as a step to wealth and idleness, such as no American ever is allowed to feel

Mailed to Sochael
Sept- 13, 1950

PEACE
BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

For Peace Info. Center
Daily - Aug. 9, 1950
Common Sense
N.Y.C.

WHEN STEPHEN DECATUR SAID: " MY COUNTRY RIGHT OR WRONG", HE DID NOT MEAN, AND AS A LYOAL AMERICAN, HE COULD NOT HAVE MEANT THAT HE WAS GOING TO AGREE WITH THE WRONG WHICH HIS COUNTRY WAS DOING OR ADVOCATE IT OR DEFEND IT. IT IS MUCH MORE LOGICAL THAT DECATUR MEANT THAT JUST BECAUSE HIS COUNTRY WAS WRONG, HE DID NOT BECOME AUTOMATICALLY THE CITIZEN OF ANY OTHER COUNTRY. HE WAS STILL AN AMERICAN, HAD A RIGHT TO HIS AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP AND ALSO RETAINED THE RIGHT TO TRY BY EVERY LEGAL AND LEGITIMATE SCHEME TO MAKE HIS COUNTRY TURN TO THE RIGHT INSTEAD OF THE WRONG. Y T DELIBERATE MISINTERPRETATION OF THIS PHRASE, HAS LONG LED MANY AMERICANS TO DO CONTRADICTORY AND EVEN TERRIBLE THINGS. IT IS SAID FOR INSTANCE, THAT ROBERT E. LEE, THE GREAT LEADER OF THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY, DID NOT BELIEVE IN SLAVERY AND DID NOT

45-7-158

--2--

WANT TO PERPETUATE IT. YET BECAUSE HIS COUNTRY OR THE SECTION OF THE COUNTRY WITH WHICH HE HAD THE STRONGEST TIES DECIDED TO FIGHT FOR SLAVERY AND MAKE IT THE BASIS OF A NEW GOVERNMENT, ROBERT E. LEE OBEYED THEIR SUMMONS AND FOR FOUR YEARS FOUGHT VALIANTLY FOR THE RIGHT TO BUY AND SELL HUMAN BEINGS. IT WAS NO FAULT OF LEE'S THAT WE ARE NOT STILL A SLAVE STATE. IN SOMETHING OF THE SAME WAY, ABRAHAM LINCOLN WAS PERFECTLY WILLING TO CONDONE AND ACCEPT AND PROTECT SLAVERY IN ORDER TO STOP THE CIVIL WAR. HE TURNED TO EMANCIPATION NOT AT FIRST AS A HUMANITARIAN MEASURE BUT AS A WAY TO STOP WAR. HE BECAME A FRIEND OF NEGROES WHEN HE REALIZED THAT ONLY BY USE OF NEGRO TROOPS COULD THE WAR BE ENDED. IN BOTH OF THESE CASES WHEN THE WRONG WHICH THESE MEN WERE EXCUSING SUDDENLY BECAME CLEAR TO ALL HONEST FOLK, BOTH LEE AND LINCOLN OPPOSED SLAVERY AND TRIED TO DO WHAT THEY COULD FOR A FREE COUNTRY. YET THEIR ATTITUDE AND THEIR ACTION HAD MADE IT MORE DIFFICULT TO MAKE AND KEEP THE PEACE. SO IT IS TODAY. WE ARE FIGHTING A WAR THAT LARGE NUMBERS OF PEOPLE INCLUDING MYSELF BELIEVE TO BE FUNDAMENTALLY UNJUST. WE BELIEVE THAT THE THINGS FOR WHICH THE NORTH KOREANS ARE FIGHTING ARE EXACTLY THE THINGS FOR FOR WHICH AMERICANS FOUGHT IN 1776, THE FRENCH FOUGHT IN 1789, AND THE HAITIANS IN 1800, THAT IS AUTONOMY AND SELF RULE. THIS DOES NOT MEAN THAT BECAUSE OF THIS FIRM AND FUNDAMENTAL BELIEF WE ARE GOING TO JOIN THE NORTH KOREAN ARMY OR HELP KILL THE AMERICAN SOLDIERS, WHO LARGELY THROUGH NO CHOICE OF THEIR OWN ARE FIGHTING AGAINST THE PEOPLE WHO WANT TO BE FREE. BUT IT DOES MEAN THAT WE WILL STATE OUR POSITION AND THAT TEMPERATELY BUT CLEARLY, WE WILL DECLARE THAT THIS NATION WITHOUT THE DEMOCRATIC PROCESS HAS BEEN FORCED INTO A WAR WE DO NOT WANT AND THAT THE END OF THE WAR MAY BE THE DESTRUCTION OF CIVILIZATION: AN IN ANY CASE INEVITABLY THE SETTING BACK OF HUMAN CULTURE DECADES IF NOT HUNDREDS OF YEARS.

ALTHOUGH WAR THEN HAS BEEN FORCED UPON US NOT BY THE KIND OF DEMOCRACY

45-7-159

AND DEMOCRATIC PROCESS WHICH WE HAVE BEEN BLATENTLY DEFENDING BEFORE THE WORLD, YAT WE IN OPPOSITION TO THAT WAR PROPOSE TO APPEAL TO THIS SAME DEMOCRACY. DESPITE ALL THREATS TO OUR FREEDOM AND OUR JOBS, WE ARE GOING TO STAND UP BEFORE THE AMERICAN PEOPLE AND SAY, WE ARE DOING SOMETHING WHICH IS WRONG AND UNJUST AND EVEN IF IT WERE TRUE THAT THE NORTH KOREANS WERE WRONG IN THEIR METHODS OR FIRST IN AGGRESSION IT WOULD STILL NOT BE THE FUNCTION OR RIGHT OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO TRY TO CRUSH THEM BY FORCE OF ARMS . EVEN IN THE PAST WHEN WE HAVE BEEN A GREAT AND OVERWHELMING POWER ATTACKING A SMALL PEOPLE, WE HAVE SAID VIRTUOUSLY THAT THE SMALL POWER HAS A RIGHT TO RESIST. WHATEVER LOGIC THERE WAS IN THAT KIND OF ATTITUDE, CERTAINLY WHEN A SMALL POWER IS ATTACKED BY A POWER OF OVERWHELMING RESOURCES, IT IS SILLY FOR THE GREAT POWER TO TALK OF SELF DEFENSE. WHAT IT IS PURSUING IS OFFENSE, SUBJECTION AND DESTRUCTION. WE ARE RELYING UPON THE ABSURD IDEA, VOICED BY A GREAT GENERAL AND COLLEGE PRESIDENT THAT "WE CAN LICK THE WORLD."

WE FIND THAT IT IS GOING TO BE NO SIMPLE MATTER EVEN TO LICK KOREA, AND IF THAT IS TRUE WE HAVE AGAINST US, NOT ONLY THE MORAL CONDEMNATION OF THE THINKERS OF THE WORLD, BUT ALSO THE COST IN BLOOD AND MONEY WHICH THIS PATH OF CONQUEST OPENS BEFORE US.

THERE IS YET TIME TO THINK, THERE IS YET TIME TO BRING PERSUASION UPON OUR NEIGHBORS, UPON OUR REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS, UPON THE NATION AS A WHOLE. IT WOULD BE WRONG AND UN-AMERICAN FOR ANY PERSON WHO BELIEVES IN THE INJUSTICE OF THE KOREAN WAR TO SIT SILENT AT THIS TIME. THE PEACE INFORMATION CENTER WHICH I REPRESENT, ASKS ONLY THAT THE PEOPLE OF AMERICA KNOW WHAT THE REST OF THE WORLD IS THINKING AND DOING ABOUT PEACE; AND FURTHER WE HAVE BEEN DISTRIBUTING THE STOCKHOLM APPEAL AGAINST THE USE OF ATOMIC BOMBS. I AM GRATIFIED THAT EVEN THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, DECLARES THAT IN THIS WAR AT LEAST HE HAS AS YET NO PLAN OF USING THE ATOMIC BOMB. IT WOULD BE A FINE GESTURE ON HIS PART IF HE SIGNED THE STOCKHOLM APPEAL AND THUS TOLD THE WORLD THAT SIMPLY BECAUSE THE UNION OF SOVIET REPUBLICS HAS PUT MILLIONS OF SIGNATURES TO THIS DOCUMENT, THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, NEVERTHELESS IS PROUD TO JOIN THEM FOR A GREAT AND JUST END.

IT IS OUR BOUNDED DUTY TO STOP THIS FIGHTING IN KOREA, NOT BY GREATER, BROADER AND LONGER BATTLES BUT BY CONCILIATION AND COMPROMISE; BY HONEST INQUIRY INTO THE FACTS AND CONDITIONS AND BY OUR UNALTERABLE DETERMINATION TO LET KOREA HAVE THE GOVERNMENT WHICH KOREANS WANT.

45-7-160

Mailed September 19, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-159

Europe 1892

I have had this year and last, opportunity to compare the twentieth century and the nineteenth in their attitude toward civilisation and progress. In the last decade of the nineteenth century I visited the leading nations of western Europe including Poland and Austria Hungary. This year and last I have been in the Soviet Union, Poland and Czechoslovakia, as well as France. I spent a week in Prague which I saw first in 1893 and this time travelled west to Slovakia. I was three weeks in France, and in 1945, a month in England.

In 1892 to 1894, Europe believed in Peace and Progress, but Peace meant peace and understanding among the great European powers and their united effort to keep in subjection political or economic the vast majority of the peoples of the world. This was not real peace but continual war and preparation for war. I realised this when in 1893 the German Emperor met the Crown Prince of Italy on the Templehoffer field in Berlin. I saw that might exhibition of power and world dominion. I saw the luxury of London Paris, Berlin, Rome and Vienna. Progress was there and inevitable. But Peace was a dream.

Since 1945

Since 1945, I have seen this same Europe after a Revolution more tremendous than the fall of Rome. There is still in this world the will to Peace. England shrinks at the idea of war. The French simply will not fight again under any circumstances. I do not believe Italy can be forced into any war today except Civil War. The dream of another Germany army in west Germany or east is crazy for the simple reason that the fighting men of Germany are dead.

35-7-160

The Iron Curtain

Behind the Iron Curtain in the Soviet Union, in Poland and Czechoslovakia, in Austria, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia, there can be no doubt that overwhelmingly these nations want Peace. If it is answered that they are all preparedfor war, the reason is clear: during the last 35 years eastern Europe has been invaded by every European and North American nation and is today openly menaced with further invasion.

But Peace in 1950, has a differenct connotation than in 1890. It is a question of universal peace. Of peace in Europe, Asia, Africa and America. And it is peace with a definite object. That is Peace for Progress. And progress and peace are not simply nor mainly a question of Russia, it has deeper far deeper foundations and rests on a truth which every human being recognises if he has any intelligence. And that is the fact: that in organized human work today with all our miraculous technique, a few persons get more goods than they need, while the majority of workers get less than they must have for survival. This problem did not begin in Russia, was not first promulgated from Russia and will remain if Russia is swept from the face of the earth tomorrow. It faces mankind and will face it unless settled justly.

Poverty

The nineteenth century said that poverty, ignorance and disease of the overwhelming majority of mankind was unfortunate but inevitable. We could alleviate it but never abolish it. The twentieth century knows that the degradation of the mass of men is both unfortunate and unnecessary. It is our misfortune today that the world is split into two bitter and increasingly hostile camps as to what can be done to solve this world economic problem.

35-7-161

If you want to know what an increasing number of human beings believe as to this solution step behind the Iron Curtain. They may be wrong. They may be deceived, but as to their present belief there can be no question. In lands like Czechoslovakia the enthusiasm for their way of life for their plans for the future is like a fresh breeze to one coming from the fear and reaction of America. I flew one hundred miles west from Prague and drove fifty miles further amid the wild and beautiful mountains of Slovakia to the industrial and agricultural town of Rozembruk. We were three beside our host, an Englishman, an Italian and myself. We were greeted with flowers and words of welcome. We swept through crowded streets into the town hall and then out onto a platform where 12 thousand persons, the whole population crowded into the village square to greet us. Four hours they stood packed together to listen to us and translations of our speeches.. Mayor, Priest, teacher and soldier welcomed us. It was not all unanimity on the outskirts of the crowd stood many who were silent during the cheers but there could be no doubt Rozembruk believes in its government and its plans for the future.

PLANS

Those plans include education, sanitation, better farming, new industry, improvement of roads, rivers and forests, no unemployment and work according to ability. Nobody least of all a chance and hasty visitor like myself can say how such vast plans calling for hard work and sacrifice for decades and centuries will succeed or be modified and adapted. But what any stranger can see is the vibrant belief, the unloosing of energy and expression. The art of Czechoslovakia is a new and living thing born from the hearts of the masses. The workingman is a central figure. There are more book shops than saloons. No child is out of school.

I went one night to see Rumanian peasants dance in a Prague theatre. in the front row of the orchestra stalls were seated young mining cadets just trained to bring scientific education into mining and honoredfor this. Then the beautiful, utterly unsophisticated dancing of these young folk was an unforgetable experience. In the midst and characteristically, the program was interrupted and the Rumanian Consul talked a half hour on the far-reaching economic planning of his country.

35-7-162

MAILED, SEPTEMBER 27, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. Du Bois

PEACE

What now the nations behind the Iron Curtain are asking and asking sincerely is peace for their economic experiments in rebuilding their whole economy. To their demand must be added the voices of the masses of western Europe who are saying: whether the communist program of reform is right or wrong military compulsion to make them change is futile. Instead of armies we need ourselves to spend our income for reform for higher wage and employment, for sanitation and social medicine and for education.

35-7-157

The attempt in Western Europe to restore the pre-war economy is a danger our effort, and in the hands of powerful but short sighted rulers today. I wandered by accident into a Paris restaurant looking out on Notre Dame. I wanted but a light lunch, but had chanced on an expensive restaurant of an older Paris. There were single dishes on that menu which cost more than the average Paris worker gets in a week to raise a family. I watched in a certain fascination the cooking of a fowl by the chef for a gay family party and I remembered the thousands of communists who on September 3, gathered in the woods of Vincennes for their annual festival, they cooked and sang in the rain. They crouched under trees and improvised tents to say we will not fight we must have work and decent wage. I said this is no attack on civilization That attack took place in my charming restaurant.

THE U.S.A.

On the other hand the thesis which we see triumphing in the United States is that while we recognise the inequalities and injustices of the present economic system we also know the answers and we know these answers so completely that we conceive it our right and duty to compell the world to do as we do. For that end we are introducing into America precisely those methods of coercion which we accuse other countries of using. We have curbed free speech, we have a small free press and we are putting persons in jail who are guilty of no crime. Above all we are waging war and preparing for a third world war on a scale which promises to bankrupt our economy. It is therefore the bounden duty of Americans of vision to work for Peace. This does not involve acceptance of communism but it DOES involve peaceful granting to others of the right of experiment and choice in the reforming of their social system. We want war because out of recent wars which we have waged with comparatively little suffering we have reaped as a nation wealth and power, and we think by further war we can rule the earth. This is a tragic and silly mistake. Once we assure the world that no nation need fear aggression from us so long as they wish peacefully to work out their own theory of social reform; once we can assure Americans that they need fear no attempt to compell them to adopt any economic system which their intelligent experiment does not lead them to adopt, then the world can have peace and civilization can again begin.

35-7-158

REFORM

The basic postulate of economic reform is the theory that the steps toward such reform are matters of long, painful and honest experiment that the first movement toward such experiment is peace and that this is recognized by the countries behind the Iron Curtain that communists are not warmongers they need peace to survive,, and believe me we will get no advantages from shattering the dreams of hundreds of millions of people; that the warmongers consist of two groups of men: Those who in Russia and the Balkans and China have been deprived of the power to make money out of poverty; and those profit makers in America who want to extend the system which has ruined the modern world. Peace and uninterrupted peace is the key to any civilized future.

Mailed October 4, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. Du Bois

35-7-154

TO HENRY WALLACE, DECEMBER 2, 1949

At the meeting the other night I indulged myself in a line of imagination and analogy which was too long and involved for me to take the time to state it with its implications. But I am venturing to do this by letter, realizing that analogies like this do not go on all fours. Suppose that instead of being in New York in 1949, we had been meeting on lower Broadway in 1859. Naturally I would not have been present, but for that matter, I was not much present last night.

LIBERTY PARTY

We would have represented the Liberty Party, formed some years before and representing middle ground between the Abolitionists and the Whigs. The Anti-Slavery societies of that time numbered some 200,000 members, but were of many minds and tendencies. They were all unpopular and suspect: they harbored Atheists and the Church for that and other reasons disowned them. Some of them attacked property, not only in men, but in things which men needed, like land. They had a lunatic fringe who went in for Communism and rights of women. They were favorite objects of repressive legislation, court injunctions and mob law. Garrison had been dragged through the streets, Douglass had his right had permanently crippled and Lovejoy was killed. Finally the group split. One wing went into politics. They wanted not only to free the slaves and permit no slave territory, but were suspected of being subservient to a Foreign Power, undemocratic England, with King and Lords, who jealous of our prosperity based on the Cotton Kingdom was abolishing slavery in the West Indies and starting her colonial imperialism in Asia and Africa. She was also trying to steal Oregon.

35-7-155

The Liberty Party started in 1840. They were not Abolitionists, although they wanted to abolish slavery; but they had no other dangerous 'isms and no fear of England and her designs. They chose the name "Liberty" as a designation which was vague enough to catch all but the Die-hards. They started in the election of 1844, when the South was aiming toward a new slave empire in Central and South America and the Caribbean area. The Liberty Party cast 62,000 votes and beat Clay for the presidency; but unfortunately this helped elect Polk who promptly annexed the vast slave state of Texas and forced us into war with Mexico. He also looked viciously at England and yelled: "Fifty-four forty or Fight!"

THE SMEAR

Although the Liberty Party kept at it and cast a good vote in 1846, it began to be discouraged. And the main cause of this discouragement was the "Smear" of Abolition. So in 1849 (historically, it was 1847; but the analogy is not too far astray) they sat down together and took stock. Their leader was a bit discouraged. He had been subjected to mud-slinging of efficient quality and he was pretty well fed up. His family was even (to coin a word) "fedder-upper". Especially he resented being called an enemy of property, an instigator of servile revolt or an advocate of votes for women. He hated slavery, yes; but he was not an Abolitionist in the current sense of the term. What shall we do, he asked and suggested that the persons present poll their friends and the public as to what they wanted the Liberty Party to stand for.

TRYING TO DODGE CRITICISM

The discussion was long, but tended todivide in two directions: How can we avoid being classed with Abolitionists; they are unpopular and no party with their label can win in the United States; they may not be wrong in ideal; but they are impossible in method and their foreign entanglements with British radicals are undoubted. Some argued: ignore the Smear and the differences; so far as both we and they oppose slavery and want Peace, lets work together and perfect organization. Others answered, but the Abolitionists push in, use our offices to attack slave owners and work like Hell to twist our aims and push theirs. Our best bet is openly to disassociate ourselves from the Abolitionists and join forces with the Free Soil Party, now forming. "Free Soul? What's that?" "Free Soil, Free Men, Free Speech?" Do you mean land owned in common, no slaves, and the right to discuss and write about property and woman suffrage?" "No, we mean no extension of slave territory, rights for men already free and reasonable discussion which does not attack legal private property in land or men." Incidentally in 1849 we found gold at the end of the rainbow, convincing us that this was God's country.

35-7-152

There, or somewhere around there, we adjourned; what happened historically thereafter, is another story.

And here, Mr. Wallace, this admittedly lame analogy ends.

AFTERMATH

P.S. To complete the record, the Liberty committed suicide; the Free Soil Party took over, were met by the pro-slavery Compromise of 1850 and died peacefully in the election of 1852. In 1854, their ashes fertilized a Party which moved still further right, recognized slavery but opposed its extension. It won the election of 1850 by a Minority vote and went into Civil War, pledged to defend the institution. But in order to win that war they had to abolish slavery.

Mailed October 10, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-145

POLITICS

Like most men born and bred in the 19th century, I have always thought politics as a career necessary and in some way to be followed, but not the higher sort of work which a man would voluntarily want to do. largely then I avoided politics, but now for the first time in my life I have consented to stand for public office. This is because it becomes increasingly clear to me that the very recoil from public defense and personal advocacy of that which one feels and knows is right, is the reason for that surrender of our government to men whose prime interest is not social but personal; and the disaster of seeing repeatedly a people whose government does not represent either its thought or desire.

FREE SPEECH

My standing for office then, far from being any matter of personal ambition is rather proof that I am willing to forgo my preference in order to discuss with the public the serious objects of public life and action. For today curiously enough, it has become suddenly impossible to express publicly what one believes and knows, unless one takes advantage of the few civil rights remaining to us and runs for office in order to talk freely without going to jail. What I ask and plead therefore in this campaign, is that men vote in the next campaign not simply for me but for me as representing the principles which I am trying to emphasize; with the deep belief that however unimportant I may be, what I am seeking to make clear and stand for is of the utmost importance to the Negro race in the United States and the future of mankind. The two planks in my platform on which I place such faith and emphasis are these: Peace and Civil Rights.

PEACE AND CIVIL RIGHTS

There is theoretically nothing new nor startling in these ideas.

35-7-146

In the days when this nation was still sane and faltering toward democracy, the wonder was that any man could stand for world war and the slave state. Today this is what we advocate by apparently such overwhelming majority that any advocate of peace is in danger of assault by mob and police and our jails are increasingly filling with men of education and conscience accused of not criminal acts but only of unpopular thoughts and action.

Our slow but steady descent inot belief in complete and universal war and our determination to make men think what we believe is true, rather than what they in their free American heritage regard as truth--this literal descent into hell in our day and in this our own country, has been so gradual and complete that many honest Americans cannot believe what they actually hear and see: and sit bewildered, rubbing their eyes in order to get some vague conception of what can have happened to the land which once declared: "These truths to be self evident: that all men are created equal; that they were endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness."

No American born before 1900, could possible conceive that the United States would be a land approaching universal military service: with its armed forces in every continent and on every sea, pledged to conquer and control masses of mankind, order the thought and action and belief of the nations of the world and ready to spend for these objects more money than it ever spent for religion, education or social uplift altogether.

THOUGHT CONTROL

When men arise and say this and try to prove its truth, every effort is made by secret police, organised spies and hired informers: by deliberate subversion of the fundamental principles of our law, to imprison, maltreat, slander and silence such persons, and deprive them of earning an honest livihood.

Avoiding all hysteria and exaggeration, all natural indignation and instinctive defense of the right of free sp ech and hatred of thought control, it is clear to all Americans who still dare think, that my description of this America is true and if true frightening to all men who once thought of this land as the Land of the Free.

35-7-147

My platform then, like the platform of every honest American who still believes in peace and freedom, takes its unalterable stand against war and slavery. It warns all thinking men that the cause of our present failure and disgrace is simple and sheer insanity. We have known individuals to go crazy. We have long viewed this unfortunate disease, or illusion fostered by mans' own weakness or by the wicked plots of his enemies. We are learning all too slowly how to cope with and cure the individually insane. But mass insanity is a newer thing: to be sure we have experienced it in the race hate of the South, which we increasingly recognize as distorted mentality rather than deliberate will to harm: and while this dawning comprehension of one of the nastiest blots on our culture has not yet cured it, it has at least let us see our way and begin to plan the long up-building future. But before we are well-started on this path to goodness and truth, there comes an insanity, a wild and cruel madness, which engulfs the world, hurls us into planned and horrible murder calls to its ends every ingenuity of science and even sets at its head followers of the Prince of Peace, who today crys to us a distortion of his words: "Come unto me all them that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you War."

Mailed October 18, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

INSANITY

The civilised world today, near 2000 years after the birth of Christianity not mentioning those older and younger faiths, with their high hopes of reason and love of humanity--this world today with all its triumphs which once we greeted with shrieks of joy--this world has gone crazy, as no sane man can for a moment deny.

But we not pause and resting a minute from our atom bombs, hydrogen horror, propaganda of disease of body and mind, mad destruction and wild waste of the wages of the poor--pause and ask in this election season: Why? For God's sake, Why? What are we yelling about? Of what are we in deathly fear? Have we been invaded? Has anyone dropped an atom bomb on us? Have we been impoverished or enslaved by foreigners? Is our business failing and our millionaires disappearing? Has the rate of profit gone down? Is our machinery less cunning or our natural resourses destroyed by strangers? Is there any sign that the United States of America is victim or can be victim of any foreign power? No! Then of what are we afraid and why are we trying to guard the earth from Pacific to Atlantic, and from the North to the South Pole, unless it is from ourselves.

35-7-148

AN IDEA

We are scared of an idea: We are tempted by a vision of power which long misled and slaughtered the peoples of Europe and Asia, and now insidiously creeps into our fever-mad heads. And that is imperialism--world rule over the world. Once it was sought by black slavery; then it was made easy by Yellow coolies: then it was the "lesser breeds without the law," who could furnish a white man's burden and let him strut over the world and lord it in Asia and Africa and rule and rule, world without end, forever and forever.

That was the vision of the 19th century. The power of imperialism caught the United States as the 19th century died and we choked a few islands out of dying Spain. But these were but small change which whetted our appetite. With the First World War came the vision of an Imperial United States as successor of the Empire on which the sun already sets. We rushed so madly at the spoils left by European Empires that we brought down our whole industrial system about our own ears.

DEPRESSION

It would seem that the memory of the great depression of the thirties would convince all thinking men that war is not the path to the millenium and that what we need is reform of our own system of work and industrial organization, before we attempt to teach the world what to think or how to live. Instead of that, we were convinced that the path forward was backward to the imperialism which had just failed in Europe and caused the worst modern catastrophe which was the First World War. The men who controlled this nation, through ownership of capital, control of natural resourses now added the vast power of a press, and radio monopolized by organized wealth to convince Americans that restoration of peace and prosperity depended on our mastery of the cheap labor and necessary raw material, of the world and the direction of industry in Africa, Asia and the islands of the Seas in accord with our system of economic organization.

SOCIALISM

But what we ignored in our thinking was not only that the industrial system which we were seeking to re-install had already met a terrible and costly reverse: that modifications of imperialism and monopoly capitalism had already been suggested and tried. Such efforts of varying kinds and comprehended loosely by the name "Socialism," were not invented in Russia nor first tried by Russia. On the contrary, socialism is an English, French and German conception and was first ~~xxxxxx~~ actually established in Russia because that unhappy land was one of the worst victims of the capitalist system.

35-7-149

If tomorrow Russia disappeared from the face of the Earth, the basic problem facing the world would remain: and that is why is it with the earth's abundance and our mastery of natural xxxxxx forces, and miraculous technique with industry belging the earth and goods and services pouring from our stores, factories, ships and warehouses: Why is it that nevertheless most human beings are starving to death, dying of preventable disease and too ignorant to know what is the matter: While a small minority are so rich that they cannot spend their income.

35-7-150

COMFORT FOR ALL

That is the problem which faces the world, and Russia was not the first to pose it, nor will she be the last to ask and demand answer. The 19th century said that this situation was inevitable and must always remain because of the natural inferiority of most men. The 20th century knows better. It says that there is food enough for all; that clothes and shelter for all can be provided; that most disease is preventable and that the overwhelming mass of human beings can be educated. That intelligence, health and decent comfort are not only possible but should be demanded by all men, planned by all states and made increasingly effective by all voters in each election.

Mailed October 25, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. Du Bois

35-7-151

CONTAINING COMMUNISM

The powerful who today own the earth and the fulness therof: who monopolize its industry and own its press and screen its news, have another answer: they order usto fight an idea: to "contain" and crush any dream of abolishing poverty, disease and ignorance: and to do this by organized war, murder and destruction on the people who dare to plan plenty for all mankind. From the 19th century they attempt to take over imperialism to bribe the workers and thinkers of the most powerful countries by high wage and privilege to build a false and dishonest prosperity on the slavery and degradation--the low wage and disease of Africa and Asia and the islands of the Sea, and to pay for this offer their own sons and daughters in endless stream to be murdered and maimed in endless wars, so that the profits of European and American Business may mount to fabulous sums: so that taxation may be laid on washerwomen and laborers: on clreks and stemographers, while millionaires and rich corporations go free. This is why we are fighting or preparing to fight in Europe, Asia and Africa--not against the country, but against the idea--against the rising demand of the working classes of the world for better wage, decant housing, regular employment, medical service and schools for all.

INVESTMENT

It does not answer this world-wide demand to say that we of America have these things in greater abundance than the rest of the world, if our properity is based on or seeks to base itself on the exploitation and degradation of the rest of mankind. Remember it is American money that owns more and more of South African mines worked by slave labor: it is American enterprise that fattens off of Rhodesian copper and Nigerian tin: it is American investors that seek to dominate China, India, Korea and Burma: that are throttling the starved workers of the near East. We were at war yesterday: we a re at war today: we will be at war tomorrow because Big Business wants war and builds its profits, direct and indirect on war, on the attempt to murder all who want peace and abundance.

35-7-152

WORLD CONQUEST

Yet is it not clear that such a program is sheer insanity? That no nation, however rich and smart can conquer this world. Have not Egypt, Assyria, Greece, Rome and Great Britain taught us that? And to that no idea based on truth and righteousness can ultimately be suppressed by force and murder?

The world wants peace. It must have peace or civlization will die. Everything that war by any imagination could possible gain for mankind has been sought by three wars of such collosal death, cost and destruction that every sane soul is simply appalled by the result. Yet we are not only arming for more and greater war, but driven by the furies are trying to shut the mouths and stifle the consciences of all or any who dare speak for peace.

CIVIL RIGHTS

To fight this overthorwing and negation of the Bill of Rights is the second plank of my platform. I never thought I would live to see the day that free speech and freedom of opinion would be so throttled inthe United States as it is today. Today in this free country, no man can be sure of earning a living, of escaping slander and personel violence: or even of keeping out of jail unless publicly and repeatedly he proclaims:

That he hates Russia
That he opposes Socialism and Communism
That he supports wholeheartedly the war in Korea
That hs is ready to spend anyamount of the nations resourses for further war anywhere at anytime.
That he is ready to fight the Soviet Union, China and any other country
That he believes in the use of atom bombs or any other weapon of mass destruction and regards anyonw who is opposed as a traitor.

That he not only beleives in and consents to all these th ngs, but is wil ing to spy on his neighbors and denounce them if they do not believe as he does.

That he is willing that all such persons should lose their jobs and be imprisoned by executive action and even without trial by jury.

35-1-153

REGISTER AND VOTE

The mere statement of this creed shows its absolute insanity. What can be done to bring this nation to its senses? Most people answer, nothing: just sit still; bend with the storm if necessary, lie and join the witch-hunt, swear to God that never, never did you even sympathize with the Russian peasants fight to be free: that you never in your life belonged to a liberal organization or had a friend who did: and if so, you were deceived, deluded and a Damned Fool.

But there are others who say: We can do something, that America needs no cowards and liars. It needs honest men and that honest citizens who are mistaken are infinitely more patrittic than scoundrels who follow the herd. We still have elections and we still have a secret ballot. If you do not want war. You have the right and opportunity to say so and no one need know how you have voted.

Mailed November 1, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. Du Bois

35-7-203

THE DUTY TO VOTE

If you want the Bill of Rights restored to the Constitution, you have the legal right to say so and say it secretly. In this democracy, you still retain the right to help elect your lawmakers and executives. If you fail to exercise this right, you will suffer and ought to suffer. Today the vast majority of the American people do not want war. Most Americans hate the current witch-hunt. The only way to oppose war and the death of civil liberty is to elect officials who agree with you.

The present Senate of the United States is a war making body and a body hostile to civil liberties not only in the South but in this state. You have a right in November to help change the composition of the Senate.

INVESTMENT

Remember what modern investment is: it is not as it once was the loaning of your saving to help an enterprise which you knew about and followed: it is controll of goods and labor over vast areas and under conditions of which you neither know nor care: it may and often does involve slavery and disease ignorance and cruelty: it may drive wages down to starvation, decimate and ruin family and group life: it may turn vast areas from happy primitive life to centuries of crime and horror: But if it earns a profit, if it does not trangress the laws of the country where the investors live and largely make the law, then it is legal, legitimate and respectable. This has been the history of modern finance and investment all over the world. Its path is marked by blood, war, ignorance and the subjection of most of the peoples of the world to the comfort and convenience of the few.

The fight to curb uncontrolled investment and exploitation has been long and difficult but has had much success. But today and in America it is failing and resulting in a program of world war. The overwhelming influence and representation of finance capital in our legislatures, in the executive and especially in the Senate of the United States must be curbed and immediately. So far as I am concerned personally, I have but one object in this campaign and that is to win the election. In a long life I never have and never expect to act as stool pigeon for any man or party. I shall not begin now. I know that every third party movement meets such accusations, which if heeded would make progress impossible. Every time you suggest voting against a dominant party or a present official, you are met by the prediction that you are bound to fail. Upon this fear and risk, the old parties rely to hold their graft and power.

35-7-204

Today in this state and in the nation, the Democratic and Republican parties stand for one and the same thing: war and the slave state. They cannot even phrase platforms that sound different. They can only promise to do what the other is doing better--or worse. The nation faced the same predicament and prophecy in the slavery controversy a century ago. You must vote democratic or whig, because the Free Soil Party had no chance: because if you failed to vote for a democrat you help elect a whig. But that was not true as the eventual triumph of Abraham Lincoln proved. Every defeat or a candidate for a free country did not mean defeat for what he stands for.

Even If I am defeated for Senator, the vote for me would still be a vote for Civil Rights and Against War and eventually this program must win. If it wins this November, so much the better, but if it wins 10 years from today that victory must begin now.

It is the program and not the man for which you vote. The only assurance you have is that if I am elected to the Senate, no power in Hell, Earth nor Heaven will keep my mouth from speaking and voting what I conceive is the Truth and Right.

Mailed November 8, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-180

PROPERTY

Citizens should know the truth and ethics of wealth, property and income, which are the chief concern of man and to which they devote most of their time, effort and thought. To this end, we must first dispel certain assumptions concerning the labor movement among those who see it as primarily based on envy of the rich and successful and on a desire to deprive the thrifty and foresighted of the just fruit of their efforts: and to do this by law or even in emergency by force.

For that reason numbers of respectable folk today instinctively dislike labor unions, regard strikes as wrong and futile and think of laborers bargaining with employers as unnatural. This thinking is the source of much of the support back of the Taft-Hartley Act. Our task is all the more imperative because these ideas are based on myth and inherited culture patterns and are not adequately contradicted by the press or colleges.

A PILE

Most Americans conceive property as something accumulated--a pile of treasure which an individual has made by his own effort and sacrifice and which he therefore has a right to use in any way he sees fit: to consume it, to waste it, or to save it. In fact Income is current use of wealth and services presently produced and available now. It is not a past accumulation but present and actual goods.

In the same way men think of industry as something which an individual or a group owns and which they have a right to conduct as they see fit--to set the rate of wage, to hire and fire, to fix price: and that public interference with such powers is interference with a sacred right and fundamentally unjust.

This belief is not only wide spread and often honestly held, but our colleges and schools are doing almost nothing to dispel these fundamental mistakes concerning modern industry. They stem from the earlier centuries of the beginings of industry and from current farming methods in many nations, where the individual worker, producer and owner is the best known type.

SOCIAL PRODUCTION

But since the Industrial Revolution, this method of work especially in manufacturing, trade and commerce is not typical. Production in these fields, which are today of dominant importance is not an individual adventure but a vast social undertaking. A large number of persons work together in numberless ways, in widely separated places and for periods varying from a week or less to ten years or more to produce a valuable product or render a valuable service: The exact proportion of their contributions to the final result, physical or ethical: by kind and efficiency of effort, by length and intensity of labor or by money value cannot be determined accurately by any mathematical method. The product of modern industry is a social product and belongs to society and not to certain individuals. It should be allocated to individuals by standards of social justice to all and not in accord with inherited culture patterns nor by an oligarchy basing its right on chance or legal fiction.

35-7-181

CONTROL OF WEALTH

Property is the legal control of wealth. No wealth is not and never was entirely the result of individual effort: it always involved some measure of group cooperation. And today more than ever before wealth is the result of social effort added to the bounty of nature. Property is the legal right to use wealth: it may come from your own effort or from the effort of others: It may come from seizure of natural resources: it may come from inheritance or gift: from cheating or gambling: from theft. There is nothing sacred about property: everything depends on its source and on the social welfare involved in its use.

This means that property and its use are proper subjects of political consideration and of election decision. There has been in America too much cheating and theft in the acquisition of property and too much injustice in its use. Where property has been acquired by hard work and sacrifice, its owners enjoyment of it so long as none are hurt by his acts should be recognized and protected and no labor party has asked anything el se. But this has not been the record of American Business. Huge properties have been accumulated by highway robbery, monopoly of natural resourses belonging of right to all and even by transgressing the very laws passed to protect the rights of the public.

35-7-182

THE PROBLEM

Our present economic problem stems from the fact that while production is increasingly a social process, the distribution of its results still remain largely a matter of the individual judgment of persons who happen to have the power to decide and on the basis of concepts of property and income which no longer correspond to fact.

The paradox which consequently upsets the labor world is that despite the indispensable cooperation of laborers, managers and capitalists in current industry, when the results and increasingly valuable results are distributed, most of the laborers get less than is necessary for decent life, while many of the capitalists get more than they need or can spend,, and particularly get h the power to direct the use of the residue for any purpose which they choose.

Mailed November 15, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

35-7-208

LOW WAGES

The age-long explanation of low wages is that goods are so scarce that with the best effort some folk must remain in poverty and need. It is this alleged fact that the 20th century laborer is disputing. He maintains that a more just distribution of the results of industry could eliminate poverty, disease and ignorance among the working class. For this purpose he has been organizing labor unions and trying by appeal, bargaining and if necessary by strikes, picketing and law to raise his standard of living to decency and comfort. He does not want in this contest to deprive manager or owner of his just reward for saving, planning and direction, but he insists that he, the laborer as partner in production have some voice in deciding what is just. He rejects certain age-old excuses for present conditions. When the National Association of Manufactureres, advertising that the "more we produce the more we will have," he knows full well that this depends on who does the dividing and who gets the shares.

The conventional answer to this contention of labor is that the essential capital to employ labor can only be had if its owners are attracted by labor profit to invest their wealth instead of consuming it. Once this was true. In the 17th and 18th centuries most of the rich did not save: they spent conspicuously and extravagantely: and industry could only secure their cooperation by the bribe of high profit.

CAPITAL TODAY

Today the situation is far different: there is capital in so great abundance that it begs opportunity for investment and indeed cannot be used in any other way. Also the risk of loss in legitimate industry is now small and might be reduced to nil by intelligent and scientific planning. Moreover, most of the current capital comes not from the rich but from the comparatively poor who save for old age and a rainy day. But the huge profits of industry go not to them but to the financiers who as middle-men handle their funds, giving them 2% in savings banks while this wealth in foreign trade often reaps 50%. Small wonder Big Business fights and schemes and drafts the 18 year youth. Profit is thicker than blood, and Big Business seeks the mines of Korea for American capital.

35-7-209

SOCIAL CAPITAL

This has led many a social thinker to point out that capital for all real human want and improvement could easily be taken from production and leave sufficient income for all human consumers, provided of course that individual consumption was limited to such amounts that no man had cake if any man lacked bread: that mink coats for the rich were not allowed, if the poor had no shoes. And of course here's the rub. This compulsion which socialism proposed long before Lenin as the only way to decent human life, raises shrieks of protest if hinted at today in the United States. Remember what happened when Roosevelt proposed to limit incomes to $25,000.

What church of the lowly Jesus would for a moment admit or preach such doctrine. And yet is it strange that the poor and hard-working laborers of the world, without sufficient food, shelter and clothes, fearing old age and sickness more than the flames of Hell— is it strange that they by overwhelming majority are demanding this regulation of production and consumption and and that this is not Russian Imperialism but American Common-sense.

STOPPING SOCIALISM

You cannot stop this line of thought from growing in an intelligent world if you kill all the youth and dye the oceans red with blood. You cannot continue to lie about successful British social medicine and legal aid. Social control of production and distribution of wealth is coming as sure as the the rolling stars. The whole concept of property is changing and must change. Not even a Harvard school of business can make greed into a science nor can the unscrupoulous ambition of a Secretary of State use atomic energy forever for death instead of life.

Moreover, much of the capital used today is taken from public funds through taxation while the returns to to private profiteers. For instance the huge profits of the automobile industry are largely due to the vast expenditure for roads paid for by the public. Labor contends that it is therefore but fair to take part of this profit for public use. On the other hand industry in the United States consistently refuses this demand and is reluctant to bear its own share of public taxation. Today for instance, the owners of our commercial shipping, built and sustained in part by public taxation pay less proportionately in taxes than the sailors of their ships pay out of their wage.

35-7-210

-1J

Mailed November 22, 1950

35-7-205

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

TAXES

The sales tax in Mississippi amounts to 19% on the earnings of the poor; the tax on homes in Georgia has driven hundreds of workers into the street; the withholding of wages for taxes in New York make the tax burden often unendurable for stenographers and clerks. Great wealth meantime escapes its just share of the tax burden despite its huge and increasing profit. This huge taxation is being used for securing markets all over the world; for getting cheap oil, rubber, minerals, copper, tin, and lately for threatening world war on any nation which interferes directly or indirectly with our proposal to own and exploit the earth, even if it kills a few hundred thousand of our youth.

Thus taxation on the poor furnishes funds which make American investment safe; and then the business man without risk, with cheap native labor, reaps 50 to 100% profit and calls it his. He uses it in election to buy public officials, advertising, push legislation which favors him and kill laws which he does not like. He spends forty millian a year for lobbying. We pretend to wish to help the poor lands which we control, but in Greece, Puerto Rico and the Philippines we have left poverty; in cuba we left monopoly and in Korea we start with utter destruction.

OUR SCHOOLS

All this is not gossip and spite, the truth, the simple truth about wealth and property; about social control over greed and monopoly is well known, but it is not taught in our schools and colleges. Our teachers of economics instead of teaching the ABC of income and wage go off into higher mathematics and are paid $7000 a year to stay there, not counting income from writing against labor and socialism paid for by big business.

Our bright young men are driven out of government employ by low salaries and witch hunts and hired by big business at high salaries to keep their mouths shut and work for private profit. This throws the burden of teaching economics and the ethics of income and wage on the laborers themselves. For this reason in all elections we should talk not only about what is usually called politics but matters of vaster importance which have to do with life itself. Candidates should be pledged to work for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. and not to be fooled by the Truman run-around; to keep plugging for a real FEPC, so as to give opportunity for ability despite race or faith; for peace soas no longer to sacrifice our sons for private profit from the poor and degraded of the world. And beyond this to demand public housing, social medicine, federal aid to education, and especially higher wage and lower tax on the poor in order to readjust the present unjust distribution of wealth in accord with the highest social welfare of all.

35-7206

WORLD SOCIALISM

Today despite every effort in the United States to conceal and deny the facts, all civilized nations except this, have been progressing toward socialism especially since 1900. They own and run the railways, the telephone and telegraph, street cars, buses and subways; they largely conduct housing, sanitation, insurance and relief, they guarantee employment; they engage in industry, in manufacture, foreign trade, mining, property forestry and river control; in power conversion and control and wide ownership of land.

Some nations like Britain go further than this, others like the Scandinavian land, Belgian and Holland plan less in theory but do even more in practice; while the Iron Curtainlands attempt complete social and industrial planning and ownership of all capital.

Here then is a world movement which the United States almost alone is attempting to stem. We are attempting to champion private enterprise when no great industrial effort can possibly be private or carried on primarily for private ends; we stress individual initiative which is laudable when it is for social ends and dangerous when it is mainly for private profit.

COLONIALISM

35-7-207

Contrary to the teaching of history and the trend of this age, this nation is determined to build future power and wealth on a new colonialism, based primarily on economic and military power; and indirectly on the political control which industrial organization will give it to rule people overseas, just as industry rules the United States. We built our highest expectations on the collapse of Russian industry which we regarded as certain after the war with Germany. We then expected free hand to exploit the Balkans and Russia itself in time. We were certain of our control of China and eventually of most of Asia. We are investing large sums in Africa and opposing attempts at autonomy. South America and the Caribbean area are already under our partial control.

To our surprise the Soviet Union survived and shows no sign of collapse; to our anger the Balkans followed Soviet leadership and our repeated efforts to collaborate with their landlords and monopolists have not succeeded. We regard our failure as due to conspiracy and force. But our extreme consternation came when China which we thought was already ours and bought and paid for by six billions of our tax money, revolted and followed Russian communis. We regarded this as aggression and we now propose to meet it by world war against the Soviet Union.

Mailed November 30, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

DEMOCRACY

Democracy is the form of government in which each citizen has a voice in all decisions of policy and action. It contrasts with dictatorships, oligarchies or class rule. In a democracy the citizen must freedom of opinion, access to the facts and right of expression by voice and vote. The United States has always regarded itself as a democracy and lately has assumed leadership of the democratic forces of the world.

Let us examine this claim. First of all this country was not at first a democracy even in theory but successively a monarchy, a theocracy and then an aristocracy of birth and property. Jefferson and the French Revolution turned it toward the democratic ideal and the age of Jackson admitted the workers and farmers into the body politic.

NEW ENGLAND

I saw American Democracy in the last quarter of last century, from the point of view of New England, then its best expression. We had freedom of opinion and even enjoyed the right of dissent as such. But in actual political life we were under the pretty strict control of the small landholders, the owners of town real estate and the merchants. They were the only ones who were elected to town office and whose influence was dominant over public opinion. There was no public discussion or voting on such matters as wages, hours of work or income, slums, poor relief, sewage and health were discussed [illegible] slums in my town [illegible] affected taxation. The wr[illegible] mill, whose owners were the social aristocrats of the town. We never discussed them. In school we did not discuss property or income. We regarded it as a purely private matter. We never had strikes and opposed the idea as futile and unnatural. Poverty was looked on as usually the result of laziness and good schools were furnished free to those able to attend. Poor relief was a public disgrace distributed gingerly. Private alms giving was common. This was an approach to democracy, but it was not complete democracy.

45-7-214

LIMITED DEMOCRACY

First of all democracy in the United States has historically excluded at various times and places from the right to vote; catholics and dissenters like Jews and Baptists, all women before 1920, the poor, even in some areas today Negroes or descendants of Negroes, Indians, Asiatics and foreigners, illiterates, even where there were no schools or ability to attend.

Meantime there was growing up along side our democracy an increasingly contradicting it, a system of human slavery which was an integral part of our economy and a prime source of our wealth. When we nobly declared all men equal, every fifth Americanw was a slave, purchasable exactly like cattle. We saw naturally this fatal contradiction but excused it in various ways and hoped it would disappear without costing us too much. But after a period of hesit tion during the period 1820 to 1830, just as democracy was broadening so as to include white laborers, Negro slavery in the United States became the basis of a cotton kingdom and cotton together with sugar, tobacco and other slave raised crops, processed by a new technique caused an Industrial Revolution which rebuilt the modern world.

THE SLAVE POWER

In the United States the slave power grew until it became the rule of a political oligarchy which not only was not democratic but openly derided democracy in the North and West and expanding the slave aristocracy South and West. However coincident with Southern aristocracy had grown up a Western section of adventures, pioneers among small landholders and a new virile democracy began to flourish. If the Free Land which the nation owned in abundance had in the 30's and 40's been distributed widely among them, this region of peasant proprietors would have imposed democratic government and freedom of thought on the whole nation, but the Western land was held off the markets long as possible, then was given to railroads and corporations digging for minerals and oil, until the day when the Western farmer had to fight the slave power for free land.

In the ensuing Civil War, no one except the despised Negroes and white abolitionists opposed or wanted to attack slavery; the mass of citizens wanted to keep this system of labor off its free soil but was quite willing to protect it in the south so long as it applied to Negroes.

Northern industry was hand in glove with slavery from which it derived huge income. It swore violently to protect all the rights of slave owners in the South and deny Negroes citizenship or human rights in the whole nation but it refused to surrender Southern soil and market to Europeans and rather than lose this profitable union was willing to fight, destroy and kill. But victoryxx in war is not always as easy as scrap-happy generals tell us.

THE CIVIL WAR

The Southerners with leaders trained at West Point and with black labor in the fields to raise their food and clothes, fought the North to a stand-still and nearly captured Washington several times.

Then the North had sense enough to accept the cooperation of slaves which had been offered to them from the first. Negroes had fled from the plantations by thousands and were used as spies and laborers until finally 200,000 of them became armed soldiers in the armies of the North replacing white men who refused to fight. Victory for the North became simply a matter of arming increasing numbers of the whold mass of a million able-bodied slaves. Facing that prospect, Lee promptly surrendered.

Mailed December 13, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

My Campaign

On August 2, 1950, I arrived in Paris from Prague. I hurried to my little hotel on the rive gauche, only a block from the beautiful flowers, sculpture and children of the Luxemburg Gardens. I was scarcely settled in my room when John Abt of the Progressive Party telephoned me from New york and asked my consent to run for United States Senator from the state of New York on the ticket of the American Labor Party. I laughed.

I laughed because I remembered my grilling by the State Department when I asked for a visa to visit Czechoslovakia. The young man in the New York office looked over my note of application and asked whom I knew in the country. I realized that I was under suspicion for the request, and I promised him details. The next day I appeared with a long letter in which I noted all the facts: that I had attended peace congresses in New York France and Moscow in 1949, and now wished to attend a meeting of the Bureau of the World Partisans of Peace as their guest in Prague.

35-7-189

The State Department

He scanned the letter and said that I must add that I was aware of the risk of post-war conditions; I assented and started to write: "If war conditions prevent permission to go, I shall understand," when he interrupted me and said: "You must say that you know of the unsettled conditions in Czechoslovakia." But, I objected that I had no such knowledge. He assured me that the State Department had so notified his office. I said I was quite willing to say that the State Department had so informed me. That would not do. "You know," he added, "that Russia controls Czechoslovakia?" "No", I said, "I did not; I was under the impression that the Czechs were in control.

He then gave up and passed me to an older official.

The Passport Comes

This man looked annoyed and hunted at length through a file of dispatches. He finally explained that the State Department had ordered them to obtain from all prospective visitors to Czechoslovakia an acknowledgment that they were aware of conditions there. Very well, I answered, and I appended to my letter this statement: "Whatever the conditions are in Czechoslovakia, I wish to make this trip." He eyed this dispargingly, but finally said, "All right."

It took ten days of deliberation in Washington and two telephone calls before my visa came. Even this it was carefully limited to 60 days in Czechoslovakia and "necessary lands" en route and "was not to be validated for additional countries without the express authorization of the Department of State." I felt like a prisoner on parole.

35-7-190

The Proposal

Remembering this testimony to my untrustworthy character, I was amused to think what such a reputation could add to any campaign; then I recalled that laughter over the long distance telephone is as costly as words and I proceeded to remind Abt of my age and political inexperience and my unwillingness to run for public office. But Abt said a number of things, of which two sunk in:

1. That this campaign would give a chance for me to give the public a message which could be voiced in no other way.
2. My candidacy would help the campaign of Marcantonio.

I thought this matter over gravely. Because of my support of the Progressive Party in 1948, my acceptance of an honorary and unpaid office with Paul Robeson in the Council on African Affairs, and for my activity in Peace Congresses in New York, Paris and Moscow, I found myself increasingly proscribed in pulpit, school and platform; my opportunity to write for publication was becoming narrower and narrower, even in the Negro press. I wondered if a series of plain talks in a political campaign would not be my last and only chance to tell the truth as I see it.

Marcantonio

Beyond this , of all members of Congress, Vito Marcantonio has acted with courage, intelligence and steadfast integrity in the face of ridicule, mud-slinging and cheating. Liberals like Graham, Pepper and the Douglasses have wavered, backed and filled and deserted their principles; the colored members of the House have been dumb or absent. If I could do anything for Marcantonio, I decided to try. On August 31, I wired, "Accept. Du Bois"

Of course whatever contribution I could make would I knew be small and not very effective. I did not have the strength for a hard, active campaign; I was no orator nor spell-binder, but only one who could reason with those who would listen and had brains enough to understand; I had no large group of close personal friends and many of those whom I had, dared not speak nor act because of fear for their jobs--a fear which was real and restraining; finally I had no money to spend nor moneyed friends to contribute; and anyone who thinks that money does not buy American elections is a fool.

33-7-191

I went into the campaign knowing well from the first that I did not have aghost of a chance for election, and that my efforts would bring me ridicule at best and jail at worst. On the other hand, I did have a message which was worth attention and which in the long run could not fail to have influence. The leaders of the American Labor Party and my colleagues on the ticket were more than kind and solicitous; they reduced my participation to a minimum, bore themselves an unfair part of the work, and gave me every help to keep my efforts within my strength and ability.

My Speeches

I delivered in all, ten speeches and made seven broadcasts. I began with a Press Conference in Harlem, to which the Times and Herald-Tribune sent reporters and the Associated Press; only one Negro paper was represented. I addressed mass meetings in Harlem, Queens, Brooklyn and the Bronx; each well attended by 1000 to 2500 persons, who gave me careful attention and generous applause. This was encouraging because I used manuscript, no gestures and few jokes. This method I have used on popular audiences for years; and while an audience always sighs at the sight of a roll of manuscript, I am convinced that intelligent persons prefer to have a speaker really say something, rather than entertain them with shouting and acting. But alas! Audiences are not always composed of intelligent persons. My last speech in the city of New York was at that marvellous gathering of 17,000 persons at Madison Square Garden on October 24, news of which was nearly blacked out by the press.

35-7-192

Mailed December 20, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

Up-State

On an up-state tour from Buffalo to Albany beginning October 15, I spoke four times to audiences of a few hundred persons in small and unobtrusive halls. There was a distinct air of fear and repression. "Free" Americans slipped in almost furtively and whispered many stories of how the industries of Rochester and Syracuse threatened their workers. In Albany political pressure was tense. While the press was courteous, we evidently were permitted just to touch the edges of real publicity. I realized from this how much money and effort in halls, advertisement and personal contacts was needed to get our message over to the mass of voters. Once reached even in small groups, they were eager and enthusiastic. They listened, leaning forward with rapt faces. But they and we were gripped by defeatism. Tom Dewey and Joe Hanley could talk to ten thousands while we spoke to a hundred, even if they said nothing, which they often did. Their message reached every end of the state. Senator Lehman and his friends did not have to go hungry in order for him comfortably to cover the state. I winced at our little collections; they drew blood. My colleagues like McMannus, Schriener and George Murphy spent day and night in personal contacts and conversation while I slept with guilty conscience. We needed a hundred workers where we had one.

Lehman and Hanley

I had another handicap and paradox. Of Henlay's utter unfitness for public office, especially when his famous letter came to light while I was in Albany, there was not the slightest doubt. Lehman was different. He was an honest man and wealthy; he had behind him a good record of public service. Yet he ought not to sit in the United States Senate because he represents finance and foreign investment, and because of this is frantically backing Truman in the Korean crime which Big Business precipitated. All that my candidacy however could possibly accomplish, in the immediate present, would be to draw enough votes from warmonger Lehman to replace him with a grafting politician. Many voters were indignant at this prospect and some accused me of being deliberately a catspaw or at best of poor judgment. For a time the political leaders were worriedover this; and this angle gave me more publicity than any other, but they soon concluded that party discipline, patronage, freedom, for gambling liquor, prostitution and dope in Harlem together with the threat of the "Red Smear," would keep the rank and file of Negro voters in line. They were right, I received less than one-fourth of the black vote of Harlem. Yet I am sure, I was right and that even the threat of Hanley was worse than that of World War; and that the overwhelming defeat today of my fight for Peace and Civil Rights, would some day prove worth while.

35-7-200

Manuscript

As my addresses were carefully prepared, there appeared to be a demand voiced by word and mail to have opportunity to read them in print. I was easily persuaded to prepare them for publication. The ten speeches were based on three themes, represented by my talk on "Peace andCivil Rights" at Madison Square Garden; my address on "The American Way of Life" at the Queens rally; and my lecture on "Harlem" at the Golden Gate Ballroom. All my other speeches were combinations and adaptations of these.

For the seven braodcasts, I adopted another method; I planned a connected series of expositions on the underlying basis of the demand for Peace and Civil Rights, emphasizing in succession the rule of propaganda, the misconception of property, and the concept of democracy. These were interlarded between two general statements, one delivered on television and one in our final symposium.

Experiences

On the whole I enjoyed this unique excursion into political activity.

I encountered little open race prejudice, although of course few New Yorkers wanted to be represented in Washington by a Negro because of their prejudice and also because they suspected I was more Negro than American. T counteract this at least in part, I made no appeal to the Negro vote as such. I wanted the people of New York to know that as senator I would represent the interests of the state and not merely those of one minority group. At the same time, I knew and Negroes knew that I would regard Negro emancipation as aprime prerequisite to American freedom and possibly from birth , training and bitter experience, I would unconsciously overemphasize this aspect. The Negro voter of Harlem was in a quandary; he knew that no candidate would defend Negro rights as I would, he also knew that I would be defeated and that he must depend on Lehman or Hanley. His path was cloudy.

35-7-201

My age was always mentioned and emphasised; it being apparently assumed that no American had any business to live and think beyond the age of 70, or preferably 40, on account of the wisdom and courage of current youth. Naturally I was not impressed by this argument and was annoyed that age should continually outweigh reason. But above all I was amazed and exasperated by the overwhelming use and influence of money in politics. Millionaires and corporations, not record and logic, defeated Marcantonio. Dewey could afford to spend $35,000 for one day on radio; when friends of mine the nation over sent $600 for furthering my campaign, it represented more honesty and guts than all the thousands spent on Lehman and Hanley.

Admittedly incomplete returns of politica expenses admit $600,000 spent by the Republicans; $500,000 by the Democrats and $90,000 by the Liberals. This is probably less than half the real expenditure. The American Labor Party spent $35,000. This almost looks as though the parties paid a dollar or two apiece for votes. The American Labor Party at fifty cents a vote could hardly be charged with bribery. Small wonder the results of this election throughout the land sounded like a "story told by an idiot."

35-2-202

The Vote

Five million persons voted in this election; of these four percent voted for me, which was far more than I expected. More than a million of the voters stayed from the polls. After a great social effort like the election of 1950, one must feel the let-down. Even the victors gain less than they wish, while the losers wonder if it was worth all the effort, all the worry, all the breathless disappointed hope. Yet there is a sense in which no sound effort is in vain, least of all a struggle with high ideal and personal integrity.

Mailed December 27, 1950

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

IN 1936

I first saw China in the Fall of 1936, I had been spending five months in Germany and then I went to Moscow. I travelled across the whole width of the Soviet Socialist Republics. Ten days we rolled from Moscow to Otpur. We went through Perm and Sverdlovsk, through Omsk and Novosibirsk; we swept through Siberia and down to Irtkust and beside that vast lake Baikal which is as long as two-thirds of thedistance between New York and Chicago. Finally at early morning, we came to Otpur, Manchuria. Down through Manchuria I visited Harbin and Kingking and then Mukden. From there I might have gone to Korea; but Korea was not then in the center of the worlds' thought as it is today; so I ~~turned East~~ crossed the Yellow Sea to Tientsin and finally came to the old capital of China, Peiping.

THE CROWDS OF CHINA

I think that in China for the first time in my life, I realized how many people there are on earth and how they center in Asia; how empty and undeveloped the United States is. Everywhere in China there were crowds of people and Peiping was a vast throng. Here lay the remains of a magnificent world capital; of a capital whose splendor in many ways out-ranked anything in Europe. I shall never forget that Temple of Heaven; that great marble platform whither the Emperor of China rode once a year while all of the people kept their faces veiled so that their ruler might communicate alone with God, face to Heaven. From Peiping I came to Nanking at night and then to Shanghai, and finally down to the lovely city of Hanchow.

CHINA TODAY

This, as I have said, was 16 years ago; since that the history of the world has been almost unbelievable. And outstanding in that history is the story of this nation, a third larger th n the Continental United States with 463,000,000 people. Its history begins over 2000 years before Christ. It became a republic after overthrowing the Empire in 1911; and then between 1911 and now, Europe and the United States did everything they could by influence, money and force, to keep China in its role of a subordinate to the organized business of the world.

191-7-1-61

At last Chaing Kai-Shek, puppet of America, was driven out and September 21, 1949, the Peoples Republic of China, a Communist regime, was proclained under the rulership of Mao Tze-tung. In December, Mao at the request of the United Nations sent a deputation to the United ~~States~~ Nations.

A VISIT TO THE CHINESE DELEGATION

Last Sunday, December 17, 1950, I had the privilege of making a call on the representatives ~~to the United Nations~~ of the Peoples Republic of China. They were to leave the country the following Tuesday, and I had been afraid I would not have the opportunity of seeing them. But Sunday morning, the Secretary of the Progressive Party called me and said that arrangements had been made for a committee to call on the delegation at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. We arrived about a quarter of an hour before the three o'clock appointment. There was with us, Paul Robeson, Katherine Van Orden, who recently ran for Representative on the Progressive ticket in New Jersey; James Embrie, John Abt, C. B. Baldwin, secretary of the Progressive Party, and Louis Burnham, who edits Freedom.

THE DELEGATION

We were taken to the 9th floor and to a small apartment, guarded by the police. There we met and were introduced to all the members of the Delegation. General Wu, who is the head of the Delegation, is a man that does not look much over forty but probably is between 50 and 60. He speaks no English, ~~but~~ He was quietly dressed in black, with a pleasant manner and a welcoming smile. The oldest of the other four delegates, who formed the central group, were none of them over 25; one young woman who had been for many years in the United States, and one tall, rather nervous, young man; the two others were scarcely over 20; the interpretator was a handsome young man, who spoke slowly and with deliberation.

115-7-142

Introductions and welcome words were exchanged. One felt of course the terrible handicap of the language barrier. If we had all spoken or understood one language it would have been so much easier to meet each other and to get in close touch. After the words of welcome, one of us made a plea that the delegation would not hurry home, but wait for further developments. He said that there were signs of changing opinion in the United States and that the Peace Movement was growing especially toward China.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Questions were asked about the more recent developments in China; about the attitude of the Chinese toward American Negroes. General Wu said emphatically that the Chinese had every sympathy with our struggles for freedom and equal citizenship. I could not help but interject here one word; I said that I wanted to thank the delegation personally and for many Negroes for their forth-right and clear presentation of the Chinese point of view; that too often when colored people addressed white folk, they were apologetic and even obsequious; that I was glad that in this case the Chinese said frankly to the Americans that the United States did not own the earth and that American citizens did not know everything, our delegation applauded. This was translated for the General and he smiled.

The Chinese wanted to know how they could learn of our forward movements and we promised to keep them informed. In turn we asked for documents of their development. They gave us some matter and promised more.

ACCENT ON YOUTH

The interview was a little over an hour and, with pauses, for translation, there was really comparatively little time for careful anaylsis of

145-7-123

of the situation. But we black and white Americans were impressed, I think especially, by the youthfulness and earnestness of this delegation. These were young people full of strength and hope, not afraid of life, not afraid of the world. They had a great mission; they were going to carry it through there was in their minds no doubt of the ultimate result. They demanded equal treatment for the Chinese; they insisted on autonomy; they wanted peace.

Tea, of course, was served and there were some personal conferences and gifts , pict res and medals and then we arose and shook hands with all of the five, and the four other members of the delegation came in and greeted us. We went away from something that had the nature of a historic occasion.

45-7-164

Re the crowds 12/27/57

In 1936

I

I first saw China in the Fall of 1936, Had been spending five months in Germany and then I went to Moscow, and travelled across the whole width of the Soviet Socialist Republics. Ten days we ~~travelled~~ rolled from Moscow to Otpur. We went through Perm and Sverdlovsk, thro Omsk and Novosibirsk; we swept through Siberia and down to Irtusk and ~~then~~ beside that vast lake ~~Vital~~ Baikal which is as long as two thirds of the distance between New York and Chicago, and finally at early morning, we came to Otpur, Manchuria. Down through Manchuria I ~~travelled by~~ rolled Harbin and Sinking and then to Mukden. From there I might have gone to Korea; but korea was not then in the center of the worlds thoughts as it is today; so I turned East to ~~Tienxing~~ Tientsin and finally came to the old capital of China ~~Piping~~ Peiping.

35.7.73

The Crowds of China

I think that in China for the first time in my life, I realized how many people there ~~were~~ are on earth and how they ~~were~~ centered in Asia, and how empty and undeveloped the ~~country the~~ United States ~~was~~ is. Everywhere in China there were crowds of people and ~~in~~ Peiping ~~there~~ was a vast throng. Here ~~was~~ lay the remains of a magnificent world capital, of a capital whose splendor in manyways out-ranked anything in Europe. I shall never forget that the Temple of Heaven; that great marble platform, ~~whose~~ where the ~~Chinese~~ Emperor of China once a year, rode, while all of the people kept their faces ~~xixix~~ veiled ~~In order~~ that their ruler might communicate alone ~~to~~ with God, face to heaven

From Peiping I came Nanking at night and then to Shanghai, and finally ~~over~~ down to the lovely city of Hanchow. This, as I have said, was 16 years ago; China Today ~~and~~ since that the history of the world has been almost unbelievable. And ~~catalamber starbling~~ in that history is the story of this nation, a third larger than the Continental Vanished states with 463,000,000 people. Its history begins over 2000 years before Christ. It became a republic after overthrowing the Empire in 1911; and then between 1911 and now, Europe and the United States did everything they could ~~to~~ by influence, money and force, to keep China in its role of a subordinate to the organized business of the world.

hurtful of America

~~But~~ atlast ~~the puppet ruler~~ Chaing Kai-Shek was driven out, and ~~finally~~ September 21, 1949, the Peoples Republic of China , a Communist regime, was proclaimed , under the rulership of Mao Tze-Tung . In December, ~~the Chinese unofficially interferred in the Korean War and~~ Mao at the request of the deputation United Nations sent a ~~xxxxxxxx~~ to the United States.

35-7-74

A visit of the Chinese Delegation

Dec. 17, 1950

Last Sunday, I had the privilege of making a call to the representatives of the United Nations of the Peoples Republic of China. They were to leave the country the following Tuesday, and I was afraid I would not have the opportunity of seeing them. But

35-7-75

On Sunday morning, the Secretary of the Progressive Party called me up and said that arrangements had been made for a committee to call on the delegation at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. We arrived about a quarter of three for the three o'clock appointment. There was with us, Paul Robeson, Katherine Van Orden, who recently ran for representative on the Progressive ticket in New Jersey; James Embrie, John Abt, C. B. Baldwin, secretary of the P[illegible] Party, and Louis Burnham, who edits Freedom.

The Delegation

We were taken to the 9th floor and to a small apartment, guarded by the police. There we met and were introduced to all the members of the Delegation. General Woo, who is the head of the Delegation, is a man that does not look much over forty but probably is between 50 and 60. He speaks no English, but was quietly dressed in black, with a pleasant manner and a welcoming smile. The oldest of the other four delegates, who formed the central group, were none of them over 25. One young woman who had been for many years in the United States, and one tall, rather nervous young man; the two others were scarcely over 20; the interpretetor a handsome young man, who spoke slowly and with deliberation.

Introductions and welcome words were exchanged. One felt of course the terrible handicap of the language barrier. If we had all spoken or understood one language it would have been so much easier to understand each other and to get in close touch. After the words of welcome, and then from one of us made a plea that the delegation would not hurry home, but wait for further developments. He said that there were signs of changing opinion in the United States and that the Peace Movement was growing especially toward China.

Questions & Answers

Questions were asked about the more recent developments in China; about the attitude of the Chinese toward the American Negroes. General Woo emphatically said that the Chinese had every sympathy with our struggles for freedom, and equal citizenship. I could not help but interject one word; I said that I wanted to thank the delegation for their forth-right and clear presentation of the Chinese point of view; that too often when colored people addressed white folk, they were apologetic and even obsequious; that I was glad that in this case the Chinese said frankly to the Americans that the United States did not own the earth and that American citizens did not know everything. This was translated for the General and he smiled. Our delegates applauded. accent on Youth

The interview was a little over an hour and, with pauses for translation, there was really comparatively little time for careful analysis of the situation. But we black and white Americans were impressed, I think especially, by the youthfulness and earnestness of this delegation. These young people were full of strength and hope, not afraid of life, not afraid of the world. They had a great mission; they were going to carry it through, there was no doubt in their minds of the ultimate result.

Tea, of course, was served and there were some personal conferences, and then we arose and shook hands with all of the five, and the four other members of the delegation came in and greeted us, and then we went away from something that had the nature of a historic occasion. and gifts of pictures and medals

The Chineas wanted to know how they could learn of our forward movements and we promised to keep them informed. In turn we asked for documents of their development. They gave us some matter and promised more.

They demanded equal treatment for the Chinese; they insisted on autonomy; they wanted Peace.

Sent to George B. Murphy Jr. for FREEDOM 1/24.51

Mail folder Freedom

JOHN BROWN

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

John Brown, born on the threshhold of the 19th century, was a man of deep faith. His religious feeling was not carried as an ornament or a dogma; but as something which was part of his life and which he sought to realise by his deeds. His faith was based on the old Testament, the Hebrew Scriptures and on belief in a personal ruling God of justice.

He was a poor man who worked in the soil with his hands, and knew the great outdoors and the peculiarities of land. He was a man of family, with wife and many children. Yet he was never limited by his work or his poverty or his family life, from conceiving himself as an instrument to "make straight the way of the Lord!"

30-8-1

His attention was early called to the anomaly of Negro slavery and in particular to the Free Soil controversy in Kansas. He took himself and his growing sons into the battle to make the West free of slavery. He fought there with his own hands and in blood, to accomplish this; and then turning from Kansas, he conceived that he must fight not simply on the periphery of slavery but must attack the slave system itself.

For this John Brown needed help and money. For help he turned to the Abolitionists and to the Negroes; to the Negroes in Canada and New England; to TO Frederick Douglass the Abolitionists everywhere. He found support and opposition, bravery and cowardice; but he went forward to his great plan.

That plan has been often misconceived. Most people and most books even to this day, think that John Brown planned an insurrection of slaves and planned it not in the midst of slave territory, but on the outskirts where there were comparatively few slaves and where the system itself was decadent. This was not true. John Brown's plan was a masterpiece. It was based upon the great Appalachian range of Mountains, stretching from Alabama to the Great Lakes.

Into these mountains for years the slaves had run away to hide and make their escape to the North. John Brown had a plan to systematize and organize this pathway to the North Star.

Along the heights of the Appalachians from Georgia to Pennsylvania, he proposed to establish a series of forts and hiding places, with caches of arms and food; so that when a slave ranaway from Florida, Alabama, Georgia or Mississippi, he did not take the long chances of reaching the helping hands of the Underground Railroad in Pennsylvania and New York. He could be guided to a hiding place nearby, where he could find arms, food and clothes; then by easy stages he would make his way further North until he came to Freedom.

In the meantime, at these forts there would he gradually gathered permanent garrisons. From time to time they would make forays upon the plantations and entice other slaves to free themselves. Brown based his ideas, not upon fantasy but upon what had taken place under similar circumstances under Garibaldi in Italy and also in the Balkans. He hired a leader, Forbes, who once had taken part in European guerilla warfare; but this man was one of Browns' first betrayers.

Brown began at Harpers Ferry, because there was a supply of arms in the arsenal there, and because from Harpers Ferry secret hiding places along high mountain ranges could easily be reached.

It was a master plan and it could have worked. Indeed in the whole history of run-a-way slaves it had already been working without central organization and without arms and food. The drain of fugitive slaves along these heights threatened the existence of slavery and brought Civil War. The culmination of the plan failed in the case of John Brown because the persons who were to initiate it were late in gathering at Harpers Ferry; because the money necessary for the support was too little; and because the plan was partially betrayed before it could be initiated.

Thus the plot was frustrated after heroic effort and John Brown hanged. But it is a grave question whether or not John Brown was less successful because of the failure of his plans than by his martyrdom which startled the nation and the world.

After the death of John Brown his soul went marching on and American slavery was doomed. We can today sing again with Goethe: "Selig der den er in Sieges- glanze findet"---"Happy man whom death shall find in victorys' splendor!"

36-8-3

for Freedom

Nov. 1952

ONE HUNDRED YEARS IN THE STRUGGLE FOR NEGRO FREEDOM

by W.E.B. Du Bois

Any attempt to write on Negro freedom in the United States involves curious contradictions. One could scarcely imagine greater social change than between the years 1853 and 1953. The group of 3½ million dark people a century ago has grown to ~~[illegible]~~ 15 million, about as many persons as live in ~~the states of Kansas~~, the Union of South Africa, Czechoslovakia or Yugoslavia.

36-9-93

A century ago this ~~[illegible]~~ mass of intermingled African, American Indian and European blood was nearly 90% slaves, and bought and sold in open market. In the year 1853 particularly, the spirits of their leaders were low, and many of them practically had surrendered the fight for freedom in the United States and looked for hope in migration. Others fought with the white abolitionists led by Garrison and Phillips but they had been almost driven to the wall. The slave owners of the south were triumphant in ~~[illegible]~~ political power and social philosophy. It was the current scientific opinion that Negroes could not progress and that any attempt to emancipate Negro slaves in the United States meant disaster to black and white.

Contrast this with the situation of 1953. The 15 million descendants of those Negroes are legally free men. They are, to be sure, subject to certain caste conditions in residence, employment, education and public esteem. ~~[illegible]~~ Most of their children are in school, and from an illiteracy of over 90% certainly 3/4's of the Negroes 10 years of age can read and write; 90,000 Negro students are in college, and the number of Negro Americans who have achieved distinction in the professions, in science and in literature and art is considerable. Negro ownership of land and property has increased, while lynching and mob violence against them have greatly decreased. Their political power is such that in the election of 1952 they were recognized as having the balance of power in many cities and states. Of 8½ million possible Negro voters perhaps 3,750,000 voted, or 43% as compared with 60% of the nation. This is due, naturally, to the legal and customary disfranchisement of most Negroes living in the South. From a largely rural people they have become 50% urbanized and have migrated by millions from the former southern slave states to the northern and western states. This has greatly increased juvenile delinquency and added to the number of the poor, unfortunate and sick which counteracts the movement forward of the group in general.

By stressing figures illustrating this change, a story of almost miraculous progress can be written. I myself have many times emphasized this progress and compared it favorably with similar progress of any group of people at any time. On the other hand, no sooner are statements of this sort made than there arise curiously contrasting and contradictory conclusions. Many Americans would say: "With such a record of progress why is there continued complaint and agitation among Negroes? How much faster could they reasonably have been expected to develop?" But the very fact that this nation boasts of its democracy and freedom emphasizes the failure in the case of a tenth of its population. Foreigners, people from Europe; especially visitors from Asia and Africa, continually point out the discrepancies in American democracy.

36-9-94

Indeed, in the greatest study of the American Negro problem ever made, conducted by the Swede, Gunnar Myrdal, 1938-1942 assisted by native and foreign students, colored and white, the main conclusion was that the treatment of the Negro is America's greatest ~~[illegible]~~ failure, and his almost universal segregation, America's outstanding denial of its own faith in human equality.

Finally, among Negroes themselves there is curious dichotomy in their attitude toward their own history and progress. They are at once proud and ashamed. They have done well but could have done better if they had not been deliberately retarded. They see immigrant groups like the Irish, Italians and Slavs surpass them continually in accomplishment and preferment mainly because they are white.

On the other hand, there are large and increasing ~~[illegible]~~ numbers of Negroes who are not complaining, because they personally are ~~[illegible]~~ content; their comfort may be due to their own exertions; it may be due to exceptional circumstances; it may be due to winking at color discrimination by whites or exploitation of fellow Negroes by themselves. In any case, they are content and uncomplaining. They have adequate incomes for their standard of living and that standard as compared with the world average is reasonably high. They do not complain and they do not countenance complaint from other Negroes. They admit discrimination but point out the changes and progress. They are apt to think success is personal and failure racial.

Nevertheless, within the Negro group there certainly are those who do complain; who point to failure due to racial discrimination and not to personal fault; who point to poor schools and low wages and scarcity of good homes and jobs, and deny that the present situation is generally good or that the average is bettering so fast that radical demand for improvement should be decried.

In the midst of such contradictions it is not easy for anyone to make a satisfactory answer to the question as to how great progress the struggle for Negro freedom has made in the last century, and whether or not the progress should be regarded as satisfactory.

There are three sorts of comparisons that could be made and are made and which confuse the final answer. For a long time it has been the custom of the United States Census to compare the condition of Negroes with the corresponding facts concerning the white population. This of course is a crude and unfair comparison. There is not much to be learned by comparing a group of people less than a century removed from slavery and still suffering grave social and economic discrimination with the mass of the freer white citizens. A much more illuminating comparison could be made by studying the social and economic classes arising within the Negro group; and of course the most valuable comparison would be that of contrasting the group with itself at different times and places.

This kind of study of the American Negro has not been adequately done. It was started at Atlanta University in 1926 and for 13 years a body of fact which made a study of the inner development of the American Negro possible was began and carried on by Negro scholars. If it had been adequately supported and pursued up until this day we would have had a much more illuminating body of knowledge to judge from than we have. But the importance of this study, especially as carried on by Negroes, was not recognized and the effort was [illegible] dropped. It was partially pursued further at Fisk University and at Howard University but there was no wide concentration of effort on the American Negro group and Negroes gradually lost leadership and direction in this field.

36-9-96

To supply this lack I tried in 1940 to rehabilitate the Atlanta University studies on a broader scale, and to unite some 50 colored institutions in the southern states in a concentrated series of social studies which might have proven the most interesting sociological experiment in the modern world. This project was allowed to lapse when I was retired.

In addition to the comparison between the American Negro group and the white group, and the more significant comparison of the Negro group with itself at different times and places, there is also an increasingly more significant comparison of the American Negro group with other groups in the world; as for instance, with various parts of Africa, with the nations of Asia and the peoples of the South Sea islands, the West Indies, South and Central America. Such comparisons are important because they point out the relation between the Negro group and these other groups and the relative influence of different environments and social developments.

~~Such comparisons would show that the American Negro group and with the main working groups of the world stands relatively high. His literacy is~~

Such attempts, however, bring up the question as to just what the American Negro group is and with what it can be rationally compared. Is it a nation, a closed economy, a cultural unity or what? It is certainly not a nation, for its political power is limited and is seldom exercised as a unit. It is not a closed economy but part of the economy of the whole nation and becoming more and more integrated. It is proportionately more largely engaged in agriculture, domestic service and common labor, but that increases its dependence on the national economy. There is some evidence of group economy where Negro professional men, business men and artisans serve primarily the Negro group; but it is not clear how this development is growing in comparison with the general picture. This Negro group inherited and has formed a group culture with some customs, language dialects, with a growing literature and other forms of art. Yet as this goes on there is increasing integration with the American culture until it is difficult to say how far there is today a distinct American Negro culture and in what direction it will probably grow.

One thing is certain: the economic survival of the Negro in the South depends today on close union with the white workers, so as to present a united front against the tremendous growth of monopoly capital in the South today.

When we compare American Negroes with other groups, we are not comparing nations, nor even cultural groups; since American Negroes do not form a nation and are not likely to if their present increasingly successful fight for political integration succeeds. They will exercise political power but not as a unit, since that would contradict their fight against segregation. They do not even form a complete cultural unit, although by reason of suffering and discrimination, and by historic artistic gifts, such a culture may be deliberately cultivated and in the end will unify the Negro with other groups rather than divide them. Negroes, Russian and Irish art can flourish in the same state side by side.

The most illuminating comparison of Negro and other groups is to regard the American Negro as mainly a group of workers developing toward full political democracy in the same national government, but with a minimum of class division into exploiting employers and poor laboring classes. This working group can be compared with the working classes of other nations. But even here we must understand that the exploiting class is beginning to appear among Negroes. Its extreme development must be opposed.

36-9-97

How the political aspect will develop is not clear. The old idea of mass migration of Negroes to found a foreign state is unlikely to be renewed. The newer idea of an American Negro state within the United States is both improbable and undesirable. It contradicts our present effort at complete integration and also the modern tendency toward fewer rather than more separate political states with state antagonisms, hatreds and war. Cultural units may, on the other hand, develop and grow to the advantage of all.

Comparisons show that the American Negro, compared with the main working groups of the world stands relatively high. His literacy is nearer to Europe than that of Asia and Africa, and far exceeds South America and the West Indies. His economic situation is far better than that of India, China, the Middle East, or any part of Africa. He is therefore in a peculiar position or could be, to help by teaching and actual experience to aid the backward parts of the world, living as he does in close contact with a powerful white economy. But here comes a moral quandary. The Negro is coming to regard his own progress in America as the sole and legitimate end of his efforts. He is losing his former feeling of kinship with the colored world which forms the majority of mankind. For instance, as the Negroes of South Africa strive desperately against oppression, the American Negroes have given evidence of very little desire to help. This coming Christmas a dozen Negro fraternities and sororities representing the best educated persons in the group and largely comfortable and well-to-do, will spend from $10,000 to $25,000 in social celebrations. Yet the 15 million American Negroes today have sent only $1000 to South Africa in their current struggles.

36-9-98

36-9-99

Let us now turn to the question as to just what the present situation of the American Negro is, so far as it can be reduced to understandable and measurable terms. In physique, including health, reproduction and family life, the Negro is standing up well and is disappointing those prophets of doom who formerly believed that no group of Negroes in competition with the people of ~~the~~ a white nation could survive. The Negro has survived and multiplied, and while his health is below the average of the favored nation, it is above the average of most comparable groups; and what is of greater importance, it is and for 100 years has been steadily improving. The expectation of life has notably increased and in view of world conditions can be called above normal.

All the factors of survival, however, have been affected by the urbanization of the Negro, his industrialization and the problem of occupation. The present economic condition of American Negroes is uncertain. There is serfdom on southern plantations, lower wage differential throughout the south, and while the Negro is widely employed in industry, there is discrimination in pay even in the north, and tardiness in upgrading. He is widely employed as laborer and servant at wages too low for an American standard of living.

Here again, however, he is pushing forward. The national FEPC law, while it lasted, and the few state and city laws, are giving him legal help, and nearly every Negro family can look back on lower living conditions than it now enjoys.

That means, however, that the present conditions are bad in the country districts and in the city slums. In the higher grades of employment, in professions, arts and sciences, there is still lack of opportunity for Negroes and poor preparation offered; there is difference in opportunity for apprenticeship, not only in technique but in science and art. All of these things, though difficult to measure, are real and have much to do with the pessimistic thought and attitude of most American Negroes.

Fundamental, of course, to all this is the matter of education. Most Negro school children go to separate schools, and the Negro schools are poorer than the white schools, the differences in appropriation sometimes being fantastic and nearly always considerable. This means a vast difference of opportunity for preparation for better work and in general intelligence. It is one of the greatest hindrances of the Negro.

36-9-100

Then there is the matter of civil, social and political rights. They cannot be easily separated, and relate to the place that the black man occupies in daily American life. There is no question as to the social discrimination against these 15 million Americans. They are either not legally allowed or unwelcome in most areas of civil life, whether it be hotels, churches, public meetings, restaurants, attendance at social functions or exercising political rights. Negroes are still widely discriminated against in voting throughout the South where more than 60% of them still live.

There are other discriminations which are not so much of pressing importance as of continuous insult and psychological degradation. In 29 states of the United States, for instance, marriages between whites and Negroes are automatically void, and "miscegenation" is a crime. Moreover, just what a "Negro" is under this definition, is a matter of special legislation in 20 states. Naturally, most colored people do not marry most white people and have no particular plans on the subject; but it is a continual insult to have this matter of marriage a question of statute, and sometimes of insulting legal action. This attacks a fundamental human right.

30-9-101

There are also all kinds of laws on ways and places where colored and white people may meet; on trains and buses, in elevators, in hotels, in public assemblies. In most cases such laws are for the most part confined to the 16 former slave states, and vary there from custom to fierce enforcement; but where law is silent, custom intervenes. It makes the life of a black American often a nightmare -- always an uncertainty, anywhere in the nation.

The Negro problem is thus on the whole, a question of what has mainly been called "social equality": How far is a person of Negro descent, whether he shows it in appearance or not (indeed whether he knows it or not), liable to special treatment and particularly to insult and segregation because of that fact? In no other modern civilized country are persons subject to such caste conditions as in the United States except in the Union of South Africa.

When now we ask the question as to how soon this kind of discrimination, customary and legal, is going to disappear, considering what has happened in the last 100 years, naturally no definite answer can be given. It will, of course, gradually disappear if civilization persists, and as Negroes advance, organize and insist. It will disappear more quickly under definite statute law, than it will if left to the inertia of slowly fading custom. [redacted] The Color Line will fade away not only by slow, natural evolution but by determined effort -- the more quickly, as that effort is accelerated, and we work for:

The abolition of "jim-crow" laws of caste like prohibition of intermarriage, segregated travel, etc.

The passage of national and state FEPC laws.

Universal suffrage and doing away with the "rotten borough" system.

The socialisation of wealth by more suitable distribution of the results of labor.

Universal free education of the young, without segregation by religion, race, color or wealth; under the control of the state, with technical and higher learning according to wish and gift; and with systematic adult education.

*Increasing cooperation between white and colored union labor, especially in the South, until complete integration is reached without color or race discrimination.

36-9-102

AFRICA AND WORLD PEACE

by W.E.B. Du Bois

Africa is today the greatest potential threat to Peace; the most certain cause of future wars; and the clearest challenge to civilization. [redacted] Yesterday, Asia held this bad eminence. But Asia revolted; not all Asia; not all Asiatics; but seers, men of courage; the Lord's elect. Nor was the revolt they guided, in essence violence, despite much riot, murder and rapine. The soul of the revolt of Asia was toil, suffering, sacrifice and courage. Its traitors were rich mandarins and jewelled rajahs; sportsmen, playboys and native capitalists.

In Africa today, the lure to war; the temptation to murder and violence is greater than formerly in Asia. Africa has more free, rich land in proportion to population; it has relatively more strong, cheap labor, undisciplined by passive obedience and unrepressed by religious dogma, less chained by hereditary cultural inheritances, and so the more capable of being hammered into a modern industrial proletariat by brute force.

Then too, its potential wealth is fabulous: thick priceless forests and miraculously growing vegetation; inmaluable minerals and unharnessed water power. Africa's gold and diamonds tempt to robbery and greed; luxury, idleness, caste and sex perversion; pretense and glittering show parade over all the white social world of today; Africa's copper, tin, zinc and uranium feed electricity and atom bombs to our factories, armies, navies and airplanes. Foods, fruits and spices cater not only to the hungry but to the lewd and lasy; and in all this lie cargoes for merchants, while [redacted] hindrances to transport are solved by airplanes.

Let Firestone Rubber, Republic Steel and Lever Brothers tell what fabulous profit the white world can reap in black Africa today, if only the white man's grip can be riveted and the Black Man's subservience bought.

The familiar cormorants of world graft, theft and murder are gathering now over Africa: unrepentant Britain with its ancient and blood-smeared jaws; France, who sells to greed the freedom she once at fearful price bought for the world; Italy, who began World Wars to restore an empire once holy but now sunk in poverty and crime; little Belgium following Holland to buy peace, beauty and security by sucking the blood of eleven million black slaves on territory eighty times the size of the homeland and a thousand times as rich. But above all looms the United States of America, who by trade, force, bribery, and investment, owns today the owners of Africa, dominates missions and philanthropy and leads the present effort to re-enslave the Dark Continent.

46-11-102

Against all this; against power and wealth and empire, Black Africa struggles up today; its head "bloody, but unbowed." It depends for guidance on its own intelligentsia; the descendants of Africa strewn over the world. It looks also toward Asia, colored India and China; and the dark islands of the South Seas. Africa looks to Egypt and the Middle East; and last but far from least, to the one world power which has renounced colonialism and color prejudice, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Not that insurgent Africa today can depend on all those to whom it looks. Its own intelligentsia is divided and uncertain in aim. Its members have been educated mostly in the reactionary nations of the world: mainly in England, the United States, and a few in France; [redacted] fewer in the Soviet Union. Nkrumah of the Gold Coast knows something of the Soviet Union and was once jailed as a Communist; but he knows more of British capitalism and as prime minister of the first West African autonomous state faces the temptation of yielding to British investors. Asikiwe, leader of Nigeria, the largest Negro state in the world, now approaching autonomy, also is not unaware of the Soviet Union and socialism; but faces within his own group endless difficulties arising from racial and cultural differences and from poverty, ignorance and disease; his wisdom and finesse will be sorely tried. In old colonies like Gambia and Sierra Leone lie little hope of understanding from colored leaders who are more English in culture than African. But despite all this, British West Africa is unified and driven left by South African intransigence and the determination of Malan to force white supremacy on all blacks. If this attitude continues to be backed by white West Europe and financed by America, black West Africa will inevitably be forced left and into greater sympathy and cooperation with the Communist nations behind the iron curtain and in Asia.

In North Africa, including Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, Libya and Egypt, long subjection to Europe and resident Europeans have so buried native culture and native unity of ideal that a new culture must rise in the midst of a struggle for liberty. But for what, toward what shall this struggle be? And is it orientated toward black Africa, the land of slaves; or toward white Europe, the home of Imperialism? Turning south we face first the vast stretches of French West and Equatorial Africa, where so long integration with France has prevailed in the small territory of Senegal; and elsewhere almost unbridled exploitation of every kind including mercenary soldiery to help subdue Europe, Asia and Africa. The black leaders of Senegal have usually proven more French than the French in exploiting blacks despite a few liberal leaders. On the other hand, in the rest of French Africa there has lately arisen the largest mass movement of Negroes openly and consciously tied to French communism, of any in the continent.

In Egypt and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, a distinct color-line has long been drawn. Although the majority of Egyptians are of Negro descent, a very few of those noticeably negroid arise to place and power. Most of them are poor and ignorant peasants. Yet today, pushing desperately up from below, they are the driving power back of revolutions like that of Naguib; and more particularly in the Sudan, black British-educated civil servants; black members of trade unions;and black tribesmen of the lower Sudan which was ancient Ethiopia and once conquered Egypt, will increasingly play a part in the future of central Africa. Today both Egypt and Britain are bidding for this part of Africa. Anything could happen here, but complete white European control and exploitation is unlikely.

46-11-104

This brings us to modern Ethiopia on the east, and far to the west, ~~Ethiopia~~ Liberia. These we bracket together because they were long the only African black nations recognized as independent. Their future is today uncertain. Liberia has become an American colony, completely dominated by American corporations and the American navy, [redacted] Ethiopia is still independent but subservient to the west; she is accepting, albeit cautiously, European and American investment; has helped a little to murder Koreans and has a medieval system of government. But her emperor is well meaning, promotes education and fights disease. If his younger, educated followers conceive a more liberal economy, a more democratic government and a wider socialism, Ethiopia may emerge from the world of exploiting imperialism into the modern socialist world. There is as yet no sign of this.

The Belgian Congo is trying desperately by enlightened state capitalism, industrial training of natives, total disfranchisement and restricted education, to keep the natives in contented serfdom, protected from revolt by the vested interests of Europe and America. This plan has worked so far, but it has grave dangers for world peace.

In Kenya and soon in Tanganyika, British greed and stubbornness has driven some of the natives into murderous revolt and turned the small black leadership into irreconcilable hate. Open native rebellion would spread rapidly if arms and ammunition were available. Suppose West Africa or North Africa should furnish them, and Europe and America start to aid repression there? Here a new world war might bring in both Asia and the Soviet Union. With fatuous stubbornness, Britain, is allowing a new dominion where a few hundred thousand whites will rule 25 million Negroes in the Rhodesias and Nyassaland; is thus taking from South African blacks all hope of help in her direction for defense against Malan; the United States is furnishing Malan all the capital he needs for enslaving blacks. If this eventually does not end in war, human nature has altered entirely. Add to this Portugese Africa, owned by Britain but led by mulattoes and ready to turn anywither that advantage beckons, but with no love for the British or the Americans.

What will black America do? Nothing. In the past they furnished a few immigrants with strong leadership. Today the so-called America-Liberians are of almost wholly native blood. The only thing the American Negroes have given Africa in this generation is the Pan-African movement, exhibited in the various African national congresses which have arisen in almost every black colony.

The British West Indians send educated men to the civil service of Britain and Belgium in Africa. Their new federation will replace white exploitation by colored; but it will not attack exploitation itself, save in the trade union movement which may move left.

This then, is Africa today. This is its threat to Peace, its call to War, its challenge to civilization.

40-11-106

THE STALIN PEACE PRIZES

The International Stalin Prizes for Strengthening Peace were instituted At the celebration of Joseph Stalin's 70th birthday December 21, 1949.

The text of the decree of the Supreme Soviet [redacted] said:

"International Stalin Prizes for the Strengthening of Peace among the nations are hereby instituted." The Prizes are awarded to citizens of any country of the world, irrespective of their political, religious or race distinctions, for outstanding services in the struggle against the warmongers and for the strengthening of peace."

"Persons awarded an International Stalin Prize shall receive:

(a) A diploma of the Laureate of the International Stalin Prize;
(b) A gold medal bearing the image of Stalin;
(c) A money prize of 100,000 rubles. This will

" a number ranging from five to ten by a special [redacted] from among representatives of the democratic forces of various countries of the world shall be chosen to name annually 5 to 10 prizes.

"The award is to be made each year on the birthday of Joseph Vissarionovich Stalin - December 21, beginning in 1950."

It was announced at the time that the awards would be paid in the currency of the country where the recipients lives. The cash value of the prize in American money, according to the official rate of the ruble at the time of the decree, was $20,000 -- according to present official rate it is now $25,000.

The committee of awards was as follows:

Chairman of the Committee: Dmitri Skobeltsyn, Professor of Moscow State University, Member of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR;
Vice-Chairmen of the Committee: Kuo Mo-jo, Professor, Chairman of the All-China Association of Workers in Literature and the Arts (China),
Louis Aragon, author (France)
Members of the Committee: Martin Anderson Nexo (Denmark); John D. Bernal (Great Britain
Jan Dembrowski (Poland)
Bernhard Kellerman (GermanY)
Concetto Marchesi (Italy)
Pablo Neruda (Chile)
Mikhail Sadoveanu (Rumania)
Alexander Fadeyev, General Secretary, Union of Soviet Writers; Ilya Ehrenburg, Soviet [redacted] writer

32-12-35

The Awards for 1950 were as follows:

1. Frederic Joliot-Curie, Professor of the College de France, Member of the French Academy of Sciences
2. Soong Ching-Ling (Mme. Sun Yat-sen,) President of the Chinese People's Relief Administration
3. Dr. Hewlett Johnson, Dean of Canterbury (Britain)
4. Eugenie Cotton, Honorary Director of [illegible] (Higher Normal School) in Sevres, (France)
5. Arthur Moulton, former Protestant Bishop (United States)
6. Pak Den Ai, President of the Democratic Women's Union of Korea.
7. Heriberto Jara, ex-Minister (Mexico)

~~The decision on the awards was signed by all the members of the Committee.~~

Presentations of the prizes to the above were all made in Moscow ~~during 1951~~ except in the case of Bishop Moulton, who refused to accept the prize.

The prizes for 1951 were:

1. Kuo Mo-jo, President of the Chinese Academy of Sciences
2. Pietro Nenni, Member of Parliament (Italy)
3. Ikuo Oyama, ~~Professor,~~ Member of Parliament (Japan)
4. Monica Felton, ~~public figure~~ (Great Britain) Social Worker
5. Anna Seghers, writer (Germany)
6. Jorge Amado, writer (Brazil)

The prizes for 1952 were:

1. Yves Farge, of France, who led French National Peace Council since its inception. ~~(subsequently tragically killed in an automobile accident while in the USSR to receive the prize.)~~
2. ~~Dr. Saifuddin Kitchlew of India, Chairman of the All-India Peace Council, Member of the Indian National Congress Party, veteran of the Indian people's national liberation movement and one of its leaders.~~
2. Dr. Saifuddin Kitchlew of India, Chairman of the All-India Peace Council,
3. Elisa Branco, prominent member of the Brazilian Women's Federation. ~~Miss Branco was persecuted for her work in behalf of peace.~~ An Elisa Branco prize, awarded to active peace fighters, has been instituted in Brazil.
4. Paul Robeson, the celebrated American singer, ~~and public figure, member of the World Peace Council and dauntless fighter against racism and reaction.~~
5. Johannes Becher, leading German poet and public figure. ~~Johannes Becher is a militant fighter for the peaceful unification of Germany and the democratic development of the German nation in friendship and cooperation with all other peoples.~~

VITO MARCANTONIO, 1902-1954

We have lost a friend. In this nation and in our age few men counted so many human beings as friends as Vito Marcantonio. This was not because he was acquainted with many persons or knew their names. It went far deeper than that. This was a man who knew your hurts and your sorrows and suffered them with you; who said, "Don't worry." Said it and then went out and worked tirelessly night and day so that in truth you would have no need to worry. And did this not for pay but for joy of doing and belief in himself and in you.

He was thus a politician in the finest sense of that mutilated word. A man who knew men; knew them by the thousands and then guided them to what he thought was the high and decent end of living. In a day when as never before since the administration of James Buchanan, the capital of this nation has from top to bottom lacked both brains and courage and has blundered and continued to blunder in a cruelly suffering world, Marcantonio for sixteen years served in Congress as the best parliamentarian, one of the clearest thinkers and the most courageous voter in either House. High on his epitaph will ever stand his lone vote against the crime of our entering the war in Korea. For this service he was removed from Congress by use of one of the dirtiest political tricks of this state and this era.

This gave him no pause. Unhorsed but never afraid he carried on his crusade, commiserating a misled people:

> Not that they starve, but starve so dreamlessly,
> Not that they sow, but that they seldom reap,
> Not that they serve, but have no gods to serve,
> Not that they die, but that they die like sheep.

In this day of shameful hesitation Marcantonio took a firm stand when most men dared not whisper. He was not a Capitalist, he was not a Communist, but he maintained that Americans had a right to believe whatever seems right to them. That this was the meaning of American freedom; that for this freedom European civilisation had fought a thousand years. That belief in Communism was no more a crime than belief in Catholicism; in neither may a man be punished for his belief. That no man should be punished for his faith but only for his acts; and that the punishment of men not for what they do but for what they think is an attack upon the fundamental rights of American citizens.

45-9-83

Marcantonio stood beside the civilised nations of the world today; with Britain, France, Holland, Belgium, Scandinavia, Italy, Indonesia and India in declaring that the Soviet Union and Chinese People's Republic have a right to live and work under any government they choose and that the United States had no right to force the people of the world to think as this nation thinks. Not by might nor by power but by the spirit of Peace and Freedom will Right and Justice prevail in this world. We have a right, we have a duty to show the world the excellence of our institutions and the way to conquer Poverty, Ignorance and Disease among the majority of mankind; but to try this by persistent lying and suppressing the truth, to attempt it not by Reason but by atom bombs, is the method which could have hanged George Washington and did crucify Jesus Christ.

It was here that Marcantonio took his stand and refused to be a red-baiter or a warmonger. He believed in Socialism as exemplified by the New Deal. His wide and personal knowledge of men — of their desires and needs and disappointments, gave him knowledge far above that of lesser men. He believed in social control of the predatory wealth which rides rough-shod over the poor. Indeed, before this era of national cowardice there were not many men of brains, education and courage in this land or in the world who did not believe (in Socialism) with him. They differed as to how Socialism was to be achieved, but of its ultimate triumph they were certain. Many did not and some do not accept the path of Communism to Socialism, but they respect its great aims and admire its tremendous progress.

This was long the guiding thought of the civilised world (before the 1st World War) and the declaration of many of its greatest men. It is a triumph of real Americanism that leadership in this direction came continually not from professional Americans, but from those oft regarded as outsiders: from those of Italian and Jewish descent; from Negroes and Irish, from Slavs and Scandinavians. America was not built solely or even in greater part on British aristocracy but more often from "lesser breeds without the law" who took the words of dreamers and theorists and tried to make freedom and democracy work in this great new experiment of the West.

The striking characteristic of Marcantonio was his patriotism for this America to which his fathers came as poor immigrants. He believed in America when America no longer believed in itself. He talked America, defended America and suffered for America. He was a great American. But he was also a great man and this nation could offer him nothing that ever could make him forget his essential manhood.

What is true of immigrant Italy is also true of Africa in America, which for the last century has defended Democracy in the United States as no other portion of the nation has done. It has been Ireland which more than England has defended freedom of religious faith in the nation. It has been the Jews whose defense of faith has been joined to the right and necessity of popular education, and given this nation faith in trained minds. From what we so often call "foreign" sources, and from groups which today we persecute and despise has come the major part of native American civilisation, and this Marcantonio proved in his life and work.

We who in this dark day feel deserted and alone; who have lost the friend who so long and so nobly led us, can in this time of grief cry with Anderson's slave:

> But lift me, and hold me free, O piercing clarion
> Clamor of challenge from the abyss that lies
> About us and beyond, unknown. Brine cold,
> Stinging and pure, cleanse my dim mind of clinging > Webs of doubt, lend me a breath from the gulfs
> To fan these ash-filmed embers. Out of the drift > of forces incommunicable and wild
> That besiege our lives, blow through these inert cells
> New courage from the outer rim of stars.

We plead for men able and willing to stand alone against the great wrong majority. They are seldom found, for the price set on their heads is high; the crowding rush to the current bandwagon is always well-nigh overwhelming. Think of America today. What do we really want? What is the end of our lives? Wealth! We want to be rich! Independently rich, above all taxes and duties! (Honestly, if may be; but rich!) With such ideals dinned into our ears, poured on our youth and spread through our literature and drama, what leadership can we expect, what ideals can we continue to hold high? What is poetry and song and picture? What are emotion, happiness and pain? What is Truth?

This is the fact, and then uplift comes: a Vito Marcantonio. He comes out of the depths of our city, where opportunity is least and inspiration low, where crime flourishes, where slums predominate and policemen with club and gun are sent to reform and uplift mankind. From such surroundings comes a Marcantonio, and for this we sing and sound the loud ti brol. For so long as such miracles occur no great cause can be lost.

We will therefore remember this is no time for tears. Not once but a thousand times in this world-old struggle for the triumph of Right has the battle been lost and the leader fallen. But again and ever again staggering to their feet, men have lifted hands on high to cry:

Bravely drain, then fling away
Break the cup of sorrow!
Courage! He who lost the day
May have won the morrow.

45-9-87

Article in THE NATIONAL GUARDIAN WEEKLY. Mailed Nov. 15, 1948. 17 Murray St., NYC

1st article

AFRICA TODAY

W. E. B. Du Bois

One great by-product of the last war is the growing importance of Africa, the second greatest land area of the earth, with 150,000,000 people and limitless natural resources. Asia is disappearing as a colonial area; Britain has lost India; France cannot hold Indo-China; Holland is losing Indonesia; and China is beating Chiang Kai-shek, puppet of the West, to his knees. In the Near East, Arabs and Islam spell a sharp curb to European overlordship. If Western imperialism is to survive it must center in Africa.

An English daily said recently, "There are few people who realize the urgent importance of Pan-African development." Ernest Bevin, reviewing foreign affairs before the House of Commons last January, commented, "I believe now the time is ripe for a consolidation of Western Europe, and this consolidation must be supported. And that involves the closest collaboration between the Commonwealth and the overseas territory of the French, Dutch, Belgians, and Portuguese. Their raw materials, food and other resources could be of mutual advantage to these territories and to the world." Anglo-French consultations have been under way for creation of an economic grouping by which Western Europe would be linked with the African continent.

Out of this agitation have come three significant developments: British migration to Africa; the new fortification of East Africa; and gigantic schemes of exploitation in Africa. In January of this year, 95,000 British subjects were registered for passage to Africa. This year a huge military stores depot has been built in Kenya, East Africa. Thousands of white troops and thousands of black laborers worked on it, and 2,000 Italian artisans were imported to help. Hundreds of tons of war material were transferred from North Africa and the Middle East.

The peanut plan, part of a general scheme to develop Africa as a British food estate, calls for clearing, planting, and cultivating by mechanized methods in East Africa more than 3,000,000 acres of land in units of 30,000 acres each. It has been described as the "most important action of government in the history of British tropical Africa."

35-2-374

Other plans call for the expansion of the palm oil industry of Nigeria, improvement of the cocoa crop in West Africa, increased production of cotton, rubber and hardwoods, intensification of mining, and the creation of hydro-electric power. One project for the Uganda is called "breathtaking" -- it would raise the level of Lake Victoria by three feet and revolutionize the Valley of the Nile. Another project for Southern Rhodesia calls for a dam four times the size of Boulder Dam to make this region one of the world's four chief sources of high grade steel.

What does Africa say to this? There is no one unit which we can call "Africa." We may distinguish six Africas today. The western bulge of the continent above the Gulf of Guinea. The hot, low coastal belt, lush with vegetation, rises toward the central plateau. Here, once the American slave trade centered; here is Liberia, the attempt of American Negroes to find freedom through repatriation. And here is British West Africa, where Negroes today are in most active revolt against colonialism. A dozen paramount chiefs and kings of West African tribes have just been entertained in England and received by King George to allay this agitation.

Next, there is the inland plateau of Central Africa which dips to the Congo valley and rises to the great bastion of the Cape of Good Hope. Here, in the Union of South Africa and the Rhodesias, is the worst center of race hate in the world. Here three and a third million whites have absolute political and economic mastery of 9,000,000 blacks, mulattoes, and Asiatics. They have seized 88 per cent of the land, and enforced a paralyzing caste legislation. Their territories furnish the world with gold, diamonds, and copper.

Up the East Coast, past the Great Rift and the Mountain of the Moon, the effort of South Africa to keep the control of black labor and land in the hands of a few whites, continues in Nyassaland, the Rhodesias, Tanganyika, and in Kenya. In Kenya, 25,000 whites with 80 per cent of the best land have long been trying to enslave the labor of 3,500,000 Negroes. But Kenya lies next to a black Africa which has never been subdued. There is Uganda, with 4,000,000 blacks, who still retain local rule. And particularly, there on the frowning peaks rising on the Horn of East Africa, perches Ethiopia, which maintained its freedom from Alexander the Great to Mussolini, and regained it after World War II. Down the Nile Valley from Ethiopia lies the Sudan, cradle of Egyptian civilization. It drove out both Egypt and England in the nineteenth century, and then was conquered by Kitchener. Now its 7,000,000 blacks are being wooed by both Egypt and Britain.

In Arabian North Africa, with its Negroid elements, France is trying to incorporate Algiers, Morocco, and Tunis into metropolitan France, with political and industrial power centered in the hands of resident French citizens. Extending this idea further, there is what we may call Latin Africa -- the vast French African empire from the Sahara to the Gulf of Guinea, with the Portuguese possessions in the south. Here the effort is made to exploit black land and labor by taking a small black and mulatto elite into partnership; so that a few natives become rich and educated Frenchmen and Portuguese, but leave the masses to almost unchecked robbery and exploitation.

We have left the "Heart of Africa," the great valley of the Congo, which Leopold of Belgium stole from an international organization to "Christianize" Africa, turned into a brothel of theft and finally surrendered to Belgium. It is now a center of the most scientific exploitation of human labor in the world. The political and economic rights of the blacks are subordinated to the long term profit of Belgium with a minimum of education and no promise of self-rule or of modern living standards. All is quiet in the Congo, whence the United States gets copper for electric expansion, and uranium for atomic bombs.

This is Africa today. What is its answer to the new postwar exploitation?

35-2-375

2nd article
Nat'l Guardian Wkly
NYC
Mailed: 11-29-48

35-2-369

NEW IMPERIALISM IN AFRICA

By

W. E. B. Du Bois

In England today, Africa is news. "There are [redacted] people, however, who realise the urgent importance of Pan-African development; in particular, the cooperation of Great Britain with Brance, Belgium and Portugal. The fact is that Africa is the hinter land of Europe, both commerially and strategically, and in fulfilling our moral obligations to the native peoples it is essential to create a real defensive bastion against the Communist Eastern bloc."

Sir Oswald Moseley, the anti-Semite is outspoken; he advocates a union of European people. He sees Europe as the leader, aiming to develop Africa as the state of the Europeansto solve the economic probelm by direct state action.

"There are immense possibilities of development in the great continent of Africa," said Lord Addison, during the debate on Commonwe lth and Empire migration in the House of Lords. "We must realize a great many of these possibilities, or we shall be in even more distressing curcumstances than we are now."

The Earl of Portsmouth said: "Our tropical Colonies demand a far greater administrative technical population than they have had up to date---namely farmers, civil servants, engineers, business men and so forth.

"...England...strugglingto keep its head above water, can give neither hope nor a lead to the nations of Western Europe. With Britain and those nations working to a common purpose, with everything going well, all their industrial resources will be needed. But Europe's Colonial Empire--and the Colonial Empires of the French, the Belgians, the Dutch and Portuguese will equally be joining in such a scheme as this. Half the nations of the world can work to save themselves from immediate disaster and ultimate starvation."

The great scheme to develop Africa as a British food estate has been started. Britain's "Overseas Resources Act provides for two public corporations: the £ 100,000,000 "Colonial Development Corporation," under the Secretary of State for Colonies; and the £ 50,000,000 "Overseas Food Corporation", under the Minister of Food.

35-2-370

The plan was conceived by the United Africa Company, a branch of the huge Lever Brothers organization, which is already the largest organization engaged in exploiting Africa.

Sir Arthus Salter points out that America must encourage productive foreign investments on a large scale; that countries like China, India, and Russia cannot be good fields for investment because there is not assurance against confiscation. But the colonial empires of Great Britain, France, and Holland offer the best market for sale of capital equipment.

This is but a partial picture of the growing concentration of world capital investment in Africa, attracted by cheap labor and by government conditions which will encourage access to material with low taxation and with every advantage for exploitation.

Naturally, this condition brings up many questions. First, what is going to be the object and end of this concentration of capital in Africa?

Mr. Rankin, a member of Parliament from Glasgow, said on January 20, 1948, that the government ought to be reminded "that for every £12 of wealth created in Africa in the past, we took out £11 and left £1. And England cannot forget what Lord Palmerston said to his Tiverton constituents just one hundred years ago: "The crimes committed in regard to African slavery and the African slave trade, if they could be put together, are, I am sure, greater in amount than all of the crimes that ever were committed by the human race from the beginning of the world to the present time."

35-4-371

Many difficulties are being pointed out. For instance, in 1946, the total revenue of British African colonies averaged $4 a head. The figure for the United Kingdom the same year showed an average of nearly $300 a head. This illustrates the problem of poverty in Africa. The introduction of any substantial amount of mechanization or large scale production in African colonies would necessarily involve something like a social revolution. Suppose that a great saving of labor, up to 93% as has been mentioned in the case of extracting oil from the palm, to whom would this saving go? To the investor, the white manager, the white technical skilled worker, or to native labor?

When it comes to the matter of migration of white people to Africa for technical knowledge and direction of the new development, the schemes run into difficulties and prejudices. Lord Tweedsmuir said in the House of Lords, "Upon the successful redistribution of the British race depends the whole future of the British Commonwealth." But what is to be the relation of these white Britishers to the dark people of Africa? We know the attitude of white Englishment in the Union of South Africa, in Kenya and even in West Africa toward the natives.

Another difficulty has been pointed out. As one writer says, "We are trying to make our people believe that there are vast resources of food to come out of Africa to help this country, but if the natives of Africa are fed properly there will be no surplus to come out of Africa, and the sooner the Government lets the people of this country know the facts the better.

A member of parliament speaking in Amsterdam recently declared, "Those of us who have any experience in the administration of oversea territories must make it clearto our colleagues at home that any discussion of the place of the oversea territories in a Western Union must keep in the forefront the interests of the oversea peoples. If the idea is inadvertantly spread that the decisions of the peoples for whom we are responsible in Africa and Asia can be settled in London or Paris or Brussels or The Hague without consulting them, we shall get into trouble, and we shall deserve it."

35-2-372

2nd article

article in Chicago Guardian Weekly, Dated Nov 23, 1948

REVOLT IN AFRICA

By

W. E. B. DuBois

What is the reaction of Black Africa to all this? Are the natives simply stolid and dumb, submitting without protest or comprehension of their plight? That is the complacent belief of most of the white world. Yet the facts belie this, only the facts either are not cabled or if wired, not printed.

35-2-378

The situation is clear: in South and East Africa, the land has been taken from the natives and then they are taxed to compel them to work on the plantations or in the mines. In West Africa, the native has his land, but is ruled by a white governor; "indirect rule" leaves local government in the hands of the chiefs, but the governor can remove these chiefs and pays their salaries. Thus his commissioners rule the rulers. White settlers all over Africa are working for white supremacy in industry and government; Big Business is striving for monopoly of natural resources and control of labor; alien racial groups are demanding the privileges of whites; a native intelligentsia is demanding Africa for the Africans.

What now is the rank and file of the workers thinking and doing? In South Africa have occurred at least twenty riots and disturbances varying from the student strike at Lovedale to the burning of their passes by 7000 natives at Capetown, and culminating in the strike of 50,000,000 Negro miners in August, 1946, to obtain a wage of $2 a day, instead of the 45 cents they are receiving. Five strikers were killed by the police 62 arrested for breach of contract and conspiracy, 46 of whom were heavily fined or jailed. Raids and arrests continued for a month, including arrests of some liberal whites. "Communism" was blamed for the outbreak.

In Kenya, in January 1947, seven thousand natives struck, affecting eleven business concerns. After failure to satisfy the strikers, the strike spread to Uganda with disturbances at four centers. It was finally settled by a raise in wage of more than twenty five per cent.

In West Africa, there were serious disturbances in Nigeria and on the Gold Coast. In Nigeria, in 1944, increased government allowances were granted white civil servants but not allowed for Negroes. Consequentially, in 1945, a general strike of 150,000 non-clerical workers was declared and this eventually brought a fifty per cent increase in wages. Later there were further strikes of electrical workers, metal workers, and employees of the United African Company. Miners struck in the Ashanti gold mines and secured increased wages.

35.2-379

On the Gold Coast, strikes finally assumed the aspect of civil war. In 1946 a commission found that the cost of living had gone up two hundred per cent and recommended increased wages to government employees. Teachers then complained, and a third commission gave them increases. Railway workers and miners then asked for raises, struck when they were refused, and gained their demands after several weeks.

Then came a colony-wide boycott against high prices charged by importing concerns, led by a progressive chief. A price control commission was set up to curb prices and ordered them reduced by thirty-three and one third per cent. The demobilized soldiers thereupon started a march to the Governor to present a petition. There ensued a skirmish with the police, rioting and looting in which 26 Africans were killed and 277 wounded including 15 whites. Many prominent black leaders were arrested and kept in jail. The black soldiers of the Gold Coast, Sierre Leone and Nigeria refused to bear arms against their fellow-soldiers, and white units in Gibraltar were alerted. Two battleships were ordered from South Africa. Finally the Governor appealed to the chiefs and to London. A London commission of inquiry was sent out and has reported laying much blame on the colonial government. In 1947, a railway strike of 12,000 workers crippled the whole transport system of French West Africa. The strikers demanded "equal pay for equal work."

Northeast Africa has had strikes. In March, 1947, five hundred dock workers struck at Port Sudan, in the Egyptian Sudan; in July, 19 thousand railway workers at Atbara walked off the job; in Ethiopia, 5,000 railway employees refused to work until the Emperor obtained a twenty-five per-cent increase in wages for them.

These strikes and many others that havettaken place all over the continent of Africa show that there is an increase in the actifity of trade unions and union organization in Africa. In most of the territories there is legislation to permit trade unions, but some of it is antiquated and in many cases as in East Africa it is on paper rather than actually in force. No African in Norghern Nigeria, for instance is a member of a trade union; and although in the Union of South Africa there are one hundred and twenty native trade unions claiming one hundred and sixty thousand members, these unions are not officially recognized; however some effort was being made to that end before the last election.

The West African Labor Movement, on the other hand is growing in stature and power. In French West Africa the movement also has taken on strength and force; and there was a federation of trade unions which met in Dakar, French West Africa, in April 1947. Eighteen delegations of Negro trade unions attended and recommendations were made to be considered at the world labor meeting at Prague in June.

The most significant occurance in the African labor world was the representative character of the Africans at the World Trade Union Conference in February 1945. Colonial delegates came from Nigeria, The Gold Coast, Sierre Leone and Gambia in West Africa besides from many Negro communities in America.

Wallace Johnson of West Africa, who but a few weeks before his arrival had been released by the British Government after five and a half years imprisonment in exile, for trade union activity, presented a "charter of labor" for the colonies, demanding: the abilition of racial discrimination in public and private employment, forced labor and child labor, flogging and punishment for breach of labor contract, and caste law legislation; the right of free assembly, free speech, free press and free movement; and "equal pay for equal work irrespective of race, color, creed or sex."

35-2-381

In a telegram to the Big Three concerning the Atlantic Charter, colored delegates insisted that it be made clear that they supported the demand of the colonial people for the right to choose the form of government under which they would live. They asked that special note should be taken of conditions in colonies and dependencies so that appropriate measures to secure for these people of Asia and Africa the elementary rights to civilized, democratic processes.

They put into the final resolutions a paragraph asking for the end of colonies and dependencies, and they tried to get the conference to put a time limit to the freeing of colonies, but this attempt failed.

The black African worker is raising his head. He will bear watching and heeding.

3rd article.

Mailed to Mr. Belfrage
of The Guardian
Dec. 20, 1948

LIGHT ON AFRICA

By

W. E. B. Du Bois

In 1949, this is the watchword for thinking people of America: Watch Africa; tear down the curtain of silence and deliberate suppression of facts. Remember that today there are signs of international conspiracy to make the countries of Africa the slums of the world; to enslave the labor of their people, steal their land and materials. A few ruthless rulers are striving to get the power of life and death over millions of blacks. Poverty and disease already prevail; and there are deliberate plans to keep the Africans in ignorance. There is no doubt about all this; but we need details and facts to let in the light, let the people of the United States and of the world know the truth.

It will be difficult to do this. I have repeatedly appealed to magazines to publish facts about Africa. I have asked newspapers to carry news and in nearly all cases my plea has been turned down. No one country is guilty in this new attack on Africa. We are all guilty! Great Britain is going to make Africa her source of cheap food. France is going to use Africans to fight against her own workers and help retain her hold on Asia. Belgium is rushing to increase the profit that she made during the war. Portugal is going to continue to play stooge to British capital. Italy is seeking to overcome the poverty of her masses by inflicting greater poverty upon Africans. Germany is going to eventually push her ~~chief~~ manufactures into Africa in return for materials.

In Africa itself, the world is trying to keep Ethiopia choked in her mountains away from commerce on the high seas. Egypt and Great Britain are rivals in trying to control the black labor of the Sudan. The United States is bribing Liberia and strengthening her grip by army, navy and investment. The awakening peoples of West Africa are being cajoled, called "Communists" and given half-loaves of "Self-Rule." White minorities are ruling ruthlessly in East Africa, South Africa, Rhodesia and Southwest Africa.

35-2-377

We are not content with the Rape of Africa in the slave trade of the 18th century, today we are trying to repeat in Africa all the wretched mistakes in industry, cheap labor and the sale of political power which once prevailed in Europe, and which still prevail in South America; and instead of civilized people being willing to let ~~it~~ labor exploitation disappear from the world they are willing to concentrate on the degradation of black folk; forgetting where the sympathies of the majority of mankind including hundreds of millions of colored Asiatics is tending in the coming struggle of world races. What we need now for salvation is light, more light on Africa.

Mailed to the Guardian--January 21, 1949

35-3-238

There is in Washington a large brown man with crisp hair, whom few people know, but who has made the United States of America at least once annually notice and say something about the history of the Negro race in this country. This miracle has been accomplished by Carter G. Woodson. He edits and publishes, and has published for two decades "The Journal of Negro History." He has done this almost single-handed, because no respectable foundation, no matter how many millions it has, is going to entrust a Negro with funds, unless they are sure that he is going to do exactly what they would like to have done. This assurance, Carter Woodson has always refused to give and therefore, while now and then a foundation has given him a driplet of aid, this has soon been withdrawn on the pretext that Woodson is a person with whom you cannot get on.

Nevertheless, his idea of celebrating Negro History Week during the week which comprises the birthdays of Lincoln and Frederick Douglas, and by assumption that of Booker T. Washington, has become a national habit. Indeed it is a little difficult to escape it; even a Southern Bourbon superintendent of education in Mississippe, cannot exactly forbid the Negro schools from recalling Negro History. He may see to it that they get no books for the purpose which are "subversive," and that no radical in invited to talk to them; but nevertheless the celebration goes on. Then too, such a celebration as this, can form a present means of escape among Northern white people who do not want to take too obvious a stand on the Negro problem. Instead therefore, of saying anything about lynching, or the poll tax, or the FEPC, they can simply "celebrate Negro History Week, and the form of the celebration and its content can be pretty carefully controlled. On the other hand, this control has not really worked very effectively and the celebration of this day for the last 20 years or more, has made millions of people familiar with a history that they would prefer to forget.

35-3-239

White folk are ashamed of the history of the Negro in America and have a right to be ashamed. They do not like to remember that the Declaration of Independence was an open and clear lie, when it was made, because there were 700,000 Negro slaves in the United States at the time. We would prefer to tell our children that the Civil War was fought to abolish slavery, when as a matter of fact, even Abraham Lincoln would have been willing to compromise on any terms, including the perpetuation of slavery if he could have kept the nation in one union.

After the Civil War, we like to say that we tried to give the Negro the vote but he was too ignorant to use it. Celebration of Negro History Week is apt to show that this is a curious exaggeration if not again a flat lie, that Reconstruction gave the South public schools and a new social legislature. And then in all the long struggle to rationalize the color-caste system in the United States, we would like to point to progress, when as a matter of fact we have to admit continuous failure.

But here is a case where truth bids fair to make us free; where despite the machinations of the Devil and his angels, we are beginning to know the truth about the American Negro, to get acquainted with the books that have been written expounding that truth, and to have brought back to our consciousness and hammered into our intelligence the fact that the greatest failure of America has been to reward the laboring class, which made this country worth building, by making it the foot-stool of its greed and oppression; and that indeed it is only very recently that any man dared stand up and emphasize this fact. We must recognize the fact that Carter Woodson above all Americans, is one who fastened the attention of America upon

35-3-240

Negro history. And there could be not greater celebration of his work than to have one of our rich and aimless foundations give him enough funds to pursue his career, without poverty and pain.

Mailed to Mr. Belfrage
of the Guardian
May 9, 1949

35-3-234

THE WORLD PEACE CONGRESS AND COLORED PEOPLES

BY

W. E. B. Du Bois

I have attended the greatest meeting of men ever assembled in modern time to advance the progress of all men. The Races Congress of 1911 in London, was comparable, but was quickly forgotten in the onset of the First World War. The first meeting of the Assembly of the League of Nations in that little Geneva church, raised hopes of universal significance, despite the fatal absence of the United States. The UNO at San Francisco, after a Second World War, lifted the hearts of men, until the long drawn-out horse-trading on trusteeships, revealed the determination to hold in serfdom the majority of men.

The Paris ourpouring for Peace was extraordinary; not simply because after the heartbreaking preliminary preparation over months, which brought together 2000 delegates from 60 lands, with 213 delegates from 13 other lands, meeting in Prague; but because of the single-hearted earnestness, the deep determination, the unflagging interest which kept 2500 persons fastened to their seats for eleven sessions covering five full days and a sixth day devoted to the most impressive mass demonstration I ever dreamed of.

Add to this the patent fact that the Colored World was present; not simply on sufferance; not with the palling Anglo-Saxon condesention; but as members of a world movement in full right and with full participation. I sat on the Presidential Tribune, representing the United States (absit omen!) two days until John Rogge came on the third day. I looked out across the sea of faces hour after hour and saw 7 Haitians; 27 from India; 2 from Indonesia; 12 from Madagascar; 4 from Morocco; 3 from Mongolia; 5 from Porto Rico; 18 from Tunis; 60 from Viet-Nam and 18 from French Black Africa. There were other colored folk from France itself, from Cuba, Central and South America and two from the United States.

35-3-235

And these colored folk took part: at two sessions black men presided; one of the best speeches was delivered on Thursday by Gabriel d'Arbousier Vice-President of the African Democratic Rally, for whom the audience rose to applaud; Paul Robeson appeared unannounced on Wednesday and was given a tumultous ovation; Madame Thai Thi Lien spoke for Viet-Nam with long applause. On the World Committee elected by the Congress was a black African vice-chairman and among the 140 members, 13 were colored.

To all this should be added the colored contingent of the Prague Congress, those delegates refused visas to enter France. Foremost of course among these were the 40 delegates from China and 8 from Korea.

The Manifesto of the World Congress faced definitely the colonial and color questions: "We are against Colonialism, which continually breeds armed conflicts and threatens to play a decisive part in unleashing a new World War."

"We condemn ... the fostering of race hatred and enmity among peoples". But it was no mere matter of race and color. It was the suffering of a crucified world made visible. I saw that tall white-haired Russian woman, with a face like the mother of Jesus, stand and tell how her 18 year old daughter went to war to defend American "democracy"; how she was stripped by the Nazis and driven naked into the winter, beaten with straps and hanged, yet never betrayed her comrades. Madame Kosmodemianskaia did not sob. She paused and swallowed as she went on to tell of her 16 year old son who followed his sister to death. A few nights later in the home of a woman deputy of the French Parliament I sat beside a beautiful young woman almost youthful, save for tired lines that dimly crossed her face. I looked down and on her wrist saw the concentration camp numbers burned into her flesh. She said simply: "I lost my mother and father; my brother and--my husband." In the Congress and out, I saw the crippled and maimed--one soldier with no legs talked to us. I visioned the poverty, the hurt, the misery of a world, crying for God's sake let us at least have Peace, to heal our wounds. I sensed the bitter hatred toward an America determined to make money out of the world's misery. Tractors of French make wheeled before us May day, labelled: "we cannot make these; we must buy them of America." I saw the leather-workers unemployed because their leather was sent to Germany.

35-3-236

Above all this looms in my memory, that spectacle of Sunday, April '34, when from all France and half the world, a hundred thousand persons crowded and filed into the Buffalo stadium; filed out to let another hundred thousand in. I never before saw a hundred thousand human beings. And they were not strutting and showing off as Americans do on Fifth Avenue. They were walking and hobbling and falling in faintness and crying Peace! Peace! It was unforgettable. No lying, distortion and twisting of our prostituted press can conceal or erase the heartbreaking significance of this spectacle. None who saw it will ever forget.

On the tribune sat Joliet-Curie, Aragon, Picasso; Nickolas Metropolitan of the Russian Church; the fearless Jesuit Abbe Boulier, whose desperate desire to come to America and tell us that all Catholics were not reactionary, was vetoed by Cardinal Spelman; the Bishop of the Calvinist Church of Hungary; the Red Dean of Canterbury. Zilliacus of England, Howard Fast of America, Fadeev of Russia and Hamzah of Indonesia spoke. Children sang, men and women shouted and wept, and the Marseillaise roared. In contrast to this the "Counter-demonstration" of Hook and Compton, deserved no mention, and got little in France. Not a single prominent Frenchman took part.

35-3-48

THE PEACE CONGRESS AT MOSCOW

BY

W. E. B. Du Bois

In 1949, I have attended three Peace Congresses and strongly desired to attend the fourth in Mexico. The Congress in New York was large and influential and notable for the studied misrepresentation of its work aims by the press. It tried to arouse America against war. The Paris World Congress was the greatest peace rally of modern times and aroused ~~rallied~~ the world for a peace offensive. The Moscow Congress was different; not so large as the others and more national than international, it was designed to center ~~bring~~ the attention of the Soviet Union and its allies, on ~~to~~ the fact that it is not enough not to want war; it must be clear to all that the threat of war must be actively opposed by the Soviets

For this purpose all Russia sent 1000 delegates to Moscow, August 25 to 27, 1949, and they were joined by delegations from some 14 foreign lands. Most of these were friendly neighbors, like Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Bulgaria, Albania; from the borderland, ~~from~~ Austria and East and West Germany; but none from Yugoslavia. From the Western lands, came 8 from Britain including the Dean of Canterbury and Professor Bernal; from France came 4 with La Fitte the Secretary of the World Peace Congress and D'Arbussier the African; from Italy came Nenni and seven others; from the United States, only myself, although several others had been especially invited.

The first session of the All Union Conference of the Partisans of Peace ~~Ca~~ took place Thursday, Auguust 25, at 5 p.m. in the Hall of Columns of The Trade Union Headquarters. It had a beautiful setting: a lofty white hall, flanked by 28 white corinthian columns ~~of marble~~, with ~~crimson curtains and~~ red Crimson upholstery 54 brilliant chandeliers, a huge bank of flowers on the rostrum under pictures of Lenin and Stalin. On the presidium were Fadaev, Shostakovich, the Dean of Canterbury, Arenburg and a host of Soviet officials like the heads of the Trade Unions, the heads of the International Woman's Organization, the head of the collective farms of the Ukraine, and a high official from Rumania.

35-3-47

3

The audience had representatives from every province of Russia and all classes from miners and peasants to professors and professional men It was no gathering of ragtag, but of intelligent, well-dressed men and women. After preliminaries of electing committees, etc., the speaking began. There were seven speakers, that day lasting until 10:30. All the speakers were Russian save two, a Rumanian and a Britisher. Most of the speakers were hortatory lauding the Soviets, scorning capitalism and blaming Britain and America for warmongering. They spared no accusations nor epithets.

The center of the theme was Russia and before us the Soviet Republics were ranged in microcosm; every corner was represented from White Russia to the Ukraine, the far-off Usbeks, the Turkmens, Kirghis, and Tashkent; north the Karelians, neighbors of the Finns; and all the cities, Leningrad, Kiev, Gorki, Odessa. There were notables in the audience and on the platform: Shostakovich and Fadeev, Arenburg; Gerard Eisler from Berlin; Wayland Rodd, an American Negro artist now resident in Russia; leading women from Poland, Britain, Italy and Chechoslovakia.

That crowd was a sight to make one bend forward and stare. ~~There~~ was not that it ~~nothing~~ bizarre or especially strange ~~about it~~, but it represented a nation - a new nation, a new world. These were ordinary human folk, dressed up but not conspicuously; quiet but enthusiastic. One would rate them as "middle class", with artisans, miners, peasants, workers, intellectuals and professional men, and a large proportion of well-dressed, but not over-dressed women. There was no display of wealth--I saw one white fur ~~jacket~~ necklace and many ear-rings - there was no poverty. ~~There were workers~~ models and a few soldiers. It was a literate throng, which had read considerably and now bought many books in the ante-rooms, and listened with an absorbed intentness which put me to shame. Three days, in double sessions of five or more hours each, we sat and heard talks. There was no let-up, no entertainment and only one or two ten minute intervals during the day. Ear-Phones helped us foreigners, but watching the faces was more revealing. This was no crowd of cringing slaves nor fearful robots rs

35-3-48

These people were not cringing nor afraid

Here were eager and sincere workers and inquirers. They had deep convictions and wanted more information.

It is naturally hard to indicate the line of talk, so much was said in perhaps 22 hours of speeches. All was in open session; there were no panels. The seats for seights of the audience and presidum were never bare and usually mostly full.

There were learned talks from heads of academies, scientists, leaders of farmers Collective farms, labor union leaders and local Soviet leaders. Most of the talks were hortatory and inspirational and not effusive or loudly oratorical; they emphasized the theme that "Anglo-American imperialism" was intent on formenting war. Britain and the United States came in for most blame; France was less often mentioned, Holland now and then and Belgium never. Faith in socialism and the Soviets were dominant themes and Stalin's name was always cheered to the echo. They spared no phrases nor inunendos in attacking the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Pact.

In addition to this and among these periods, much information and indications of attitude came.

A Polish scientist said that 40% of their scientists were lost in war.

A leader of Ukrainian collective farms said that the Ukraine had lost 45 million rubles of property and nearly all their stock during the last war, but now has recovered in part and was making an annual profit of 2 million rubles. He said they wanted neither war nor conquest; only peace to work out their plans. A Rumanian gave a picture of recovery and told of the emancipation of his country by the "help and example" of Russia. He told of farmers and city folk working together; of scientists and artists and plea for peace that this work might go on. A peasant from Usbek, thanked the Soviets for rescuing his land from slavery: in nine years, schools had increased 60 fold and in the country districts, 300 fold. Science and drama had been encouraged. Georgia (absit omen!) reported the integration of workers, intellectuals and artists. They now had electirc trams, schools and an academy of science.

35-3-49

All this report of progress was bound up reference to the hurt and uselessness of war. These rank and file of Russians asked only peace and time to bind the wounds and push forward to a social progress in which they expressed boundless faith. They did not want, they could not believe in war.

In Tadjiz pesants used to be beaten for non-payment of taxes. Now collective farms concentrate on cotton and they have just erected a place of culture costing five million rubles. The people are far better off than neighboring India and Afghanistan.

In Latvia, 70% of the investment before the last war was foreign.

The terrible condition of Turkomania before the revolution was pictured by a ~~xxxxxxxx~~ dark broad-faced oriental, as contrasted with the progress now. Khirgis reported "We have recovered our pre-war status in Agriculture. D'Arbussier spoke of Africa and the colonies and was enthusiastically applauded.

Albania reported schools, factories and railroads, "thanks to the Soviets."

An Austrian woman said: thousands of Austrians want peace and friendship with the Soviets. The largest cultural organization in Austria is the one for Soviet Friendship. The Karelian reported reaction and propaganda from Finland to promote war. Western Germany demanded unity and independence for Germany and declared that capitalism failed in social aims.

Russian women told how they had done men's work during the war; how they had fought beside the soldiers and lost husbands, sweethearts, and sons. They appealed to the women of the world to stop war.

~~The role of women was emphasized:~~

35-3-50

. A woman delegate said: "We workers strive to make all things which meet the vital needs of men." Others said that women share in every activity of the Soviets. Others said: "Women have become a great and creative force in the Soviets.

A magnificently built Polish woman said: "Every drop of blood in my body shouts Never again War!" When later I saw Warsaw, I knew what she meant. There were bitter reverences to the last war: a Hungarian reported that his land had lost more men in the last war then the United States and England together.

Hulet-Johnson, Dean of Canterbury, pointed out that Russia had never started a war but had been the continuous victim. He told of the growing British Peace Movement and referred to his successful lecture tour in the United States, where audiences ranging from 2 to 5 thousand crowded to hear him. He did not probably realize that news of this was apparently not handled by the Associated Press and reached few of the citizens of the country. His Christmas broadcast done in California by special request was given no wide hoop-up. ~~Hulet-Johnson~~ H. D. said that Japan was not conquered by the Atom bomb, ~~so much~~ as by fear of Russia. Continually the delegates said: we are against war; we want no war; but they added: we are not afraid. Most of the talks were hortatory and inspirational, with bitter criticism of capitalism and "Anglo-American" imperialism; ending with "long live the Soviet Republics" and "Comrade Stalin."

There was little official entertainment; but we ~~were~~ all invited to a Goethe celebration.

The audience here was distinctly well-to-do, but with many workers. The women were well-dressed but not in evening attire as the West practices; there was silk, but little lace and no jewels. The audience was not there for entertainment but to hear a very long discourse on the poet and one short one from a German woman. She stressed the influence of the French Revolution on Goethe and asked for friendship bwtween Germany and Russia, despite what Russia had suffered from Germany. A concert of Russian German and French classical music followed for an hour. I sat in a box with a Chinese lady and other foreigners; we were plentifully photographed.

35-3-57

The closing reception was most enjoyable; it was informal but crowded, the food was abundant and good; most stood and ate, but special guests were seated and waited upon. We had wines and champagne, caviar and watermelon; sprightly conversation and toasts, even with translation; I saw D'Arbussier having a jolly time. My interpreter danced with the leading ballerino. The restaurant was vast, with three or more great halls. I stayed from 9:30 to 11:30.

The foreign delegates viewed the Kremlin on Monday. We were told than an American Senator seeing the extravagance of czarist wealth and power remarked: "No wonder they had a revolution!"

and 21,000 pearls sewed into one bishop's ~~tu~~ chasuble

Guardian

35-3-237

October 18, 1949

Nothing in my life has so shaken my belief in American democracy as the trial and conviction of the Communist leaders. The trial may have been conducted legally, but if that is so then our whole judicial system is rotten. I can conceive nothing so unfair and unjust as the conduct of this trial. It marks the nadir of our hysteria and determination to throttle free speech and make honest thinking impossible in the United States.

W. E. B. Du Bois

(Over)

October 18, 1949

Mr. Frits Silber
The National Guardian
17 Murray Street
New York, New York

My dear Mr. Silber:

Nothing in my life has so shaken my belief in American democracy as the conviction of the Communist leaders. The trial may have been conducted legally, but if that is so then our whole judicial system is rotten. I can conceive nothing so unfair and unjust as the conduct of this trial. It makes impossible hysteria and determination to throttle [illegible] make honest thinking impossible in the United States.

Yours,

W. E. B. Du Bois

On the whole I enjoyed this unique excursion into political activity. I encountered little open race prejudice, although of course few New Yorkers wanted to be represented in Washington by a Negro; because of their prejudice and also because they suspected I was more Negro than American. To counteract this at least in part, I made no appeal to the Negro vote as such. I wanted the poeple of New York to know that as senator I would represent the interests of the state and not merely those of one minority group. At the same time, I knew and Negroes knew that I would regard Negro emancipation as a prime prerequisite to American freedom and possibly from birth, training and bitter experience, I would unconsciously overemphasize this aspect. The Negro voter of Harlem was in a quandary; he knew that no candidate would defend Negro rights as I would; he also knew I would be defeated and that he must depend on Lehman or Hanley . His path was cloudy.

35-6-59

My age was always mentioned and emphasized; it being apparently assumed that no American had any business to live and think beyond the age of 70, or preferably 40, on account of the wisdom and courage of current youth. Naturally I was not impressed by this argument and was annoyed that age should continually outweigh reason. But above all I was amazed and exasperated by the overwhelming use and influence of money in politics. Millionaires and corporations, not record and logic, defeated Marcantonio. Dewey could afford to spend $35,000 for one day on radio; when firends of mine the nation over sent $600 to further my campaign, it represented more honesty and guts than all the thousands spent on Lehman and Hanley.

Admittedly incomplete returns of political expenses admit $600,000 spent by the Republicans; $500,000 by the Democrats and $90,000 by the Liberals.

This is probably less than half the real expenditure. The American Labor Party spent $35,000. This almost looks as though the parties paid a dollar or two apiece for votes. The American Labor Party at fifty cents a vote could hardly be charged with bribery. Small wonder the results of this election throughout the land sounded like a "story told by an idiot."

Five million persons voted in this election; of these four percent voted for me, which was far more than I expected. More than a million of the voters stayed from the polls. After a great social effort like the election of 1950, one must feel the let-down. Even the victors gain less than they wish, while the losers wonder if it was worth all the effort, all the worry, all the breathless disappointed hope. Yet there is a sense in which no sound effort is in vain, least of all a struggle with high ideal and personal integrity.

35-6-60

One feels that in the end, all of this can never be lost; that somehow, somewhere, whatever was fine and noble in this campaign will triumph; and what was vicious and low will remain contemptible, no matter what the returns today say. Of course I was disgusted at the re-election of an acknowledged demogogue and opportunist like Thomas Dewey as governor of the Empire State and the continued threat of his elevation to presidency. I was insulted to know that two million New Yorkers wanted a petty grafter like Joe Hanley to be continued in public office. I was sorry to see Herbert Lahman go back to Washington to keep us in war and chains. But most of all I could not understand how a sane and intelligent electorate could reward the brave, lone fight of Marcantonio with defeat. It just did not make sense, but dollars did it--just plain cash to purchase the election of as reactionary and characterless a nonentity as ever sat in Congress.

Ifelt as seldom before the vicious use of money to nullify democracy and the chains of party politics for selfish and dirty ends. As for myself, having never expected anything but defeat I would not have been surprised if no more than 10,000 persons had voted for me. I was astonished by a vote of 200,000--a vote from men and women of courage, without the prejudice against color which I always expect and usually experience; a vote from a tenth of the voters of a state owned, cowed and enslaved by Big Business. This meant that these faced poverty and jail to stand and be counted for Peace and Civil Rights, for this I was happy.

35-7-72

I had slapped no backs during the campaign which I had not slapped before; I had begged no man for his vote as a personal favor; I had asked no vote simply because I was black. It was a fine adventure. I enjoyed it.

THIRD PARTY MOVEMENTS IN THE UNITED STATES

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

There have been seven times in the history of the United States when a Third Party Movement has brought fundamental change in national policies. The first was before the Revolution of 1776, when two parties Tory and Loyalist tried to bring understanding between the colonies and Britain, but were replaced by a Revolutionary Party which established an independent nation. In 1800, the Democrats and Federalists were overthrown by the Jeffersonian Democracy based on the French Revolution. In 1828, Andrew Jackson came to power on a popular upheaval which made the Democrats a Third Party in principl and established popular democracy for the first time in opposition to the parties of property and privilege. The party of property in 1840 took the name of Whigs and for a generation both parties dodged the increasingly critical question of human slavery and tried to keep the abolitionists not only out of power but beyond the pale of respectability. This Third Party Movement under the name of Liberty and Free Soil failed repeatedly and only won a minority victory in 1860, when a bad split in the pro-slavery parties gave victory to the Republicans under Lincoln on a platform not to abolish slavery but to protect it in the South but to limit it s spread to the North and West. Civil War ensued not to abolish slavery but to keep the market of slave grown produce for the North.

To win this war however, Negro soldiers had to be used which took the essential labor basis of the South from support of planter soldiers. This could be obtained only at the price of abolition. In 1872 came a Third Party Movement based on opposition to graft in public office, this failed until in 1876 a Third Party without change of name appeased the New South by putting the blame of mis-government on Freedmen and by disfranchisement of Negroes and poor whites entrenching Big Business in national power. In 1890, labor revolted and attempted a Third Party. The Populist Movement grew rapidly but was squelched in 1896, when Mark Hanna rallied Big Business to political consciousness, bought the Presidency for McKinely who appeased the country with imperial aggression in the West Indies and Asia.

The first Roosevelt made some attempt to break the power of Big Business during his terms but did not accomplish much, because he did not clearly formulate his own ideal. In 1912, he led the Bull Moose with clearer concept but in fatal alliance with the South and failed. La Follette and the farmer labor movement tried in 1924 but accomplished little. The depression brought what a Third Party Movement could not and from 1933 to 1945, we had Big Business curbed by social controls on an unprecedented scale. World war put the money power in ascendency again especially after the death of Franklin Roosevelt. What now can the Progressive Party do handicapped as it is by war hysteria. It can recognize that its greatest difficulty is in getting the truth to the people. Twice in the past, this was accomplished by violent revolution, which destroyed opposition by force and then taught the people to support the new policies. This method of force was a recognized historical way of reform. But the awful experience of Two World Wars is teaching us that this method is becoming too costly in wealth, health and culture. We tend now to depend from the first on the slower methods of persuasion even amid new difficulties of propaganda and thought-control; or even counter-force. Always in the past when the masses understood they re-acted right. But today the great mechanical machine monopolized by capital stands between democracy and truth.

The Dynamo, the cylinder printing press, the wireless the Diesel engine and the airplane control the spread of information. With these in the hands of Big Business and with the great meeting places in the hands of private property, the newspapers and magazines controlled by advertisers and owners of newsprint, news cannot get to the masses as it could in the days of Andrew Jackson.

35-6-183

Except then, with such change of law which would make truth accessible and which we cannot hope for now our problem today is to get the truth to the mass of men by word of mouth. This means house to house, and door to door canvassing on a scale never before attempted in modern times. It calls for a hundred times the number of workers, working ten times as long and not simply in campaigns but especially between campaigns. Unless such a nation-wide crusade is tried and carried through there is no hope for Democracy in the United States

35-6-184

[G.I missing]

no free discussion on platform or over the radio; in newspapers or periodicals. Nearly every independent thinker has been silenced, while stool pigeons, traitors and professed liars picked by wealth, industry and power, can talk to the nation unhampered and ungagged.

"We know that the nation is spending far more money than it is collecting or can collect, and that rising prices, pushed by huge private profits, are putting the cost of living ever beyond a decent standard of living for most of us. Our industry and continued employment depends largely on foreign trade, yet we are stopping foreign trade by cutting down imports and refusing to buy the goods we need from the nations who want to sell. Unless we continue to make weapons and war our economy may utterly collapse. Continually prices are outrunning wages, yet union labor, led too often by reactionary stupid men, is under increasing and coordinated attack, and its energies dissipated by internal division. We are spending millions on misleading advertising to increase private profit in patent medicines, toothpaste and junk. We are faced by increasing graft and stealing and lying in high office, and the highest office is afraid to investigate lest we know the thieves by name.

"We are no longer free to travel, to speak our minds. We are money-mad. Greed and wealth have chained the beast of power. Yet, as my dead schoolmate once sang:

The beast said in his breast
Till the mills I grind have ceased
The riches shall be dust of dust
Dry ashes be the feast.

42-52-27

What can we do about it? How can we face and heal our plight? Not by silence, not by fear; not by voting again for the same old parties and going continually over the same mumbo-jumbo of meaningless elections. We are boasting we are free when we are not free even to cast our ballots. We are peddling freedom to the world and daring them to oppose it and bribing them kindly to accept it, and dropping death on those who refuse it; while we, the real victims, whose taxes furnish the bribes and whose dead and crippled and insane children furnish the soldiers, sit and ask with vacant faces: for whom shall we vote, which candidate shall we vote for, and if you please, dear candidate--will you kindly please tell us: what the hell do you stand for anyway? Is it too much for us to ask your Majesty?

Yet we are fooling nobody, not even ourselves. We have no choise. There are no two parties. There is no choice of candidates whether his name is Eisenhower or Taft, Kefauver or Stassen or Warren, Dulles or Dewey, Joe or Charlie McCarthy. All of them listen to their master's voice, the steel trust, the aluminum trust, the rubber combine, the automobile industry; oil, power, plastics, the railroads, tobacco, copper, chemicals and coca-cola, telegraph and telephone; liquor, radio and movie--all of the more than 200 giant corporations which wield the power that owns the press and the magazines, and determines what news the news agencies will print, and what the movies will screen They are united in that super-congress of which the National Association of Manufacturers is the upper house and the United States Chamber of Commerce is the lower, which are preparing world war to ruin mankind and reduce again the worker not simply to slavery but to idiocy.

To Natl Guardian 12/4

Du Bois Dec. 3, 1952

COLOR LINE

I do not often succumb to the habit of prophesy, but when in 1920 I published my second book of essays, "Darkwater," I ventured to remark "the problem of the 20th century is the problem of the Color Line." In the extraordinary series of events which followed, it seemed as though my words were proving at best only to be partially true.

Recent developments, however, in the United Nations show that perhaps I was approaching the truth. In several recent bouts the colored peoples of the world have lined up solidly against white people, if we include among the "colored" peoples of the Middle East and South America, as well as yellow, brown and black peoples of the world. This was true in the arraignment of South Africa and in many of the votes on the Korean War.

35-10-94

Indeed, there is but one aspect of this deepening world rift along the Color Line which saves it from being complete, and that is the peoples of the Soviet Union and her sister group of states. These are the only white countries which do not usually line up against the colored peoples of the world and thus increase long smoldering resentment.

For this fact, Great Britain, France and the United States ought to be thankful to Russia and her refusal to be "white".

April, 1955

A PROPOSED DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE OF THE PEOPLES OF AFRICA

by W.E.B. Du Bois

38-11-52

The peoples of Africa, black and white, brown and yellow, have a right to Freedom and Self-government, to Food and Shelter, Education and Health.

We hereby warn the world that no longer can Africa be regarded as pawn, slave or property of Europeans, Americans or of any other people.

Africa is for the Africans; its Land and Labor; its natural wealth and resources; its mountains, lakes and rivers; its cultures and its Soul.

Hereafter it will no longer be ruled by Might nor by Power; by invading armies nor police; but by the Spirit of all its Gods and the Wisdom of its Prophets.

Men of all races are welcome to Africa if they obey its laws, seek its interests and love their neighbors as themselves, doing unto others as they would that others should do to them. But the white bigots of South Africa and Kenya; the exploiters of the Rhodesias, the Congo, West, North and Southwest and Southeast Africa, are solemnly warned that they cannot win. Their doom is sealed. We will be free; we will govern ourselves for our best good. Our wealth and labor belongs to us and not to thieves at home nor abroad. Black Africa welcomes the world as equals; as masters, never; we will fight this forever and curse the blaspheming Boers and the heathen liars from Hell.

Let the white world keep its missionaries at home to teach the Golden Rule to its corporate thieves. Damn the God of slavery, exploitation and War. Peace on Earth; no more War. The earth of Africa is for its people. Its Wealth is for the poor and not for the rich. All Hail Africa!

1956

LET'S RESTORE DEMOCRACY TO AMERICA

To your tents, Americans! We have gone far enough into this morass of fear, war, hate, lying and crime. We face a crisis and our first great duty is here and now.

For the time being, never mind the Soviet Union; forget China; ignore Germany!

Come back home and look at America.

Come back to the problem of American Negroes which we have muddled over for 300 years.

In 1655 Spain laid plans for bringing to America 3,000 black men from Africa each year. The colonizers ignored Las Casas who worked for the abolition of slavery in Spanish America, and knighted John Hawkins in his slave ship, called the "Jesus."

In 1755, new, free America held 300,000 black folk, nearly a fourth of the total population, in human slavery; we ignored Milton, Baxter and Burke and refused to stop the African slave trade.

In 1855, the Supreme Court was about to declare that, from the birth of the nation, Negroes had no rights which a white man was bound to respect; and the South was ready to risk Civil War to make slave territory of the whole United States.

There followed a century of war, violence and Color Caste, until the nation ashamed, started back toward Democracy. Lynching reached climax and declined; Negroes were disfranchised and then began to vote and hold office; Negro education increased, but not as fast as it should increase. Then, in 1954, the Supreme Court declared race segregation in public education was unconstitutional because it retarded education.

2-LET'S RESTORE DEMOCRACY TO AMERICA

42-54-3

In 1955, murder, violence and economic repression began to increase, especially in Mississippi, and also widely throughout that part of the nation which once fought for human slavery and long refused to obey the Thirteenth Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution. Southern governors and United States senators threatened to nullify the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court.

What are we going to do about it? There is but one right path: the restoration of democracy in the United States.

NATIONAL GUARDIAN, v. 8, No. 11, p. 1

Jan. 2, 1956

1956

HOW UNITED ARE NEGROES?

The outstanding fact about the Negro group in America, which has but lately gained notice, is that it is flying apart into opposing economic classed. This was to be expected. But most people, including myself, long assumed that that the American Negro, forced into social unity by color caste, would achieve economic unity as a result, and rise as a mass of laborers led by intelligent planning to a higher unity with the laboring classes of the world.

This has not happened. On the contrary, and quite logically, the American Negro is today developing a distinct bourgeoisie bound to and aping American acquisitive society and developing an employing and a laboring class. This division is only in embryo, but it can be sensed.

The Negro businessman: In the 18th century, the Negro slaves and freedmen wereguided within by Negro religious preachers in church units. Then, in the 19th century, they developed leaders in the Abolition movement. After emancipation they had the intelligent leadership of preachers, teachers and artists who, together with philanthropic black men of affairs, guided and advised the group.

But from 1910 until after the First World War, Negro businessmen forged to the front and today they form the most powerful class among Negroes and dominate their thought and action. This class bases its ideals on American business methods and aims. They spend conspicuously, organize for widespread social enjoyment and extravagance and regard the private profit motive as the end of thought and life.

The 300 or more Negro newspapers, with few exceptions, are mouthpieces of this bourgeoisie and bow to the dictates of big business which monopolizes newsprint, world news and credit facilities. Franklin Frazier, aleading American sociologist, once president of the American Sociological Society, has recently emphasized the significance of this development in his BOURGEOISIE NOIRE, published in French in the Librairie Plon, in Paris.

42-54-5

The Negro Worker: Negro public opinion is thus tied to current American thought either by reasons of security or sometimes by direct money bribery, especially during political campaigns. The dream among the intelligentsia of an independent Negro vote devoted to Negro progress, has therefore largely disappeared except under stress of some particular outrage like the Till murder.

Opposite the small Negro bourgeoisie is the great mass of black labor. It is at present only vaguely aware of its conflict of interest with the Negro businessman. This businessman employs a considerable number of Negroes and exploits them quite as much and often more than whites because of the limited jobs open to Negroes. As, however, the Negro laborer joins the white unions, he is drawn into the great labor movement and begins to recognize black business exploitation. But the main mass of American labor is at present in conservative unions under reactionaries like Meany. So far as these unions admit Negroes, the Negroes follow the reactionary philosophy of the white.

Here the black, like the white, is restrained by charges of subversion and fear of loss of jobs.

NATIONAL GUARDIAN, v. 8, No. 14 , p. 6

Jan. 23, 1956

Kwame Nkrumah

THE SAGA OF NKRUMAH

HE WAS A BLACK BOY OF ACCRA; A PEASANT AND NOT OF CHIEFTAIN RANK. HE WENT TO THE MISSION SCHOOL AND THEN TO WORK. HE ~~TOOK PART IN~~ SAW THE LOOTING OF THE United Africa ~~UNIA~~ STORES WHEN DURING THE DEPRESSION THE VAST MONOPOLTY WERE STARVING people of THE GOLD COAST TO DEATH. BRITAIN SUMMONED HER WAR SHIPS FROM GIBRALTER AND ALERTED HER BLACK TROOPS OF THE WEST COAST AND FOR THE FIRST TIME THESE TROOPS REFUSED TO BUDGE. ENGLAND PAUSED. HERE WAS TROUBLE IN SIGHT

TP YOUNG NKRUMAH WENT TO America & ENGLAND. HE WENT TO MOSCOW. HE PLANNED A SOVIET FOR ~~THE GOLD COAST~~BUT IT WAS ONLY ON PAPER WHEN THEY THREW HIM IN JAIL. NKRUM He WAS IN PARIS WHEN THE TRADE UNIONS MET AFTER THE WORLD WAR II. HE HELPED CALL THE FIFTH PAN-AFRICAN CONGRESS IN ENGLAND IN 1945. THERE I FIRST SAW HIM AND KENYATTA OF KENYA AND JOHNSON OF SIERRA LEONE. NKRUMAH WAS SHABBY; KINDLY BUT EARNEST AND HE AND Others CALLED FOR JUSTICE IN THE COCOA MARKET AND FREEDONM FOR THE GOLD COAST. I DID NOT THEN DREAM Nkrumah HAD THE STAMINA AND PATIENCE FOR THIS TASK. TP THAT COCOA STORY WAS A FAIRY TALE. SPANIARDS RAISED COCOA IN FERNANDO PO WITH SLAVES, BRITAIN AND HOLLAND PROCESSED IT INTO CHOCOLATE and sold it in New York, THEN THE QUAKER CADBURYS of England HAD A PLAN Scheme. THEY INDUCED THE WORLD TO BOYCOT SPANISH SLAVERY SO AS TO BRING THE COCOA CROP TO BRITISH WEST AFRICAN PLANTATIONS. BUT TETTIE QUARSIE BALKED THEM . HE WAS A LITTLE BLACK COCOA LABORER IN Principe AND SMUGGLED COCOA PLANTS TO THE GOLD COAST. SOON COCOA WAS GROWING ALL OVER THE GOLD COAST BUT ON LITTLE ONE ACRE NEGRO FARMS, NOT ON WHITE OWNED PLANTATIONS

P THE BUYERS FROM LONDON , AMSTERDAM AND NEW YORK, COULD NOT CONTROL PRODUCTION BUT THEY COMBINED TO CONTROL BUYING AND BID SO LOW THAT THE GROWERS STRUCK. THE COCOA MARKET WAS THROWN INTO CONFUSION AND WITH WAR LOOMING, ENGLAND WAS FORCED TO TAKE OVER ALL COCOA BUYING. THEY OFFERED THE FARMERS A LOW PRICE BUT PROMISED TO REFUND ANY PROFIT. THEY MADE FIVE MILLION DOLLARS AND then reneged ON THEIR PROMISE. THE GOLD COAST SEETHED AND THE FIFTH PAN-AFRI CONGRESS COMPLAINED. NKRUMAH RETURNED TO THE GOLD COAST DETERMINED ON INDEPENDENCE ~~OR ELSE~~. HE LAID OUT A PLAN FOR HOME RULE ON SOCIALIST LINES AND THE GOVERNMENT THREW HIM IN JAIL AS A "COMMUNIST. BUT THE UPROAR WAS profit

Share in the profit of the world

so great that
THEY HAD TO RELEASE HIM. QUIETLY AND EFFECTIVELY HE WENT INTO ORGANIZATION.
HE WORKED NOT FROM THE CHIEFS DOWN; NOT FROM THE black BRITISH EDUCATED INTELLI
GENTIA OVER; BUT FROM THE WORKING MASSES UP. HE lived ATE AND SLEPT WITH THEM
HE TRAVELLED AMONG THEM ALL OVER THE LAND; He talked + pled IN PROUD ASHANTI, IN TOGOLAND,
IN THE DARK, CROWDED CITIES of the Coast AND IN THE ENSUING ELECTION HIS "CONVENTION
Ghana in effect PARTY " WON A CLEAR MAJORITY. NKRUMAH TOLD BRITAIN THAT EITHER IT WOULD
it
GRANT INDEPENDENCE TO THE GOLD COAST OR THE COAST WOULD TAKE. BRITAIN WAS REASONABLE. IF NKRUMAH COULD SECURE A STEADY DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY; IF NKRUMA home COULD SECURE THE TALENT TO RULE; IF NKRUMAH COULD INSURE THE ECONOMIC t
SABILITY OF THE GOLD COAST, IN SUCH UNLIKELY CASE THE GOLD COAST WOULD BE RECOGNIZED AS A INDEPENDENT dominion OF THE BRTISH COMMONWEALTH. NKRUMAH for electric power
TOOK OVER THE SALE OF COCOA AS A GOVERNMENT MONOPOLY; HE PLANNED A DAM ON it in
THE VOLTA RIVER WITH BRITISH AND FOREIGN CAPITAL BUT SO FENCED BY GOVERNMENT his stuck
SUPERVISION ~~AND LIMITATIONS~~ THAT "FREE ENTERPRISE" WAS UNDER SOCIAL CONTRO

SLOWLY BUT SURELY NKRUMAH SECURED EDUCATED BLACK CIVIL SERVANTS TO MAN THE his
SHIP OF STATE, AND AT THE NEXT ELECTIOBN ~~SECURED AND~~ INCREASED POPULAR MA JORITY. THE BRITISH BEGAN TO YIELD. SOME OF THEIR BEST OFFICIALS ON THE GOLD COAST COOPERATD WHOLE -HEARTEDLY WITH NKRUMAH. BUT THE COLONIAL OFFIC in English
PLAYED ITS LAST HAND. IT SOWED SEEDS OF internal dissent; ~~DISSENTION~~ AND it encouraged tribal PROVINCIALISM; ESPECIALLY AMONG THE ASHANTI WHOM THE BRITISH HAD ONLY CONQUERED IN THE I9TH CENTURY AFTER SIX WARS AND THE HIDING OF THE GOLDEN STOOL. NOW ASHANTI CHIEFS WERE ENCOURAGED TO RESENT THE DOMINATION OF A PEASANT FROM THE COAST. THEY DEMANDED AUTONOMY FOR ASHANTI AND THE "FEDERATION" OF THE many known
~~SIX MILLION~~ OF THR GOLD COAST, WITH ITS TOTAL POPULATION OF ONLY SIX MI LION NKRUMAH CALLED FOR CONFERENCE AND A BRITISH COMMISION APPEARED. THE ASHAN black
TI REFUSED TO TAKE PART. ONE OF THEIR OXFORD-EDUCATD LEAD RS, MARRIED TO THE DAUGHTER OF SIR STAFFORD CRIPPS, LEAPED TO THE AID OF THE DISSIDENTS. BUT gave rein to compromised and COOL NKRUMAH ~~COMPROMISED WITH~~ THE COMMISSION, KEPT POWER IN THE HANDS OF THE CENTRAL GOVERNMENT GOVERNMENT WHILE RECOGNIZING THE RIGHT OF PROVINCIAL Togoland voted to stand by Nkrumah
DEBATE AND SUGGESTION. THEN HE OFFERED TO APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE IN A FINAL ELECTION. AFTER THAT INDEPENDENCE WITH OR WITHOUT BRITISH CONSENT. ~~THE~~
he demanded

But South Africa Unrealistic

Great education

Moreover he would like the "NEW GOVERNMENT MUST BE CALLED GHANA" AFTER THAT BLACK NATION WHICH FLOURISHED IN AFRICA ONE THOUSAND YEARS AGO, BEFORE WHITE SLAVE DRIVERS NAMED THE SHORES OF GUINEA ""GOLD" AND " SLAVE" and "grain".

YESTERDAY NKRUMAH SECURED ~~HIS~~ increased MAJORITY IN A NATION-WIDE ELECTION.

71 convention delegates out of 100

11

C 1956

NATIONAL GUARDIANSHIP

By W. E. B. Du Bois

These are days of disappointment and even frustration for those who have seen a world marching forward toward the welfare state and then hesitating and partially retreating before counter-revolution.

In human history there is nothing unusual in this situation. Progress is seldom continuous. Time and again in the history of mankind it has faltered, and we have only to remember that the progress of men, which is not to be doubted in the long run, is never a straight march but is always a lurching forward and a falling back, and we only keep up hope as we see that progress has continued and will continue.

Nevertheless in these days of uncertainty, we have to live and here in the United States, where for many it is difficult to earn a living without selling one's soul to falsehood and greed; where it is not always safe to speak or write frankly unless one agrees with current public opinion, this is the time of all times when the wise man falls back on clear thinking which is still possible, and real knowledge, which is still obtainable, in order at least in his own soul to know the truth and to build a future on it.

38-6-48

Let me venture to recall some pertinent things which have happened in the fifty-sixth year of the last five centuries. In the year 1456, the Turks had just captured Constantinople and Mohammedanism and Christianity stared each other full in the face. Gutenberg had published a bible from movable type. Prince Henry the Navigator had opened an unknown world, while a little ragged boy of five, Christopher Columbus, was racing through the streets of Genoa and watching the great ships sail away. In China the Ming dynasty reigned and scholars were publishing dictionaries. The people, the great masses of all people, were dumb, driven cattle. But among the leading few of Europe a curiosity to know the past arose; a yearning stirred in their hearts for the "fair face of beauty all too fair to see." Michelangelo painted and carved in the Vatican. Cathedrals blossomed in stone. This was the age of Renaissance. But what were the people doing and thinking -- the ordinary people who work and slave to feed and clothe the world? We know little of them. They toiled under rod and whip; they died like flies when the Black Death swept from Constantinople to London, where alone 68,000 died. They walked in dift, rags, and lice.

11

Four hundred years ago in 1556, three men were destined to remake our conception of the world as center of the universe: Copernicus who was dying; Galileo who was being born; and Francis Bacon, father of modern science, who was five years old. Suleiman the Magnificent had his [illegible] foot on the heart of Europe, and the great Emperor Akbar ruled in India.

38-9-49

In Europe, the masses of awakening men tried to believe in good. They fought and killed to believe. Luther died in 1546; in the mad throes of Reformation which followed, millions were crippled, burned, and killed. On one wild night of 1572, 50,000 Christians murdered each other and reddened the streets of France.

The punishment of crime was based on revenge, exquisite pain, and protection of property. Criminals were to be killed, not cured. In the throes of religion from the beginning of the fifteenth century with Joan of Arc to the end of the eighteenth, 300,000 witches were tortured, hanged, and burned alive. The Mongols swept over the toiling masses of India.

Three hundred years ago, in 1656, Shakespeare had sung his song and played his part and was forty years dead at fifty years of age. The thirty years war, perhaps the most horrible of modern times, was eight years ended, but its misery and filth still lived. John Bunyan was in jail writing "Pilgrim's Progress," Milton was recording the loss of Paradise, and Moliere was amusing the court of Louis XIV. In India the Taj Mahal was standing in sheer beauty. The Chinese had issued an encyclopedia in 24,000 volumes.

The year 1756 was in the center of the age of science. Johnson's dictionary was published, but symbolically cutting across it, this year saw the Black Hole of Calcutta as Asiatic protest against European intrusion and Lisbon had an earthquake which killed tens of thousands. In Africa the black Mandingo empires were spreading Mohammedanism west and south, and the heathen Bantu peoples began marching south where a century later they met the Boers. In between the slowly retreating millions and the state-building intruders, western Christianity thrust with trade in gold, pepper, and slaves. On the slavery of Negroes, Britain founded her wealth, commerce, and empire. Capitalistic production was built on her slave trade. As Karl Marx wrote in a celebrated passage: "If money comes into the world with a congenital bloodstain on one cheek, capital comes dripping from head to foot, from every pore, with blood and dirt." England seized India at Plassey, George III reigned, and later lost America; Robert Owen and William Godwin argued the matter of income for the poor; William Pitt and Benjamin Franklin guided politics and science, and exactly two hundred years ago this year, the seven years war began colonial imperialism of the white European world over the darker nations of the earth, An adventure which still fights at Suez this very day.

38-6-50

Exploitation of labor: that is the inborn idea that most men are born to work for the support, ease, and luxury of the few for various reasons like superior merit, color of skin, or progress of culture. This idea, beginning in slavery and developing through serfdom to wage labor and military might, still exists today in the minds of most folk to poison every effort to raise the mass of men to real and effective equality.

A hundred years ago in 1856, Darwin was working on his "Origin of Species," the Negroid Dumas was writing his novels, and Rousseau was finishing his "Social Contract." But the Bessemer process of making steel was transforming industry into dictatorship, and the Communist Manifesto, then eight years old, was beginning to ferment in the minds of discontented men. The labor movement, with strikes and unions, began to spread in Europe. The Cotton Kingdom arose in America. The Russian serfs were emancipated in 1861, but in the United States the Supreme Court heard the arguments in the Dred Scott case, and its decision in 1857 tried to fasten slavery on American Negroes forever; while John Brown raided the slave-owners in Kansas. The Crimean War was fought to conquer the Balkans, including Hungary, and the war of England against China aimed at complete European domination of the entire East. The West fought bitterly against popular education, for the continued subjection of women, and against votes for the mass of laborers. The Reform Bill and our Civil War heralded change!

38-6-51

With this background there was left a weird task for the twentieth century. We can scarcely be surprised if we have not in 1956 even begun to clean up the mess -- neither surprised nor discouraged. We see a head-on collision between social progress and incorporated wealth, striving to save scientific knowledge from the monopoly of private wealth and build a state which would exist for the benefit of those who have made and need it and not for those who by chance or legal chicanery claim to own it. On the whole the progress toward such states has succeeded to a marked degree in most nations. In Russia, Eastern Europe, and China, its success is the wonder of our age which nothing can disparage, even if we know that the path has not been straight nor the goal yet wholly attained.

In the United States we have far from failed. We have moved decisively toward the welfare state by mass education and a standard of living above most of the world; roads, state housing, and federal flood control; recognition of labor unions; scientific research and marvellous technique helped by the government; and a growing recognition of the right even of black folk to live as equals of whites. All this has lulled the nation to acquiescence in our great losses: the failure of democratic control of our government; the increasing rule of private wealth and the use of that wealth for war on socialism, for control of colonial labor and materials. To support this dictatorship of the rich we have tried to stop our bold and wise men from thinking and expressing their thought, and from pointing out our mistakes and danger. The counter-revolution of private wealth against social welfare has put many of our leaders in jail; has scared most of our scientists into silence, has choked literature, hamstrung newsgathering, and made our colleges beggars for the dole of corporations and our teachers of youth the mouthpieces of private industry, set on making millions of the peoples of the earth the serfs of the white west. For this end even our organized white labor has been bribed and misled, and our civilization has become spending income for show, indulgence, and world war, rather than for further conquest of poverty, disease, and ignorance. This is the battle we must yet win, because looking on the past we know that American Big Business is fighting the very stars in their courses, that the welfare state is bound to win. Toward this victory the National Guardian, with your help, leads.

38-6-52

We sing with Whitman:

"That is nothing that is quell'd by one or two failures, or by any number of failures,
Or by the indifference or ingratitude of the people or by any unfaithfulness,
Or the show of the tushes of power, soldiers, cannon, penal statutes.

"What we believe in waits latent forever through all the continents, Invites no one, promises nothing, sits in calmness and light, is positive and composed, knows no discouragement, Waiting patiently, waiting its time."

PRESS SERVICE
23 West 26 Street, N.Y.C.

I am venturing to write several leading men and organizations within the Negro race to remind them that the year 1957 will usher in a series of centenaries which deeply affect the history of the Negro race and of this country. May I point out a few:

1957: One hundredth anniversary of the Dred Scott decision.

1959: One hundredth anniversary of the death of John Brown.

1963: One hundredth anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation.

1961 to 1965: One hundredth anniversary of the participation of American Negroes in the Civil War.

1968: One hundredth anniversary of the death of Thaddeus Stevens, of the enfranchisement of the Freedmen, and of the Freedmen's Bureau.

1972: One hundredth anniversary of the birth of Paul Laurence Dunbar.

1976: One hundredth anniversary of the Bargain of 1876.

41-11F-5

There are many other significant anniversaries which recall Negro history and the cultural tie of the black man with American history. If we neglect to mark this history, it may be distorted or forgotten. Already repeated efforts are being made to prove that slavery was not the cause of the Civil War; to minimize the part of Negroes in the slavery controversy and the war; to slander friends of the Negro, and to represent his enfranchisement as a serious mistake.

It would be wrong to make these celebrations occasions for controversies or exacerbation of race hate. Rather they should be occasions for calm and scientific inquiry into the past, participated in by persons of authority, white and black, Northern and Southern. We must only be sure that every point of view has adequate and worthy representation.

I suggest that these celebrations be varied in character and place and in sponsorship; we have only to be sure that no important event or person is forgotten in these centenaries of the first participation in the civilization of the United States, of the Negro masses as free citizens. Colleges might celebrate jointly or singly the birthdays of distinguished men; newspapers might issue special editions to recall great events; organizations might hold special meetings or alert their branches and fraternities might offer prizes for essays or even books on certain subjects.

I trust you will agree that this is a vital matter and will take such action as seems to you appropriate.

W. E. B. Du BOIS

CIRCULATION: FOUR MILLION!

By W. E. B. Du Bois

To me the most amazing happening last year was the failure of a magazine with four million circulation. It seemed fantastic. If the Guardian secured a fourth of this circulation, would it suspend? Just what was it that happened to Collier's? For what did more than four million persons pay to Collier's at least eight millions a year? Not all of them were clear as to their reasons; they wanted information, entertainment, pictures and news of goods for sale. Advertising men, schooled in modern psychological reaction, undertook to ascertain the current stock of goods for sale and to concoct methods of commending these to customers by word and display. For this service, they paid Collier's at least fifteen million a year.

Here are sums huge enough to pay for much service. Were the subscribers satisfied? Not entirely. They were unstable in number, and it was difficult to say how many goods they bought. They had to be cajoled and bribed. My morning's mail brings me a letter from Life, offering me thirty-nine copies of this magazine for ten cents, instead of the advertised price of 20 cents. The most respectable Atlantic Monthly offers my wife the next eight issues "for one-half of the regular price. What's more, you need send no money now." Subscribers are an uncertain quantity and Collier's had to furnish luring bait to keep them. Remember their story of war with the Soviet Union? They were able to buy the cooperation of some of the highest names in science and literature in the nation for this indefensible bit of dangerous propaganda. It must have cost a lot of money. Were the subscribers satisfied?

There must have been many of them who began to ask themselves, just what do I want from a periodical? If they wanted the news of the world, the current happenings and an intelligent interpretation of their meaning, based on historical knowledge, it would be clear to many that Collier's was not furnishing that information. Moreover, remembering the current amount of misinformation, the way in which we have been stampeded into foolish thought and action in the recent past, many subscribers must have wanted more reliable information than Collier's gave. We are an ill-informed nation; we were misled about the Chinese revolution; we never got the whole truth about Korea; we have been told all sorts of contradictory tales about the Soviet Union; we are today not clear about Hungary. Then, too, the Guild of Advertisers was not able to tell the sellers of goods just how far Collier's, as compared with a number of other magazines, and particularly as compared with television, was selling goods. It concluded -- with just how much truth I do not know -- that it could sell as large a bill of goods without Collier's as with it. It might even save money. So Collier's went the way of most magazines.

But the four million subscribers were left, and at least some of them must be doing some thinking. It would be well for these to turn away from the grab-bag method of subscribing. To be sure, we all want to buy goods and to know what is on the market. But what connection is there between refrigerators and the gathering and interpreting of news? If it be the Truth that I am after, what has Truth got to do with buying automobiles, cosmetics, or clothes? Or, in other words, what necessary connection has advertising and the gathering and interpreting of news?

Suppose that just for the sake of clarity, we separate the matter of buying and selling from the duty of learning the truth. We like to see reproductions of old paintings, scenes of travel and exploration. We need to read fiction and poetry, personal reminiscences and essays in history. But we do not need to assume that the same newspaper or magazine can furnish all this, especially when what it furnishes is paid for by General Motors and interpreted in such ways as Du Pont thinks is most profitable for its investments.

No! Subscribers need to grow up and separate their contracts and interests. Intelligent citizens need to know what is going on in this muddled world and to get this news straight and unslanted. Knowing the Truth, then each one can supply his own use for what he has learned. But if Truth comes to him already half falsified, he and no one else is the real sufferer. Moreover, there are thousands of persons who are capable of gathering and interpreting news with the sole purpose of getting at the truth of current life. These scholars and artists might be greatly increased in number and efficiency if our Schools of Journalism were not centers of sensational advertising and methods of private profit. As it is, a reporter today is hired not to think or know, but to write what he is told and come to conclusions to which he is ordered. He is a part of "Big Business." On the other hand, thousands of American scholars and artists are starving to death because only those of them can get employment who are willing to say what the makers and sellers of goods think is profitable for business.

In other words, if we want a periodical which collects authentic news and hires unbiased and trained writers and artists to interpret this news, what must we pay for such a newspaper? We know, or by this time ought to know, that paying profits to advertising agents or buying toothpaste and electric razors does not mean that we will get news or honest opinion.

What will a real organ of news and opinion cost, which pays its way and does not attempt to live on dole furnished by Big Business -- just what should such a periodical cost? I imagine that if 25,000 persons should pay (not merely promise) $25 a months such a periodical might exist, pay its way at union prices, and not find it necessary to beg for funds. Today, in order to rush news of an event the minute it happens or even before, we spend $99 for the task, even if the despatch is a rumor or a lie and really costs but a dollar. We must have a sensation daily if not hourly. This waste may be saved.

We could put on the tables of 25,000 families each week a record and compendium of the news which would not a week later prove to be lies or mere advertising, or efforts to increase private profit at public expense. To give this service daily would cost each subscriber perhaps a hundred dollars a month. But why try to know all each day? What's the rush? What time would you have to read the Truth, and what would you do with it even if you had it? Once a week is enough. This service is not obtainable for less than $25 per person. Or if it is promised, it's paid for by organizations which cannot or will not deliver the goods. These subscribers might be individuals or groups; these groups might become centers of conference, study, and lectures; they might restore civilization to this barren land.

In the unlikely event that more than 25,000 sane and solvent Americans should be found willing to pay the cost, then instead of dividing the surplus in "dividends" to persons who had given no services, intelligent cooperation from scholars, artists, and research assistants might be hired at wages approaching those of bank vice-presidents to make the facts of the news intelligible and alive. Universities used to do this, but they are now too busy with buildings and endowments designed to give Ph. D.s to morons to make and drop bombs and kill women and children.

38-8-7

ABOUT DELIBERATE SPEED

By W. E. B. Du Bois

From 1619 to 1957, the Negro in the United States has been the central thread of American history. Three times in particular this thread has so entangled itself with the web of our history that the knots have threatened our very existence:

The African Slave Trade, 1774-1808

Negro Slavery, 1850-1863

Negro Citizenship, 1876-1957

These crises which involved uniting thirteen colonies into one nation, Civil War over the powers of the Federal Government and the State, and the status of Negro citizens, we have tried to solve "with deliberate speed," arguing repeatedly that "morals" could not be advanced by legislation. Our "speed" twice became so "deliberate" that we made little or no progress and left to our children an aggravated burden of social reform. Thus our ~~failure~~ delay to abolish slavery ~~when we tried~~ by trying only to stop the slave trade, left the slavery problem to be settled by Civil War. When war freed the slaves, we neglected to make the freedmen citizens and this task now faces us in the midst of a rising colored world. It is difficult to conceive what the result will be if we do not face and settle today the accumulated problems of the last 338 years.

These facts are not clear to most Americans; the story has been distorted by historians to boost our national pride; it has been kept out of textbooks so that children may not learn how evil their fathers sometimes have been.

May I then briefly retell the story of the Negro in America? The war called the "Spanish Succession" should have been designated the war to give England the monopoly of the African slave trade to America. In the eighteenth century 15,000 Negroes a year were stolen in Africa and dumped on America; many colonies protested, but Georgia, peopled with luckless vagabonds, said: "Negroes are as essentially necessary to the cultivation of Georgia as axes, hoes, or any other utensil of agriculture." They got their Negroes and today Governor Griffin and Senator Talmadge propose to keep them as near slavery as possible.

38-7-110

Other colonies wanted and got Negro slaves, but the mass of Americans regarded this new land as a land of freedom, not slavery, and proposed to unite the colonies when they escaped British control into a great democracy. They made a Declaration of Independence in 1776 which said:

"WE HOLD THESE TRUTHS TO BE SELF-EVIDENT, THAT ALL MEN ARE CREATED EQUAL, THAT THEY ARE ENDOWED BY THEIR CREATOR WITH CERTAIN UNALIENABLE RIGHTS, THAT AMONG THESE ARE LIFE, LIBERTY AND THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS."

This sounded magnificent, but it did not describe the new nation; and that nation proceeded with such deliberate speed to legislate morals that the 500,000 slaves of 1776, whom the signers of this Declaration looked straight in the eye, had by 1860 become four million, ~~who had~~ who had "no rights that ~~the~~ a white man was bound to respect." More than this: these black workers on the free, rich land of the lower South were raising five million bales of cotton a year, which had become the basis of a kingdom ~~which~~ and was making Southern planters, Northern merchants, and British factory owners rich. Southern leaders got ideas; they had despoiled Mexico of land and slaves; they had tried repeatedly to seize the West Indies and they had their eyes now on the Middle West. By counting their slaves and disfranchising the poor whites, they dominated the nation, ~~&~~ practically. But the farmers of the North and workers, native and foreign, also eyed the rich west as the national frontier receded. They demanded "free soil." Not "free men," but free soil. They were quite willing that Negroes should remain slaves in the South, but not on the rich soil of the West. A small group of Americans, led by William Lloyd Garrison and the free Negro Frederick Douglass, wanted to free the slaves, but the church and business bitterly opposed these fanatics, who were often mobbed and sometimes killed. One of them, John Brown, went west and helped drive slaveholders out of Kansas. Then he tried to free slaves in Virginia and was promptly hanged.

38-7-117

The South now demanded, the right to expand slavery anywhere ~~in the nation on threat of secession.~~ The new Republican Party promised to protect slavery in the South but would not ~~let it expand outside its present limits.~~ Thereupon the nation proceeded to settle this dispute by fighting. They killed 500,000 of their young men, destroyed millions of property, and raised a generation of people filled with hate for each other and ~~especially~~ for Negroes.

In the midst of this Civil War, Lincoln repeatedly offered to protect slavery in the South if the South would remain in the Union. The South refused. The war reached a stalemate, when Lincoln was reminded that in the South were four million slaves working to support Southern soldiers and protect their homes. If these should help the North instead of the South, the war could be won. By promise of freedom to slaves, Lincoln armed 180,000 black soldiers and used in addition over 200,000 black laborers in army camps. Lincoln said that without this help, "We would be compelled to abandon the war in three weeks." So when with Negro help the war was won, Lincoln declared the slaves "henceforward and forever free."

Then the nation sat down heavily and licked its wounds. It asked what was meant by"free"? Lincoln suggested privately ~~then~~ in 1864 that a few Negroes, "the very intelligent and especially those who have fought gallantly in our ranks," might be given the right to vote. But Lincoln was killed a year later, and a Southern poor white, drunk even while taking the oath of office, became president of the United States. He was soon taken into camp by the Southern planters and began to readmit to the Union the seceded states, ~~in with "Black Codes" which re-established slavery in all but name.~~ Thus the South reappeared at the doors of Congress with twenty-eight more votes than before the war, based on disfranchised freedmen. They proposed not only virtually to restore slavery, but to make the federal government pay the Southern war debt, lower the tariff on which post-war industry had fattened, and overthrow the Gold Standard by which the North had made millions. This touched the pocket nerve and the North called a halt.

38-7-111

(FRAGMENT)

he South now demanded not only the right to expand slavery in the nationbut sanctions which would assure the slave states control of land , labor and commerce ~~no matter how they free states grew~~. Otherwise they threatened to secede and form a separate nation. The Republicans ~~reiterated their pledge to protect slavery where it was, but not to let it expand~~ opposed secession

Two men proposed remedies: Charles Sumner proposed to make the freedmen voters with full civil rights, free elementary education, hospitalization, and special protection in the courts. Thaddeus Stevens went a step further and proposed giving each Negro family forty acres and ~~the sum of~~ $50.00, to provide a minimum of capital for an impoverished group. The nation, with the Communist Manifesto ringing in its ears, called this program socialism and refused to enact it. It determined to force the South to modify its plans by enfranchising the Negroes forthwith. Few Northerners expected this to work as a permanent system of government, but after the failure and confusion which they expected to ensue, the ~~North~~ South would be prepared to compromise on suitable terms.

Negroes, migrant Northerners, and Southern poor whites thereupon established governments. They restored law and order. They began to subdivide the plantations; they enfranchised the poor whites as well as the blacks; they built roads and railroads and began a new social legislation. They ran into difficulties; the rich whites refused to pay taxes; Northern adventurers manipulated public debts and stole railroads, and many poverty-stricken ex-slaves were easily bribed. But the result of eight years of black rule was such that what the South began to fear was not that the Negro would fail as a voter, but that he would succeed. Thereupon the mob took hold. As the predecessor of Byrnes of South Carolina testified in open Senate:

"Yes, we have stuffed ballot-boxes, and will stuff them again; we have cheated 'niggers' in elections and will cheat them again; we have disfranchised 'niggers,' and will disfranchise all we want to; we have killed and lynched 'niggers' and will kill and lynch others; we have burned 'niggers' at the stake and will burn others; a 'nigger' has no right to live anyhow, unless a white man wants him to live. If you don't like it you can lump it!"

So North and South came to a "gentleman's agreement"; the Negro was to be disfranchised and a status of legal caste set up. Strong political, economic, and social pressure was put on the Federal courts to go along and they did for seventy-five years. A nation-wide propaganda to expose the inherent and ineradicable inferiority of the Negro race was spread in college, church, science and literature over the nation. Laws disfranchising the Negro were passed in all Southern states, and inferior schools and civil disability and separation were forced upon him.

38-7-114

Then in 1905 the Negroes organized and began to fight back. Slowly they beat upon public opinion and then entered the courts. The courts dodged and evaded with every subterfuge but they faced inevitably clear decisions unless the principle of democratic government was to be completely surrendered ~~in the presence of world war in which~~ we claimed to lead democracy.

Several decisions had raised serious questions as to judicial honesty in this nation. The critical decision came in 1954 when the Supreme Court declared unanimously that race separation in public schools was unconstitutional.

Immediately the South appealed to the mob, and several states declared they would not obey the law. The old slogans reappeared: "States' Rights," which would make civil rights for Negroes a matter of local or even individual opposition; "Legislating morality" which was the favorite escape of cowards. Finally even the Supreme Court took a step backward and said the enforcement of the law need not be immediate but could be achieved with "deliberate speed." And here we are right back to 1776. Six states where six million Negroes live have taken no step toward integration of schools and the governor of one state has used the national guard to stop integration. Nation and state face each other. But that is not all: China, India, Burma, Malaya and Africa; the West Indies, Central and South America; in fact the whole colored world together with the world of Socialism and Communism, stand asking whether the United States is a democracy or the last center of "white supremacy" and Colonial Imperialism.

A VISTA OF NINETY YEARS

By W. E. B. Du Bois

This is the month of my ninetieth birthday. I have lived to an age of life which is increasingly distasteful to this nation. Unless by sixty a man has gained possession of enough to support himself, he faces the distinct possibility of starvation. He is liable to lose his job and to refusal if he seeks another. At seventy he is frowned upon by the Church and if he is foolish enough to survive until ninety, he is often regarded as a freak. This is because in the face of human experience the United States has discovered that Youth knows more than Age. When a man of 35 becomes president of a great institution of learning or United States Senator or head of a multi-million dollar corporation, a cry of triumph rings in the land. Why? To pretend that fifteen years bring of themselves more wisdom and understanding than fifty is a contradiction in terms. Given a fool, a hundred years will not make him wise; but given an idiot, he will not be wise at twenty. Youth is more courageous than age because it knows less. Age is wiser than youth because it knows more. This all mankind has affirmed from Egypt and China five thousand years ago to Britain and Germany today. Only the United States knows better. I would have been hailed with approval if I had died at fifty. At seventy-five my death was practically requested. If living does not give value, wisdom, and meaning to life, then there is no sense in living at all. If immature and inexperienced men rule the earth, then the earth deserves what it gets: the repetition of age-old mistakes, and wild welcome for what men knew a thousand years ago was disaster.

I do not apologize for living long. High on the ramparts of this blistering hell of life, I sit and see the Truth. I look it full in the face, and I will not lie about it, neither to myself nor to the world. I see my country as what Cedric Belfrage aptly characterizes as a "frightened Giant, afraid of the Truth, afraid of Peace. I see a land which is degenerating and faces decadence unless it has sense enough to turn about and start back. It is no sin to fail. It is the habit of man. It is disaster to go on when you know you are going wrong. I judge this land not merely by statistics or reading lies agreed upon by historians. I judge by what I have seen, heard, and lived through for near a century.

There was a day when the world rightly called Americans honest even if crude; earning their living by hard work; telling the truth no matter whom it hurt; and going to war only in what they believed a just cause after nothing else seemed possible. Today we are lying, stealing, and killing. We call all this by finer names: Advertisement, Free Enterprise, and national defense. But names in the end deceive no one; today we use science to help us deceive our fellows; we take wealth that we never earned and we are devoting all our energies to kill, maim, and drive insane, men, women, and children who dare refuse to do what we want done. No nation threatens us. We threaten the world. Our President says that Foster Dulles is the wisest man he knows. If Dulles is wise, God help our fools -- the fools who rule us and are today running wild in order to shoot a boot ball into the sky where Sputnik rolls in peace around the earth. And they know why we fail -- these military masters of men -- we haven't taught our children mathematics and physics. No, it is because we have not taught us our children to read and write or to behave like human beings and not like hoodlums. Every child on my street is whooping it up with toy guns and big boys with real pistols. When Elvis Presley goes through the motions of copulation on the public stage it takes the city police force to hold back teen-age children from hysteria. What are we doing about it? Half the Christian churches of New York are trying to ruin the free public schools in order to replace them by religious dogma, and the other half are too interested in Venezuelan oil to prevent the best center in Brooklyn from fighting youthful delinquency, or preventing a bishop from kicking William Howard Melish into the street and closing his church. Which of the hundreds of churches sitting half empty protests about this? They hire Billy Graham to replace the circus in Madison Square Garden.

All this must not be mentioned even if you know it and see it. America must never be criticized even by honest and sincere men. America must always be praised and extravagantly praised, or you lose your job or are ostracized or land in jail. Criticism is Treason, and treason or the hint of treason testified to by hired liars may be punished by shameful death. I saw Ethel Rosenberg lying beautiful in her coffin beside her mate. I tried to stammer futile words above her grave. But not over graves should we shout this failure of justice, but from the housetops of the world.

Honest men may and must criticize America. Describe how she has ruined her democracy, sold out her jury system, and led her seats of justice astray. The only question that may arise is whether this criticism is based on truth, not whether it has been openly expressed.

What is truth? What can it be when the President of the United States, guiding the nation, stands up in public and says: "The world also thinks of us as a land which has never enslaved anyone." Everyone who heard this knew it was not true. Yet here stands the successor of George Washington who bought, owned, and sold slaves; the successor of Abraham Lincoln who freed four million slaves after they had helped him win victory over the slave-holding South. And so far as I have seen, not a single periodical, not even a Negro weekly, has dared challenge or even criticize that extraordinary falsehood.

This is what I call decadence. It could not have happened fifty years ago. In the day of our fiercest controversy we have not dared thus publicly to silence opinion. I have lived through disagreement, vilification, and war and war again. But in all that time, I have never seen the right of human beings to think so challenged and denied as today.

The day after I was born, Andrew Johnson was impeached. He deserved punishment as a traitor to the poor Southern whites and poorer freedmen. Yet during his life, no one denied him the right to defend himself.

A quarter of a century ago, I tried to state and carry into realization unpopular ideas against a powerful opposition -- in the white South, in the reactionary North, and even among my own people. I found my thought being misconstrued and I planned an organ of propaganda -- The Crisis -- where I would be free to say what I believed. This was no easy sailing. My magazine reached but a fraction of the nation. It was bitterly attacked and once the government suppressed it. But in the end I maintained a platform of radical thinking on the Negro question which influenced many minds. War and depression ended my independence of thought and forced me to return to teaching, but with the certainty that I had at least started a new line of belief and action.

As a result of my work and that of others, the Supreme Court began to restore democracy in the South and finally outlawed discrimination in public services based on color. This caused rebellion in the South which the nation is afraid to meet. The Negro stands bewildered and attempt is made by appointments to unimportant offices and trips abroad to bribe him into silence. His art and literature cease to function. Only the children like those at Little Rock stand and fight.

The Yale sophomore who replaced a periodical of brains by a book of pictures concealed in advertisements, proposed that America rule the world. This failed because we could not rule ourselves. But Texas to the rescue, as Johnson proposes that America take over outer space. Somewhere beyond the Moon there must be sentient creatures rolling in inextinguishable laughter at the antics of our Earth.

We tax ourselves into poverty and crime so as to make the rich richer and bring more crime and poverty. We know the cause of this: it is to permit our rich business interests to stop socialism and to prevent the ideals of Communism from ever triumphing on earth. The aim is impossible. Socialism progresses and will progress. All we can do is to silence and jail its promoters. I believe in socialism. I seek a world where the ideals of Communism will triumph -- to each according to his need; from each according to his ability. For this I will work as long as I live. And I still live.

1958

from the MESSAGE TO THE ACCRA CONFERENCE

42-54-6

Africa, ancient Africa, has been called by the world and has lifted up her hands! Africa has no choice between private capitalism and socialism. The whole world, including capitalist countries, is moving toward socialism, inevitably, inexorably. You can choose between blocs of military alliance, you can choose between groups of political union; you cannot choose between socialism and private capitalism because private capitalism is doomed!

But what is socialism? It is a disciplined economy and political organization in which the first duty of a citizen is to serve the state; and the state is not a selected aristocracy, or a group of self-seeking oligarchs who have seized wealth and power. No! The mass of workers with hand and brain are the ones whose collective destiny is the chief object of all effort.

Gradually, every state is coming to this concept of its aim. The great Communist states like the Soviet Union and China have surrendered completely to this idea. The Scandinavian states have yielded partially; Britain has yielded in some respects, France in part, and even the U.S. adopted the New Deal which was largely socialism; though today further American socialism is held at bay by 60 great groups of corporations who control individual capitalists and the trade union leaders.

On the other hand, the African tribe, whence all of you sprung, was communistic in its very beginnings. No tribesman was free. All were servants of the tribe of whomthe chief was father and voice.

When now, with a certain suddenness, Africa is whirled by the bitter struggle of dying private capitalism into the last great battle-ground of its death throes, you are being tempted to adopt at least a passing private capita ism as a step to some partial socialism. This would be a grave mistake.

2-MESSAGE TO THE ACCRA CONFERENCE

42-54-7

For 400 years Europe and North Africa have built their civilization and comfort on theft of colored labor and the land and materials which rightfully belong to these colonial peoples.

The dominant exploiting nations are willing to yield more to the demands of the mass of men than weretheir fathers. But their yielding takes the form of sharing the loot--not of stopping the looting. It takes the form of stopping socialism by force and not of surrendering the fatal mistakes of private capitalism. Either capital belongs to all or power is denied all.

Here then, my Brothers, you face your great decision: Will you for temporary advantage--for automobiles, refrigerators and Paris gowns--spend your incomein paying interest on borrowed funds; or will you sacrifice your present comfort and the chance to shine before your neighbors, in order to educate your children, develop such industry as best serves the great mass of people and make your country strong in ability, self support and self-defense? Such union of effort for strength calls for sacrifice and self-denial, while the capital offered you at high price by the colonial powers like France, Britain, Holland, Belgium and the U.S., will prolong fatal colonial imperialism, from which you have suffered slavery, serfdom and colonialism.

You are not helpless. You are the buyers and to continue existence as sellers of capital, these great nations, former owners of the world, must sell or face bankruptcy. You are not compelled to buy all they offer now. You can wait. You can starve a while longer rather than sell your great heritage for a mess of Western capitalist pottage. You can not only beat down the price of capital as offered by the united and monopolized Western private capitalists, but at last today you can compare their offers with those of socialist countries like the Soviet Union and China, which with infinite sacrifice and pouring out of blood and tears, are at last able to offer weak nations needed capital on better terms than the West.

3-MESSAGE TO THE ACCRA CONFERENCE

The supply which socialist nations can at present spare is small as compared with that of the bloated monopolies of the West, but it is large and rapidly growing. Its acceptance involves no bonds which a free Africa may not safely assume. It certainly does not involve slavery and colonial control which the West has demanded and still demands. Today she offers a compromise, but one of which you must beware:

42-58-20

She offers to let some of your smarter and less scrupulous leaders become fellow capitalists with the white exploiters if in turn they induce the nation's masses to pay the awful cost. This has happened in the West Indies and in South America. This may yet happen in the Middle East and Eastern Asia. Strive against it with every fibre of your bodies and souls. A body of local private capitalists, even if they are black, can never free Africa; they will simply sell it into new slavery to old masters overseas.

Awake, awake, put on they strength, O Zion! Reject the weakness of missionaries who teach neither love nor brothe hood, but chiefly the virtues of private profit from capital, stolen from your land and labor. Africa, awake! Put on the beautiful robes of Pan-African socialism.

NATIONAL GUARDIAN, p. 7

Dec. 22, 1958

CHINA

I saw China first in 1936, on my trip from the Soviet Union to Japan. I was struck by its myriads of people. This amorphous mass of men, with age-old monuments of human power, beauty, and glory; with its helpless, undefended welter of misery and toil, has an organization of life and impenetrable will to survive that neither imperial tyranny, nor industrial exploitation, nor famine, starvation, and pestilence can kill -- it is Eternal life, facing disaster and triumphing imperturbably.

41-3-342

There passed a glory from the earth when Imperial China fell. Built as it was on skulls, it was bravely built and the remains are magnificent. In all essential respects they surpass the stones of Europe. Where Europe counts its years in hundreds, Asia counts its in thousands. There is absent that all too apparent European effort to dramatize and exaggerate the past; to emphasize war and personal glory. China shows a finer effort to let the past stand silent, frank, and unadorned; to tell the truth simply about men and fully; and to record the triumphs of education, family life and literature far more than murder.

I write this standing on the Great Wall of China, with twenty-three centuries beneath my feet. The purple crags of manchuria lie beyond the valley, while behind are the yellow and brown mountains of China. For seventy cents I have been carried up on the shoulders of four men and down again. And here I stand on what has been called the only work of man, visible from Mars. It is no mud fence or pile of cobbles. It surpasses that mighty bastion of Constantinople, which for so many centuries saved Mediterranean civilization from German barbarism. This is a wall of carefully cut stone, fitted and laid with perfect matching and eternal mortar, from twenty to fifty feet high and twenty five hundred miles long; built by a million men, castellated with perfect brick, and standing mute and immutable for more than two thousand years. Such is China.

Shanghai was an epitome of the racial strife, the economic struggle, the human paradox of modern life. Here is the greatest city of the most populous nation on earth, with the large part of it owned, governed and policed by foreign nations. With Europe largely controlling its capital, commerce, mines, rivers and manufactures; with a vast welter of the greatest working-class in the world, paid less than an average of twenty-five cents a day; with a glittering modern life of skyscrapers, majestic hotels, theatres and night clubs. In this city of nations are 19,000 Japanese, 11,000 British, 10,000 Russians, 4,000 Americans, and 10,000 foreigners of other nationalities living in the midst of 3,000,000 Chinese. The city is divided openly by nations; black-bearded Sikhs under British orders police its streets, foreign warships sit calmly at her wharfs; foreigners tell this city what it may and may not do.

41-3-343

Even at that, matters are not as bad as they once were. In 1936, foreigners acknowledge that Chinese have some rights in China. Chinese who can afford it may even visit the city race track from which they and dogs were long excluded. It is not common now to kick a coolie or throw a rickshaw's fare on the ground. Yet, yesterday afternoon I saw a little English boy of perhaps four years, order three Chinese children out of his imperial way on the sidewalk of the Bund; and they meekly obeyed and walked in the gutter. It looked quite like Mississippi. And, too, I met a "missionary" from Mississippi, teaching in the Baptist University of Shanghai!

I went by invitation to the American-supported University of Shanghai and I said to the President that I should like to talk to a group of Chinese and discuss frankly racial and social matters. He arranged a luncheon at the Chinese Bankers' Club. There were present one of the editors of the China press, the Secretary General of the Bank of China, the General Manager of the China Publishing Company, the Director of the Chinese Schools for Shanghai, and the Executive Secretary of the China Institute of International Relations.

We talked nearly three hours. I plunged in recklessly. I told them of my slave ancestors, of my education and travels. Of the Negro problem. Then I turned on them and said, "How far do you think Europe can continue to dominate the world, or how far do you envisage a world whose spiritual center is Asia and the colored races? You have escaped from the domination of Europe politically since the World War--at least in part; but how do you propose to escape from the domination of European capital? How are your working classes progressing? Why is it that you hate Japan more than Europe when you have suffered more from England, France, and Germany than from Japan?"

41-3-344

There ensued a considerable silence, in which I joined. Then we talked. They said, "Asia is still under the spell of Europe, although not as completely as a while back. It is not our ideal simply to ape Europe. We know little of India or Africa, or Africa in America. We see the danger of European capital and are slowly extricating ourselves, by seeking to establish control of capital by the political power of taxation and regulation. We have stabilized our currency--no longer do English Hong Kong notes form our chief circulating medium. Our wages are too low but slowly rising; labor legislation is appearing; we have sixteen million children in school with short terms and inadequate equipment, but a beginning of the fight against our ninety per cent illiteracy."

We talked three hours, but it was near a quarter of a century before I realized how much we did not say. The Soviet Union was scarcely mentioned, although I knew how the Soviet Union was teaching the Chinese in 1926. Nothing was said of the Long March which had just ended its six thousand miles from Kiangsi to Yenan, led by Mao Tse Tung, and Chu Teh. We mentioned America only for its benefactions and scarcely for its exploitation. Of the Kuomintang and Chiang Kai-shek, almost nothing was said, but hatred of Japan for its betrayal of Asia was amply pointed out.

In 1959 I came again to China. I wanted to re-visit China because it is a land of colored people; and again because in 1946 China had officially invited me to visit and lecture, but the United States had refused to permit me. The passport which I received in 1959, stated that it was "not good for travel to China." It was a fair conclusion that if I did not use this passport to secure entrance to China and made no claim on the United States for protection, the State Department had no legal right to forbid me to visit China. Certainly the United States could give me no less protection in China than it could in Mississippi. On the other hand by legal fiction, the United States was still "at war" with China, since the Korean War had never been legally finished. It was possible then if I went to China, to jail me for "Trading with the Enemy." This risk I thought it my duty to take, since my invitation to visit had been renewed by the cultural minister, Kuo Mo Jo and by Madame Soong Ching Ling.

41-3-345

I left Moscow February ninth and returned April sixth. It was the most fascinating ten weeks of travel and sight-seeing I have ever experienced. We remember Peking; a city of six million; its hard workers, its building and rebuilding; that great avenue which passes the former forbidden city, and is as wide as Central Park; the bicycles and pedicycles, the carts and barrows. There was the University where I lectured on Africa, and a college of the fifty or more races of China. We looked out from our hotel window at the workers. They all wore raincoats beneath the drizzle. We saw the planning of a nation and a system of work rising over the entrails of dead empire.

I have traveled widely on this earth since my first trip to Europe sixty seven years ago. Save South America and India, I have seen most of the civilized world and much of its backward regions. Many leading nations I have visited repeatedly. But I have never seen a nation which so amazed and touched me as China in 1959.

I traveled five thousand miles, by railway, boat, plane and auto. I saw all the great cities: Peking, Shanghai, Hankow and its sisters; Canton, Chungking, Chengtu, Kunming and Nanking. I rode its vast rivers, passed through its villages and sat in its communes. I visited its minority groups. I spent four hours with Mao Tse Tung and dined twice with Chou En Lai, the tireless Prime Minister of the nation of six hundred and eighty million souls.

41-3-346

We come to Cheng-Tu. We ride about this farthest Western stopping place, close to the crowds and the workers and the homes, old and new. We visit a commune of sixty thousand members. We climb the mountain to see irrigation being widened today, yet started two thousand two hundred years ago. There is a glorious temple on its summit, and below a wide lake between winding roads. Four rivers roll down from the Himalayas, out of Tibet into the Yangtze.

Then we fly to Kunmin, the end of the American Burma road. It is warm and quiet, and at the state school, the minorities dance and sing welcome, and among them are Tibetans. There are more Tibetans in China, than in Tibet. In Tibet while we were on its border in Czechwan, the landholders and slave drivers and the religious fanatics revolted against the Chinese, and failed as they deserved to. Tibet has belonged to China for centuries. The Communists linked the two by roads and began reforms in land holding, schools and trade, which now move quickly. At Kunmin we were at the end of the Burma road and near the great Mekong river. Below lay Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia and Thailand. The nest of grafters, whoremongers and gamblers at Saigon, helped by Americans, have broken the Geneva treaty which closed the French Indo-Chinese War, and are attacking the Communists. That is called "Communist Aggression." It is the attempt of American business and the American navy to supplant France as colonial ruler in Southeast Asia.

There is at Canton a marble commercial building where the import and export exposition was recently opened. There are five floors of exhibits. I am convinced that America cannot make anything which is not today being made by China, or which cannot be made cheaper, and for the most part made quite as well:for out of the things that China makes comes no profits for private exploiters. Most nations of the world are beginning to buy China's goods, except the United States. China sells increasingly to Europe, to Asia and South America; to India, Burma, Ceylon, Indonesia, and Malaya; to Africa and the West Indies; to Australia and New Zealand. And such goods; silk and woolen clothing, watches, clocks, radios and television sets; looms, machinery and lamps, shoes and hats, pottery and dishes. All Chinese seem to be at work, and not afraid of unemployment, and welcoming every suggestion that displaces muscle with machinery.

41-3-347

In every town and city, we went to the opera, and can never forget the assault of the Monkey King on the hosts of Heaven, facing God and the angels. A night sleeping train took us over the thirty hour trip from Peking to Hankow. There I saw the bridge that had been miraculously thrown across the Yangtze. We rested in a little hotel adorned with flowering cabbages. We visited the great steel mills and shook hands with welcoming workers. The colored American prisoner of war who stayed in China rather than return to America and is happy with his wife and baby, came to visit us.

My birthday was given national notice in China, and celebrated as never before; and we whom all our lives have been liable to insult and discrimination on account of our race and color, in China have met universal good will and love, such as we never expected. As we leave may we thank them humbly for all they have done for us, and for teaching us what Communism means.

The people of the land I saw: the workers, the factory hands, the farmers and laborers, scrubwomen and servants. I went to parks and restaurants, sat in the homes of the high and the low; and always I saw a happy people; people with fiath that needs no church nor priest, and who laugh gaily when the Monkey King overthrows the angels. In all my wandering I never felt the touch or breath of insult or even dislike -- I who for ninety years in America scarcely ever saw a day without some expression of hate for "niggers."

What is the secret of China in the second half of the twentieth century? It is that the vast majority of a billion human beings have been convinced that human nature in some of its darkest recesses can be changed, if change is necessary. China knows, as no other people know, to what depths human meanness can go. I used to weep for American Negroes, as I saw what indignities and repressions and cruelties they had passed; but as I read Chinese history in these last months and had it explained to me stripped of Anglo-Saxon lies, I know that no depths of Negro slavery in America have plumbed such abysses as the Chinese have seen for two thousand years and more. They have seen starvation and murder; rape and prostitution; sale and slavery of children; and religion cloaked in opium and gin, for converting the "heathen." This oppression and contempt came not only from Tartars, Mongolians, British, French, Germans and Americans, but from the Chinese themselves: Mandarins and warlords, capitalists and murdering thieves like Chiang Kai-shek; Kuomintang socialists and intellectuals educated abroad.

41-3-348

Despite all this, China lives, and has been transformed and marches on. She is not ignored by the United States. She ignores the United States and leaps forward. What did it? What furnished the motive power and how was it applied? First it was the belief in himself and in his people by a man like Sun Yat-sen. He plunged on blind and unaided, repulsed by Britain and America, but welcomed by Russia. Then efforts toward socialism, which wobbled forward, erred and lost, and at last was bribed by America and Britain and betrayed by Chiang Kai-shek, with its leaders murdered and its aims misunderstood, when not deliberately lied about.

Then came the Long March from feudalism, past capitalism and socialism to Communism in our day. Mao Tse-Tung, Chou En-Lai, Chu Teh and a half dozen others undertook to lead a nation by example, by starving and fighting; by infinite patience and above all by making a nation believe that the people and not merely the elite--that on the contrary the workers in factory, street, and field, composed the real nation. Others have said this often, but no nation has tried it like the Soviet Union and China. And on the staggering and bitter effort of the Soviets, beleagured by all Western civilization, and yet far-seeing enough to help weaker China even before a still weak Russia was safe--on this vast pyramid has arisen the saving nation of this stumbling, murdering, hating world.

41-3-349

In China the people--the laboring people, the people who in most lands are doormats on which the reigning thieves and murdering rulers walk, leading their painted and jeweled prostitutes--the people walk and boast. These people of the slums and gutters and kitchens are the Chinese nation today. This the Chinese believe and on this belief they toil and sweat and cheer.

They believe this and for the last ten years their belief has been strengthened until today they follow their leaders because these leaders have never deceived them. Their officials are incorruptible, their merchants are honest, their artisans are relieable, their workers who dig and haul and lift do an honest days work and even work overtime if their state asks for it, for they are the State; they are China.

A kindergarten, meeting in the once Forbidden City, was shown the magnificence of this palace and told: "Your fathers built this, but did not enjoy it; but now it is yours; preserve it." And then, pointing across the Ten ah Men Square to the vast building of the new Halls of Assembly, the speaker added: "Your fathers are building new palaces for you; enjoy them and guard them for yourselves and your children. They belong to you!"

China has no rank no classes; her universities grant no degrees; her government awards no medals. She has no blue book of "society." But she has leaders of learning and genius, scientists of renown, artisans of skill and millions who know and believe this and follow where these men lead. This is the joy of this nation, its high belief and its unfaltering hope.

China is no utopia. Fifth Avenue has better shops where the rich can buy and the whores parade. Detroit has more and better cars. The best American housing outstrips the Chinese, and Chinese women are not nearly as well-dressed as the guests of the Waldorf-Astoria. But the Chinese worker is happy. He has exorcized the Great Fear that haunts the West; the fear of losing his job; the fear of falling sick; the fear of accident; the fear of inability to educate his children; the fear of daring to take a vacation. To guard against such catastrophe Americans skimp and save, cheat and steal, gamble and arm for murder. The Soviet citizen, the Czech, the Pole, the Hungarian have kicked out the stooges of America and the hoodlums set to explcit the peasants. They and the East Germans no longer fear these disasters; and above all the Chinese sit high above these fears and laugh with joy. They will not be rich in old age, but they will eat. They will not enjoy sickness, but they will be given care. They will not starve as thousands of Chinese did only a generation ago. They fear neither flood nor epidemic. They do not even fear war, as Mao Tse Tung told me, war for China is a"Paper Tiger." China can defend itself and back of China stands the unassailable might of the Soviet Union.

Envy and Class Hate are disappearing in China. Does your neighbor have better pay and higher position than you? He has this because of greater ability or better education, and more education is open to you and compulsory for your children. The young married couple do not fear children. The mother has pre-natal care. Her wage and job are safe. Nursery and kindergarten take care of the child and it is welcome, not to pampered luxury but to good food, constant care and education for his highest ability. All this is not yet perfect. Here and there it fails, falls short and falters, but it is so often and so widely true, that China believes, lives on realized hope, follows its leaders and sings:

41-3-350

"O, Mourner, get up offa your knees."

41-3-351

The women of China are becoming free. They wear pants so that they can walk, climb and dig; and climb and dig they do. They are not dressed simply for sex indulgence or beauty parades. They occupy positions from ministers of state to locomotive engineers, lawyers, doctors, clerks, and laborers. They are escaping "household drudgery;" they are strong and healthy and beautiful not simply of leg and false bosom, but of brain, brawn, and rich emotion. In Wuhan I stood in one of the greatest steelworks of the world. A crane which moved a hundred tons loomed above. I said, "My God, Shirley, look up there!" Alone in the engine-room sat a girl with ribboned braids, running the vast machine.

You won't believe this, because you never saw anything like it; and if the State Department has its way, you never will. Let Life lie about communes; and the State Department shed crocodile tears over ancestral tombs. Let Hong Kong wire its lies abroad. Let "Divine Slavery" persist in Tibet until China kills it. The truth is there and I saw it.

Fifteen times I have crossed the Atlantic and once the Pacific. I have seen the world. But never so vast and glorious a miracle as China. This monster is a nation with a dark-tinted billion born at the beginning of time, and facing its end; this struggle from starved degradation and murder and suffering to the triumph of that Long March to world leadership. Oh beautiful, patient, self-sacrificing China, despised and unforgettable, victorious and forgiving, crucified and risen from the dead.

Miscellaneous

Russians not docile, they push and shove, but not with discourtesy.

Religion bothers them less than it does a New Yorker or a Londoner

Moscow has doubled since 1917—No census since 1939

It has the greatest stretch of broad avenues of any city in the world

I stand in the same square where I stood 32 years ago and see a city transformed to an extent which is not parelleled by New York, Paris, London or Tokyo. The re-building and re-planning has been collossal, but there are gaps, ragged edges.

Russian democracy in the Soviets

The six hour day

Universal high-schooling

The inferiority complex

Insult

Fear

The Marxian Patois

Manufacturing history--Trotsy--Stalin

Self-criticism

The disappearance of the Idle Rich--what that means in Moscow

No paupers

Prisoners and forced work

State murder and executions

The little frustrated Czar, the bemused wife, the sick son and frightened daughters riding the cold and frozen steppes to die in darkness but

Marie Antoinette, Charles

Frankness is the child of security. USA is frank; Britain is not--British socialists and American Trade Unionists not frank

American Negroes just getting frank

COPY

49-32-18

The various questions:

1---Ethical

Murder
Thrift Dictatorship

2--Economic

Land
Government in Industry Education
Capital and Credit

3--Psychology

The worker
The rich Talent Sacrifice
The soul of man

Looking back on Russia, I seem to be able clearly to differentiate three questions or groups of problems; which cluster about all revolutions; Murder and War, Political Persecution; together with certain ethical problems especially to be emphasized in the case of Russia-----the wide of privateproperty for public use and the concentration of political power in the hands of one economic class, the workers and predominately the paid workers. There ethical questions deminate the whole scene outside Russia and Russia is judged almost entirely by the manner of the Western European world to these questions. We shall get nowhere by beginning with those questions because in Russia the answer to them on the part of the undoubtedly majority of the people is that Russia was justified in every step she took. Undoubtedly then we ~~wi~~ shall get nowhere if we begin with the ethical aspect of the problem. There is owever, another aspect of the Russian problem which logically may be put before the ethical and that is the economic. I say logically because theeconomic foundations of our present ~~t~~ ethics is undoubted and if we can settle our main economic problems today we shall to far toward establishing a point of for ethical judgment.

It is then on its economic problem that Russia today must primarily be judged. Russi a has established a socialistic state. We have long been partly socialistic. We have made essays toward socialism but when the socialistic state appears full-fledged, most of us call it by another name and refuse to judge it by its socialism bur rather insist on investigation of the ethics of the methods of its establishment.

Let us then look at Russia and ask what has it done to establish a Socialistic state? First it has nationalized the land. Every ince of land in Russia--the air above it and the resourses beneath belong to the Russian State. Persons who wish to till the soil may have as much land as they can successfully till, with the labor of their own family; and with the death of the father; the children may have first chance at tillege of the same soil. Preference as to kind and place of soil goes to the powanr users of any particular piece. The mineral and oil rights may be farmed out by the government for a term of years but the government retains ownership of mines and wells and the terms of lease are limited. Improvement on the land--houses on farms and homes of the dwellers belong to the builders if they cost less than about $15,000---if more their ownership goes to the state after 49 years.

The state either conducts industry itself or sets the levels of private enterprize. All of the fundamental industries--manufaction of steel and iron, preparation of food stuffs and clothing, most of the exporting industries like coal mining etc are conducted as state-owned trusts. The work of distribution of the products of these industries in order to provide foreign industries is conducted fully by the state, the great cooperative stores and by direct sale, and it is partly open to private enterprize. The scope of private enterprize is therefore mostly confined to imported luxuries or near luxuries.

49-32-20

The government conducts education on a broad scale--not simply common school and elementary training but higher and universal training, industrial training and techniques of all grades and general social education and information includi ng newspapers, radio, news-collection etc. it also undertakes day nurseries, child refuges, orphanages, sometimes old age and motherhood pensions, workers vacations etc.

All this requires from the state enormous capital, a wide spread bureaucracy of intricate administration and indivudual effort of a higher order.

How far is this extraordinary effort successful? The peasants are elated with their access to the land but they have low production because of ignorance, antiquated methods and lack of machinery and markets. This the government is meeting partly by general and special education. Schools are being established--slowly but in considerable numbers. Libraries are being in the schools. I visited a library school. Libraries in such schools are receiving training and advice. Peasant homes are being established. I saw the vast one in Moscow. I visited the one in Njni Novgorod--children, students, and workers are sent to the peasants on vacations; cooperation is taught and attempted in machenery, markets and model farms are being established. Soil investigation goes on. But all this merely scratches the surface. Russia is a vast, vast land. The peasants are widely scattered. Some land is rich some is very poor. In general their winter is terrible and floods and famine must be faced now and then.

Even more than Keiv--few domes and none of gold--great squares of blocks of yellow stone houses on the streets of Keiv. one saw the peasant costumes of Ukraine. The Ukraines are gay, careless, pretty well satisfied tho' I suspect complaint of the former well-to-do, and the Merchant and Marine workers of Odessa must complain. We slipped out of the harbor with red flag flying, turned sharpely to the right and sailed on the dull gray Black Sea along the way of the Golden Fleece from Greece to Byzantium.

The Money In Odessa

My penchant for blurting the truth when lies are better----my apprehension of the customs--very polite and easy--books and paper. My Russian 25 R--not allowed on boat--How much other money? $400--but only $150 allowed --must have permission! 1000 miles from Moscow--or transfer this boat-- no bank near? had noted ruins of one. Conference of 3 or 4 officials and explain ---American money--brought it in (suppose they said--show it?) I had in fact $219.93 together in an envelope in my inside pocket--how to get $400 out-- what to do with checks on Turkey? Must bring in enough to return home. Should have declared it in Leningrad--but I was not asked to; bags easily fastened and set in nice row--11:30 comes I rush and walk past harbor some 200 yards to try but official not there. Across to another office, long conference. Had I any papers? No, but I know L. and K I had been in Kiev, letters back to customs shed--to boat 11:55 bell rings I am in despair--two weeks in Odessa---Poland! another visa when hurried last conference everything all right . This in English (think they concluded I was weak-minded and I admit it) wild ride in car--obstructed street corners, another Entry and name-- Drobya Wilgeln-- back again--now change Russian rubles--12:15--on boat--nerves collapse! We sail 3:30

We face a tremendous problem. Can modern culture eliminate the rich-- not private property not all private industryal enterprise but the rich? Russia is endeavoring to do this. She says: techinque is life today. The worker who knows and does technical work is the only rightful voter. Higher art, literature and science are free upper regions beyond, but ministered to by technique in ministering. Technique as a present eternal fact must be faced not dodged. American socialism and others look on work as an evil to be endured--Russia regards it as a fact essentially eternal on which civilization is based. Unless all work some bear more than their share and some less. Work then becomes the sole basis of political power thus arises the dictatorship of the worker.

49-32-26

The maintainence of this point of view is a problem of foreign war and domestic psychology. The modern world has made tremendous effort to cruch Russian socialism, not only in their great war which lasted up until 1920, but before in 1905; In the invasion of foreign capital with immense profits It has still designs chiefly through Poland.

Russia is fighting back--she must fight. This is the so-called Red Propaganda--"Workers Unite"! and the doctrine that a socialist state can only be established by war. This is by no means true. We might say that democracy can only come by war. In history perhaps such a problem is justified; in science not; only one who realizes the learning and work of Marx hesitates to contradict him idly.

Nevertheless the chief Russian problem is psychological. Can talent sacrifice itself for a generation or more to the socialistic ideal? The talent is there, no one doubts that. It has been prepared and tried by terrible ordeal. Nowhere in the world has such a set of leaders been forged on so blazing an anvil . Go to the museums of Revolution in Moscow and Kiev

But it is costly, God how these men work! Comrade H--6 hours in office; 6-8 in inspection and lectures; The assistant of Lunarchorsky; the Secretary of trade unions; the head of the Mosselfrom--all men working to the limit; failing in health, but on the building goes; Can the Communists maintain their moral domination. They have the beautiful pioneers, the ceaseless outside work, the listening to and answering criticism. They may succeed.

That they employ potent methods is certainly true. No other propaganda is given a chance besides socialism--but the same is true in the United States of America. But it cannot be true that domination in Russia is force --no it is ideas. The one enemy of Soviet Russia is the love of luxury and fashion especially womens' dresses. Perhaps her Russian freedom will help here.

Finally if Russia fails, we fail; reason in industry fails. If Russia succeeds gradually every modern state will socialize industry and the greater the Russian success the less revolution.

4/9-32-23

CONSTANTINOPLE

I have never seen a city like Constantinople. It is magnificent and terrible. It is a microcosm of human life writing all its startling beauty and repulsive cruelty. The great sweep of its domes bulging toward Heaven, its hills, its rivers and seas, its crowded harbor and more crowded streets all give to its 2500 years of history a vividness and measuring which gatherings of men in millions possess.

I qualed before the city. I could get no idea of it. Its infinite widding streets were baffling. It was a great and unknown giant. Then I went down to the Golden Horn and the teeming streets of Stambul and putting my shoes from my feet stood beside the dome of Holy Sophia. 100 feet wide great curve sweeps above the immensity of the church and looms 170 feet above the sofe carpeted floor. It is a singular and mighty thing--40 windows light it and the dome itself rests on four tremendous archs. There are four vast pollows and arcades forming perhaps the most wonderful single building in the world. For 15 centuries this thang has risen, trembled, swayed and groaned and the golden light of its old and holy beauty. It is right for men in bared feet with out-streatched hands and moving mouths to touch their forheads in its dust.

Other things I saw--a palace and guards of the Sultans, the gr at bazaar, the square that was the Colliseum of Extrimus Seven--and one wide look over all the burning beauty of Stamboul and Persia and Galatee to Scutari and the wild rocks of the Principe of Wilson and Trotsky; the golden horn and the Bosphorus, the propontis and away in the distance the shadow of the Hellespout. But all day the great golden aisle of Saint Wislow screamed in my soul.

CONSTANTINOPLE TO MOSCOW

There are striking likenesses and contrasts, links and repuls ons. Civilization came to Russia from Constantinople. Greek Orthodox fleeing from Islam rested and developed in Kiev and Moscow. The iconoclasts drove the icon to Russia, St. Sophia and the East developed the dome churches and overlaid them with gold. Both Constantinople and Moscow are walled towns and Constantinople the culture of the world and Moscow but the Tartars.

Both are republics; but Turkey is held by debt and investment in slavery to Europe. Her hard workers--her beautiful artists and artisans are being slowly pressed to the wall--Witness the great Bazar--- ugly and in bad taste. Cheap, so cheap that Constantinople cannot compete; but what shall they pay? Natural products and crude labor at lowest price or sweaty factory laobr. Thus Europe defeates itself by compulsion downward

And Asia starves and always the government pays the eternal debt. The debt is collosal---eternal. It's origin, its may not be inquired into. The only right is pay or war. It is crazy to call such a government a republic; it is ruled by bondholders--absentee landlordism and Turkey can only strive for independence over crumbs.

Moscow on contraire is attacking this economic problem and questioning unjust debt. How far can A who seizespower B the and pay for ever? And what difference does it make if some of the money is spent in palaces, seragleos and on art? Must art be slave to public debt as it ever was to private alms? Poverty with art at the hold may be the answer--the fine big eternal answer. On the other hand, the visitors--rich and near rich and rich initiative will prefer Constantinople to Moscow. Ships are full of luxuries for the rich. Women are silk clad and for sale. The world is ordered for the well-to-do. In Moscow there are few prostitutes, few luxuries for sale. A strait almost grim regions of poorly clothed people--few silk stockings and a terribly earnest at empt to erect a world of and by the workers.

Beggers? There are beggers in most cities but in Constantinople they are a permanent stereotyped popular institution with of explanation and arrangement--In Russia they are a remnant, distrusted.

Religion in both places---Naive beautiful and of the poor. In Russia attended and regulated by the wise. In Constantinople left to the poor. Both countries have no problem of color and race but both hate Western Europe and its system.

Freedom in Russia

Unconscious of race--the small peoples and their education and autonomy --unparallelled in the world--criticism in newspapers and speech.

Judging Russia

There is no question but that a government can carry on business. Every government does. Whether governmental industry compares in efficien cy with private industry depends entirely upon what we call efficiency. And here it is and not elsewhere that the Russian experi ent is astonishing and new and of fateful importance to the future civilization. What we call efficiency in America is judged primarily by the resultant profit to the rich and only secondarily by the results to the workeers. The face of industrial Europe and America is set toward private wealth; that is, toward the people who have large incomes. We recognize the economic value of small incomes mainly as a means of profit for great incomes. Russia seeks another psychology. Russia is trying to make the workingman the main object of industry. His wellpbeing and his income are deliberately set as the chief ends of organized industry, directed by the state.

One can stand on the streets of Moscow or Kiev and see clearly that Russia has struck at the citadels of the power that rules modern countries. Not manhood suffrage, woman's suffrage, state regulation of industry, social reform nor religious and moral teaching in any modern country have shorn organized wealth of its power as the Bolshevik Revolution has done in Russia. Is it possible to conduct a great modern government without the autocratic leadership of the rich? The answer is: this is exactly what Rvssia is doing today. But can she continue to do this? This is not a question of ethics or economics; it is a question of psychology. Can Russia continue to think of the State continue to think of the State in terms of the worker? This can happen only if the Russian people believe and idealize the workingman as the chief citizen. In America we do not. The ideal of every American is the millionaire--or at least the man of "independent" income. We regard the laborers as the unfortunate part of the community and even liberal thought is directed toward "emancipating" th workeringman by relieving him in part if not entirely of the necessity of work. Russia, on the contrary, is seeking to make a nation believe that work and work that is hard and in some respects disagreeable and work which is to a large extent physical is a necessity of human life at present and likely to be in any conceivable future world; that the people who do this work are the ones who should determine how the national income from their combined efforts should be distributed; in fine, that the workingman is the State; theat he makes civilization possible and should determine what civilization is to be.

49-32-14

For this purpose he must be a workingman of skill and intelligence and to this combined end Russian education is being organized. This is what the Russian Dictatorship of the Proletariat means. This dictatorship does not stop there. As the workingman is today neither skilled nor intelligent to any such extent as his responsibilities demand, there is within his ranks the Communist party, directing the proletariat toward their future dictatorship. This is nothing new. In this government "of the people" we have elaborate and many-sided arrangements for ruling the rulers. The test is, are we and Russia really preparing future rulers? In so far as I could see, in shop and school, in the press and on the radio, in books and lectures, in trades unions and National Congresses, Russia is. We are not.

Visioning now a real dictatorship of the Proletariat, two questions follow. Is it possible today for a great nation to achieve sucha workers' psychology? And secondly, if it does achieve it what will be its effect upon the world? The achievement of such a psychology depends partly upon Russia and partly upon the United States and the Western Europe. In Russia one feels today, even on a casual visit, the beginning of a workingman's psychology. Workers are the people thatfill the streets and live in the best houses, even though these houses are dilapidated; workers crowd (literally crowd) the museums and theaters, hold the high offices, do the public thinking, travel in the trains.

Nowhere in modern lands can one see less of the spender and the consumer, the rich owners and buyers of luxuries, the institutions which cater to the idle rich. One sees in Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev neither first-class hotels, nor luxurious restaurants, nor private motor cars, nor silk stockings nor prostitutes. All these insignia of the great modern city are lacking. On the other hand, the traveler misses the courtesy and savoir faire which one meets in the hotel corridors of London and Paris; one misses the smart shops and well-groomed men and women who are so plentiful in Constantinople and Berlin. Does this mean that Russia has "put over" her new psychology? Not by any means. She is trying and trying hard, but there are plenty of people in Russia who still hate and despise the workingman's blouses and the peasant's straw shoes; and plenty of workers who regret the passing of the free-handed Russian nobility; who miss the splendid pageantry of the Czars and who cling doggedly to religious dogma and superstition. There must be in Russia dishonest officials and inefficient statesmen. But here Russia has no monopoly. There are those in Russia and out who say that the present effort cannot succeed for exactly the same reasons that men said the Bourgeoisie could never rule France.

But it is the organized capital of American England, France and Germany which is chiefly instrumental in preventing the realization of the Russian workingman's psychology. It has used every modern weapon to crush Russia. It sent against Russia every scoundrel who could lead a mob and gave him money, guns and ammunition; and when Russia nearly committed suicide in crushing this civil war, modern industry began the industrial boycott, the refusal of capital and credit which is being carried on today just as far as international jealousy and greep will allow. And can we wonder? If modern capital is owned by the rich and handled for their power and benefit, can the rich be expected to hand it over to their avowed and actual enemies? On the contrary, if modern industry is really for the bene-fit of the people and if there is an effort to make the people the chief bene-ficiaries of industry, why is it that this same people is powerless today to help this experiment or at least to give it a clear way? On the other hand, so long as the most powerful nations in the world are determined that Russia must fail, there can be but a minimum of free discussion and democratic dif-ference of opinion in Russia.

47-32-16

There is world struggle then in and about Russia; but it is not simply an ethical problem as to whether or not the Russian Revolution was morally right; that is a question which only history will settle. It is not simply the economic question as to whether or not Russia can conduct industry on a national scale. She is doing it today and in so doing she differs only in quantity, not in quality from every other modern country. It is not a question merely of "dictatorship." We are all subject to this form of government. The real Russian question is: Can you make the worker and not the millionaire the center of modern power and culture? If you can, the Russian Revolution will sweep the world.

My recent trip I had planned for revisiting Germany and I had hoped to pay for it by certain lectures in Switzerland and Germany and by magazine artiles in the United States. Just before I started an American citizen of Russian descent offered to pay the expense if I would go to Russia. I replied: "I am not at all saitsfied with the knowledge that I have of the Russian Revolution. I should like to learn, if possible, at first hand just what has taken place in Russia and just what the development is at present. I do not know that I could learn anythigg that would be of advantage to the colored people of the United States, but if there is anything to learn I am eager to learn it. On the other hand, in undertaking this or any other trip I should not wantto obligate myself to come to any particular conclusions or to follow any line of action or to see the facts with any other eyes except my own."

My friend accepted these conditions and I went to Russia.

I went to Antwerp to see Rubens. Then I ascended the Rhine lokking at the great vaulted cathedral at Cologne, at the Lorelei, at the Rheinfels, glancing at the old street of the Jews in Frankfort. I went up into the Thuringian forest where I first learned to know the old world and its culture, a quarter century ago. Then I saw Berlin, that giant city which has become since the day I knew it one of the few centers of the world.

Taking a little boat at Stettin I sailed three days through the Baltic and the Gulf of Finland until I came to the city that once was St. Petersburg andto the street which was once the Nevski Prospeckt. I saw the dark red mass of the Winter Palace and went out to the gorgeous park that was once the Czar's village, (Tsarskoe-Selo) and is now called by the Bolashviks--the Children's village,---happy word! Staying here but a few days I want on to Moscow where I lived a month. My home was in Revolution Square xhxxx where I could look upon the walls of the Kremlin. A few steps brought me to Red Square and the Mausoleum of Lenin. I wandered into all the nooks and crannies of the city unattended. Not being an official visitor, I met few officials and did not join the excursions arranged for foreigners.

49-6-27

But after all, Moscow is bureaucracy. Real Russia lies just outside. I had always ~~x~~ wanted to see Nijni Novgorod, far out on the Volga. I wanted to see the Ukraine. Then at Kiev, I started to return through Poland and Berlin, but scanning my geography I figured out a bit of almost impossible romance at no greater cost, and said to myself, "Why not return by the Black Sea and Constantinople and Greece, Naples and Gibralter?" I hesitated. It seemed almost fantastic and yet at last I ventured. I did it.

But always the center of all this was Russia, and of Russia I have much to tell in days to come.

49-6-88

RUSSIA

Yesterday, my in Moscow we went at one p. m. to a magistrate's court--clean square white room, wooden benches:

(1) Well filled with people.
(2) A portion railed off with a plain table
(3) Draped in red, at the table the main Judge
(4) The two temporary assessors
(5) A clerk

The Judge was intelligent The Assessors seemed ordinary common people. We listened but said nothing. The case was a labor

They wanted state uniforms

A working man testified and Judge and all the judge directing the tlak. No lawyers, witnesses and litigents all stood within the rail ar und the table. No Bible, nor swearing--case carried over. Next case had lawyers and was postponed--absence of witness.

to the Secretary of the Trade Central Organisation of the SSSR . Twenty-three u ions of workers of all Russia. 9,704,000 members 92% of all wage earners. Some preference for union workers. Collective agreements--Biennal Congress 1800-2000 delegates--1 for each 10,000 members. State Central Organizations with delegates-- reprinted. These elect natural delegats. Delegates uninstructed. not Trade unions--all in industry join and transfer from industry allowed. Sweepers as well as skilled all in union with one vote. Union representatives in government and counselled in every industrial move.

Strikes against managers. Arbritration,-9 million wage earners--number increasing rapidly with increasing industry. All factories now in use (some with poor machinery) new factories building.

After a lunch with Champagne (7R) Off to Kiev at 7.10

68-9-64

The Sunflowers of Russia ------ of S. U. in the black Ukraine. The poet Schuchchenko.

We cross the sand-bound Dnieper--a great white tower rises with smaller threads of gold and white walls. We see the low flaring domes of Kiev. Physically Kiev is . The Dnieper almost knots itself around it and the city runs plane on plane, each plance at angles with the other, all facing different fronts and all apparently unseen and unheard of by the other. It gives the impression of three or four independent in juxtaposition and yet not neighbors for their streets never apparently meet or mingle.

I visited the Mayor--an intelligent well-groomed man who expalned the land question. All Russian land is nationalized. Peasants may have what they can till and bequeath the right of tillage to their children, ~~xxxxxx xxxxxxx xxx~~ failing to use the land it returns to the State. They own and can buy all the buildings. In the cities small houses belonging to owners. Those worth over $10 or $15,000 to the state. New buildings erected ~~xxxxx~~ and costing more than $15,000 belong after 49 years to the State.

We then went to the Polytechnique with 2500 students , well equiped laboratories with research. Then to the Lenin school for abandoned children--1000 children nurchured at $135,000 a year. They come voluntarily --one weeks trial and then are sifted and distributed to 1, 4, and 7 year courses with shop common boarding and division into circles of common living, recreation etc. Common club rooms, theatre, wall paper drawing--look happy--not compelled to stay. Ten or twelve run away each year.

Today I visited the Lawa, an old fortified monastery with its great towers and clouds of golden domes--a charming lady who spoke French showed us the museum and underground catacombs with tombs and bodies--a curious and gruesome sight. Some icons of the 6th to the 11th century. Chests with complicated locks, beautiful vestments --O the money spent on vestments in Russia. Then to an "rcheological museum--a ride beside the Dnieper and in the Postal near "Beulick" and home to dinner and the train.

You should see the Ukraine in its beauty said Madame--wellbred, a bit pitiful. The day was grey slightly leaden aloft. The Dnieper was a brown stream and the purple stepps shel ed away and blurred shadows. I'm sure the Ukraine in Spring may have a startling beauty.

Odessa rose formally from he wide scrub covered stepps. It is a city staggering in its sleep--wounded walls and houses down--more acres of destruction and everywhere neglect and lack of repairs. And yet withal a certain beauty and stateliness. and th the wide sweep of the Black Sea. I walked beside its banks today--the shore plunges down in -----ravine and the dark water swells and gleams below. There is a statue of Puskin "From grateful Odessa"--a beautiful opera house over a work of consumate art. I saw the stepps and bridges of the "Battle stop Podempkin".

But I am weary now. I go. Good bye Russia. God keep you.
Odessa is an imposing city by the sea. Its harbor is empty and in part crippled, in part rebuilt. I liked not to have gotten away because I confessed to $400. The officials rushed about--at least Odessa is decidedly Western in aspect.

49-6-91

Never on so broad a side has an attempt been made to reach and civilize the country districts of a vast country. I cannot forsee its results. I saw the Russian country-side only at a distance.

In the cities the land and home questions are difficultto estimate. Some new one family houses I saw building in Nini Norgord and the outskirts of the cities; some large apartments building for a hundred or more families with one to four rooms are building in Moscow and NiniGorod. In most cases people are swarm ng in buildings built for rich elaborate ara tments of 8 and 10 rooms or hotel and office buildings. They are crowded and uncomfortable, although they are more comfortable than before. They gave the city a ragged delapidated appearance. In Leningrad, Moscow and Kiev and Odessa there was the same swarming and delapidation in residential quarters. This however is not to be laid altogether to socialism. War, foreign, civil and famine for 10 years is the true cause. Only in the last two or three years has the socialistic state begun to try to house the people.

In industry one can see results easier and measure progress. Advancements in state craft are not unlike advanterers in travel. Have you been to Constantinople? The well-known Yankee answers yes and the smells! Well Constantinople smells but there are more then smells in Constantinople.

(The tremendous economic part of womens' clothes. In U.S. bribery vs freedom. In Russia --freedom and sex laws may overcome it. Comrade Helens)

I visited 2 large factories and a dozen or more state owned and private stores. The food factory was a model of efficiency and cleanliness. The steel factory was a tremendous effort--less successful but its success meant more. Russian foods are high but the food is excellent--the service good, the stores crowded with long queues; all factories in use--new building. Only capital needed. To some capital means tremendous sacrifice. Capital is wanting in Russia--compelling an army, speaking propaganda. Can Russia stand it?

Everything depends on its ability to maintain the national will to see this thing through. At present it works. Industry increases, agriculture improves, trade increases buildings multiply, education widens --slowly, slowly but surely. What is the government that does this? It is a dictatorship of workers, but was once a government dictatorship ~~by~~ of property owners. Russia is governed by the trade unions and the peasants and the unions are cheifly guided by the Communist party. In other words, Russia has encouragedthe worker as the modern man ~~in as we have~~ encouraged the rich man and the entrepreneur. Whether or not Russia is right we are certainly wrong and we know it and acknowledge we can only say: This is the only practical way.

COPY

49-6-93

Colver

Yesterday, my last in Moscow we went at 1 to 2 a magistrates court - clean square waiting room

Wooden benches in 1 with packed with people. 2 a partition railed off with a table 3 draped in red. At the table the main Judge 4 & the two temporary assessors 2 5 6 & a clerk 7. The Judge was intelligent looking & the assessors seemed ordinary common people. No lawyers but several waiting. The case was a labor dispute - the coal comes into Moscow by barges and the men & women who load & unload them complained that they had to pay for their own clothes. They wanted more wages & pay for these in 1925. A workman, the accused & Judge & all debated

31-2-15

Ex. Judge directs the Cloth. Two Lawyers Witnesses & Delegates all Clerk inside the rail around the Table. Two bible oaths. Long Case carried over. Next case had Lawyers & Cross Examined - absent of witness

—

A/Sec & Re Sec. of the Trade
Union Central Organization of the USSR
Large office Already. 23 Unions of Industries of all Russia. 8,704,000 members 92% of all wage earners. Some Reference for Union Workers. Collective agreements. Biennial Congress 1800-2000 delegates - 1 for each 10,000 members
State central organizations with delegates
Inspectorate & Control not represented. Those elect Central delegates. Delegates Commissariat Industry - not Trade Unions. All
Industry Boss & Trusts from Industry & Industry allowed. Speeches as well as Ballot all in Union each one vote Unions not represented in Gov. & Council in Every Industry & Around Clubs against Managers. Attached

9 million wage earners - number increasing rapidly, mild increase in industry. All factories work in use (some with three shifts working) new machines daily

After a lunch with Champagne (7 Rs) left K. at 7.10

The Sunflowers of Russia

Left by S.T. in the black Uhrain the first Tschechenko.

We cross the sand-barred Dnieper a great white tower rises with wreaths of gold & white walls. We see the low blazing domes of Kiev

Especially K. is Constantinople

The Dnieper almost knots itself around it & the city rises plane on plane, each plane at angles with the other, all being different from & all apparently unseen & unheard of by the other. I gives the impression of 3 or 4 individuals in just left alone & yet not neglected for their absence never appeared to be missed. I visited the mayor – an intelligent well groomed man who explained the local question. All Russian Land is nationalized. They peasants may have what they can till

31-2-21

o bequeath the sum of £1,000 to their children. Partly to meet the cost of rebuilding the Club premises which were destroyed by fire on the other small houses belong to owners. These worth over £10 or £15,000 & the Club new buildings erected & only more than £15,000 before the 49 years to the Club

We then owned to the Poly Technic with 2500 students well equipped laboratories with research. When do the Union rebuild for abandoned

Children - 10000 children murdered @ £135000 a yr
They come voluntarily on weeks trial & then are lobbed & distributed to 1,997 yrs homes with short common boarding & dormitories ~~boys~~ Circles of common living, recreation & C. Club rooms theatre, wall paper drawing - Cooperative. Not compelled & rating. 10 or 12 run away each year

Today I visit the Louvre an old fortified museum with its great walls towers & clocks & golden domes - a charming lady who spoke French showed us the museum & underground Catacombs with bones & bodies - Roman & previous. Some views of the Old Mr Cemetery & streets with cobble locks; beautiful weather - I like many shops on Rue Rivoli
Paris. Then I saw Archeological Museum - & ride across the Seine & in the Postal Rue
"Bleick" & home & dinner & train

31-2-22

You should see the Abraams in the Kitchen said Madame would find a bit helpful. The day was grey miserably leaden dreary. The Beaches were as brown sheen + the Rapell steeples shelved away & blurred shadows. Even now the V. ra spring may have a starkly beauty.

Cheese rose heavily from the wide Seine covered decks. It is a city sloppen in its sleep wrapped against walls & towers down - more acres of dark green & everywhere warped & cracked repairs. But yet walked a certain beauty & stateliness & ah the wide stretch of the Black sea. & walked beside it hours & day — the shore plunges down in ruined walls ravine & the dark water still & gleam below. We as a history "Pushkin's Bum grateful Odessa" — a beautiful open square & the 31-2-23

was once a work of consumate art. I saw the sleeves & badges of the "battle ship Potemkin"

But I am weary now.
I go. God keep you
God keep you.

Odessa is an unhappy city by the sea. Its once harbor is empty & its port crippled, its fame reduced
I have not to leave yet any hearer
I enjoyed it so much. The officials worked about — at last even Odessa is dead[illegible] western in order

This has been copied

9

Never on no board a decade has an attempt been made to reach & Cuelope the Common Interests of a Ward Court. I commit pre hist the results I saw the Parsons county city at a distance

In the cities the Court & home garden are developed & extended. Some new one family houses & some tenements & flats & the enlistment of other cities; Some large apartments houses for a hundred or more families with 1- & room are known as M x N. In most cases people are swarmed in buildings built for rich Victorian apartments of 8 & 10 rooms, or in hotels & office & business buildings. They are crowded & uncomfortable also foolish more comfortable than before. He gave the city a regular debauched appearance. In Jerusalem, Moscow Paris & Odessa there was the same misery & debauchery in residence quarters. This however is not to be laid altogether to Socialism. War brought evil & famine for 10 years is the great curse daily in the last 2 or 3 years has the socialistic state begun to try to lower the people

31-2-20

Undoubtedly we can read records easier & more & judge

Adventure in state capitol are not unlike adventures in Israel. Where your ideas & Conclusions? The well known Spanish proverb yes & the smells. Well C. smells but there are more than smells in C.

[The tremendous economies had of women's clothes. In U.S. & Lubeck vs. freedom In Russia freedom & sex laws must overcome it – Comrade Helena]

I visited 2 large factories & a dozen or more state owned & private stores
The food factory was a model of efficiency & cleanliness. The shell factory was a tremendous effort – less successful but the success meant more. Russian food are high but the food is excellent & there, the service good & the stores crowded with long queues. All factories in use – none building. Only capital used To save capital means tremendous sacrifice. Capital is scarcer in Russia – completely an army speaking propaganda
Can Russia stand it?

Every thing depends on absolutely & immediate the National will & very thing else. At present it works. Industry increases, agriculture improves, trade increases, buildings multiply, education widens — slowly slowly but surely what is the government that does that It is a dictatorship of workers just as ours is a dictatorship of property owners. Russia is governed by the trades unions & the peasants & the unions are closely guided by the Communist party. In other words R. has overturned the Worker as the chief useless man as we have overturned the rich man & the entrepreneur. Whether or not R. is right we are certainly wrong & we know it & acknowledge it & can only say: This is the only practical way

1 11

National Guardsmen began training here

elegant luxury linings service + home-grown Confederates

THE WAR TO PRESERVE SLAVERY

by

W. E. B. Du BOIS

41-3-290

One hundred years ago next year this nation began a war more horrible than most wars, and all wars stink. From 1861 to 1865 Americans fought Americans, North fought South, brothers fought brothers all trampled on the faces of four million black folk cowering beneath their feet in mud and blood. Some Americans hated slavery but were unwilling to fight. They would let the "erring sisters depart in peace," with their ~~land and slaves~~. Free Negroes and their white friends organized the escape of slaves and fugitive slaves became a main cause of war. One man, John Brown, fought slavery with bare fists and was crucified three years before the flash of Sumter.

So the nation reeled into murder, hate, hurt and destruction until they killed 493,273 human beings in battle and a million more in pain, and nearly bankrupted the whole nation. "We are not fighting slavery," cried the North. "We are fighting for independence," cried the South. "We are not fighting with Negroes," insisted the North as it returned black fugitives. "Negroes do not want to be free," jeered the South; Negroes whispered, "Let us fight for freedom."

The Northerners hated the struggle and nearly all who could bought immunity, while some laborers rioted and hanged Negroes to lamp posts. Most workers refused to volunteer and thousands of soldiers deserted from the ranks.

The South yelled and rushed to war, ran the Northerners home again and again, ranted and blustered and tried to frighten victory out of impossible

Y odds

Louder and louder rose voices in the North: "Free the slaves!" It was the only real reason for war. Lincoln was firm, "I am not fighting to free slaves but only for Union" -- union of plant, manufacture and trade. Still voices arose led by Frederick Douglass: "Arm the slaves." Lincoln sneered, "It would be giving arms to the enemy."

The Northern armies began to use the slaves as servants, stevedores and spies; already the Southerners were using the slaves to guard their families and to raise food and clothes for themselves as they fought the fight for slavery. The world looked in amazement on this new free democracy as it staggered, killed and destroyed, both sides appealing for help.

Slowly in the gloom thousands of black slaves began silently to move from plantation to the camps of the Northern armies. Slowly the nation joined the cry of black and white abolitionists, "Free the slaves!" And the bleeding trenches added, "Arm them! The slaves are already armed with muscles if not with guns. They will feed the slave power unless we use them." Black regiments appeared in Kansas, South Carolina and Louisiana. Finally Lincoln saw the truth and began to change his mind. He offered compensated emancipation and colonization of blacks abroad. The South refused. The war reached bloody stalemate and the nation trembled. Volunteers ceased to offer and corpses clogged the rivers of Virginia. Lee started North, and Lincoln threatened. "Surrender or I abolish slavery," he cried in September 1862 beneath the smoke of Antietam. He armed two hundred thousand slaves and a million awaited his call.

The Negroes fought like the damned, two hundred thousand of them; led by two hundred black officers and subalterns among whites; they tore into a hundred and more battles and left seventy thousand dead and dying on the fields. They served in every arm of service and in every area of struggle. They were slaughtered at Fort Wagner to hold Carolina. They committed suicide at Port Hudson so that the Father of Waters should flow unvexed to the sea;" they were buried in the Crater to help Grant capture Richmond, the capital of the Confederacy, and a black regiment led Abrahmm Lincoln through the city singing.

"John Brown's body lies a mouldering in the grave
But his soul goes marching on..."

The South cursed them and treated them as outlaws; Forest murdered and burned them at Fort Pillow. But Lincoln testified that without these black soldiers and the hundreds of thousands of Negro laborers, guards, informers and spies we could not have won the war. On January 1, 1863, Lincoln declared the slaves in rebel territory then, "thenceforward and forever free." The South saw hell in the blazing heavens and with one last gasp tried themselves openly to arm the slaves. They failed and Lee surrendered.

Such was the sordid tale of the war which has been called, the "Rebellion," the"Civil War" and the "War Between the States;" but whose real name was the "War to Preserve Slavery." That was the only name which made sense to those who fought the war and those who supported it. It sang in their songs and chanted in their poetry:

"In the beauty of the lilies
Christ was born across the sea.
As he died to make men holy,
Let us die to make men free..."

Then we turned from the abolition of slavery to our muttons, to making money. Some Americans stepped forward with alms and teachers for the black freedmen. Some rushed South to make money with cheap labor and high cotton. But most of the nation tried to forget the Negro. He was free, what more did he want? He asked for a Freedmen's Bureau and got a small one paid for mainly with the unclaimed bounties of dead black soldiers. Philanthropists gave him a bank and cheated him out of most of his savings when it failed. Votes? Nonsense, unless planters demand a lower tariff, payment for the Confederate debt and compensation for freed slaves. We refused to let the horrible mistake of war teach our children anything. We gave it less and less space in our textbooks, until today slavery gets a paragraph and the Civil War a page.

Moreover the whole cause and meaning of the war is distorted in ~~1,000~~ 10,000 books which falsify the real story. Now in weighty tomes gaudy magazine and television the war was merely an unfortunate misunderstanding. It seems nobody wanted slavery and the South having had it forced upon her was about to abolish it but for senseless, impatient agitation. All of our history from the Missouri Compromise through the Compromise of 1850 to the secession of South Carolina is being thus rewritten and the Negro painted as a contented slave, a lazy freedman, a thieving voter and today happily integrated into American life.

Thereupon with no guidance from the past the nation marched on with officers strutting, bands playing and flags flying to secure colonial empire and new cheap slave labor and land monopoly in Asia, Africa and the islands of the seas. We fought two World Wars killing 500,000 American youth, and added 50,000 more dead by "police action" in Korea and germ warfare in China. In all we destroyed more wealth than we have since been able to count. We are now wasting $50,000,000,000 a year for more wars and we owe $284,000,000,000 for past wars. In 60 years we have spent only $10 billion for education.

41-3-292

So now comes the time to celebrate the War to Preserve Slavery. The South which for a century has insisted that theirs was a just war fought with the highest motives by the noblest of men is pouring forth books and pamphlets to prove this. This all Southern white children have been taught to believe until it is to most of them a matter of absolute and indisputable truth. Historians, North and South, have spread the story and artists have depicted it, so that most Southern states next year will celebrate as a triumph in human effort this despicable struggle to keep Black Americans in slavery.

The North on the other hand sees little reason to remember or celebrate thiswar. It would prefer to forget it but most Northern states will stage some sort of celebration to recall the keeping of this nation united for producing more millionaires than any other people and for proving what philanthropists we are. We are still giving orders to Negroes

The South will preen itself. What a courageous folk, lynching single-handed since the war at least 5,000 helpless Negroes and disfranchising three 3,000,000. Virginia will lead rejoicing with $1,750,000 and Mississippi close behind with $500,000. Arkansas will join in with Faubus, and Georgia will sing the Jubilee but not with "Marching Through Georgia." Colored citizens will be asked to attest how loyally they protected old master's family while he fought for slavery.

The whole United States will stage a mighty pageant to cost at first $200,000 and millions later. Big Business including the Stock Exchange and Travel Bureaus will play a major part, but the Emancipation of slaves will be ignored. So says the head, a nice old white gentleman with a black mammy who serves under an army general, called deservedly the Third Ulysses S. Grant.

41-3-293

Listen America! Hear that we will not celebrate the freeing of four million slaves, O dark Potomac where looms the gloom of the Lincoln Memorial. Father Abraham, unlimber those great limbs; let the bronze blaze with blood and the eyes of sorrow again see. Stand and Summon out of the past the Woman whose eyes saw "the glory of the Coming of the Lord;" the Seer who said, "For what avail the plough or sail or land or life if Freedom fail?" The Abolitionist who cried: "I will not retreat a single inch and I will be heard!" Arouse Phillips and Sumner, Stevens and Birney and the whole legion who hated slavery and let them march to Capitol Hill. Warn them again, that this nation must have a "new birth of freedom" even if "all the wealth piled up by the bondsmen's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk" and if "every drop of blood drawn by the lash, be paid by another drawn by the sword," as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said that the "judgements of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

This is but the raving of an old man who has long dreamed that American Negroes could be men and look white America in the face without blinking. Not only dreamed but saw in 1913 the Negroes of six states celebrate the Jubilee of Emancipation without apology. Here in New York we inaugurated an abolition celebration securing a state appropriation of $10,000 and a Negro Board of Control. We spent the money honestly and effectively and centered it on recalling the part which Negroes played in the war. We pictured the progress of American Negroes and the forgotten history of their motherland, Africa. For a week beginning October 21, 1913 in the 11th Regiment Armory, 9th Avenue and 62 Street, 30,000 persons attended the celebration and 350 actors took part. Few who saw ever forgot the Egyptian Temple, the Migration of the Bantu and the March of the Black Soldiers. Three times later in Washington, Philadelphia and Los Angeles the pageant was repeated. James Weldon Johnson and I went further and planned for 1918 a Jubilee of the 14th Amendment, but the First World War killed that dream.

41-3-293a

Today no Negro leader who holds a good government appointment, or is favored of the great benevolent foundations or has a job in Big Business, or is financed by the State Department to travel abroad will dare dream of celebrating in any way the role which Negroes played in the Civil War. It would be "racist" for an "integrated" Negro American to recall the Emancipation of black slaves in the United States. And any Negro school or college would risk its income if it staged a celebration.

Possibly the main moral of all this is the failure of History as it is taught today even to attempt to tell the exact truth or learn it. Rather so many historians conceive it their duty to teach as truth what they or those who pay their salaries believe ought to have been true. Thus we train generations of men who do not know the past, or believe a false picture of the past, to have no trustworthy guide for living and to stumble doggedly on, through mistake after mistake to fatal ends. Our history becomes "lies agreed upon" and stark ignorance guides our future.

To the National Guardian
5/12/60

pub. 5/23/60

41-3-275

INSANITY

by W. E. B. Du Bois

Daily lately as I read the morning news, I find myself asking if age is driving me a bit crazy or if I'm living in a crazy nation. I have lived through much history and read far more, but I can remember no situation which parallels the present. Governments and rulers have always lied. But never with the quick bland easy assurance like our transformation of a spying trip which failed into a weather exploration; and then blaming the Soviet Union for "propaganda." Similarly we lied about dropping disease germs on China; and we have only to scan our magazines to see how the United States is being transformed from an unsophisticated people of original Tinkers and Thinkers to a nation of Liars and Buyers.

President Eisenhower continues to astonish me. Yesterday this Delphic oracle came from the golf links: "We never enslaved anyone." Today we learn that Turkey is not our spy base but a "bastion of Freedom," where Nato of the "Free World" dares not stay long enough to hear the President's welcome, because Menderes is trying to outrun angry students threatening his life.

Right here I draw a breath of relief. Students at last to the rescue even in the West. I had lost faith in them as during the McCarthy nightmare I spoke at a few institutions and looked into their blank faces. But today young seekers after knowledge live again despite a woeful lack of teachers. Not only in Turkey which we have purchased, but in Japan where they defy Kishi's plan to tie Nippon to the Pentagon; and in South Korea where they have driven a demagogue out of power.

Of course I am especially uplifted by the revolt of Negro students in America. With no leadership nor encouragement from their own people; (despite all the present declarations of the johnnie-come latelies frantically scrambling aboard the band-wagon) alone and unaided they put their finger on a vital spot and acted. Our Negro Problem is not simply disfranchisement, lynching, mob-law, court injustice and wide-spread serfdom with poverty and disease; it is a daily, unending series of petty, senseless insults carried out almost everywhere and always by civilized, people of religion and culture, for no earthly reason except senseless meanness and neglect. In the South a Negro goes downtown to buy a few necessities, and can't buy a bite to eat; he can't get a drink; he can't go to a movie; sometimes he can't sit in a park, and of course he can't bathe in the ocean, even as in Biloxi, in the most ignorant state of the union, where there are 26 miles of beach. Black students, not agitators, not even radicals since little economics or social science is taught in Southern schools; just honest clear-headed youth who one day say, "We buy our school books and paper at Woolworth's, why not buy a sandwich?" Then the proud, cultured South goes beserk. Boys and girls are arrested, clubbed and jailed. Churches sing, pray and send Billy Graham to Africa. Still students "sit down." Then Big Business moves in. It threatens colored college presidents. Some like Wright of Fisk refuse to yield. Some like Trenholm of Alabama crawl. Then Big Business squeezes parents and some parents to save their jobs plead with their children; but at least at one colored college four thousand students withdraw while their president skulks. They threaten to put a whitee presdient at Lincoln who will teach Negroes their place. They may try this at Howard. They may starve Fisk. What will result? Will the students fall back into line? I think not. Some white students feel the glorious possibilities of this day; but the nation is silent and dumb.

41-3-226

Are we happy at all this? No, America is scared to death. Asia has arisen. Africa arises. The Soviet Union marches on. East Europe is triumphant. Cuba is free. Panama and Latin America follow. But the United States is stubborn.

We lie about China and support a man on her borders to attack her whom we ourselves have called a scoundrel. We invest six hundred million dollars in slave labor and stolen gold, diamonds and uranium in South Africa where our Boer allies have 18,000 Negroes in jail and ten million fated to be hammered into slavery. We woo Adenauer to preserve a Germany which our army with the help of Stinky of the American Federation of Labor designed as a threat for a Third World War to conquer the Soviets; we bribe Franco, cajole Italy and as long as possible we will hang on to Trujillo. We are intriguing in Viet-Nam and Laos and praying for war between India and China, which fails to occur.

Signs of disaster gather about our heads. We are unable to sell enough abroad to pay for what we buy and have been compelled to spend billions a year out of our horde of gold to pay the deficit. Our cost of living rises continuously and unemployment spreads, despite our ingenious efforts to deceive the public. The gamblers of the stock market are sweating in vain to unload on the suckers the inflated values of our monopolized industry. We are soaking the sick with high-priced medicines and hospital fees beyond reach of the poor. We are bribing our skilled labor with high wage paid out of exploited Negro and Mexican labor and from the poverty and disease of poor whites. Our justice is showered with injustice. Our jails seethe with the revolts of the wretched and the innocent and of thousands whose only crime is being black. We murder Chessman for no crime we can prove; we jail Uphaus and Sobel, torture Winston and drive Heikkila to death. Why? The bomb-proof shelters of the editorial offices of the New York Times hear a rumor that our judges often actually pay two years salary for nomination.

We are deliberately distorting history; not simply United States history so as to excuse Negro slavery and deify slave owners; to praise the traitors who solemnly swore to support their country and then fought desperately to betray it and preserve Negro slavery, but especially to twist and distort the world wars and the triumph of socialism.

41-3-277

We started with propaganda whi h out-Hitler d Hitler. Big Business monopolised news-gathering, newspapers, periodicals and publishing. The nation was led to believe that Communism was a conspiracy and crime, and socialism its handmaid. We were told that the Communist states were failures, their citizens serfs and prisoners, seething with revolt; their women prostitutes and their education only "brain-washing"propaganda. Many wanted to use our atom bomb immediately on Moscow but when we found the Soviets already had it we accused them of stealing it from us as they were certainly too dumb to invent it.

We planned war. Our State Department cooperated with Collier's magazine in 1951. Our national leaders cooperated and the nation was primed to conquer the Soviet Union in 1960. This is 1960. This was to be the year of conquest. Colliers (of blessed memory) foretold the event in 130 pages, written by Allan Nevins our"leading" historian, Stuart Chase our "leading" economist, Edwin R. Murrow our "great" news interpreter, Margaret Chase Smith, our woman senator, Robert Sherwood and J. B. Priestly. Our Senator wrote of "Russia Reborn" under American soldiers, presumably armed with flaming napalm and disease germs. This vo victory has been postponed, but our propaganda continued. We financed rebellion in Hungary, but the Soviet armies halted our effort and we shrieked to high heaven in virtuous indignation.

41-3-228

We continued to sneer at educationand progress in the Soviet Union. I once heard Conant of Harvard, formerly High Commissioner of Germany, tell the Harvard Club of New York, that Soviet leaders repeatedly refused to tell him what examinations were given high school students for entrance into college. He finally learned here in America, that "the Communist party would not allow any examination!" This proved Soviet education a farce. A few years later came Sputnik and photographing the back of the moon. We had to acknowledge the superiority of Soviet education, the progress of her science and the fact that her industrial development might soon equal or even outstrip ours.

Khrushchev dared to visit us and while Congress went into hiding, he made the finest speech for world peace which we have heard since Lincoln at Gettysburg. We then photographed Russian fortifications and lied about it. Why? Because Allen Dulles and our military rulers are still determined to smash the Summit conference and plunge the world into war.

Meantime we want to help the world. We remember how American charity has often fed the hungry and healed the sick. Taking every advantage of this memory, Big Business has used it to the hilt. The Marshall Plan was to help war-torn Europe. What it really helped was American business to buy into European industry, beat back Socia Socialist labor, bribe skilled labor and pay soldiers ~~and use public American funds from taxes on the poor;~~ ~~But~~ in fact we are arming all foreigners we can bribe or scare with most of the funds to help us fight Communists and with the small rest we are using our public tax funds to give rich American investors private capital or to bribe native quislings in India and Africa to betray their countries to American industry. Already in New York alone we have four "African" organizations, financed by Big Business, and officered by Negroes supposed to give "information" on Africa. Pious leaders like Don Harrington and Emory Ross are furnishing the requisite treligious background. For this Eisenhower is now loudly praying for four billions of our dollars which ought to be used for social medicine, asduation and housing.

41-3-279

However, warn my friends, an election is coming up. So what? There is to be sure a Presidency soon to be up for sale. The current price in 1956 was said to have been $100,000,000. This year the price is higher. It may be a half billion. Only Big Business well-healed stock gamblers and the China Lobby can bid. Whether a Democrat or Republican wins it will be the same gang. You will have no chance to vote for a Third Party. You will have no chance to vote for Pease or War; for Social Medicine, Housing or decent Education. Why?

We know the reason. It is because the United States is no longer a democracy. Most citizens know this well and do not waste time going to the polls. If it were true that we have what we want in this nation, we could sit still and wait on Reason. But it is not true. We are ruled by a minority armed with wealth and power. This usurpation we must fight. We must first demand the right to have a Third Party on the ballot. This the politicians prevent and these politicians must go; by peaceful means if possible, by force and violence if there is no other way.

41-3-280

Here is a program for them who have not lost hope and who yet believe in America. Forget the Presidency. It will make not a jot of difference whether Nixon and Chiang Kai Shek, or Kennedy and Cardinal Spelman buys the office. Concentrate on Senators and Congressmen, legislators and city councilmen and ward heelers. Insist on a chance to vote for Peace, for the total abolition of the Color Line; for no family income above $25,000 or below $5,000; for free education from kindergarten through college; for housing on a nation-wide scale; for training of all for the work they can do so far as such work is needed for the best interests of all. Insist on discipline for this work. Allow no laborer to be paid less than his product is worth; and let no employer take what he does not make. (Curb corporations by putting most of them under government ownership) Heal the sick as a privilege not as a charity. Make private ownership of natural resources a crime. Put the idle and criminal in jail and force them to do needed work at current wage. Stop interference with private and personal belief by religious hypocrites. Preserve the utmost freedom for dream of beauty, creative art and joy of living. Call this Socialism, Communism, Reformed Capitalism or Holy Rolling. Call it anything, but get it done.

Meantime turn to the World: Stop insulting the Soviet Union and its friends; admit China to the United Nations; put the Union of South Africa out; move the headquarters of the United Nations to Vienna where foreign envoys can be received without insult and where the United Nations can be housed not amid the dirt and sewage of the East River, on the dole of one of our most disgraceful private fortunes, and in ugly architecture our of Alice in Wonderland.

Perhaps this is insane, but to me it is Reason, Right and Justice.

As Bert Williams once sang, "I may be crazy, but I ain't no Fool!"

41-3-281

Ans'd

To the National Guardian
5/12/60
Pub. 5/23/60

INSANITY

by W. E. B. Du Bois

Daily lately as I read the morning news, I find myself asking if age is driving me a bit crazy or if I'm living in a crazy nation. I have lived through much history and read far more, but I can remember no situation which parallels the present. Governments and rulers have always lied. But never with the quick bland easy assurance like our transformation of a spying trip which failed into a weather exploration; and then blaming the Soviet Union for "propaganda." Similarly we lied about dropping disease germs on China; and we have only to scan our magazines to see how the United States is being transformed from an unsophisticated people of original Tinkers and Thinkers to a nation of Liars and Buyers.

41-3-282

President Eisenhower continues to astonish me. Yesterday this Delphic oracle came from the golf links: "We never enslaved anyone." Today we learn that Turkey is not our spy base but a "bastion of Freedom," where Nato of the "Free World" dares not stay long enough to hear the President's welcome, because Menderes is trying to outrun angry students threatening his life.

Right here I draw a breath of relief. Students at last to the rescue even in the West. I had lost faith in them as during the McCarthy nightmare I spoke at a few institutions and looked into their blank faces. But today young seekers after knowledge live again despite a woeful lack of teachers. Not only in Turkey which we have purchased, but in Japan where they defy Kishi's plan to tie Nippon to the Pentagon; and in South Korea where they have driven a demagogue out of power.

Of course I am especially uplifted by the revolt of Negro students in America. With no leadership nor encouragement from their own people; (despite all the present declarations of the johnnie-come latelies frantically scrambling aboard the band-wagon) alone and unaided they put their finger on a vital spot and acted. Our Negro Problem is not simply disfranchisement, lynching, mob-law, court injustice and wide-spread serfdom with poverty and disease; it is a daily, unending series of petty, senseless insults carried out almost everywhere and always by civilized, people of religion and culture, for no earthly reason except senseless meanness and neglect. In the South a Negro goes downtown to buy a few necessities, and can't buy a bite to eat; he can't get a drink; he can't go to a movie; sometimes he can't sit in a park, and of course he can't bathe in the ocean, even as in Biloxi, in the most ignorant state of the union, where there are 26 miles of beach. Black students, not agitators, not even radicals since little economics or social science is taught in Southern schools; just honest clear-headed youth who one day say, "We buy our school books and paper at Woolworth's, why not buy a sandwich?" Then the proud, cultured South goes beserk. Boys and girls are arrested, clubbed and jailed. Churches sing, pray and send Billy Graham to Africa. Still students "sit down." Then Big Business moves in. It threatens colored college presidents. Some like Wright of Fisk refuse to yield. Some like Trenholm of Alabama crawl. Then Big Business squeezes parents and some parents to save their jobs plead with their children; but at least at one colored college four thousand students withdraw while their president skulks. They threaten to put a whitee presdient at Lincoln who will teach Negroes their place. They may try this at Howard. They may starve Fisk. What will result? Will the students fall back into line? I think not. Some white students feel the glorious possibilities of this day; but the nation is silent and dumb.

41-3-283

Are we happy at all this? No, America is scared to death. Asia has arisen. Africa arises. The Soviet Union marches on. East Europe is triumphant. Cuba is free. Panama and Latin America follow. But the United States is stubborn.

We lie about China and support a man on her borders to attack her whom we ourselves have called a scoundrel. We invest six hundred million dollars in slave labor and stolen gold, diamonds and uranium in South Africa where our Boer allies have 18,000 Negroes in jail and ten million fated to be hammered into slavery. We woo Adenauer to preserve a Germany which our army with the help of Stinky of the American Federation of Labor designed as a threat for a Third World War to conquer the Soviets; we bribe France, cajole Italy and as long as possible we will hang on to Trujillo. We are intriguing in Viet-Nam and Laos and praying for war between India and China, which fails to occur.

Signs of disaster gather about our heads. We are unable to sell enough abroad to pay for what we buy and have been compelled to spend billions a year out of our horde of gold to pay the deficit. Our cost of living rises continuously and unemployment spreads, despite our ingenious efforts to deceive the public. The gamblers of the stock market are sweating in vain to unload on the suckers the inflated values of our monopolised industry. We are soaking the sick with high-priced medicines and hospital fees beyond reach of the poor. We are bribing our skilled labor with high wage paid our of exploited Negro and Mexican labor and from the poverty and disease of poor whites. Our justice is showered with injustice. Our jails seethe with the revolts of the wretched and the innocent and of thousands whose only crime is being black. We murder Chessman for no crime we can prove; we jail Uphaus and Sobel, torture Winston and drive Heikkila to death. Why? The bomb-proof shelters of the editorial offices of the New York Times hear a rumor that our judges often actually pay two years salary for nomination.

41-3-284

We are deliberately distorting history; not simply United States history so as to excuse Negro slavery and deify slave owners; to praise the traitors who solemnly swore to support their country and then fought desperately to betray it and preserve Negro slavery, but especially to twist and distort the world wars and the triumph of socialism.

We started with propaganda whi h out-Hitler d Hitler. Big Business monopolised news-gathering, newspapers, periodicals and publishing. The nation was led to believe that Communism was a conspiracy and crime, and socialism its handmaid. We were told that the Communist states were failures, their citizens serfs and prisoners, seething with revolt; their women prostitutes and their education only "brain-washing"propaganda. Many wanted to use our atom bomb i mediately on Moscow but when we found the Soviets already had it we accused them of stealing it from us as they were certainly too dumb to invent it.

We planned war. Our State Department cooperated with Collier's magazine in 1951. Our national leaders cooperated and the nation was primed to conquer the Soviet Union in 1960. This is 1960. This was to be the year of conquest. Colliers (of blessed memory) foretold the event in 130 pages, written by Allan Nevins our"leading" historian, Stuart Chase our "leading" economist, Edwin R. Murrow our "great" news interpreter, Margaret Chase Smith, our woman senator, Robert Sherwood and J. B. Priestly. Our Senator wrote of "Russia Reborn" under American soldiers, presumably armed with flaming napalm and disease germs. This vo victory has been postponed, but our propaganda continued. We financed rebellion in Hungary, but the Soviet armies halted our effort and we shrieked to high heaven in virtuous indignation.

41-3-285

We continued to sneer at educationaand progress in the Soviet Union. I once heard Conant of Harvard, formerly High Commissioner of Germany, tell the Harvard Club of New York, that Soviet leaders repeatedly refused to tell him what examinations were given high school students for entrance into college. He finally learned here in America, that "the Communist party would not allow any examination!" This proved Soviet education a farce. A few years later came Sputnik and photographing the back of the moon. We had to acknowledge the superiority of Soviet education, the progress of her science and the fact that her industrial development might soon equal or even outstrip ours.

Khrushchev dared to visit us and while Congress went into hiding, he made the finest speech for world peace which we have heard since Lincoln at Gettysburg. We then photographed Russian fortifications and lied about it. Why? Because Allen Dulles and our military rulers are still determined to smash the Summit conference and plunge the world into war.

41-3-286

Meantime we want to help the world. We remember how American charity has often fed the hungry and healed the sick. Taking every advantage of this memory, Big Business has used it to the hilt. The Marshall Plan was to help war-torn Europe. What it really helped was American business to buy into European industry, beat back Socia Socialist labor, bribe skilled labor, and pay soldiers and use public American funds from ~~taxes on the poor. But~~ in fact we are arming all foreigners we can bribe or scare with most of the funds to help us fight Communists and with the small rest we are using our public tax funds to give rich American investors private capital or to bribe native quislings in India and Africa to betray their countries to American industry. Already in New York alone we have four "African" organizations, financed by Big Business, and officered by Negroes supposed to give "information" on Africa. Pious leaders like Don Harrington and Emory Ross are furnishing the requisite treligious background. For this Eisenhower is now loudly praying for four billions of our dollars which ought to be used for social medicine, eduation and housing.

However, warn my friends, an election is coming up. So what? There is to be sure a Presidency soon to be up for sale. The current price in 1956 was said to have been $100,000,000. This year the price is higher. It may be a half billion. Only Big Business well-healed stock gamblers and the China Lobby can bid. Whether a Democrat or Republican wins it will be the same gang. You will have no chance to vote for a Third Party. You will have no chance to vote for Peace or War; for Social Medicine, Housing or decent Education. Why?

We know the reason. It is because the United States is no longer a democracy. Most citizens know this well and do not waste time going to the polls. If it were true that we have what we want in this nation, we could sit still and wait on Reason. But it is not true. We are ruled by a minority armed with wealth and power. This usurpation we must fight. We must first demand the right to have a Third Party on the ballot. This the politicians prevent and these politicians must go; by peaceful means if possible, by force and violence if there is no other way.

41-3-22c

Here is a program for them who have not lost hope and who yet believe in America. Forget the Presidency. It will make not a jot of difference whether Nixon and Chiang Kai Shek, or Kennedy and Cardinal Spelman buys the office. Concentrate on Senators and Congressmen, legislators and city councilmen and ward heelers. Insist on a chance to vote for Peace, for the total abolition of the Color Line; for no family income above $25,000 or below $5,000; for free education from kindergarten through college; for housing on a nation-wide scale; for training of all for the work they can do so far as such work is needed for the best interests of all. Insist on discipline for this work. Allow no laborer to be paid less than his product is worth; and let no employer take what he does not make. Heal the sick as a privilege not as a charity. Make private ownership of natural resources a crime. Put the idle and criminal in jail and force them to do needed work at current wage. Stop interference with private and personal belief by religious hypocrites. Preserve the utmost freedom for dream of beauty, creative art and joy of living. Call this Socialism, Communism, Reformed Capitalism or Holy Rolling. Call it anything, but get it done.

Meantime turn to the World: Stop insulting the Soviet Union and its friends; admit China to the United Nations; put the Union of South Africa out; move the headquarters of the United Nations to Vienna where foreign envoys can be received without insult and where the United Nations can be housed in simple dignified not amid the dirt and sewage of the East River, on the dole of one of our most disgraceful private fortunes, and in ugly architecture our of Alice in Wonderland.

Curb corporations by putting most of them under government ownership control.

Perhaps this is insane, but to me it is Reason, Right and Justice.

As Bert Williams once sang, "I may be crazy, but I ain't no Fool!"

41-3-289

[I NEVER DREAMED I WOULD SEE THIS MIRACLE] [P.1 MISSING]

48-7-296

attacked the colonial system. We found opposition even inside the Negro race: from American Negroes who had no interest in Africa and had been taught to despise it; from West Indian Negroes who wanted walth and political power even if it came from exploiting their own lower classes; from leaders of these peasants like Marcus Garvey who threatened to drive the whites out of Africa, when they were without capital or power. Our real opponents, however, were the imperialists of Europe and North America who were in search of cheap labor, free land and valuable materials in order to build a new world rule. They nearly stopped our movement. The Belgians villified us. The British gave no cooperation; the French refused to let us meet in French Africa. In addition to all this the world depression, which followed the First World War deprived us of funds and forced me to retire from propaganda and go back to my ivory tower of teaching.

We held small congresses in London and Lisbon in 1923 and in New York in 1927 and then gave up. However, the seed had not died. The leaders of West Africa called a West African Congress in 1920, which was remarkably inspired by the First Pan-African Congress, which was remarkably successful and secured considerable concessions from the British Government toward self rule. Other parts of Africa heard of the Pan-African movement and of Garvey's demands. In nearly every colony some form of native organization began to appear. During the Second World War, Africans fought beside Europeans in Europe, Asia and Africa, and began to think. When, in Paris in 1945, the trade unions of the world met for united action, the unions of Africa appeared in force demanding voice and autonomy. They won their demands against the assumptions of the white British and American unions and immediately their young leaders demanded a Fifth Pan-African Congress. George Padmore, A British West Indian, educated in the United States and long a radical worker in the Soviet Union, Germany and England, organized the meeting and invited me to come from America and preside. We met in Manchester. Kwame Nkrumah was the Secretary, Jomo Kenyatta of Kenya took a leading part, Wallace Johnson of Liberia was there and some two hundred other young Africans. Pan-Africa was born again.

A sixth Pan-Africa Congress was planned to take place as soon as possible, above all, to meet on the continent of Africa.

Meantime my own fortunes went awry. The Secretary of the NAACP was dissatisfied with my work and I was dismissed. The Council on African Affairs under Paul Robeson asked me to assist them but they had small funds and were soon closed by the Government because there were Communist members. But as our ability to help African freedom and unity waned the Gold Coast arose and Ghana appeared.

The Gold Coast had long been a typical European colony under the Portuguese, the Dutch, Danes and, since 1886, under the British. I saw yesterday the Castle of the Gold Mines, built by the Portuguese before Columbus discovered America. Here Europe traded in spices, gold and slaves, later in cocoa, manganese, palm oil and tin. It became in the 19th century a typicle British colony: a source of wealth a d power, a haven of aristocracy. Ghana is an oblong of 90,000 square miles with six million folk. It has a sandy plain bordering the great Gulf of Guinea with 330 miles of shore, a ~~with~~ wide forest belt and a great stretch of plateau to to the north. The Kingdoms of the Mellestine and of the Songhai once ruled the interior; then came the powerful Ashanti whom it took the British six wars and a century to subdue. Their kin, the Fanti, helped the British govern the land and in the mid-nineteenth century, tried to join the British in founding a Confederation for joint government. But the British put their leaders in jail and tried to govern by "indirect rule", through the chiefs. Kwame Nkrumah was born in a coastal town and studied in the United States. From America he came to the Fifth Pan-African Congress and then attempted to organize Africans in London. Finally, called home by the Gold Coast intelligentia he began organizing the natives. /////// The native bourgeoisie did not like him and tried to dismiss him. But Nkrumah taught and organized the masses. The British put him in jail, but while he was there the masses elected him to Parliament in 1951. A wise British government permitted him to become Prime Minister and Nkrumah turned Ghana into a democracy.

40-9-297

Ghana became a free British Dominion in 1957. Prime Minister Nkrumah, remembering the Fifth Pan-African Congress, invited me to come to the celebration. The United States refused me a passport and sent Vice-President Nixon and encouraged the attendance of several enthusiastic Negroes who attested that our Negro Problem had at last been settled by Senator Eastland and the Supreme Court. In 1958 the Sixth Pan-African Congress met as the All-African Peoples Conference, opened in Accra by Prime Minister Nkrumah, with delegates from all over the continent. I was invited and obtained a passport, but my health kept me in a sanitarium. My wife, Shirley Graham read my message to the Conference. It was applauded. Here Tom M'Boya presided, Arabic Africa joined hands with Black Africa and Lumumba announced the coming freedom of the Congo.

Prime Minister Nkrumah was made a member of the Privy Council, but nevertheless Ghana became an independent Republic July 1, 1960.

I attended the first Parliament. The day before the last British Governor had been dismissed with stately ceremony. This day a black man carried the new mace in the presence of one hundred and four members of Parliament, the drums of the chiefs rolled, /////// the ancient call; a paramount Chief gowned and crowned in gold poured libations in the doorway to his gods; women danced in solemn rythym. President Nkrumah entered, robed and alone. The Golden Stool was unveiled and the black President upon it as the national anthem roared.

This black man, whom a free white American once waved to a spittoon when he asked a drink of water in Maryland, was not only Prime Minister of the new nation, but also its first President. That which no modern nation had dared to do - - give the people the right not only to elect a parliament but also a President, Nkrumah had done. The people of Ghana rule, but who will rule them? Their ancient culture patterns under their chiefs, but these chiefs have been stripped of political power: they have no right to jail, kill nor tax, but they have a liniage older than that of Elizabeth of England. Nkrumah recognizes this power of the chiefs, but dominates it. Without this power, the chiefs are politically helpless; with recognition, they rule the people. The are custodians of every foot of land in Ghana, custodians but not owners. They cannot sell it. They know the lore of the nation, its worship, its ancient medicine, its color dance and song.

A few days ago I saw Nkrumah clothed in white marching among the seven Osafos of Atuam. Beside him gowned in regalia of gold marched the Nana Akyin Vi, Omanhene of Akyin State, whose fathers have been kings for a thousand years. This is the new democracy of Ghana which the people dramatize in mock battle. What now is Ghana to Africa? There is in Ghana a class structure, with a bourgeois aping England; but its exploitation of ~~the~~ the worker is curbed by a distinct ancient and modern Socialism. The State controls the cocoa crop of 300,000 tons a year, the greatest in the world. This crop was started by the peasants and beat the Cadbury's plantation plan. The State is seeking to harness the power of the Volta river, which America would like to buy. The little people still control retail trade; the women own the market place; small merchants crowd the sidewalks in front of the great Lever Brothers stores and French, Swiss and Syrian merchants. Ghana works and works hard. The people farm and fish, they hew and split, they plant and reap. They carry on trade, they ~~this self-ruling~~ cook and sew; they build and dig. Also and just as hard they carve and color, weave and draw, drum and sing and sound on string and horn. Withal, they dream and tell tales. Thus they work.

And the whites. The race relations are curious. Gone are the Anglo-Saxon assumptions. The day of white rule is gone and gone forever. In Jumasi my wife and I slept in the chamber where Queen Elizabeth will sleep next fall and will be entertained by the same black host and hostess. The whites are courteous, some are obsequeous. Many new comers cannot believe their eyes or ears but they are neither deaf nor blind. Perhaps this is the end of their world. Perhaps.

There is ignorance in Ghana. Probably a third, certainly a fourth cannot read and write, but illiteracy lessens day by day. There is poverty in Ghana, but no hunger, no begging. There is no unemployment but wages are low and the great trade union movement is fighting this with government leadership. There are no prostitutes, and sex is lightly fettered. Fathers feed their children or go to jail.

There is some opposition to the ruling regime; a growing bureaucracy; envy and crime. But none of this is triumphant. The people are happy, hopeful, triumphant - tantalizingly careless of time and prostitude, but frightenly generous of time and friendship. They play, they dance, and they drmatize every action and every phase of living. They are building a harbor at Tema which will rival Hamburg.

This self-ruling Ghana is at the same time leading Africa. It has bound in unity Algeria and Tunis, the United Arab Republic, Ethiopia under its King of Kings, Uganda and Kenya. These last nights jet planes flew soldiers to the Congo. I heard the leviathans thunder through my dreams with black fighters and technitions beating ~~Europe~~ Europeans and and Americans to the very nerve center of the"Dark Continent."

I never dreamed to see this miracle. On this was piled today the boycott of South Africa. This plain duty which America feared to launch and Britain dared not do, Ghana, led by Kwame Nkrumah has started. It is all a miracle. I am startled before it.

410-9-009

But this is a startling land. The trees bloom, the grass sings, the men dress in togas and working women parade in colors which raise tears o of joy. I have not seen a fight nor a quarell. Of course some have taken place but in a month I have seen none. School houses rise day by day with 600,000 enrolled in primary, high and training schools. There is a university with 500 students enrolled and a Technical College with 615. Dogmatic religion, Catholics, Protestants and white gowned Moslems seek to lead but the State calmly builds and increasingly runs its schools, builds its hospitals, protects its forests, nurses its children and clearly sees the Foe within its gates.

Ghana knows this foe is the threat of international investment, knows the great international monopolies, the trusts which seek to rule the world. It treats them with courtesy and yet begins to invites Soviet investment, recognizes the Peoples Republic of China and announces its aim to be Pan-African Socialism. Kwame Nkrumah, first President of Ghana is certainly one of the greatest statesmen of our day. There is no politican in Washington with his brains and none in the United States with his courage.

CONGO

by W.E.B.Du B IS

Belgium had inherited el dorado. Congo was a tragic mis calculation. Little Hundreds of millions of dollars poured into this land annually f om a great territory forty times its size. In this empire was one of the world's greatest deposits of copper to carry electric power over sea and land; elephants to furnish piano keys for lovely music,, palm oil, fruit, rare woods, fibres and lately urani um for bombs to raise hell. Nobody knows how vast a horde of wealth Congo has poured into Belgium, Europe at North America in the last century for this is a secret ofindividual initiative in the capitalist world of Nordic supremacy. But all men including Pope and Protestant hierarchy and learned colleges know how many cheap laborers were slaves of white Europe to make Belgians clean, comfortable and learned and lead ers civilization. Once the atrocities of the Congo aoused ~~even white folk~~ the world and the Belgian folk took Congo out of the private purse of Leopold , to rule themselves
I remember talking to the first Belgian Socialist premier in the twenties and his firm promise to institute reform and stop cutting off the hands of lagging black workers. I remembered the legends of the King ofCongo whom the Portuguese met in the fifteenth century and whose royal son was educated in Lisbon. I had read as a boy Stanley's flamboyant and lying proclamation of the great new Christian Kingdom of Congo which Civilizatio was about to rear in the Dark Continent to lead the natives to God. Centuries passed: the Sixteenth with it great flowering of imperial black Africa South of the Sahara; the Seventeenth, with the duel of XXEXIXXX Fetish and Moslem and the Long March of Bantu from Niger to Zambesi; the Eighteen century and the British trade in slaves from Africa to America; and the Nineteenth century when Europe stole the world and built its culture on the degradation of Asia and Africa. Out of this wretched past was naturally born this century of war and destruction, with the west stubbornly determined to restore its domination of mankind and with the East, in Europe, Asia and Africa increasingly set on freedom andindependence. Belgium, despite its baptism in war and rapine, because it lay in the crossing paths of greedy empires, made peace with all and came to understanding with the wheeling buzzards of the west.
If you wanted to make money invest in the Congo enterprizes: profitable, respectable private entrprize, paying high and regular dividends, and no questions asked Moreover the black natives were happy; their tribal rule was intact (and their chiefs happy) so long as the black slavs toiled for their white masters, and the wealth rolled into Brussels
When in 1921, I held a session of the Pan-African congress in Brussels , and one young Congolese, Panda, ventured to join us in criticism of Belgian rule, the 40-1-136

Belgian press raged: "Bolsheviks", spies and Revolutionists; the natives were con tent and the Holy Catholic church was giving them enough education for their good; not too much; not enough to make them unhappy and demanding more than their few brains could use. Congo had no such unhappy intelligentia, as the British had nurtured in West Africa and the French in Senegal. Even if Belgium did not have enough trained Congolese to educate as physicians, at least Black Congo did not want to vote. So Belgium crowed even as late as the the World Exposition of 1958. And then in 1960, the bubble burst and black Congo demanded not only a share in government but independence. It was inconceivable. It was unbe lievable. Even when my wife, Shirley Graham, who read my message to the Sixth Pan-African Congress, meeting as the All-African Conference in Ghana, in 1958 told me of Lumumba there demanding independence for Congo there, I thought he was an unthinking fanatic. But I pride myself on ability to learn; on seeing what appears before my eyes. Yesterday, I was paying my farewell to the President of Ghana, just as he was taking leave of Lumumba, Prime Minister of Congo, who was on his way home from a meeting of the Security Council which had ordered Belgium out of Congo, because it dare not do otherwise. After Lumumba flew home in a Russian jet plane, President Nkrumah and I talked for a few moments. We knew that the trials of Congo had not ended but just begun. The luxury-loving West which was parading and yattering, gambling and horse-racing, dressing and dancing was not going to give up Congo millions without a desperate struggle even if it involved world war. Ghana, the Sovirt Union and China must furnish capital and technical skill to keep the great wheels of Congo enterprize running but running not for profit of the idle Western rich, but for the starving, sick and ignorant Africans. From me the President asked but one service: the starting afain again of the Encyclopaedia Africa which I tried esperately to begin back in 1900. AGAINST ALL DREAMS OF A AND PEACE T black Congo, stand arrayed today forces of terrible strength: the organized business enterprize of the western world; organized and incorporated monopoly: secret concealed, anonymous per-persoalities, which are ruled by dictators, amenable to no laws of morality whose only object is gain of wealth at any cost of life, liberty or of human happiness.
This faceless, conscienceless power, is today armed to the teeth and spending

40-1-137

12/20/60
to the National Guardian

41-3-123

NIGERIA

by W. E. B. Du Bois

I have just spent two weeks in Nigeria. I hesitate to record even briefly the tremendous impression which this land made on me because my stay was so short and because the meaning of this nation is so momentous to the modern world. Nigeria, is as large as France and Italy combined, with as many people as England, is a portion of the Middle Age set suddenly into the last half offour century. It brings in Benin and Ife an Art form which already has transformed the modern world and a technique which has startled and confused Science. It flatly contradicts modern history as received today and makes morals and religion in Europe and America largely hypocritical.

The black people of Nigeria stride into this modern world with no dream that their color is a disgraceful insignia of inferiority. I sat, November 12, in the dining room of an air-conditioned modern hotel in Lagos, when suddenly the black waiters stood at attention; there arose the whistling cry: "Zeek!" by which for 25 years Nigeria has hailed Namdi Azikiwe as he agitated for independence; out of a private dining room at the far end strode a six-foot black man robed in flowing white and crowned in broidered velvet. He was the Governor-elect of this nation; he had left his dinner guest, the retiring British governor to come greet me and my wife to Nigeria.

Why was this man being made the first black governor of a British colony? Because Britain in a last subtle move had decided to grant Nigeria's irrestible demand for independence by granting to a Nigerian the former powerful office of governor-general, but now shorn of its power to make laws and dictate policy, but still robed in the tinsel of ~~empty~~ pomp and circumstance, witnessing the inauguration was 100,000 people. I had travelled 6000 miles at Azikiwe's invitation to to be sure that Socialism would be represented on this occasion . For this the governor-elect greeted me. And I had come to learn just how powerless the new governor would be. I knew that already Britain had been disappointed in failing to keep Northern Nigeria out of federation with the south and how Moral Rearmament had been working on Azikiwe.

America was discovered and Guinea and India invaded by Europe in the same decade and then there began a phantasmagoria which for three hundred years transformed the modern world. A British Protestant Christian recorded the truth:

"The barbarities and desperate outrages of the so-called Christian race, throughout every region of the world, and upon every people that they have been able to subdue, are not to be paralleled by those of any other race, however fierce, however untaught, and however reckless of mercy and of shame, in any age of the earth."*

Out of this tragic past, the Nigerians of today march, largely ignorant of the significance of what has happened to them. They have never been conquered by Europeans, but, through bribery and deception were so manipulated by the British Empire as to regard it mainly a benefactor. Nigerians through the lore of their fathers look back on a mighty past. They remember the empire of the Songhay where in the early Sixteenth century, the black Mohammed Askia ruled an empire as large as all Europe; and as the Arab chronicle says: "there reigned everywhere great plenty and absolute peace!" Their University of Sankore was a world center of learning among the peoples of the Mediterranean. What happened? European traders came to barter with a trading people in spices and gold. Domestic slaves furnished labor and gradually became themselves material for trade in labor for Spain and Portugal long decimated by war. Then in America came a wider demand for labor promising fabulous wealth. Britain starting with indentured servants seized and dominated a vast and profitable world slave trade. Africa lost a hundred million souls from the middle of the sixteenth to the middle of the Nineteenth centuries. Slave raids became tribal wars, and slave labor changed the face of commerce and industry in Europe. Industrial Revolution built a new world based on wealth in private hands. Whence came this wealth? Karl Marx tells us:

*William Howitt, "Colonization and Christianity", London, 1838., p.9

41-3-184

"The discovery of gold and silver in America, the extirpation, enslavement and entombment in mines of the aboriginal population, the beginning of the conquest and looting of the East Indies, the turning of Africa into a warren for the commercial hunting of black-skins, signalized the rosy dawn of the era of capitalist production."

"With the development of capitalist production during the manufacturing period, the public opinion of Europe had lost the last remnant of shame and conscience. The nations bragged cynically of every infamy that served them as a means of capitalistic accumulation."

"Tantae molis erat, to establish the 'eternal laws of Nature' of the capitalist mode of production, to complete the process of separation between labourers and conditions of labour, to transform at one pole the social means of production and subsistence into capital, at the opposite pole, the mass of the population into wage-labourers, into 'free labouring poor,' that artificial product of modern society. If money, according to Augier, 'comes into the world with a congenital blood-stain on one cheek,' capital comes dripping from head to foot, from every pore, with blood and dirt."

But the Nigerians knew little of the wider meaning of this. They only felt the impact of black invaders from the East like the Hausa; and the push of the Ibos and Yoruba from western Atlantis. War raged among these African peoples, wars which changed their folk ways and art; which built their economy on far-off slavery and tempted missionaries from Europe to uplift their morals. Traders like Goldie and his Niger company sailed up the Niger and gradually turned the face of Nigeria from the Mediterranean to the slave-trading Atlantic. The coast of the Gulf of Guinea was annexed by force and by treaties with chiefs which made them pensioners of England and by bribery expanded the empire.

41-3-125

Thus arose modern Nigeria, untouched by color caste, proud and masterful but living in an unknown world. The vast territory which stretched north and west from the island of Lagos, became loosely unified under British administrators and was called Nigeria after the fabulous river, which for two and a half thousand miles flowing north, east and south puzzled and misled the world until it poured into the Atlantic through a hundred mouths forming a delta twice the size of the state of New Jersey. A freebooter, Frederick Lugard, after fighting in China and India and killing Christians and Moslems in Uganda, was recognized by the British government as an empire builder and raised to the peerage. By skilful bribery called "indirect rule" he annexed all Nigeria to the British Empire.

41-3-186

A black man who later became Bishop Crowther, helped explore the Niger in 1841..His grandson, Herbert Macauley agitated for voice in government and was jailed in 1928. But the coasts of the Gulf of Guinea became restless under this pressure of Europe. The Slave Coast, the Grain Coast, the Gold Coast agitated for greater voice in government. Young Nnamdi Azikiwe, educated in the United States founded the West African Pilot in 1937, followed by a string of other protesting papers. Before the First World War the British ruled all northern Nigeria by a governor-general and the rest of Nigeria through a council on which the Governor had a majority composed of officials and merchants. The West African Congress inspired by and following the First Pan-African Congress, secured some elected members of the council.

There followed the participation of Nigerians in World War II by which the Allies drove Germany out of Africa and there followed the rise of trade unions. These unions met with the world unions in Paris in 1945 and joined in calling the Fifth Pan-African Congress that year in England. The agitation of Azikiwe and others increased until the wiser Britishers advised yielding, but the die-hards tried to hold Northern Nigeria from joining the South. They failed. Northern Nigeria joined the Federation and with the Governor-General stripped of power, Azikiwe was nominated to the place, after escaping a charge of misusing funds in organizing his bank. It was hoped his good will had been secured and could be made certain by a privy councillorship and a possible knighthood together. There came disquieting difficulties. I do not know all the facts, but these seem true. With British social contacts with the proud Sultans and Emirs of Northern Nigeria it had been planned that the son of the Sultan of Sokoto would be educated at Oxford and become Prime Minister of Federated Nigeria. However, the Sultan could not stomach the idea of his son being educated at a Christian college. He, therefore, substituted a young Nigerian of lower rank, Abubakar Tafawa Balewa, a teacher trained at the University of London. He, already knighted by the Queen, became Prime Minister of the Federated Nigeria and the most powerful official in the nation. But curiously Balewa is a friend of Azikiwe and working amicably with him. He is no socialist in the modern sense, but he is not frightened of Communism, because he knows the ancient communal African family and state. Azikiwe also is no Communist, but I have talked socialism with him and found him most interested.

U1-3-187

What now does who want in Nigeria?

Nigeria is a rich land. By this the West means that it has an abundance of cheap labor; immense areas of rich land and forests; and stores of coal, oil, lead, tin, zinc and other metals. It can produce palm oil, cocoa, and raise fruit and has vast potential water power. If developed by western capital and technique as colonies have been, Nigeria could be a vast source of wealth and power.

When on the other hand, Nigerians call their country rich, they mean that there can be raised in this land enough to feed, clothe and shelter the people, and surplus to sell abroad for machinery and skills and comforts. In the past, Nigerians have by their folkways in family and clan life avoided poverty and hunger; settled the problem of women so as to support widows, take care of orphans and avoid prostitution; they have fought disease and crime and been on the whole a contented people. But contact with the modern world has shown them the possibility of greater happiness. They see the necessity of education in modern knowledge, the possibilities of more comfort in living, better fighting of disease, larger production of goods with less work and a broader life. How can this be attained?

41-3-188

The British teach that if Nigerians accept their leadership and advice, all will be well, but the Nigerians looking back on the past complain of the slave trade, of cheating in commerce and exploiting in work. They remind the British that only agitation punished often by jail has forced the British to yield the blacks a voice in government. They are glad to make the transfer of authority from white to black in peace and harmony but are determined to be watchful in future. They are, however, not disposed to question the usual investment procedure of business and individual and are willing that a Nigerian bourgeosie should share profit arising from foreign exploiting of land and labor.

Americans on the other hand announced at the summer meeting of Nato a plan to drive ~~both~~ Britain and France from Africa and put American capital in full charge. They would be willing to associate American Negro capitalists with them and such Nigerian businessmen as are willing to let white Americans lead. This Nato meeting was considerably upset when an American Negro present dissented from their plans.

Facing these plans are two kinds of thinking. There is a trend toward socialism, not dominant but strong and Azikiwe is in sympathy with this. It believes in raising capital as much as possible at home. In borrowing from Communist countries rather than from Britain or the United States. It does not welcome American Negroes unless they are thoroughly African in sympathy and suspicious of the West.

There is however a third force which must be watched: that is the ancient faith in communal family, family and clan. This method of protecting the masses is distinctly socialist. In the past no member of the tribe need go hungry while any had food. Widows married the dead man's brother. Orphans were adopted in the family. Capital was raised by the tribe and profits belonged to the tribe. Land could not be sold and all had land to use. Trade was carried on by small distributors, chiefly women in vast markets and the consumer came in direct contact with producer.

41-3-129

These old folkways and this economic organization have changed, by the breaking up of families, by the growth of mass industry and the growth of cities. A new and pushing bourgeosie is gaining power and foreigners with capital are widely in evidence. British, Swiss and Lebanese corporations do large business and in America lately there are 12 organizations, financed by government agencies or by private investors which profess great interest in Africa or knowledge of it, and are called American Committee on Africa, or African Studies Association, African-American Institute, Society of African Culture, African Defense Aid, etc.

These organizations and other persons almost without exception dub any return to African communalism as "Communism" and sternly warn Africans against it. This does not please men like Azikiwe or the Federal Prime Minister. While then Britain advised Nigeria to advance by installing private capitalism and individual initiative, a growing number of educated Nigerians are beginning to ask if their country cannot step directly from communalism to socialism and avoid the catastrophe of modern private capitalism. The investors and the native bourgeois are still in the lead but the battle is not the swift.

This puts a hard strain on Northern Nigeria. Here is the strong hold of hereditary power, restrained by ancient custom and the dominating of women and now pushed by the demands of democracy. The chiefs are yielding by accepting election as local councillors, but the House of Chiefs is still of great influence and the Sultans and Emirs will long rank as more than ordinary citizens. They are yielding in hospitals and schools but how far will they yield in trade and industry? It was an inspiration to see the University College at Ibadan and the new University at Enugu, built by the joint effort of Nigerian and British but now turned over to black administration.

41-3-190

Lagos and lower Nigeria were always centers of town life. I rode through Ibadan, a city of a million inhabitants. There the bourgeois merchant and civil servant are powerful but so also is the consumers' market. At Onitsha I saw one of the largest markets in Africa, selling cotton and velvet, dishes and tools, food and drink and all manner of materials stretched over acres of space, dominated by women and seething with activity.

We paid our respects before the Asantehene in Kumasi, and now to the Obi of Onitsha in Nigeria, a mild man of dignity and education before whom thousands still prostrate themselves. We rode by the throngs at the palace of the Aleko of Abeokuta. Such kings have reigned longer than any European dynasty and they feel it. But they despise the rule of the mob and the ascension of the tinker and the shop-keeper. Here they draw close to British aristocracy and British aristocracy cultivates them almost obsequiously. At the State Ball of the new black Governor, British ladies (and not bar-maids) sat with and danced in the arms of robed and crowned Emirs. How will democracy fare in this fight?

On the other hand where lie the interests of the Western world?

There are in the world today at least 25 giant corporations which are international empires in wealth and power. British Unilivers alone has a thousand million dollars in capital and a net annual income of over a quarter of a billion and trade in every corner of the western world. These corporations control armies, navies and nuclear weapons and make the laws which curb or let them. They rule Western Europe and all America. They have lost most of Asia but they are now set to dominate Africa. Nigeria has its own forty millions and is tied by blood and custom to at least 90 other black millions inthe Sudan, Uganda, Kenya and other regions. If Western capital can put into world industry and commerce this black labor working on rare raw materials it can by modern methods leave in the hands of capitalists as proven, incalculable power to control manking. On the other hand, if this profit can be kept in the hands of the workers, Socialism can triumph tomorrow in a world devoid of poverty, ignorance and unnecessary disease.

NIGERIA

As large as France and Italy combined, with nearly as many people as England

A portion of the Middle Age dropped into the twentieth century

With a fabulous past, nog yet thoroughly digested

Peoples from the West and North who set up kingdoms and empires
Peoples from the South bringing art and technique

Indigenous folk with family, clan and government and customs

Into this melange intruded Portuguese. British and Amricand

The British brought traders, missionaries, empire-builders, exp,loiters and slavetraders

Herbert Macaulay , I864-I946, founded Daily News, civil servant, studied in England. Jailed I928 for six months. Grandson of

Bishop Crowther with British naval expedition explored the Niger in I84I

Southern Nigeria discovered in I472. Portuguese land at Lagos in I485 and name it. Trade in pepper. British appear in I553

Guinea and America discovered at same time

From I553 to I807, Britain built the Amdrican slave trade

I654-I685, indentured servantsnfrom England & gdrmany, Spain

Kidnapping, convicts, Irish prisoners

Sugar, (Williams p. 29)

Hawkins, I562; Liverpool, I709 first slaver; Bristol

S;ave traders W. p. 48, 5I Trade in I7 and I8th centuries

Explorers: Mungo Park, Lander, Clapperton

I863: Lagos becomes British

Goldie, United Africa Co. I886, Nigr co.

I885, Britain at Berlin Conference claims Niger Delta

I880 British on coast begin to penetrate interior

I889 Oil rivers protectorate; zI893 Niger coast pro.

I900 - I4, Lugard subjugates "upe,, Bornu, Kano & Sokoto to "indirest rule" -

About 900 a.d. Ibo, Ibibio in Nigeria; Fulanis later

Today in Nigeria: Haussa I7.5 % Ibo, I6 %, Yoruba I4.4%

40-74-3

Forty years ago I pled with the socialist prime minister of Belgium Vanderveldt, to redeem the Congo from the atrocities of King Leopold and give its peoples freedom, education and greater control of the wealth which their toil created. He promised wide effort at reform. He tried and accomplished something, but he failed in his efforts because of the opposition of Belgian, British and American investors, combined in great corporations, who seized the land and its fruits, explited labor and made millions out of the poverty, ignorance and desease of its people. Gradually these rulers had to yield something to world public opinion, to native demand and to secure their monopoly. And so they organized native tribal control, but bribed the chiefs, established education, but limited it; they employed natives in skilled work, but paid them low wages. Yet leaders of the people came. Some were bribed, others were jailed, many killed. PATRICE LUMUMBA stood firm, refused bribes, demanded independence and got it! But the profits of Copper, Rubber, Cobalt and Diamonds are so great that Lumumba has been murdered, while Kasavubu and other hirlings are rewarded.

39-46-5

But the end is not yet! Traitors like Tshombe and Mobutu will yet be punished. The Congo will be free!

PATRICE LUMUMBA'S BODY LIES A-MOULDERING IN THE GRAVE,
BUT HIS SOUL GOES MARCHING ON!

February 27, 1961

National Guardian
mailed 10-48

OCTOBER, 1948

BEARTOWN BEEBE

By

W. E. B. Du Bois

Continually in my thought of Democracy, I find myself harking back to my boyhood and to that incredible figure of the old and dirty hermit whom we called Beartown Beebe. I was thirteen or fourteen years of age and a student in a small high school with two teachers and perhaps 25 pupils. The High School was not too popular in this rural New England and received from the town a much too small appropriation. But the thing that wxasperated me, was that every Spring at Town Meeting, which I religiously attended, a huge, ragged old man came down from the hills and for an hour or more reviled the High School and demanded its discontinuance.

I remember distinctly how furious I used to get at the stolid town folk, who sat and listened to him. He was nothing and nobody. Yet the town heard him gravely and when he was through, they calmly voted the usual funds for the High School. Gradually as I grew up, I began to see that this was the essence of democracy: listening to the other man's opinion and then voting your own honestly and intelligently.

With this experience behind me, I am increasingly alarmed today at the recession of this basic idea of the democratic process. I see people growing alarmed at freedom of speech, at expression of opinion, at individual action. And this fear goes far beyond disapprobation of libel, fear of incitement to evil and recoil from injury. On the contrary today we apparently want to stop any expression of ideas which we do not agree with, keep persons from thinking differently from what we think, or acting in any way that we dislike.

We do not seem to realize that here lies danger, if not irreparable disaster: danger of ignorance, danger of fatal mistake and the disaster of failing to do what must be done for human salvation.

All this I have felt for many years; but recently it has struck me so violent a blow, that I venture for the first time publicly to make clear my experience, not in defense or attack, but simply to show how absence of democratic methods can jeopardize a great cause.

In my active life I have served two institutions: Atlanta University in Georgia, and the NAACP in New York, giving to one 23 years of work, and to the other 27. But my terms of service have been so divided that I have alternated between the two masters. At Atlanta University, from 1897 to 1910, I found a singularly democratic organization. Save in matters of high finance, investment, etc., the faculty of eight members ruled a school of some 200 students of all grades. The students to be sure shared but imperfectly and were under pretty strict discipline. But teachers, president and dean settled all matters after frank and even sharp debate and came to agreement nearly always unanimously. I left this school for 23 years. When I returned in 1934, I was simply aghast at the change. Outside their own classes, the faculty had no part in administration. They met simply to hear decisions made by the President or trustees. Often they knew less than the students of current affairs and they knew that interviews with the president were not desired nor profitable. On the other hand the president was often in the dark as to affairs and thought in the different departments. My dream of helping to build a real and influential university in the lower South faded with the untimely death of President John Hope and after two years of groping, I was suddenly retired without notice for the unanswerable reason of age, at a limit which I had already passed when I was hired.

23-24-34

But the prospect was not dark, for I had four offers of employment, two of which would have enabled me to continue my overall study of social conditions in the South. Then came an unexpected and unsolicited offer to rejoin the NAACP. At first I did not reply. But friends and officials put strong pressure upon me and reiterated their assurance of the unanimous desire of all concerned that I return. I was flattered and pleased. I returned to the NAACP in 1944.

The old NAACP which I helped found in 1910, was at the time, an unpopular, radical organization, without funds and with meagre support among either white or colored. A quarter of a century of back-breaking work, brought it up to a hundred thousand members, a national organ, THE CRISIS, read throughout the country, a series of legal triumphs before the Supreme and state courts and a program for fighting lynching, mob-law and discrimination. But to my mind, when I left in 1934, we had but started our work. We had learned how to fight , but not how to build. Our program was destructive but not constructive. We needed to learn how to handle the facts of group segregation; we needed an economic policy to meet the profit making ideas of the country; and we needed a program for Africa and colonial peoples. But the CRISIS, the open forum in which I had begun to discuss these steps, now failed to be self-supporting in the depression. This magazine which I had founded without capital in 1910 and which for ten years had paid all expenses, including my salary at no cost to the NAACP, now began to fail to pay outlay. If it was to survive, the NAACP must help support it from its general funds. Under such circumstances I could not hope for that freedom of opinion I had always exercised, especially since a considerable part of the administration sharply disagreed with my ideas on segregation, economics and Africa.

23.24.35

Against the desires of the Board of Directors, I resigned in 1934, and was given a flattering vote of regret and appreciation for what I had tried to do in 23 years. Up to this time the NAACP was under the democratic control of a Board of Directors, with full and sometimes bitter discussion, at well-attended meetings and decisions by majority vote. Into sharing this democratic control the branches and membership had not been admitted; but we knew their admission was only a matter of time; but the organization of this democracy over a vast country presented a difficult problem.

I returned to the NAACP after an absence of ten years during which I had not followed closely the developments. The results astonished me. The income had quadrupled, the membership approached a half-million; the staff had trippled or more. It had become a big business, smoothly run and extraordinarily influential. The newspapers vied for its releases, courts listened to its attorneys, and men of prominence accepted readily places on its Board of Directors.

23-24-35

But one thing, almost from the beginning, amazed me and filled me with forebodings: almost every vestige of democratic method and control had disappeared from the organization. This change slapped me hard in the face within three months. I had hesitated in accepting this work; I had conferred with officials and friends; I had written down my understanding which the Secretary assured me was accepted by the Board "unanimously and with enthusiam." Yet When I came for work the two offices so necessary for my writing and study were not furnished me as promised; and when finally in desperation I hired an outside office the Board of Directors without giving me a hearing voted that I had "exceeded my authority" and refused to pay the rent. I lost $476 before the NAACP gave me a small office in the new building.

I closed my mouth and went to work. In four years I wrote two books on colonies and Africa, edited two others, wrote articles and pamphlets, attended four world conferences and many others and travelled 20,000 milesto deliver 150 lectures on subjects connected with my department.

Meantime I tried to grasp how the NAACP was being directed. For two years I attended the meetings of the Board of Directors. Few persons were present; there was almost no real discussion. The only business was to accept the report of the Committee on Administration and refer to this committee most new or unfinished business. Manifestly the Committee on Administration w s running the organization. This committee consists of the Secretary, five of his staff, appointed and removed on his recommendation, and nine members of the Board of Directors, only three or four of whom usually attended meetings. Consequently the Secretary and his staff and two directors control the Committee and the whole half-million membership of the NAACP.

The result of this close dictatorship was soon apparent in my work. I tried to confine myself to my department of relations of the organization to Africa, colored folk and colonies. But try as I did I could get no action nor directive as to this work. I was appointed by the Board to represent the NAACP at the UNO at San Francisco, but when the Secretary returned from the war front, he became Consultant and I assistant. I, nevertheless, did what I could. I had been at work less than two years when the Secretary accused me before the Board of Directors of appearing brfore a congressional committee without his consent, interfering in a court case of the NAACP; and he demanded to open all my mail. I replied that the congressional committee which had invited me, had not mentioned the NAACP and that my first sentence was that I was speaking for myself and no organization; I added that the Secretary had also been invited and had not responded. I showed that I had not interfered in the School case but merely answered a query about a passage on segregation in my autobiography published in 1941. I refused to let the Secretary open my mail.

23-24-37

Then came the political campaign. I have never belonged to an active political organization, but I have e pressed my views on candidates since the election of 1912. I early donned a Wallace button and let it be known that I was going to support him. A poll in the NAACP office showed that 70 per cent of the staff favored Wallace. I was then warned by the Secretary not to take part in "political activity." I replied that I certainly would be careful not to appear to speak for the NAACP nor to take its time for active political work; but I assumed that I had the right to vote andto tell my choice; that this was what the NAACP had stood for, for 30 years. The Secretary merely reiterated that the Board insisted that no salaried employee should take part in politics. When later at a non-political meeting in Philadelphia, I advised the audience to vote for Wallace, I was careful to preface my remarks by saying that I did not officially speak for the NAACP or any official. I was rebuked by the Secretary for this, while at the same time he was making a nation-wide drive for Truman, by letter, telegram, newspaper articles and public speach.

23-24-38

Further difficulty came in the matter of the NAACP appeal to the UN. When it was ready for the press the Secretary, without consulting me as editor, held it up for weeks because he wanted to add an introduction by himself to which I would not consent. Last year the Secretary wanted to go to Geneva for the Human Rights Commission. I maintained that such a journey would be useless. I again urged on the Board to make a clear statement of policy on Africa and colonies. I received no reply nor do I know whether the Board knew of my request as it went through the Secretary and he transmits what he pleases. I tried to get the State Department to put our petition on the agenda of the Assembly of the UN. They refused through Mrs. Roosevelt and she told me personally that if any other nation brought it up she might resign from the US delegation to the UN. This with the attitude of our delegation toward Ethiopia and Trusteeships convinced me that it would be useless to be represented at Paris.

When therefore the Secretary informed me that he was going and asked for memoranda, I sent him notes; but I refused to attend a conference on the matter, since the Board of Directors had not acted. When I realized that the Secretary was sailing before the Board could act, I sent a memorandum to each member of the Board protesting against the handling of this case which lay in my department. And protesting also against the political activity of the Secretary and his representation of his appointment as consultant as reason for supporting Truman. I pointed out that the Annual Meeting of the NAACP, to which I was not invited, was turned into a Truman rally. I sent copies of this protest to the Board, and the office staff. I did not send any copy to any newspaper nor did I speak to any newspaper reporter.

The Board promptly dismissed me from my posit on effective December 31. They did not discuss at all the facts, but dismissed me for refusing "to cooperate" with the Secretary and distributing my memorandum before the meeting of the Board.

I ask your pardon for this tedious detail. And hasten to say that the reason is not personal. My fate or that of any other official of the NAACP is not of great importance, but the manner in which a great, nation-wide organization, is being ruled today, is important not only for 15 million Negroes but for all men who believe in democratic control of public activities.

23-24-39

The NAACP has a noble record of which all Negroes and all Americans should be proud. All the more reason that its furure path be guided by wisdom and by use of that vast reservoir of human knowledge and experience which we call democracy. It is difficult to guide a mass of people. Continually we are tempted to use our own limited knowledge and experienceto push through decisions and and compell action, instead of trusting the slower, muddled and hesitating development of mass action. Yet without this action we land in tyranny and fatal mistake. The hundred thousands of members of the NAACP are not people of the highest education or widest expereince, but that is no excuse for turning their most effective organ of protest and progress into a fascist dictatorship virtually under to control of one man. No one person is great enough in character, ability and knowledge, to be able unaided and unassisted to decide for 500,000 Negroes and speak and act for them. The attempt to do this is fantastic. Moreover if a tenth of this nation can thus be put into the pocket of one person, this will be excuse and forecaste of further failure of democratic methods in this land. We see too much of this attitude already current in the broad areas of business and industry; in the organized church; in social reform and uplift of every sort; in politics and government; it is the growing custom to narrow control, concentrate power, disregard and disfranchise the public; and assuming that certain persons by divine right or by sheer assumption, have the power to do as they think best without consulting the wisdom of mankind. When disaster follows, as follow it must, it is no excuse that the dictator was busy, sincere and charming; he none the less has committed a crime whether the guilt be his or that of the Board of Directors.

23-2-4-46

It is the tragedy of the day that the democracy of which we prate so glibly is being murdered in the house of its friends, and in everyday life far more than in broad governmental decisions. The nation which cannot conduct its philanthropy in a democratic manner, will not in the end convince the world that it knows more of good government abroad than it does at home.

Mailed to "The Guardian"
6/27/49

UGANDA

By

W. E. B. Du Bois

35-3-231

Uganda is an East Central African state, about twice the area of the state of New York and inhabited by three and a half million black people, 15,000 Indians and Asiatics, and two thousand whites. The land has had an extraordinary history. It represents a migration of the Bantu peoples, pushed South and West by the expanding black empires of the Sudan between the 10th and the 19th centuries. Here was formed the Kingdom of Kitwara. One of the great African states of the Middle Age. This state was broken up early in the 19th century, but Uganda retrived the larger share and has long been rated as one of the best organized kingdoms of Africa with a notable history and culture.

It fell victim to Religion in the 19th century when King Mutesa, 32nd of his ancient dynasty, came to the throne in 1862, the Mohammedan flood was pressing up from the Nile valley. He was induced to admit English Protestants and French Catholics. All three faiths tried to convert the King, but he stubbornly died a rugged heathen. His fiercer son, Mwanga, saw through the camouflage of religion, the hand of white imperialism. He closed his Eastern frontier to whites but Bishop Hannington of the Church of England insisted on entrance and Mwanga promptly killed him. This was grist to the imperialist mill and promptly a merry war started between Christians and Mohammedans, and finally between Catholics and Protestants. A British army officer settled matters by coralling the Catholics on an island in Lake Victoria and turning his Maxim guns on them. Uganda became a British "Protectorate in 1899, and the leader became a noble British Lord, who died recently full of honors.

Great Britain then began to manipulate Uganda by "indirect" rule. A king survived the debacle, but he was under the thumb of the investors and scraps of news emerged now and then, but not much. Other subordinate kind-given bits of power. Land ownership was tampered with and seven eights of the land is now subject to British seizure. Education has begun but it has not gone far: perhaps one-third of the children of school age are in school but nearly all are in the first grade. There is one promising college at Makerere, but it has not yet gone far. No encouragement is given Ugandans to go abroad to study.

35-3-232

The ruler of Uganda, Edward Mutesa, is a great grandson of Mwanga. And here lies the present trouble, amounging almost to revolution. The King's father, Daudi Chua, a handsome man, drank himself to death with the encouragement of white officials. He became a mere figurehead in government. But the clan rule and ancient culture patterns are still strong. This then is the story which comes out of Uganda today; from Mutaka Mulumba, who is in London, representing the Baloka, Elders of Uganda; "After a three year stay at Cambridge University, England, the 25 year old Kabaka or King came back to Uganda. He was encouraged by the Anglican Bishop Stuart, of the Uganda Protectorate Government, and the present chiefs to marry a girl belonging to a Teutonic clan forbidden to the Royal Family of Uganda. This was calculated to set the Kabaka against the Bataka, the guardians of our national moral code based on our totems."

Britain does not teach her youth to respect their elders; and the young Kabaka learnt nothing in Britain in that line. He would rather follow a foreign Governor's advice than the Bataka's national wisdom.

"According to our traditions, all the people may go to their Kabaka and see him, or submit their demands to him. On the 25th of April, 1949, all the people assembled peacefully outside the Kabaka's place where he was supposed to go and see them. The Governor of Uganda, Sir John Hall, surprised them on that most solemn occasion by interfering with the British troops to prevent them from seeing their king. They fired on the people, killed several and wounded many. The people had no weapons at all.

35-3-233

"All this is done to them, because they sent me to Britain as their representative who denounced in harsh terms and exposed the filth of British colonial administration, most particularly in Uganda, Kenya and Tanganyika. All the progressive elements of the Uganda population are being murdered by the British with unprecedented savage brutality. No news is allowed to leave Uganda, except what Governor Sir John Hall wants the outside world to know.

"Ever since I submitted to the United Nations a petition concerning the administrative union of Uganda, Kenya and Tanganyika, through the Russian United Nations Delegation led by Mr. Andrei Gromyko who supported it very strongly, I was branded by the Uganda Protectorate Government as a Communist. The Uganda Protectorate Government's jealousy was pricked when I wrote and gave due praise to Mr. Gromyko. Consequently, the Bataka whom I represent in Britain, were also branded as Communists by the 'Uganda Herald.'"

Even the reporter of the East African Standard said th t it has just been known officially that the people had come to demand the following from their king:

(1). A democratic election of their representatives

(2). The resignation of the present African Government

(3). The full number of 60 representatives

(4). The ginning of their cotton

(5). Export and import licences.

"While the Eastern and Western European peace-loving peoples are working hard to prevent a third world war, a unique war is unleashed against the innocent, defenseless Uganda people by the British Government, as represented by the Uganda Protectorate Government, led by Governor Sir John Hall.

"Once the Uganda people were martyrs of Christianity: today they are martyrs of democracy. They are fighting only with moral iron courage against guns and all sorts of instruments of torture. There is a stream of blood in Uganda. The Uganda revolution is a challange for all people who take a true interest in the subject peoples of the world."

W.E.B. Du Bois Oct. 17, 1952

THE ROSENBERGS

I am appalled at the refusal of the Supreme Court to review the case of the Rosenbergs. There are fifty thousand other Americans whose names are appended who are equally distressed, and we believe hosts of others who would sign with us if there were time to ask. We are not demanding that the guilty go free, nor are we insensible of the danger of espionage and treason in times of trouble; but we are asking whether Julius and Ethel Rosenberg were really guilty as accused. We are alarmed to think that in this day of war and fear of war innocent persons may suffer for crime which they never committed or be punished beyond their desert.

We ask first of all if the trial of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg was fair. This is the fundamental question which has deeply troubled thousands of Americans. To ascertain this is the demand and the only demand which we make on the Court. It is, we admit, a grave matter to ask a high court already crowded beyond its normal capacity to review cases from lower tribunals save under exceptional circumstance. This case we earnestly believe is exceptional. It is a matter of life or shameful death, for a father and mother of young children, who never before have been accused even of misdemeanor. More than this, the case involves obscure but burning questions of race and religion and of almost hysterical public reaction in time of war and reaction.

When, in such circumstances, two Americans of good repute are given an unprecedented sentence, is it too much to ask the highest tribunal of the nation at least to inquire into the facts of this trial so as to be sure and to reassure the public that this is not a miscarriage of justice? Never before in time of peace has a civil court dondemned accused persons to death on a charge like this. This in itself and alone should give us pause, to make certain that there is no reasonable doubt of guilt. Too often in our day, citizens have been condemned on suspicion when doubt of guilt was clear; so often that we face a real danger of changing the old and tried maxim of law and morals, that no person must be punished if real doubt of his guilt exists.

36-9-66

In this case again, the use of testimony of self-confessed criminals, certainly inescapable at times, must always be received with reserve, and particularly when as in this case the use of this testimony leads to a fantastic disparity in the punishment allotted.

First of all, was a crime ever committed? Was the information alleged to have been disclosed really a secret in any true sense? If what was revealed was really a secret, should the informers, self-confessed criminals, escape with light sentences while their unsupported testimony convicts persons who may be entirely innocent? Such testimony certainly may have been bought by definite promise of immunity. Whether or not this is true must be carefully considered. Was it so considered in the trial, or was the harsh verdict dictated by prejudice or hysterical public opinion? It cannot be forgotten that at the time of the alleged crime the Soviet Union was our ally and not our enemy.

36-9-67

These are difficult times for all Americans, for all the world; but no plea of inconvenience nor suspicion of bias or indifference must let us smear our souls with the blood of the innocent or punish a lesser crime more vindictively than it deserves.

Cannot the Supreme Court of the United States at least assure us that Julius and Ethel Rosenberg have had a just trial? We firmly believe as the moral sense of mankind has agreed for centuries, that it would be far better that ten guilty traitors escaped punishment than that one innocent couple should be hanged for a crime they did not commit.

W.E.B. Du Bois

Du Bois per Mail Guardian Nov 1952

THE ELECTIONS

Many are continuing to ask what was the reason for the results of the last election. The answer is, there was no reason; or better, there were contradictory reasons which led to no single rational result. Indeed, no such result was possible under the circumstances. Some decisions were clearly made but they do not agree with each other. For instance, to a larger extent than ever before, American citizens thought it worth while to take time to go to the polls. Over half the eligible voters, nearly 60% voted. This in itself is remarkable only because less than half the voters usually regard their privilege worth exercising. Why did 55 million Americans vote in 1952? They were aroused to make some choice, but what and why?

41-3-16

The answer is contradictory if not paradoxical. One thing emerges as clear: the nation repudiated Truman. That repudiation was clear and distinct and was probably due to his crime at Hiroshima and his start of the Korean War. Most Americans undoubtedly resented his bad manners, the grafters about him, and his poor judicial appointments. These reasons affected different voters in far different degrees, but culminating, they added up to a landslide which overwhelmed much that made Stevenson likeable -- his English, his breeding, his honesty in some matters.

Also, cutting across these considerations, came the old-fashioned Southern Bourbons of Byrd, the petty spite of Byrnes, the race hate of Talmadge, the reaction of Sparkman. All these considerations opposed each other in devious ways, among Negroes, poor white Southerners, workers and investors. the Negro vote was too small in the North to count, but in the South, Dixiecrats + others have raised a Frankenstein.

Then came the phenomenon of Eisenhower. His campaign in words was flat, uninteresting and contradictory. He was in no sense popular; neither in appearance, gesture or work. He had no platform and no convictions on anything. He would have got no votes worth counting if there had been anyone else to vote for, besides Truman. Vincent Hallinan was not someone else, simply because his existence, his personality, the record of his life, and his platform, was completely blacked out. No such job of political annihilation was ever before done in this land. With decent publicity, with national acquaintanceship with the Progressive platform of Peace and Peace now, and planned control of wealth, the great majority of intelligent American voters could not have hesitated a moment between an uneducated military man, a vulgar war-mad politician whom Stevenson did not dare repudiate and an honest, square-shooting lawyer who was willing to sacrifice money, and personal freedom for peace and justice. Hallinan could only be beaten by Big Business. He was annihilated first by money, second by fear, third by preventing any knowledge of his candidacy and platform from reaching more than one in a thousand of the voters. All the press had to do was yell "Communist", without bothering to produce the slightest corroboration.

There was abundant money and more than that to monopolise the airwaves at $75,000 a night to stage the Nixon vaudeville and deafen the ears of the public with meaningless strings of "speeches". The fear of Russia and repetition of charges could monopolize schools and platforms until it was nearly impossible to talk Peace or successfully oppose war. With war foremost in the thought of voters, less was said of war in the campaign than of any other main campaign subject.

41-3-17

Consequently, granting that a vote for Truman and his program was impossible, there was for most voters noone else to vote for but Eisenhower. The election therefore was not a real choice. The voters had no chance to choose, to reach for facts or hear real argument.

Since this nation is admittedly today the chief proponent of world war, the people nevertheless had no opportunity to vote on the question of war or peace. They could only oppose a return of Truman's war platform and that they did overwhelmingly. But that landed them into Eisenhower's hands and Eisenhower was, as all knew, in complete control of Big Business. This the nation knew and feared -- but what else could it do? In the back of the minds of the workers was the knowledge that Big Business was interested in keeping up full employment, high profits, and in preventing the crash which rising prices threatened.

The voter, therefore, did not choose. He took a gamble and now waits with baited breath. This is the desperate plight of American Democracy. There was no reason back of the election of 1952; there was compulsion. What this compulsion was is being revealed. Our whole immense establishment for military defense will be in the hands of General Motors. Foreign affairs will be conducted by the man who was in the front trenches of the South Korean forces when Civil war in Korea broke out. The Secretary of the Interior will be a man uncertain of his own judgement of the [redacted] socialism of the TVA, and the Secretary of the Treasury has been named by [redacted] the banking interests. [redacted] The Atty General is Dewey with another name.

41-3-18

Du Bois

Sent to Natl Guardian Nov/1952

35-10-95

MAU-MAU

The South African delegate to the United Nations has intimated that the unrest in various parts of Africa is probably caused by Communism, and that this cause will go on to increase current difficulties elsewhere in the world.

There is a much simpler explanation which arises quite naturally from the geography of East Africa and its social history since the First World War.

Through East Africa there runs that vast rift in the crust of the earth, which men say is one of the few things that inhabitants on the moon can see on our globe. A tremendous break forms the deep basins of the great lakes out of which flows the Nile River, uniting further down with the waters rushing from the heights of Ethippia. Here too are lofty and beautiful mountains rising to the snowline. These mountains and plateaus have been called the most charming region in all Africa, with dense patches of flowering shrubs and noble forests. The park-like country is enlivened by groups of game, herds of cattle, and flocks of sheep and goats wandering knee deep in splendid pasture. Tall pines rise above heath, sweet-scented clover, and anemone. These primeval highlands rise to 4 and 5 thousand feet up to the region of perpetual snow on Mt. Kenya.

Hither in 1903 came several hundred farmers from the Union of South Africa, forming the larger part of the white settlement. Then after the First World War Great Britain gave the best land here to ex-servicement, officers and privates. Millions of acres belonging to the Nandi, the Massi, the Kikuyu and other tribes were given away, and the tribes again and again broke into revolt. In 1922 large blocks of land were sold at nominal prices. Lord Delamere, for instance, bought over 100,000 acres of the finest land at 2¢ an acre.

Out of a total area of 225,000 miles, only 40,000 square miles could be cultivated, the rest was low swamp, ravished by the tsetse fly.

By 1935 the natives occupied only 20% of the land area, being crowded sometimes 285 persons to the square mile, and being pushed into the least fertile parts. Even there they were declared tenants at will of the government, while the land which had been bought and given away to the whites increased phenomenally in value. One farm bought for $400 in 1903 sold for $87,000 in 1913.

In addition to this the white farmers, by heavy taxation, compelled black tribesmen to work on their farms. To legalize this slavery even the bishops of the Anglican church declared: "that some form of pressure must be executed if an adequate supply of labor is to be secured.

35-10-96

This is the historic background. And the development has gone on in equally unfortunate ways. The blacks of Kenya were drafted into the Second World War by the tens of thousands. Education for them, while carried on, lagged miserably in efficiency. They were granted some political rights, but there was no real democracy in government. And the trade unions in the new industry fought a failing fight for broad recognition.

I remember that when I was in Manchester, England in 1945, holding the 5th Pan-African congress, I noticed two Africans. They had revolted against the attempt at the Paris Trade Union Federation to make white European trade unionists the spokesmen for the African unionists, and for that reason had stayed with the World Federation instead of taking part in the new international organisation.

One of the men there was Kwami Nkruma. He was afterward jailed as a Communist on the Gold Coast. Today he is Prime Minister of that colony. Another man was Kenyatta. Today he is in jail accused of instigating the current Mau-Mau murders. I believe he is quite as innocent as Nkruma was, but there is no doubt but that he and the men like him typify the revolt of East Africa against the new colonialism.

35-10-97

Du Bois To Nat'l Guardian December 8, 1952

DEFINITIONS

The definition of "Communist" and "Subversive" is growing apace. At first there was no crime or disloyalty attached to persons who believed in Socialism and worked for it. Before the First World War nearly every intelligent American citizen agreed with John Bright, who said, "We are all Socialists now."

Then, after the Russian Revolution of 1917 we began to make the definition more carefully. Communists who wanted to overthrow government by force were the kind of Communists who could not be endured.

That, however, left a wide margin. There were plenty of young men between the first and second World Wars who were Communists but not in favor of immediate forceful revolution. They were recognized as having the right to maintain this attitude, and much of the trouble comes today when such men are asked if they were Communists before the Second World War. Their answer depends, naturally, upon the definition.

During our alliance with Russia, the definition of Communism softened and got broader. There were, naturally, good and bad Communists -- friends who were Communists in theory; and foes guilty of illegal acts. This is why many honest and sincere thinkers of today are subject to crucifixion by the un-American Committees. "Good" Communists believed in fundamental social change but not in aimless violence.

Then with Byrnes we got "tough". We sent to jail Communists whom we did not even accuse of doing or plotting violence. We began to call "Communist" anybody who was more than a reactionary liberal. All Socialists, reformers and New Dealers became "subversive", and finally we have come to the time when the Union of South Africa has fastened on us a further amplification of the term.

25-10-92

Judge Rumpff of Johannesburg just gave x suspended prison terms to 20 Negroes and Indians in South Africa, saying that they were guilty of "statutory Communism", which was, in fact, opposition to the race segregation laws! We imagine that the Supreme Court of Mississippi will agree with him!

35-10-93

THE NEGRO VOTE

There is one aspect of the last election which we are all a bit unwilling to discuss, but about which perhaps I am in better position than most to say a word ~~about it~~. That is the function of the Negro as candidate & voter

It must be frankly admitted that the Progressive Party lost a large number of votes and failed to attract others, because of the presence of a Negro on the ticket! And not only a Negro, but a woman.

This admission is no reflection upon Mrs. Bass; her record in public service was unassailable, her hard and intelligent work during the campaign was remarkable.

35-10-98

But the Progressive Party was up against the hard fact that the American people are not yet willing to place a Negro in high elective office, and they are also unwilling to put a woman there, whether black or white. Roosevelt's appointment of a woman to the cabinet was never relished by large numbers of Americans; and the nominating of a colored woman for Vice-President was a distinct affront not only to the white south but to a considerable part of the north and even to some labor unions.

We may regret and certainly do, this kind of race prejudice. But in politics we have to deal with facts, and great as has been the advance in 50 years in race relations in the United States, there is still too much color prejudice in this country to make the nomination of a Negro for a high office a wise political step. I, myself, did not realize this last summer as clearly as I do now. I ~~found~~ found myself continually in such error: now being sure that color segregation in schools cannot yet be changed and finding it can; and then being certain that a good Negro candidate will attract votes and finding he will not.

1

This attitude will change and probably change faster than many people believe, but it is as it is today, and the nomination of ~~Mrs. Bass~~ a Colored Candidate clearly not only repelled white votes, but singularly enough it did not attract even the votes of Negroes. Mrs. Mary McCleod Bethune, a leading colored woman, not only did not vote for Mrs. Bass but publicly advertized her support of the openly anti-Negro Southerner, Sparkman. Most Negro Leaders and The bulk of the Negro vote went for Stevenson as a reward for promises which Truman never kept. & Eisenhower never made

35-10-99

Then, too, in the midst of the campaign a small group of Negro leaders with little experience or careful thought, tried to insist on two planks in the Progressive platform: first, that the party should pledge itself to nominate Negroes for office; and secondly, that it should further promise to vote for Negro candidates whether they were progressive or not. The first proposal was unwise, the second idiotic.

If we are going to have democracy in the United States we are not going to nominate people because of race and color. On the contrary, we are going to refuse to let race and color be a consideration either for or against nomination. If, in addition to this, we take the ridiculous position that a person should be elected because of his race and color, with no reference to what he believes or does, we have slapped the whole democratic procedure straight in the face, and repudiated our own fight for the elimination of race and color from all consideration in democratic prodedures. These demands, then, on the part of some earnest young people who were making their first essay in politics, drove numbers of progressives into inaction and despair.

One can easily see how this series of mistakes and mis-calculations could happen. They were natural under the long stress of racial conflict and the bitter impact of war. But the mistake must not be made again. The Progressive Party has a clear mandate to stop war, and to use the powers of government for a more just distribution of wealth and a more reasonable economic order. This is a program broad and comprehensive enough for any party.

To this a general attack on color prejudice along with protection of civil rights for minorities can strongly be advocated, but ~~it~~ to object cannot be assumed as already achieved. or as widely believed as we could wish

35-10-100

Du Bois Nat'l. Guardian Jan. 7, 1953

CHINA

Our contacts with China have been four-fold: trade, missions, Big Business, and the Institute of Pacific Relations. Yankee traders sought barter with the Far East and made a good bargain on which New England long thrived. We were not as successful in China after Great Britain fastened her imperial grip, but we made economic alliance with Japan which benefited both. Foreign missionaries were long a prime export of America to Asia and Africa. They consisted of some persons genuinely eager to do good and to open schools; of other religious fanatics who, as one once told me, "hated heathen"; and of frustrated busy-bodies, convinced that white people who spoke English were the real representatives of God on earth.

36-10-138

China suffered: from despotic government; decadent culture still magnificent in many aspects; from poverty, disease and ignorance. She writhed in angry protest and found herself hindered by foreign merchants and missions. Some Chinese became Christians by conviction, others in order to get foreign money and protection. This so incensed the Chinese that they attacked the converts and thus incurred the wrath and guns of Christendom.

The profit that arose from rent of the Chinese "coolie", an ideal labor machine for exploiters, attracted the investors of the world and made China the property of the British Empire and envy of France, Germany and at last of America. There came the revolution of Sun-Yat-Sen who appealed in vain to the world. Russia, after her own revolution, responded. I remember the Chinese University in Moscow in 1926 and its almost insuperable difficulties. But it helped to build a new China.

The United States also helped: first by remitting the Boxer indemnity by which the world fined China for trying to be free; by such help in education as Yale in China; later by the Institute of Pacific Relations. This was an organization of conferences, studies and publications to learn the truth about China and the East and publish it; to encourage reform; and particularly, to do this in cooperation with the Chinese themselves and with their active participation. This aspect of the work of the Institute especially attracted me because I was already protesting against the effort of white Americans to help Negroes without consulting them or letting them sit in conference. I never actually joined the Institute, being perhaps considered too radical on race matters and too immersed in my own Negro Problem. But my colleague, James Weldon Johnson did, and attended a session in Japan. Ralph Bunche took a prominent part. I do not believe a single American of intelligence was opposed to its work, and many like Frederick Field gave expert knowledge andmoney to its excellent work. A list of members of the Institute would include, I am sure, numbers of prominent liberals of that era. Nor did any number of them withdraw because their Chinese colleagues were distinctly leaning toward socialism as the ideal of reform. The reason was obvious: we too, were leaning the same way. There was at the time no man of intelligence in Europe or America who did not believe in some degree in Socialism or who did not sympathize with the effort to build a socialist state on the tomb of Czarism. Later many were estranged when Communism replaced Socialism, but few then regarded Communism as an evil to be exterminated.

36-10-139

When in China a distinctly Communist movement began to replace the older efforts at reform, and waged open war against the traitorous Christian convert and political murderer, Chiang Kai-Shek, most intelligent Americans still sympathized with them and wished them success. There was at the time no dream of regarding such Americans as traitors or liars, or as citizens unworthy of public office or trust.

But meantime American Big Business, sensing the fall of Britain, became more and more determined to become heir to Colonial Imperialism, and fastened on Chiang Kai-Shek as their tool. Big Business regarded opposition to Chiang as opposition to "our way of life". When Chiang committed military and moral suicide, American Big Business launched a propaganda which held Russia as the real aggressor, and linked with expanding Communism all liberals and liberal organizations which sympathized with free China.

36-10-140

Suddenly it became necessary for all Americans to search their souls and make sure of their jobs. A surprising number remembered that they never dreamed that the revolt in China was Communistic, and that they always had been followers of Chiang Kai-Shek and his persuasive wife. A few [redacted] refused to lie, even if imprisoned, and many others kept faith with China and condemned this nation's betrayal of the Chinese people and our frantic support of a liar and a thief who, with our armed support, now perches on a little island the size of Vancouver in an empire larger than the United States, amid 7 million serfs who pretend to speak for four hundred and sixty million of increasingly free and happy people.

HAITI

by W.E.B. Du Bois

I am sitting at Cap-Haitien this March 10, 1955, looking at Christophe's citadel rising stern on yonder mountain peak. As I sit I think of what this beautiful island may mean to its people and to the world.

I have spent three weeks here. I went for two reasons. First, to rest in comfort. That I can hardly do in the United States. In Florida I can stop at no first-class hotel nor scarcely put my foot into the ocean. In California it is almost equally impossible for me to bathe in the sea, and if I drive there I would be refused accommodations in most of the teeming motels. So I go to the West Indies for sun and sea.

38-11-55

Secondly, I wanted to see Haiti again since my visit in 1944 when at the request of the United States government I lectured to teachers. However, I was not at all sure that I would be allowed to enter, since the United States will not allow me a passport. Passports are not required for visitors to Haiti; nevertheless arbitrary refusal of admission is made. In my case I am suspect because I insist on the right of any person to believe in Socialism and join the Communist Party; and because personally I have great admiration for what the Soviet Union has accomplished and for what the Peoples China is trying to do. I believe that China should be admitted to the Security Council of the United Nations.

On the other hand I went to Haiti at the request of no foreign agent and with no intention of plotting against the Haitian government. This apparently most Haitians of influence believed, because I was received with courtesy and treated with kindness. I neither received nor expected official recognition of any kind. I did hope to see my former friend and collaborator, Dantes Bellegarde, but he did not call nor invite me. A senator and the Minister of Foreign Affairs and many private citizens tendered us courtesies.

I found Haiti under the complete economic and ideological control of the United States. Most Haitians seem convinced that the American way of life is not only the best way but practically for them the only feasible path of progress. They believe in industry designed to make goods for sale; in private profit as the best path to public welfare, and they think that Communism is a crime. They are convinced that within reason universal selfishness brings universal welfare.

38-11-50

At the same time, thinking Haiti is well aware how complete a contradiction this attitude of thought is to the history of this land. Historically Haiti is a story of socialism from the time of the Maroons led by Toussaint down to Haitian peasant agriculture today. By united social action, slaves and free Negroes overthrew slavery and under Dessaline and Christophe secured political independence and economic survival.

Haiti's economic history has been widely misconceived as a story of illiterate Negroes trying to rule; peasants too lazy to work steadily; and an elite dependent on political graft. Finally, America to the rescue with its way of life! This is a series of half truths. Haiti started as a dictatorship with a pattern of culture inherited from African ~~socialism~~ and conducted by chieftains. These runaway slaves, uniting with the free mulattoes, abolished slavery. They drove out French, English and Spanish, established government and planned industry. The slaves seized most of the land as peasant proprietors, while the elite organized an aristocracy with thinkers and writers.

These two groups formed a self-supporting economy; the peasants raising food and furnishing some personal service; the elite establishing the state and intercourse with the world. The peasants retained their leisure and personal independence. The ruling caste had to raise revenue and support a modern standard of life for themselves. The outrageous indemnity demanded by France for recognition; the continuous threat of Europe and America made a heavy tax burden necessary. What is today, then, regarded as "graft" in Haiti is lineal descendent in cultural pattern from Christophe's undisputed ownership of all national income, in return for which he directed and defended the state.

38-11-52

Gradually the scene changed. An oligarchy with internal rivalries took over power from the dictator, and rivals succeeded each other by force, giving a semblance of anarchy. But beneath remained a stable peasantry raising food and material and clinging to the land. Their taxation could not be raised too much because their soil was being washed into the sea and their crops dwindling. The elite, in a world of white imperialism, was ostracized because of race and color and yet tried to maintain a standard of life or lose their country to international robber barons. The nation reeled until Colonial Imperialism, the last phase of world capitalism, stepped in to take charge of Haiti. It tried threat, political cheating and blackmail; and finally "self defense" when Woodrow Wilson made fear of Germany's designs on the Panama Canal excuse for landing American marines in Haiti.

What Haiti needed in 1915 and needs now is a scientific modernization of her historic socialism. She needs a planned economy based on perpetuating the wide land distribution among peasant homesteaders. This peasantry, living under a contented way of life with home and family, folklore and simple religious customs, with sanitary habits, art and song, was susceptible to guidance along lines of modern science and and technique. Without undue disturbance of their folkways they could have been regimented and guided toward group land culture and industry, in reading and writing and an expansion of the democratic institutions already known among them.

38-11-58

This guidance the elite could have furnished and would have had they been brought into closer contact with and knowledge of modern social development in the later 19th century. But they had been cut off from those currents of modern life represented by the labor movement, votes for workers and women, and the various plans for a socialist state. Their contact with modern life had been narrowed to that part of French literary development which eventually grew into modern French industrial monopoly. Even this did not keep all Haitians from conceiving industrial democracy, led by unselfish and devoted sacrifice, but unfortunately Haiti came into contact with the worst side of American capitalism just as it was expanding into imperialism. The marines and their white Southern officers tried force and violence in Haiti. They began to drive the peasants like slaves. But two forces met them: the Haitian elite and American Negroes.

Southern whites from Louisiana and Mississippi were no matches for Haitian gentlemen neither in law courts nor society. The whites got tangled up with legal difficulties, local law and diplomatic usage. American Negroes with increasing political power, which Wilson and Harding feared, brought merciless publicity to bear on this American adventure in colonialism, and so after long twisting, the marines withdrew.

What Haiti then needed was social restoration and guidance led by Haitians. What she got was American Big Business, led by men whose aim it was to secure Haitian business allies to share the loot of exploiting Haiti. This is what is going on today, and it spells disaster for Haiti if not for the United States itself.

When you look down upon this nation from heaven you will see a land raped and ravaged; its forests are almost gone, its streams are drying up. The forests were beautiful and valuable -- mahogany and rosewood, oak and pine. The rivers could have furnished power for the nation. Today even when the greatest Haitian river is dammed according to plan, the dam will soon be silted up by erosion from the mountains.

It is clear to the most superficial thinker that what Haiti needs today is not individual initiative but planned economy. It needs a hundred-year program of reforestration to start her economy on the right track, and no program of private profit can possibly furnish this beginning.

38-11-59

Two other broad social plans which cannot be arranged to return private income are Education and Health. Haiti has been making desperate effort to improve education. My visit ten years ago was part of this effort. Yet today a responsible official assures me that illiteracy in Haiti is still at least 94%. This is due to the fact that effective education in Haiti must be bilingual, using both the native Creole and the French. It must penetrate physically a difficult terrain of mountain and valley and the wide separation of population on individual homesteads. Finally, the present educational effort exhausts itself on city people, professional schools and higher schools.

Haiti, urged by American fear during the occupation, has tried to attack the program of public health. She has scarcely done more than begin. Her water supply is polluted by the prevalent peasant customs. Her physicians are scarce. In one region of perhaps 100,000 people where I stopped there were 30 lawyers, 7 physicians and 3 dentists.

Here then is a social program calling for forests, education and public health. Instead of the efforts towards such social thinking Haiti's efforts today are organized for industry and trade. Most Americans would agree with this, and watching the Haitian scene you can see why. Here come the peasant women down from the mountains. All night they walked straight and sure, carrying the burden of their products on their heads and on donkeys. Thus the food of Haiti comes down to the cities. We may argue that the cities in turn could furnish the peasants what they need: clothing, sugar, some simple tools and machinery. Thus one could see a self-balancing economy.

38-1-60

But it does not work this way. The food which the peasant can raise and bring is poorer and dearer. The manufacturing, the industries which have begun and are planning, are not to satisfy the wants of peasants but the demands of world trade and especially trade with the United States. Thus the sisal hemp which Haiti raises goes to North America; the coffee goes to Antwerp. Sugar and fruit are for the export trade.

On the other hand, the returns to the peasants are small. I stood in a market teeming with peasants trying to sell their goods: small amounts of vegetables, fruits, fibers and a few home manufactures. I saw a Haitian lady bargaining for tomatoes. She brought down the peasant's price until she bought a dozen ripe fresh tomatoes for 6¢! This represented the peasant's return for planting and raising the vegetables, carrying them from five to fifteen miles to market, and paying the state tax on the right to sell.

Under such circumstances toward what does Haiti look? What now should the thinkers of Haiti do about it? What Haiti needs more than anything else is knowledge of the successful socialism which is uplifting the mass of man in Scandinavia, in the Soviet Union and particularly in New China. Just before I visited Haiti there came there as a casual visitor an American engineer who had recently visited China. He was enthusiastic about the way in which the Chinese were attacking the problem of flood and erosion. I listened to his story with deep appreciation. He went to Haiti this year as I did, not to teach but to rest. But the Haitian government, doubtless at the suggestion of Americans, would have none of him. He was ordered to leave within 24 hours. So that Haiti knows nothing of the great social planning of our day, prevalent not only in Communist countries but in all countries including the United States. Haiti needs this planning. It is being protected against it.

38-11-61

Haiti's government income in 1954 was almost 26 million dollars. Most of this, 17½ million dollars, came from export and import customs imposts. A little less than 7 million came from internal revenue -- 4 million from income and poll taxes; ½ million from alcohol and tobacco; 1 million from stamps, licenses and registered papers. The way in which this meager income was spent was instructive. Nearly five million dollars went to the army. Three million dollars went to education and three million dollars to public health. But in this case education included primarily higher and professional education, and not much was left for primary schools, particularly in country districts. And "public health" went in part for medical and professional schools as well as hospitals and clinics.

38-11-62

Besides this expenditure, 1½ million went for public works and 700,000 for agriculture. Another million went for maintaining embassies, ministries and consulates in foreign countries. Maintenance of the president and his office cost $300,000 a year, half of which went for his secret police. The legislature cost $400,000 a year.

Now this shows effort together with misguided ideals. There is little crime in Haiti, but there is social unrest. And this is the reason for the army and secret police. There is the need to spend twice as much on education and public health as are being spent, and it is doubtful if Haitian ambassadors and ministers are worth their cost.

On the other hand for the leaders of the Haitian elite who are more interested in science, literature and poetry than in elaborate entertainment of American tourists, -- to them the problem of survival is difficult. I talked with the Librarian of the National Library. His building is being improved, but is weak, bare and empty. His own salary is $2,640 a year, and he has but $40 a month to spend on his library, outside the services of a few assistants. Yet this young man is a scholar. He knows Haitian history and literature for two centuries book by book. He knows Haitian archaeology and cultural history. But his whole life and work are insecure.

A plush tourist trade in fine hotels, liquor and gambling, is attracting the government and American investors; and the old elite are being transfused from writers and artists to "business men."

38-11-63

As a moral problem there is less blame for the old style grafting than for the "business enterprise" which profits from forcing peasants off the north plain where the United States is building a dam for irrigation. The income from this enterprise will go to Haitian land monopolists and capitalists and American investors. The Haitian peasant will be reduced to a wage worker, poor and discontented. His revenge will come when the silt from his mountains fills the American dam.

Outside then, of all but great world problems of war and peace, of Communism and free enterprise, here is a little country where on a small scale among neighbors and relatives, an economy may be organized and a culture developed. It is being ruined today by the fact that America is trying to force on Haiti a regime of private profit which is not suited to her history or present conditions.

What other people have done, what China and India and Northern Viet Nam are doing to solve such problems, Haiti does not know. And if the Import-Export Bank has its way it will never learn. We have given Haiti some hurricane relief and induced her to match American investment in irrigation. For this we maintaine 40 Americans in Haiti on good salaries.

Point Four in Haiti has spent about ½ million dollars a year, and not for what the mass of the Haitian people need but for what American investors think it will be for American profit for the Haitians to attempt.

The Haitian peasant is not hungry nor naked; he speaks an African-French patois and has a rich folklore and long cultural history; he has a happy life on his own land, raising most of his food and building his own hut where his people live and love; He works hard but has leisure for gossip, games, music and religious ceremony; he suffers much from curable disease and is increasingly apprehensive because of lessening crops and higher prices which he must pay for articles he wants and needs. His leisure irks Americans. Laborers should work long and hard for existence. They should have little leisure but work to produce goods and render services which make employers well-to-do and investors rich.

The Haitian elite, hard-pressed for income which will raise them to American standards of living, have not yet conceived of labor exploitation as displacing peasant content. They cannot forget what the peasant did for Haitian freedom or now furnishes for art and literature. They still regard art and literature as the end of life.

We may argue until blue in the face that the United States does not need Socialism; that because of our intelligence and novel character we can plan industry and do justice by individual initiative. Be that as it may, Haiti needs social planning and discipline exercised not by foreign exploiters but by its own trained and devoted elite. This gave freedom to Haiti's slaves, a hundred years of independence and can give a future of socialism with contentment and art unless all dies under a new American slavery.

38-11-64

TO RUSSIA

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

We rode out to Stettin at eight along flat land. Stettin rose a little old and yet new, with busy harbor and we sailed the long and broidered river bay and the Canal Mole and then out to the East Sea. Some Germans were returning to the Volga and they sang sad-sweet folk songs in the night. Germans and Russian and a little French--no English was heard. The boat a little thing was sailing awinging straight on. The low grey backs of Gothland rises on the left in the late afternoon of the second day. Many ships hurrying toward Stockholm slipped by noiseless in the night , but in the morning low islands lay in the east. Esthone came and a littly fairy islandrising eastward with a secret resting place of elves at Kewlus beneath the grey cold rain.

There is ever a secret excitment among us--we whisper and speculate, Russia? we exchange rumors--we correct them and spread others--Russia! Mysterious--ahnungvoll. We are mostly German tourists--a bridal couple very sweet and conscious, a Paris teutor, big calm and cold; a mother and daughter-vernumflig, young and golden, a big bearded Russian, former judge appeared, but not a "Comrade who hales the Bolsheviks", an actress, silked coifed and a bit loud, when excited; a mother and sweet little girl, a bit awed by "mutti". All the world--all the world. We sang by phonograph: "In Evnem Kuhlen Grunde"

The chimneys of Reval smoke faraway and its great lighthouses rise A sail boat gracefully crosses our bow.

Kornstaht--long lines of empty droks--a few warships dismantled; old yellow forts, and warehouses, some crumbling some rebuilt--most of them empty. Zoll officers simply bloused--and above all a golden Dome--stately in the quiet morning ghost city of a dead Empire. (Times, N. Y.

89-6-68 reports notes and murder at this very time!)

LENINGRAD

There is in the Place of the Revolution in the great parade ground that looks upon the proudest of bridges spanning the Neva, with its double eagled marble--one of the most money monuments of all times and places--a low wall of greyish brown- great hewn stones, irregular , yet straight, square with wide openings and some with inscriptions on them, with the graves of a thousand victims dead beneath flowers--in the center were sickle and hammer, and the half barbaric lettering flaring forth;

You who fought for the freedom of the world
You who are her first victims and whom we envy
You who fighting since 1848
Deserve to lie here too.

Beyond is the terrible prison of St. Peter & Paul. Here is the Admirals' Walk and this one of those rich gems of churches over-done, luxurious. Splednid with color and gold but alluring and georgous. A fence of wrought -iron, vines and flowers of curved enchantment--with factory and wood-yard.

When Lenin said religion was the opinion of the people--we do not understand----we have not seen the jewelled gems of churches. ~~How transitory and unsubstantial are the physical monuments of civilization. Leningrad city unrepaired and unrebuilt for 13 years and the ruin will~~

Last night at twilight I walked in the Square before the Winter Palace. It loomed red-brown and the statues and chimneys above it were as ghosts. It must have been a brilliant and wonderful city in the day of Czars for those for whose good it was built and used.

There is a certain sardonic splendor that blends here and there--the red marble column and the Napoleonic Wars is almost Egyptian--the marble atlasses before the Hermitage--the gigantic bronzes of Cathorn and the others.

Lenningrad is clearing no one fevereshly raking and planting and white-washing and ~~paint~~ painting. Not much new building I should say, but some--ships, a few buildings. There is so much to be done , and they're at it.

The Neva ripples--a bright and beautiful silver band, beneath a half dozen bridges, with balance and fortress and towers of chimes.
Last night I wandered up and down the Nevsky Project (Now the October Project) The electric lights come late; people wandered, two were drunk, but I did not meet a single evident prostitute--the park at the end was filled with a quiet happy crowd; unaccompanied young women walked unaccosted. It would be hard to recall my first impressions of the populators of Leningrad. There are a number of women beggers near the great mines and even in the trams; there are some unkept and wild looking street gamin. Yet the off-scourings of men seem few. The level of prosperity is low. --Poor clothes, old fashioned and patched. few silk stockings, hard shoes and yet a contented looking folk--busy going and coming, working, not unusually gay but not morose, complaining, evidently eager for luxury. I saw a kerchiefed woman, very poorly dressed, standing in perfect silence motionless beside a window of dresses, silks and under-wear! There is no evidence of sex excitment and secretiveness, but some frank companionship of boys and girls. Some of the people on the street seemed a bit gruff and envious. There are covered coments here but on the whole this is a contented city.

The public ordering of the revolution has been a masterpice--books, books, books cheap of everysort size and subject, every where. Public monuments--they left Alex III in mighty bronze and said simply "This is the author of our troubles." They let Catherine flaunt her ample skirts without remark. The Czars from Peter to Alec III lie buried in P.P. laying in simple marble slate: Peter the Great rides unmolested in his great boulder; but schools, theatres, state stores, newspapers, carry a mighty propaganda. In 19 years a people have a new interpretation of history and economics--extraordinary! In Moscow even the hanging of its pictures is significant: I remember one in the blues of honor, ? and legend; the great intellectuals of Russia--Tolstoi in a corner, the beribboned diplomats & nobles; no kings. Everywhere on the streets pictures of Lenin.

49-6-20

We saw the prisoners cells in St. Peter and Paul--the church of the Czars, the little house built within a house where Peter the Great lived. Priests were intoning a sermon there. Only onw who hears the chant of a Russian service, sees its color and genuflections --only those who know the gorgeous litany and the most beautiful Russian churches can realize what Lenin meant when he said "Religion is the opinion of the people."

We rode about the Islands of the Blessed, which was once the playground of the rich and is now the resting place for the workers. Farther on the city of the Czars (Tearsk-Selu) is now the city of the children (Detskoe-Seloe) Those may see the meaning of this who look up at the palace of the Alexanders--this golden theme room--the rooms of amber and marble. The tables of lapis lazuli and mother of pearl, its exquisite inlaid floors- it is a barbaric burst of splendor to titillate the jaded palates of the masters of millions--outdoing Versaille, Potsdam, Barcelonia and Vienna. And now our peasant drives points to the agricultural experiments stations.--"waste of money," said he, "they tried ~~xxxxxxx~~ to teach peasants to use a tractor--wouldn't work; I put in my horse and all went well. To the gutter--ungracious information but not much. One girl street-car conductor did not like to guide us but she looked a fallen shop-girl; another was very kind--she looked a risen peasant.

49-6-21

Russia between L. & Moscow

is almost enmoulded by factories, tall chimneys are everywhere. They tell me of great iron and steel works , and a factory population. which was the backbone of revolution. At any rate tall chimneys smoke everywhere and large numbers of workmen pass.

Ride between Leningrad and Moscow is like Southern New England in olden times--rolling pines and beeches, cattle and horses, grass. Only the villagers are huddled grey and poor and the crops look meager. Yonder Moscow squats and burns, flat like a wide village, only it is a busy crowded city of 2 millions built like an irregular star of circles about the Kremlin. The Kremlin is a thing unique on the earth which I have seen. Fortress and royal residence set on a low hill---gleaming under Gilded Cupula pointed Italian towers and clasped by a big. brick wall with swollen tall battlement. It is a magnificent jumble of times and things ---powers--tyranny, wealth, war, religion, murder, jealousy and revolution.

Russians are much like Negroes; they lounge loose-jointed and vacant eyed; they will not hurry and dislike being on time. A soldier in a street car lounged from hair to heels--chin on window sill, boots in the aisle. He explained that he had nothing to do but stand around and he was going to sit down. I have seen in all perhaps a dozen ragged dirty waifs--with childlish impishness rather than bad faces. They caught on the back of street cars and one pulled a woman's hair. There are many beggars but they seem mostly professional.

From the Sparrow Hills of (the Lenin Hills of Revolution) Moscow looks rather splendid laying in the wide bend of the river with its great of churches resting in 5 golden domes and almost hiding the Kremlin.

49-6-22

I went to the Troctykov Gallery today and saw the Russian world of Art--an astonishingly beautiful thing, a beauty set apart from Europe and but hald known. The work of Pefin, his heart-breaking-Vuexhectict and Ivan the Terrible and his murdered son; Vereschllchagins Marvelous skulls. religious customs, strong and beautiful faces (Menshikof in exile;) fairies and gods--and jusgment with the golden domes of Russian churches in the sky; but about crowdes of workers and peasants listening to art explained . I nveer saw or dreamed of a picture gallery with such an audience--women, children, boys, men , uncouth, crowding -----

The people are stretching their arms and souls, uncouth, self assertive, seldom saying "excuse me" or "thank you", an ignorant lazy mass. But many pushing exhaustingly. If this th ng goes on a generatinn, Russia will lead the world.

Those used to having cities ordered and arranged for the comforts of the rich will be disappointed and out of patience in Moscow. Hotels are dear and poor; servants careless and unservile; nobody hopping about and "at your service"---world up-side down or is it right side up at last?

The Soviet program is mainly psychologica; can a people be trained to work effectively with the general prosperity as the motive and the fear of poverty and old age taken away? The present generation of lazy inefficient workers were trained under capitalism. Their psychology will change calmly. Leisure and taking away of the fear of poverty will mean to them loafing, laziness, and self assertion and to a large extent--the tremendous change of the transition period.

The problem of capital is tremendous. Capital invested before the war was largely destroyed. New capital wants mortage on profit. S.S.S.R. is is beginning to give limited mortages. Former capitalists cannot complain --they made enormous profits.

All the polite culture and grace and gigh society and wealth of Russia is in exile with their disbeleif in and contempt for democracy; bearing testi ony against Soviet Fussia in the place of influence throughout the world.

Moscow is a city of five cities each within the other. The first sprawling mass that is Moscow within a sec nd wall encircled city; with-inthat city is another walled city and within this third city and finally all upon a hill, hoary with wall and battlement and fantastic towers shining with golden domes--a fourth city that is the Kremlin.

First came the Kremlin as a fortress in the 12th century; then in the 16th century came the inner city around the Kremlin called Chinese town; then in 17th centry came the enveloping wall of the white city bordered by a wall of a larger city/and finally the new suburbs of servants of artisans artisans and further extends a greater city one beyond even the ancient fortress out past the new Maidens convent. The tremenodus task of maintaining the dictatorship of the Communists and keeping inner disagreement from disrupting it by much denouncing. how much criticusm; problems of protesting; shall a surples of money to to wages or state owned capital. to necessitâes or to general culture? But they are openly disuussing such problems which are problems of every state but dreaded by us by war or strike without reasonable discussion.

The Soviets have advanced legislation not because they are Soviets but because they are advanced in sex, art, religion, medicine, education and economics. Capitalism could do this and in time and place does, but nowhere as generally and compàetely as in Russia. It is up to capitalism to prove it can do as well or better. Russia is a tyranny like Europe and America. The mere job of keeping the church domes of Moscow guilded is a severs one. The Soviets have had war after war--frequent and famine but three years of experiement.

49-6-74

Can SSSR conquer jealousy and envy on the part of the workers? Yes they answer by giving them necessities. But how about luxuries? By raising a public opinion against luxuries. There is such now--Moscow has no well-dressed leisure class. But it is a job and you and I who have been trained to distrust human nature and believe in selfishness and lust may easily believe the task impossible. Sometimes one seems to be right (in last war) sometimes wrong (in slavery question) Democracy does not work in America because we do not believe it can. There is a mob standing in embryo--serence of front seats at operetta--crowding. And speaking of costs of Russian religion--it cost $200,000 to guild the Domes of the City of churches. Redieme---then were 350 church in Moscow. Church domes or crosses which instruct Orthodox demand guilding; with bells that jangle and pound and ring--the bells of Moscow are no unimportant theme.

The golden domes of Russia: Five domes --a greater one and four lesser; Five crosses, a gr ater and four lesser and the lace like chains which hold them. They are the loveliest and most significant thing in the Russian city landscape--they loom and glow, Sing with the bells,
The most striking painting of Heaven I have seen is Vasnetzufs LAST JUDGMENT in the great Tretyakov Gallery--Angels Christ and God are conventional but Heaven in the backgrou d id the golden Domes of Russia.

Today I visited Radek of the Executive Committee: a room in vast disorder, books, pamphlets, a wide couch bed, a desk a table, a typewriter, chairs, tobacco and magazines. Not a storehouse but a work shop. He was a spare man almost insignificant but with good eyes, pleasant voice and encyclopedic knowledge. He talks English, German, French and of course Russian. His English had a stringy accent but was good and fluent. We talked of races, racial minorities; the 600 Chinese students in Russia, and how they work, work, work. The te urning power of Germany and the restoring of Colonies. He was much interested in us and incensed at the Negro hat ng trade unions. He believed in a rapprochement of coloredpeoples. He came with me to the gate of the Kremlen. His wife and little girl are in this country. "We revolutionists cannot afford large families--we must be on the go."

Tragedy and drama lurk around every Russian corner. I went to the library of the Communists Academy today---800,000 volumes never cataloged in modern numbe s. Now a tall charming beautiful woman is at the task and has a splendid dictionary card catalogue of 15,000 titles already started. A gr-at task with Russian and Latin lettering--She worked in America seven years; In the library of congress, in the Widener library. They spent $100,000 last year on new bocks--a splendid modern collection. She was so fine and full of enthusiasm in her cramped but overflowing quarter. She expects a modern library in two years; and then---

Seven years she and her husband had been exiled in Siberia. After the revolution --1905 they escaped to America. He was sent for a year to the prison at Easton Pennsylvania. He suffered more in that year than in the seven and came out on a stretcher prostrate from typhus and pneumonia. For a year after he was ill. The land of the Free!

Today I saw the Marx-Engels institute--a marvelous collection of the whole literature of economic revolt the world over and in all modern times. Books and pamphlets, 40000 photostatic copies. One of the finest working libraries I have seen; American are using it--175,349 volume! All ready for the English, German, French, Russian and other languages well-spoken; publishing began. The tremendous literary activity of Marx.

74-9-64

Then the great Lenin library of three million volumes-- more old-fashioned but beginning to grow; received only a pittance under the Czars ;new buildings, modern equipment and enthusiasm. A little library actually filled with two hundred trained in one and two year courses in village libraries;again courtesy and all languages. Russia seems to me the only modern country where people are more or less taught and encouraged to despise and put down one certain group or race. I know countries where race and color prejudice are very slight manifestation but no country where race and color prejudice seems so absolutely absent.

I saw tonight the film "Baitlesha Polempkn". It is tremendous in drama, realism, passionate interest and beauty. I have seldom if ever seen it equal. It is a triumph of cinematographic art--) CMIT)

Today I visited the State Printing office where Russis is printing books for her 100 or more languages. Extraordinary! Everybody, even workers at lunch eager to show us. A school of a hundred apprentices-- Jewish, Chinest Tartar, Arabic--a dozen or more people boys and girs. School books, new alphabets, cards, placards, all sorts of things in blank and color. They spend 250,000 rubles a month. Students sent by trades-men or at visitors expense. They are fixing and comparing letters of the alphabet by all sorts of devices. They have German, English and American equipment. German is cheapest and English and German give credit terms. They spent 500,000 rubles on equipment last year 400,000 next. All Russia will spend will buy 6 mil ion rubles of printing equipment next year and that is 10% of what she needs. They set type here, print, cut and bind, photographs and make plates, repair and rebuilt machines--a little nation of nations working hap ily together.

Today in the Boyar house--a long list of excursions for workers and museums and historic places. To the theatrol museum--making of the pledge and new developments --an oil painting of Aldridge and many manuscripts, and a bust of Pushkin. Moscow had apartments on a grand scale--court and doorman, great rooms--8 or more to a floow--2 servants bedrooms Now workers live 3 or 4 families to an aparmtnet. Ice used to be kept stored in the courtyard--now, no ice.

I may be wrong--one easily is in such matters--but Russia seems to me less preoccupied by sex than most lands. Berlin and Paris are sex mad; London equally but of course respectably; but Moscow? There is almost no trace of the well known marks. In a month I have seen less signs of iregularity here than in a day in Berlin. Of course there are all vague surface judgments; we have made sex so shameful and buried it so perfectly with lies that it is impossible to speak accurately and precisely.

The thaater for the people is throwing in poverty and bareness, with beauty directed to the audience. I saw Don Jual in the Experimantal Theatre Beautifully and rarely donw with the Mozart Minor and a new poets' words. Prhangula was there and I remember rose to hunt down the proplyate and save the daughters and sweethearts. But it was all donw tihh a smile gaily and artistically.

I can walk and look in Moscow. In Paris I would attract public attention; in London blankness; anywhere in America anything from frank curiosity to open insult. In Moscow I pass almost undecteded. Russians ask me for information; women sit beside me quite confidentially and unconsciously; Singular country!

The city of Moscow is a star radiating from the Kremlin with walls for concentrative circles. There is the crenellated Kremlin wall quaintly towering and golden domed, with its first city of Czar and Patriot and

Then without the wall of the Kitai Gorof still stands// . The second oldest merchants city of the Kremlim; then there is the wall of the Belai-Gorod enmoulding the White City. And now done in boulevards. And then far out and swinging even across the river is the fourth city wall --again in Avenues and shrubbery. Finally there is the outermost city this sprawls beyond all walls. ---So from Kremlim and Czar the city of Moscow , shoul and body radiates and shines like a great human star.

H9-6-28

Tonight I saw Lenin lying as if asleep. There was a long long avenue of workers as every night we went into the square beneath the walls of the Kremlin. He lay so still and natural--a little man, bald, and blonde, bearded with clipped moustached just asleep. His form partly outlined. Above on the Kremlin burned the Red Flag.

Today I visited a factory, one of the great state factories of the Moscow cooperation where they empl y 1875 people and make candy, cookies, soap and perfume. The director was a former workman of the factory, nominated to the post by his fellows and appointed by the dire tors--a free simple fellow of 40 full of enthusiams--eager to inform; to whom the workingfolks raised their hats. The machinery was wooden but in England, they employees were clothed in white, simple inexpensive cotton drill. At the expense of the factory the meals of soup and a meat course, with bread were furnished.

There in a clean bright living room at 30 K a piece. They had a library of 4000 books, a reading and game room a theatre large enough for 500-750 a lecture room. The librarian, a borwn slip of a gir., voluntary Communist worker was vibrant large and exact with her excerps and careful card catologing. The children from 2-8 were taken care of in a day nursery with nurses and daily visits by the physician. Visitors and mothers were compelled to wear cotton over thier clothes and the children had aprons. They were given regular afternoon naps in bed, meals with milk and eggs. There was a garden with sand for them to play. Mothers had a clean room and table to come and nurse their children.

Every effort is made to get mothers out of the kitchen and into public life. The products are beautifully made with clean unadulturated materials and support of the public 10-20% cheaper than private firms. Above all the spirit, the gaity, the earnestness, the rising efficiency, the health, light and air. Bosses hurried to tell us and to exhibit; 25% of the workers are Communists and the number increases each year.

Girls on piece work earn normally $25 a month--some men earn 1200 a year. All get one months vacation with pay and free physician and insurance.

Moscow is feverish with repairs--painting whitewashing building with wood, brick plaster and stone--scaffolding rise and fall roofs swarm with hammering, barred side-walks drip with calcomine; roads are torn up and put down, domes are gilding; flowers are planted, old walls and monuments are resotred. But with all this city is still cold and worn--leave a modern city unkept for 10 years and it is half ruined. Twenty five years would make Babylon of New York.

Today I was on the estate of the Counts of Orlof. One could still picture its former glories; a palace with marble, silk, gold and paintings; a vast park with noble tre s, rolling lawns, vales and dells. A lake and the gleam of the Moscow river; parkways enough to house a town-- little palaces a beautiful bath house, rows of flowers, offices, barns and buildings. The kingdom of a little king. Two mules from the Gitan gored but men on the outskirts of the city.

The early Orlofs great Lien started when one became a sweetheart of the Great Catherine. They reigned in luxury and splendor two centuries. Then the Soviet republic took their property and made it into a public park and turned the palace into a furniture museum. Frankly this property would seem to be doing Russia more good in its present use than in its former. That the present Orloffs' suffer is true, but that the Orloff from start to finish have received 10 times as much as they gave and that Russia has been long carrying them as unhealthy barnacles on her body economically and socially is also true.

44-6-80

In the Museum one noticed the beauty and splendor that surround d the few --and what was the cause of it? Were they fine high-thinking artists enjoying life? The few that were, revolted from the system. The others had their maws filled with over plus and were still an hungred. Idle profligates and fools were the largest crop.

Russia is poorly clothed--very poorly, but sufficiently fed and badly housed. There is a fad of careless dressing--blouses, caps and boots colored shirts and collars for men; blouses, kerchiefs, socks for women; yet the women eye Western clothes hungerily. The state taxes their import remorselessly.

In the factory there was an interesting incident: as we visitors came in, a big capable working woman pushed by. She was dissatisfied with her job in one of the stores--did not like the manager and wanted the Director of the Bakery Department to transfer her . He promised an answer tomorrow. "Tomorrow, she "thou'd" him; Would you tell your wife that? But I must consult the manager. You'll forget-- No, I won't --Well can't you decide now--You see its this way and the long explanation was gone over again. Well, tomorrow I will see, repeated the young and harassed chief. She finally took his phone no. I left. There was no anger but there was a lot of industrial democracy!

18-9-64

I have seen parts of the 10th Celebration of Youth Day in Russia. Last night we were in a self-governed school session. Children ran from 13 to 17 years of age, boys and girls. They had a glorious time--perhaps 200 of them. They a wall laughed , shouted, played tag. They sat on benches in fairly quiet and pretty good order. There was a "presidum" of 4--one gir. A black-haired boy delivered the chief address --could he speak 40 minutes he asked diffiderently--No was the cry, they allowed 30 and finally 35. In quite a matter of fact way, he told of the origin of Youth Movement in Russia. How other visitors had fallen away from the Communists ideals; how the pioneers differed from the Scouts; how they must strive for world unity and against war.

They sang the Internationale, with saluting hands. Then others, one by told of what one group had doneto ward off tyranny and bureaucary--A little boy of 13 made a speech and a girl. They invited the principal of the school to speak. He criticized their late beginning and poor singing. Then began . They staged aplay impromptu--Russia red-flagged in distress; the commun class--(Communist cadets 18-23) ran to her aid--a girl; then boys and girls representing Italy, Germany, France, Spain; One represents the small nationalities of Russia and speaking broken Russian. One represented America, talking of money and checks-- then a recitation in union. Then gymnastics, the girls barelegged and in bloomers then questions and answers, dancing and singing--no kissing, no round dancing--not an arm around a girl--not a single action of sex excitment, joy enthusiasm, noise and lovely deference to and ignoring of the strangers present. A beautiful evening---no dressy blouses, shirt sleeves--children of workers.

Today 200,000 children and youth with more grown ups marched through The Red Square: Russians of all sorts and kinds, a hundred or two chinese Tartars, Caucasions, Turks, two or three Negroes--an extraordinary demonstration. First several thousand dlelegates from the units stood in the Square and listened to speeches from some of the Commissioners and guests. Then the marching began and lasted from one and one-half to two and one-half hours. Red streamers, mottoes, figures uniforms and everyday clothes. Some of the vagabond children in rags, singing, marching, trudging. It looked like enthusiastic voluntary work--a mass movement tremendous in size and belief. There were many groups of athletes barelegged boys and girls--splindid power limbed. One group of Chinese, Huzzany in native tongue. I never saw a greater variety of Russian types, all aggressivlyworkingmen and gloryfing in it. In the afternoon at the fair grounds they were at it again, marching and playing--some little horse play but no roughness and no degeneracy.

28-9-44

One day I talked with the CPFPC head of democratic education God! how these people are working-- He had finished a hard Saturday morning--Committees, phones, callers, and clerks. We came at 2:30 by 3:00 he began to talk and explained clearly until 5:00! Comrade Elena works six hours in the office and eight in the field--committees, lectures, inspections. Russia is planning an extraordinary system of human training.

I saw "The Woodland" as interpreted by Meyerhold, the barest mechanics, no scenery, foot light, drops and all the lights, titles and acting, extraordinary! Not Russia fighting the world, the world fighting Russia. The most horrible thing to the Russian mind is the Civil Wark--Kolachak, Denekin, Wrauguel, Gendenas, North, East, South and West--father against son, brother against brother, sister against sister.

A Labor School

An industrial school with a deference bound up with technical knowledge and leading, not following, demand assisting industrial regions and factories Waking suggestions in factories, observing and teaching and recommending books in factories. Most children pioneers. Esprit Du Corps. Difficulties of the right teaching force, teachers furnished by trades unions--school is usually industrial school but: (1) In an aristocracy of working people. (2) In a course of study that can lead to University. (3) An attempt to give children a general intimate view of the whole industrial technique from mine to consumer--Many of them in Urals--seeing the mines weekly in factories --daily in school studying English German , mathematics, ans social sciences. Geography, visit Y C , good language library, museums, music, naps, gym. exercises.

28-9-44

In one of the studios of the Art Theotre the lovely farce "The Flea" --the peasant blacksmith who knew the English technicions--none better-made a mechanical flea--he fitted it with horseshoes marked with his sweethearts name.

Tonight Meyerholds--Hail China!

I have been ashamed since I have been in this extraordinary land and thinking "out" how we are drowned in the idea of the many working for the luxury and support of the few. A hero in an English n vel is in the depths because his father does not leave him the income of £30000--a girl has let he maid go to bed with a toothache and had actually to undress herself. A study of income with statistics of those who earned their own living and those who depended on others would be illuminating.

I have seen the Red Army swing along singing, great strong voices of young men raised in strange haunting harmonies and the people following and singing too.

Two universities today, the Communist University for Eastern peoples--1000 students , everything furnished, clothes, food, tuition and 10 rubles a month for extras. Laboratory and seminar methods, charts, reports and careful individual records--four y ears course in mathematics, science, social sciences sonsiderable work in fact ries-- work in villages--15% women nurses for babies. Clubs with music, art, theatre, auto mechanics boxing--sports. Groups and circles; 72 nationalities. Only communists admitted, chosen by their own nationalities, must be healthy, have a record of two or three years work and advanced enough in education.

49-6-84

Chinese University of 300-450 students--2 years--privately supported fine library and reading room--60 girls--hard students--striking diagrams of chinas' political and economic serfdom--England controls customs and salt. Frnce, Post office presideur and each investor 2-8 European advisers (Transfort has 8 or more who really rule). Students crowding in reading and studiyng rooms- interpretators--Japanese dictionaries.

Tea with Radek and his wife--American and European expects Dillon-Reeds idiotic offer of 250 millions--"Why should we give you control of a developed industry--you can develop new industries under conditions." Lenin's query when America offered. What do they want! 6000 readers for scientific work in America3000 in Russia.

Today in the Kremlin I saw something of the glory of the Czars of Russia and the Russian Church--perhaps the finest collection of silver dukes in the great church and rolls of silver including the magnificent service which Cathereine The Great gave to her favorite, clothing of Czar and finest of silver and gold jewels and pearls, swards, scepters, ivory in all forms, clocks, watches, caps, crown jewels, mirrors and tables--a riot of glory of wealth and beauty. The extravagance of glory was tempting. The icons plastered and inscribed with gold pearls and diamonds. The cathedral and palace crowded together and the Cathedral of the Czars crowning with its lofty arches and wealth of jewels was paid for with starving children in the famines. The Cathedral of the dead Czars--with the of the Terrible Ivan and the son whom he murdered and the Czar Feoda and other hapless nobles whom Boris Guidonoff succeeded.

Over the Kremlin lurks the spirit of Ivan the Terrible, this thrown the bell town; while opposite denuded is the statue of the assissanated assassinated Alex II with Ivan and all the Czars in magnificent madness.

Catherine is there too, her carriages, her silver, her gifts, her palaces. There was the beautiful old and Byzantuim palace from whose roof Napoleon saw Moscow burn and the Marble statue of himself which he brought to Moscow and had to ran away and leave!

The Czars made the Eastern Rome Empire relive in Europe--they sought Oreintal and beauty. They scoured Western Europe of its art, and then robbed, whipped and murdered their own people.

There is much criticism allowed in Russia. One man writes of rubbles--I suppose if I get to live I may get to buy rubbles by Xmas. Menshevicks explains state has no money, where is the rubbles, Peasants complain new rubbles no good. Argument as to rise of wages. The Communists get maximum of 225 rubbles a month--rest to state.

I saw the museum of the Revolution today--in picutre, motto and letter a history of human effort to be free such as the world

. They murdered, oppressed tortured the Russian people have been unbelievable. Since 1774 many have fought back--in 1825, in the 40's and in the 60's a vast army in 1905 , a final victory in 1917. In blood and tears Russia has striven for freedom. She will keep it.

98-9-44

For a second election, the Progressive Party faces this nation with a programe and warning. We come without apology, but as the natural instrument through which America may achieve that Democracy which has for one hundred and fifty years been our high ideal and continued failure. For here stands the thesis and antithesis, staring us grimly in the face:

Democracy is the only and ultimate way of governing the state

And contradicting this undisputed truth, comes the fatal fact Democracy has not achieved success in any modern state.

What is the synthesis of these contradictory and discouraging statements? We have had many attempts: The most natural and most frequently repeated is the theory that Democracy is impossible, save as half-achieved ideal; it must always be led by the strong man, the Prophet, the Leader, who by force makes the people do what they, in their stupidity and selfishness, could never accomplish unled. Thus spoke Mussolini, Hitler and Franco. This of course is not a solution of Democracy but its cynical denial: coupled with the grim fact that no man is so great as to escape death.

Then we face the theory of the Majority; the docrtine of Divine Right, applied to the Ten who beat the Nine in some contest. This is we know but a rough rule of thumb: since Right is right even if Wrong wins the election; and no returns can change the fact and the consequence. To eliminate the accident of single elections, we rely on Party Government: organized and permanent bodies, which stand for programs and policies, and solicit votes, with the clear understanding that responsibility for the success of the program rests on the organization advocating it, so that the right is sought not in one election but in a continuing policy.

This has been our best approach to Democratic Government and has undoubtedly carried us furthest toward our ideal. But during all the long decades of its trial, it has developed repeatedly the same difficulty:

324-613

45-4-7

namely, the development of one policy, coupled with absence of any counter policy, and accompanied with elaborate pretense that there were actually two parties and two policies; when in fact there was but one, and that one uncritized and unchallenged. Thus in England for years Tory and Liberal represented but one imperial British policy; in France so-called Radicals were conservatives and Christian Socialists were not socialists; in the United States from 1830 to 1860, Democrats and Whigs were in reality but one party with different leaders, and that party stood for slavery and trade.

Today the Republican and Democratic parties agree not only in foreign policy but in everything essential touching domestic conditions; from fighting the Trade Unions, to raising rents and avoiding social responsibilities.

Democracy has long had a remedy for this One Party rule and that is the Third Party. In the nature of the case, the Third Party is but rarely used: so rarely, that the idea is easily promulgated that it is in its nature revolutionary and undemocratic. In truth, only through a Third Party movement, or the threat of such a movement, can the very ground principles of democratic government be preserved or rescued from oligarchy or Plutocracy, rule of birth or rule of wealth, monopoly or privilege. Unless the people retain and assert the right to turn from two old parties which are in essential agreement or in false disagreement, and establish when they will a Third Party which gives a citizen the chance to vote for what he believes and needs,--unless that right remains, not only does the Right have no chance to win, but democracy itself fails.

That is the reason why a Third Party movement always meets bitter opposition from reaction and vested interests; and this opposition is not against its platform or policy, but against its very right to exist or appeal to the electorate. Its motives are maligned, its objects distorted and its efforts to make public its platform obstructed. The people are led to believe that in the very effort to establish a Third Party, lies treachery and enmity to democracy. If, moreover, the allied and associated parties in power, control press and radio; and have in their pockets unlimited funds from the swollen profits of interests which they favor and to whom they give license, then with help of the terrible post-war weapon of propaganda, this political combination can literally deny the polls to a Third Party, smear it with ob~~ligarchy~~ oligarchy and drive it from the public platform. And so again democracy can and does fail.

Remember that without Third Party Movements, we might still be British colonies; we might still reap fortunes out of the slave trade; we might still be even more a land of slavery than we are. Third Party movements have repeatedly in our history prevented the eclipse of democracy: beginning in 1844 and triumphing in 1860, they abolished African slavery and the political power based on it. Beginning in 1872, a Third Party movement fought dishonesty in government and forced the election of Cleveland in 1884. But in that election appeared a new force, aiming at social reform through control of the currency. It appeared again in the election of 1892, when the new Populism cast one million votes. For the next four years populism grew fast and would have swept the country in 1896, under fair election laws; but the South cheated the white ~~Populist~~ vote just as they had the black vote for 20 years; and Mark Hanna bought up the North. Populism died. But many of its principles appeared again, when Teddy Roosevelt fell out with the Republican leaders and tried to lead the Bull Moose to Armageddon. He failed and Wilson and War won. It was not until 1924, that a Third Party movement under LaFollette cast five million votes, but fell before religious hysteria and race hate in the overwhelming election of Hoover. Big Business was in the saddle until the bottom fell out of the whole industrial system in 1929, and the reign of Franklin Roosevelt began.

35-4-615

45-4-9

With the advent of Truman came a new and insistent demand for a Third Party and a chance for real progress toward democracy in this land. With the best will and effort, democracy, the self rule of the people is difficult to attain; with party government it has chance to succeed, only if the parties represent real issues and do not simply mean understanding to control public opinion and obstruct policies for the progress of the mass of people. When real issues fail and greed and class combine to use the state for selfish ends, then and then only can democracy be saved from its enemies by a Third Party cursade.

But this is not all. Back of all parties and back of all progress toward a democratic state, must stand the intelligence of the electorate and their knowledge of the facts concerning which they are deciding. Today not only is illiteracy still too wide-spread in this land, but distortion of the news, monopoly of the Press and control of education by text books and frightened teachers, is so undisputed; and free speech so curtailed, that intelligent democracy is impossible.

The first task of a Third Party is to combat these sinister and misleading ~~situations~~ tendencies. The Progressive Party then is faced by the initial duty to work for Peace: war settles nothing and war as planned today is suicide of humanity and civilization. Despite high authority we cannot "lick the world" and if we could, what would we do with it? This is the first lesson. Second, the people of this nation must have security and not simply security in Jail; they must have work; they must have a living wage and as citizens they must share in control of such industry as private enterprise cannot or will not undertake, or which can only be pursued with public aid. Freedom in America must not mean license but liberty ~~unlimited~~ limited by public welfare and social progress.

Not by might nor by power of far-flung armies, navies and aircraft can we help the world, but by sacrifice and example; we gain little by boasting of a democracy which we do not practise or of riches and comfort which at least a third of our own population do not share. We are ruled today by corporate wealth; and blessed as we are in natural resources, never before have so few owned so much at the expense of so many. Public welfare must replace private profit as the end of effort and planned economy must bring order and justice out of the anarchy of Free Enterprise and Private Initiative. No pauper is free, no public service can be private, and the sick and ignorant cannot often initiate enterprise.

We need increased government control of land ownership and use; ~~or~~ socialized medicine to protect the public health; abolition of slums and publicly subsidized housing on a nation-wide scale; unemployment relief, sickness and old age security, on levels sufficient for decent life; the protection and subsidizing of workers in any essential industry like farming, which has long suffered from present organization of industry; and encouragement of all forms of self-help, like consumers cooperation.

The persons who support this platform do not agree in all matters and have many minds as to wrongs and remedies; as to national and individual responsibility for present conditions. But here are set down the matters on which we do agree; and to the support of this platform we seek the votes of all persons and we do not ask or wish to know what other beliefs they have so long as they wholeheartedly support ours.

[FRAGMENT]

GUARDIAN

An editor has asked me a hard question, almost unanswerab.e

It took the Revolution, I776 to free Negroes in New England War of I8U 2 to free most of the rest of the Negroes of the North the Civil War to emancipate the slaves

World War I to ~~free~~ recognize Negroes as citizens and soldiers ~~and army officers~~
World War II to begin desegregation in the armed forces
Korean War ti extend desegration in the armed forces, union ~~labor~~ and Civil life

Will it ~~not~~ take a Third World War to make Negroes equa l American citizens anything less than

42-5C-13

ERITREA

By

W. E. B. Du Bois

unrelated

38-12-62

Eritrea stretches for 670 miles along the African Coast of the Red Sea. To the West it is bordered by the Sudan, on the South by Ethiopia. It has an area of 15,754 square miles and in 1931 a population of 600,573 of whom 4,188 were Italians. Since then the number of Italians has increased. The lowlands along the coast are hot and malarial. The uplands are cool and sometimes cold. Irreigation is necessary to supplement the rainfall, and the soil is poor.

There are 140 miles of railroad in all, and 12,000 miles of telephones. There are no rivers. The inhabitants belong mostly to the Catholic Church, but many are adherents of the Mohammedan religion, all speak Ethiopian languages.

Here is a land about the size of Denmark with some 38 persons to the square mile, which is poor in natural resources and by no means self-supporting. The sole reason for acquiring it is that it is the gateway to Ethiopia and the natural path for the export of Ethiopian products and the import of European goods; and, also, it is the best stepping-stone for the conquest of Ethiopia.

Those people who wish to return Eritrea to Italy must remember that three times since 1882 the Italians have used Eritrea in an attempt to conquer Ethiopia.

The story is this: From 1855 to 1868 the Emperor Theodore, in many respects a notable and courageous man, ruled Ethiopia. He got into controversy with England mainly through the fault of the English. As a result the English sent an army into Ethiopia in 1867 and overcame Theodore, who committed suicide. Finally the English withdrew.

From about 1867 to 1889 the Emperor John ruled most of Ethiopia. During that time three important occurences took place: first, the British were driven out of the Sudan by the black Mahdi, who revolted against the misrule of Egypt and England. From 1881 to 1898 the British were cut off from Ethiopia. In the meantime, in 1875 and 1876, the Egyptians tried to conquer the Ethiopians and were soundly thrashed in 1875-76. Then in 1882, the Italians, encouraged by the British, began aggression upon Ethiopia. They took the port of Assab in 1882; and in 1885, the more important port of Massawa. The Ethiopians were at the time engaged in repelling the dervishes from the Sudan, whom they finally conquered in 1885, although in their attack Emperor John was killed. Then they turned upon the Italians.

38-12-63

From 1889 to 1913 Menelik ruled as Emperor of Abyssinia. He had been rebelling against John for some time and had been aided by the Italians. Consequently, when he came to the throne the Italians assumed that he was going to be their tool. A treaty was made and in the Italian text Ethiopia became a province of Italy and foreign affairs were put in Italian hands. Menelik declared that he had been deceived, went to war, and in the battle of Adua in 1896, overthrew the Italians. For a second time Italy was unsuccessful in annexing Ethiopia.

The independence of Ethiopia was acknowledged, but the boundary between Ethiopia and Italy in Eritrea was not settled, and it remained unsettled until the time of Mussolini.

Italy had long wanted to be a colonial power and rival France and England. Bismark cheated her out of Algeria and gave it to France and later France seized Tunis, the ancient seat of Carthage. Italy conquered the empty sands of Lybia, but longed for Ethiopia. By refusing to enter World War 1, she gained from the Allies the right to seize Ethiopia; but the Allies later refused this assent. Then after the war Mussolini started to restore the "Roman Empire"; he threatened to take Tunis, but France was too strong. He finally determined to seize Ethiopia, inspite of a treaty of friendship and arbritration which Italy signed with Ethiopia in 1928, she invaded the country in 1935 without declaring war, and conquered it,, with callous cruelty and powerful bloodshed. The League of Nations refused to interfere, and the Emperor fled to England. However this time Italy by joining Germany in World War II, got on the losing side.

The country was re-occupied by Ethiopian and British forces in 1941, and the Emperor Haile Selassie was again proclaimed ruler of the country. The claim of Ethiopia to Eritria is first, historical: it is an integral part of her land and her only effective way of access to the sea. The people are of the same stock as the Ethiopians, although, of course, there are varied stocks in Ethiopia. But more especially, Eritria is a land which Ethiopia must control if she is to have reasonable protection from her enemies; it is a country which she should own, if she is to have economic expansion and free access to the markets of the world.

38-12-64

Undated

ABOLITION AND THE END OF COLONIALISM

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

Whenever a great social change is impending, some selfish interests and many human prejudices must suffer. Perhaps the commonest way of meeting such attacks is to paint the upholders of change as criminals and crackpots and then if possible jail or kill them.

This is the present case with Communism. We are not arguing so much about the desirability or feasability of altering our admittedly imperfect industrial system, as concentrating on proving persons who advocate such change are criminals deserving jail or worse.

38-12-322

So in the mid-nineteenth century, America did not spend near as much time in discussing the ethics of slavery as in proving that advocates of Abolition were scoundrels. They were under bitter attack as advocates of woman suffrage, free love and race miscegenation. Dextrously shifting the argument from slavery, the South and its friends pointed out contented servants, kind masters and prosperous agriculture, and contended that Abolitionists were low, contemptible, unworthy of hearing and due to be jailed.

Frederick Douglass tells us of a meeting in Middlebury, Vermont in 1843: "In advance of our arrival the college students had very industriously and mischievously placarded the town with violent aspersions of our characters and the grossest misrepresentations of our principles, measures, and objects. I was described as an escaped convict from the State prison, and the other speakers were assailed not less slanderously. Few people attended our meeting, and apparently little was accomplished by it." Douglass says of a meeting in Ohio: "They tore down the platform on which we stood, assaulted Mr. White, striking him on the back part of the head, badly cutting his scalp and felling him to the ground. Undertaking to fight my way through the crowd with a stick which I caught up in the melee, I attracted the fury of the mob, which laid me prostrate on the ground under a torrent of blows. Leaving me thus, with my right hand broken, and in a state of unconsciousness..."

White men like Lovejoy were killed for advocating abolition. In 1835, Garrison was dragged through the streets of Boston, with a halter around his neck! A howling mob followed Wendell Phillips in Boston for three days, whenever he tried to talk.

38-12-322

But the great artillery of the pro-slavery contest was the judicial decision. Courts confiscated literature as subversive; judges sent even free Negroes into slavery on the word of a claimant, without a jury trial. Fugitives from slavery were hunted like beasts, while those who sought to rescue them found themselves branded as criminals.

Finally the slave power girded itself to one great solemn pronouncement which on the very verge of Civil War was to settle the slavery question for all time, by solemn edict of the Supreme Court. The robed justices ranged themselves on either side of their venerable and widely known Chief- Justice Taney and heard his solemn decision. The court affirmed that the sweeping language of the Declaration, that "all men are born free," had no application to Negroes, because at that time they were generally regarded "as so far inferior that they had no rights which the white man was bound to respect." The case being thus thrown out of court, all further discussion of its merits was superflous without legal force. Nevertheless, the court through its chief-justice went on to pronounce upon Dred Scotts' claim and declare it baseless; on the ground that inasmuch as a slave was lawful property, and the Constitution decreed that no man should be deprived of his property without due process of law, the celebrated Missouri Compromise, was unconstitutional and void.

Thus in 1857, the courts of the nation for all time settled the question of Negro slavery. Six years later the Negroes were free and ten years later they had the right to vote in Judge Taney's state. The fight for democracy, however, had not ended; it had just begun its modern phase. The whole imperialist world still strove for cheap labor and materials in Africa and Asia, to off-set the demand for higher wage on the part of European labor.

38-12-324

Evidently what was wrong with modern industry was this colonial imperialism: the attempt to treat most people in the world, particularly the dark peoples of Asia and Africa, not as European white folk, worthy of at least some freedom and democracy, but as slaves and serfs, "with no rights which a white man was bound to respect." The parade and pageantry of empire was marvellous. A white man travelled in Africa as a king; an Englishman ruled in Asia as a god. Then the rival centers of the imperial world fell out and fought over these spoils of empire, first in 1914, for larger share in the spoils and then in 1939 to stave off the collapse of world industrial organization. When we awoke from the nightmare, all thinking men knew that the day of colonies and empire was past, if civilization was to survive. The United Nations was founded on this idea.

Now came the counter-blast, the attention of the world was diverted. It was said that the unrest in the colonies was due to "Communism". If the Negroes in South Africa strike against starvation wage; if Negroes in West Africa loot the exploiting shops of Unilevers; if Indonesia and Malaya and Viet-Nam kill and burn; if all China revolts---all this is not hunger and disease: it is Russian Communism, and not the eternal effort of Man to be free and to have voice in his own government. So the British and French, Belgians and Dutch, aided by the United States continue to uphold dead colonial empires and especially to keep Africa and so much of Asia as possible in slavery to Bond Street and Wall Street.

(1)

ABOLITION AND THE END OF COLONIALISM

and Chase if possible
Jail or kill them

Whenever a great social change is impending, some selfish interests and many human prejudices must suffer. Perhaps the commonest way of meeting such attacks ~~of wrong~~ is to paint their upholders of change as criminals and crackpots. This is the present case with Communism. We are not arguing so much about the desirability or feasability of altering our admittedly imperfect industrial system, ~~but are~~ as concentrating on proving ~~certain~~ persons who advocate such change are criminals deserving jail or worse.

So in the mid-nineteenth century, America did not spend near as ~~so~~ much time in discussing the ethics of slavery as in proving that advocates of Abolition were scoundrels. They were under bitter attack as advocates of woman suffrage, free love and race miscegenation. Dexterously

38-12-325

Shifting the argument from slavery, the South and its friends pointed out contented servants, kind masters and prosperous agriculture, and contended that Abolitionists were low, contemptible, unworthy of hearing and due to be jailed.

Frederick Douglass tells us of a meeting in Middlebury, Vermont in 1843: "In advance of our arrival the college students had very industriously and mischievously placarded the town with violent aspersions of our characters and the grossest misrepresentations of our principles, measures, and objects. I was described as an escaped convict from the State prison, and the other speakers were assailed not less slanderously. Few people attended our meeting, and apparently little was accomplished by it." Efforts to argue or speak or to write met increasing mob-law. Douglass says of a meeting in Ohio: "They tore down the platform on which we stood, assaulted Mr. White and knocked out several of his teeth, dealt a heavy blow on William A. White, striking him on the back part of the head, badly cutting his scalp and felling him to the ground. Undertaking to fight my way through the crowd with a stick which I caught up in the melee, I attracted the fury of the mob, which lad me prostrate on the ground under a torrent of blows. Leaving me thus, with my right hand broken, and in a state of unconsciousness..."

38-12-326

2

3

The analogy between the treatment of abolitions yesterday and the Communists today is strong. White men like Lovejoy were killed for advocating abolition. In 1835, Garrison was dragged through the streets of Boston, with a halter around his neck! A howling mob followed Wendell Phillips in Boston for three days, whenever he tried to talk.

But the great artillery of the pro-slavery contest was the judicial decision. Courts confiscated literature as subversive; judges sent even free Negroes into slavery on the word of a claimant, without a jury trial. Fugitives from slavery were hunted like beasts, while those who sought to rescue them found themselves branded as criminals.

Finally the slave power girded itself to one great solemn pronouncement which on the very verge of Civil War was to settle the slavery question for all time, by solemn edict of the Supreme Court. The robed justices ranged themselves on either side of their venerable and widely known Chief-Justice Taney and heard his solemn decision. The court affirmed that the sweeping language of the Declaration, that "all men are born free," had no application to Negroes, because at that time they were generally regarded "as so far inferior that they had no rights which the white man was bound to respect." The case being thus thrown out of court, all further discussion of its merits was superfluous [illegible], without legal force. Nevertheless, the court through its chief-justice went on to pronounce upon Dred Scott's claim and declare it baseless; on the ground that inasmuch as a slave was lawful property, and the Constitution decreed that no man should be deprived of his property without due process of law, The celebrated Missouria Compromise [illegible] was unconstitutional and void.

(4)

Thus in 1857, the courts of the nation for all time settled the question of Negro slavery. Six years later the Negroes were free and ten years later they had the right to vote in Judge Taney's state.

He hath put down the Mighty from their seats, and hath exalted them of low degree.

But the exaltation came slowly and with infinite pain. The fight for democracy however had not ended; it had just begun its modern phase. The Negro worker became a serf on the land, disfranchised and poverty stricken. Hordes of immigrants poured into the new nation and tried to monopolize jobs by skilled trades, by race, by religion, by color. Negroes became professional strike-breakers, and lynching and riots ensued.

Finally came a new day when throughout the earth the welfare state began to replace private profit industry. The whole imperialist world strove for cheap labor and materials in Africa and Asia, to off-set the demand for higher wage on the part of European labor. This was the First World War and shook capitalistic industry to its foundations. The gold standard of value fell and the automatic price markets ceased to function.

38-12-328

5

Evidently what was wrong with modern industry was this colonial imperialism : the attempt to treat most people in the world, particularly the dark peoples of Asia and Africa, not as ~~human beings~~ European white folk, worthy of at least some freedom and democracy, but as slaves and serfs, "with no rights which a white man was bound to respect" The parade and pageantry of empire was marvellous. A white man travelled in Africa as a king; an Englishman ruled in Asia as a god. Then the world fell out and fought over these spoils of empire, and when we awoke from the night-mare, all thinking men knew that the day of colonies and empire was past, if civilization was to survive. The United Nations was founded on this idea.

Now Then came the counter-blast. The unrest in the colonies was due to "communism". If the Negroes in South Africa strike against starvation wage; if Negroes in West Africa loot the exploiting shops of Unilevers; if Indonesia and Malaya and Viet-Nam kill and burn ; if all China revolts, — all this is not hunger and disease; it is Russian communism and ~~the leadership of sturdy rascals~~ and not the eternal effort of Man to be free and to have voice in his own govern ent. So the British and French aided by the United States continue to uphold dead colonial empires and to keep Africa and so much of Asia as possible in slavery to Wall street especially first in 1914 for larger share in the spoils then in 1939 to stave off the collapse of World industrial organization

38-12-329

Du Bois — K Khama

SERETSE KHAMA

BY

W. E. B. DU BOIS

About a thousand years after Christ, the so-called Bantu tribes of North and Central Africa began to migrate South, being displaced by the new civilization beginning in the Sudan, and which resulted in the great Negro kingdoms of the 12th and 13th centuries. A part of these nations called the Bechuana were among the most advanced of the Negro tribes. Their gove rnment was a feudal system with [redacted] chiefs and [redacted]. They were careful farmers, laid out large towns, and were the most skillful of smiths. They used stone in building, carved on wood and were keen traders. They crossed the Zambezi in the 14th century and coming southward occupied the east central part of Africa comprising modern Bechuanaland.

35-4-21

The fight with the Hottentots , Dutch, and English broke these Bantu tribes into various fragements. But in the Northern part remainedd the self-governing Bamangwato and Khama became the greatest of their modern rulers.

It was into this country that Cecil Rhodes extended the British Empire so as to link the Cape and Cairio; but the Bamangwato remainedd semi-independent although the Union of South Africa wanted to seize it, and the English are still trying to extend their power. In our day, succeeding Khama, came Tshekedi, who gained celebrity by whipping a white Englishman who wanted to linger around the women of his tribe. South Africa was greately excited and a British army marched up there and arrested Thkehedi but the Empire released him eventually because he was well within his rights.

Tshekedi tried last year to represent the depressed Herero of South West Africa before the United Nations, but the Empire would not give him a visa. The successor to the chieftanship was his nephew, young Seretse Khama, who studied in England and married a white wife. At first the tribe, stirred up by the English, was chary at receiving a white queen but at last they agreed.

Then the English sought some reason to keep the youngchief from ruling. They tricked him into leaving South Africa for England, and then refused a visa to return. He was to stay in exile for 5 years and on a salary furnished by the British government. This, Seretse refused to do, and declares that he is going to return to his kingdom.

35-4-22

This series of incidents marks the beginning of the independence of Africa, chich is coming in this century. All over Africa the tribes are stirring; in West Africa, they are demanding independence of Britain; in French Africa, they are organizing an independent state within the proposed French union; in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, they are demanding autonomy; and in East Africa and even in the Belgian Congo, they are beginning to demand recognition.

Some incident like this in Bechuanaland, is going to light the fire which will eventually drive the white man from Africa, just as he has been driven out of Asia. The Union of South Africa, with its gold and diamonds in which the whole white world has invested, does not believe anything of this sort can possibly happen. They depend on white investors to stop it. But this last stand of colonial and financial imperialism in Africa is bound to end and today is a greater threat of war then the Iron Curtain, or the Atom Bomb.

42-6D-5

About a thousand years after Christ, the so-called Bantu tribes of North and Central Africa began to migrate South, being displaced by the new civilization which was beginning in the Sudan, and which resulted in the great Negro kingdom of the 12th and 13th centuries. A part of these nations called the Bechuana were among the most advanced of the Negro tribes. They crossed the Zambezi in the 14th century. Their government was a feudel system with heridary chiefs and vassals. They were careful farmers, laid out large towns, and were the most skillful of smiths. They used stone in building, carved on wood and were keen traders. These tribes coming Southward occupied the east central part of Africa comprising the modern Bechuanaland. By the middle of the 18th century the great chief was Tao.

The fight between the Hottentots and the Dutch, the English and these Bantu tribes, broke these Bantu tribes into various fragements. But in the North part remained the self-governing Bamangwato and Khama became the greatest of their modern rulers.

It was in this country that Cecil Rhodes tried to extend the British Empire so as to connect the Cape and Cario; but the Bamangwato remained a semi-independent tribe, although the Union of South Africa wanted to seize it, and the English tried to extend their power. In our day, the succeding Khama, came Tshekedi, who gained celebrity by whipping a white Englishman who wanted to linger around the women of his tribe. South Africa was greately excited and the British army marched up ther and arrested Tshekedi, but the Empire released him because he was well within his rights.

Tshekedi tried to represent the depressed Herrero of South West Africa before the United Nations, but the Empire would not give him a visa. The successor to the chieftanship was young Seretse Khama, who studied in England and married a white wife. At first the tribe was cheery at receiving the white queen and were doubtless stirred up by the English, but at last they agreed, to receive her but then the English defined some kind of reason to keep the young chief from ruling.

They tricked him to leave South Africa for England, and then refused a Visa to return. He was to stay in exile for 5 years and ~~be given~~ a salary by the British government, this he refused to do, and declares that he is going to return to his kingdom ~~in South Africa~~. This series of incidents are the beginning of the independence of Africa, which is coming in this century. All over Africa the tribes are stirring; in West Africa, they are demanding independence of Britain; in French Africa, they are organizing an independent state within the proposed French union; in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, they are demanding independence; and in East Africa and even in the Belgian Congo, they are beginning to demand recognition ~~and autonomy~~.

42-6-D-6

Some incident like this in Bechuanaland, is going to ~~lead to a~~ fire which will drive the white man out of Africa, just as he has been driven out of Asia. The Union of South Africa, with its gold and diamonds in which the whole white ~~world~~ world has invested does not ~~think that~~ anything of this sort ~~could~~ possibly happen. They ~~hope that the white world will arm itself~~ to stop it, But this last stand of colonial and financial imperialism in Africa is bound to end and is a greater threat of war than the Iron Curtain, or the Atom Bomb.

Gentlemen:
This is the second news note I have forwarded you. I expect to be heard from both of your naval radios for W. Hunton

AFRICAN YOUTH AT PRAGUE

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

While I was in Prague in August as guest of the Meeting of the Bureau of the Partisans of Peace, I took occasion to go out to the Second Congress of the International Youth Congress. There were present two thousand young people from nearly all of the nations on the earth, and it was an inspiring sight to see them at work. They met for long hours, they debated freely and frankly, and their social life must have been most inspiring for all of them.

I was especially impressed by seeing the large delegation from West Africa. I took lunch one day with these African students. They were for the most part representatives of the workers and the trade unions, bring into action a much different class of Africans from that formerly met abroad, those belonging to the upper and wealthier classes and receiving their education at the institutions in England and elsewhere. These men and women represented property and privilege; these young people represented the workers.

35-4-211

There was one young man who was head of the trade unions of the French Sudan. There were others representing the Gold Coast, but the larger number represented Nigeria.

Undoubtedly Nigeria more and more is stepping to the front in leadership of the African world. They are pretty clear as to what they want. They desire to throw off the colonial status, to be independent of the British Empire and to rule themselves in a government which has control of industry.

They told me of many serious incidents now taking place in Africa. For instance, it was practically impossible for black South Africa to be represented, although there was a young white man who had worked with them and who could speak for them. Uganda, Tanganyika, and Kenya could not get delegates through to the conference. Also they told me of how the greatest monopoly on earth, Lever Brothers and Unilever, known to Africans as the United Africa Company, was scheming now to take over the British Government's grandiose but bankrupt ground nuts (peanuts) plan in East Africa (see New Africa, March 1947 and November 1949).

-- m o r e --

This plan of course means the large-scale development of the plantation system for wholesale raising of valuable crops in Africa to be furnished to European countries at vast profits to the individual owners. It is to be hoped that the real purposes of this scheme will be made clear to the people of Europe and of the world, and I think that perhaps the trade union leaders of Nigeria and West Africa will be the ones to carry on this crusade.

35-4-212

There were at Prague a large number of the colored peoples of the world represented. Many from India, a delegation from North Korea which received much applause, delegates from Burma and Malaya, and, as I have said, from Africa. There were two or three from America and one was chosen in a group of twenty-five students to go on a trip through Russia to greet the youth of the New Chinese Republic. It was an encouraging scene to notice in this World Congress the utter absence of race and color prejudice. On theother hand, there were strong differences as to socialism and individualism, Russian communism, English Socialism, and on the question of American business. However, the Congress succeeded in keeping its unity and in sending a message of peace to the world.

####

WHAT IS GOING ON IN HAITI.

American Negroes may suspect but it is difficult to get facts. Every once in a while there comes a press dispatch from the white men who are governing in Haiti telling of the great advancement made in various lines. What is the real truth of the matter? We have at last a book which tells this truth. It is "Occupied Haiti", edited by Emily Greene Balch of Wellesley College. This book is the report"of a committee of six disinterested Americans" representing organizations exclusively American, who have personally studied conditions in Haiti, 1926, favor the restoration of the independence of the Negro republic. On this committee were two colored women, Mrs. Addie W. Hunton and Miss Charlotte Atwood. Beside these were two women professors in the University of Chicago and Wellesley College, aAman also professor in the University of Chicago and a woman representing The Fellowship of Reconciliation. This book has six chapters telling something of the history of Haiti; the facts concerning the occupation; the economics of the situation; land; agriculture; health; education; public works; racial relations, etc. The unanimous conclusion of the book is that the United States should get out of Haiti and as soon as possible restore this country to the brave people who made it the second republic to appear in the Western Hemisphere.

Persons who wish to be armed with facts concerning the situation shohld read this book which is short and full of interesting things. The book says in the last chapter:

"From the point of view of United States interests, in the most "hard-boiled" sense, there is little to be said for the continuance of our Occupation of Haiti. American investments there have in general not proved a source of legitimate profits, but of loss, and there is now nothing to justify, from the selfish point of view, the continued expenditure of United States money in administering the country.

From the point of view of Haiti's interests, it is not true that we are in Haiti solely as disinterested benefactors, nor that we can show clean hands in our business dealings there. If our officals have tried to benefit the people of Haiti, (as we believe they have), it is also true that the Occupation has cared for American financial interests there, of a none too creditable sort, at the expense of our poor and weak neighbors.

Happily it is not the case that the United States is confined to the alternative of either occupying Haiti, or else regarding her necessities with indifference and unconcern. It is perfectly possible to be a good neighbor and help Haiti to attain health, education, public improvements and public order, by other less drastic, and ultimately more effective methods than military control.

The authors of this report believe that the Occupation should be ended for the sake of Haiti, for the sake of the United States, and especially for the s ke of good relations among all American republics, and finally because it is in itself an unjustified use of power."

37-4-S3

2.2.2

October 14, 1939

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

We spent this summer a million dollars for conventions, conclaves and meetings. So what?

Already in Europe black men fight for white men's red hot chestnuts. When will they fight for their own?

Go to college black man in thousands but don't let your public common schools go to hell. Even college graduates should be able to read, write and cipher.

Some rave, some fight and some sit it out. Carver sat it out.

Not his fists nor his million impress me more than Joe Louis' dogged effort to speak better English.

World War poured gas into the lungs of our greatest surgeon but never into his brain. He lies gasping while we weep.

THE WORLD'S RACES, 1911

Does it make any difference to us American Negroes what the peoples of Europe do? It does. Thirty years ago I was appointed to act as secretary of a world's Congress of Races together with Felix Adler the great founder of Ethical Culture. We met in London in 1911 under the slightly amused tolerance of England but a great and clear headed Jew, Gustav Spiller a ~~Jew~~, had planned this Congress with meticulous care. It was splendidly attended. Men had to listen to the German von Lushan, the greatest anthropologist of his day; to Sergi the Italian philosopher; to Franz Boas of America, d'Estournelles de Constant of France, Jabavu of Africa and Seal of India. When Sir Harry Johnston took sick of African fever an American Negro replaced him on the program; and there is no doubt but that then in the great hall of the University of London, the race problems of the world had saner and more scientific treatment than ever before and were nearer paths toward solution; until suddenly a German war ship went into Agadair. That war ship surprised England and France in their final partition of Africa and the Kaiser said he wanted cheap "nigger" labor for Germany and there would be no peace until he got it!

THE HELL OF RACE HATE 1915-1921

Unless we look back twenty-five years it is a most impossible to conceive today the depths of race hatred, mob violence and murder which the American Negro went through during and directly after the World War. In 1915 not only did the United States seize Haiti but the new technique of the moving picture was seized to make a film, "The Birth of a Nation," which was the first great artistic triumph of this new art. It began the modern picture. It began the suspense of wildly running horses, of masked men, of surging crowds and bitter emotion and it was based upon Dixon's lying propaganda with regard to Reconstruction. It left the black world bereft of reply. It instilled the poison of sex jealousy into the youth of America and it led directly to a series of extraordinary events: in 1916 twenty-five hundred colored people in North Georgia were driven from their homes and their property burned. A Negro was burned alive in Texas. In 1917 eighty-three thousand draftees were called and most of them turned from soldiers into stevedores. In East St. Louis there were over a hundred Negroes killed, ~~scores of colored workers maimed~~ and six thousand driven from their homes. Two Negroes were burned alive in Tennessee and the taunted and exasperated Twenty-fourth Infantry rioted in Houston. In 1918 a lynching orgy in Southern Georgia included a pregnant woman and even President Wilson was compelled to denounce lynching. In 1919 eleven Negroes were burned alive and race riots took place in twenty-six cities including the riot in Chicago where thirty-eight died; the riot in Arkansas with fifty Negroes killed, twelve condemned to death and eighty sentenced to imprisonment. In Washington, six were killed and for a space the capital of this country was in the hands of a black mob fighting back a white mob with hand grenades. And in 1919 as a sequel to "The Birth of a Nation" the Ku Klux Klan was revived. Never since the red days of Reconstruction did Negroes suffer in the United States as they suffered in these days and this was all because of a World War starting primarily over the partition of Africa, spreading to the United States to protect our European credits for arms and food furnished, and resulting in fierce reaction here and elsewhere after the Armistice. The World War had sent black men from all over the world to Europe fighting white men's battles. The Negroes from the United States, especially the officers, suffered more attack and discrimination from American soldiers than did the Germans. They returned to find the Ku Klux Klan ready to put them back in their places.

THE ARMISTICE AND AFTER

If we look back fifteen years we see a nation refusing to pay the cost of war and trying to capitalize on the misery of the world. The United States in the twenties was under the impression that this land alone had gained by the war and that now secure and rich it was going to proceed to make profit out of the poverty and loss of Europe. We started forward on a boom. Race hate disappeared before the profit from colored labor. A million Negroes moved from the South into the promise of Northern employment. Prices soared, millionaires multiplied and the vision of unequalled wealth made people capitalize and buy and sell their property at 100% more than its income could possibly promise. The result in 1929 was disaster, disaster paralleling the depression and bankruptcy, the loss and mourning of the rest of the world. What more is needed than a glance at this history to show how little the world is and how close together; how hard it is for America to escape the disaster of Europe and Asia and how bound up with the prosperity of the world is the future of the Negro race? ¶ We think in remembering 1929 of the losses of Wall Street, of the suicides of Detroit millionaires, of the disappearance of great fortunes; but the incomparably greater disaster was the fact that twelve million American Negroes lost their chance to earn a living to a degree unparalleled since the emancipation of slaves. Not yet even today have they recovered what was lost fifteen years ago.

In ~~three~~ weeks following I plan to look back ten years and five years and then straight at the world today and afterward to look at the great group of colored peoples in their relation to world affairs in India, Africa, the West Indies and all the Americas.

¶ Thinking as I write of the word of the prophets as they sang; looking down upon our hopeless struggle:

"What can they be bowing under wild and wan?
Looking and pushing the ~~crowds~~ clouds assunder,
Wave a dawn!
You will make them rise and wonder Whither we are gone!"

October 28, 1939

AS THE CROW FLIES
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Not a single world cablegram lets us know what any group of brown, and black folk think and do these days.

Colonel Lindbergh is a man of peace. Of course he will fight in a race war to defend the whites; but what would he do in the case of white aggression against colored races?

Our hats are in the air to ex-President Turner of Langston University, the last stronghold of ~~the~~ white grafters. We are glad with him to know, "This is Jimmy".

Law student Gaines has disappeared. Possibly he has turned white and entered the University of Mississippi.

Two excellent books are worth buying and reading: Horace Bond has written of "Education in Alabama; and Franklin Frazier of the "Negro Family in the United States."

THE BRITISH EMPIRE

It will make great difference to the colored peoples of America what ideologies emerge triumphant in the present war. This does not mean which country or which group of countries technically win the war; but what ideas are triumphant. As wise men have often said: we have thoughts but ideas have us.

Let us first consider England. There is a bland assumption that England is now a rather loosely federated group of independent democracies and that the British Empire has disappeared. Let us examine this. Forty-five million white Englishmen today rule two million Americans mostly colored, fifty million Africans nearly all blacks and three hundred sixty-five million Asiatics, all yellow and brown; a total of over four hundred million people. These forty-five million Englishmen have absolute control over nearly ten times their own population in all matters of war and peace; in practically all matters of work and wage; and in nearly all matters of education, freedom of speech and freedom of travel. Thirty-one million other white people are divided into five British dominions. The largest of these are Canada and the Union of South Africa, each having about ten million inhabitants. But in the Union of South Africa only two million of this population is white and they have absolute control in government, occupation, wages and education of over seven million black and colored folk. Moreover, these five white dominions are not free and independent of England. Australia has about as many inhabitants as the city of New York and occupies a country as large as the continental United States, into which no colored settlers are allowed to go, despite surrounding teeming millions of yellow people. This country and the others while politically independent of England are industrially and socially bound fast to the forty-five million Englishmen. Their capital and its control is in English hands and the organization of their social life with its hierarchy of classes is held fast in the hands of the English aristocracy. A member of the high nobility or even of the royal family is nominal head of the state in Canada, Australia and the Union of South Africa and while their political power is small their social power in the distribution of the fiercely coveted rank and honors is immense.

23-12-22

By no stretch of the imagination then can the British Empire be called democratic. To be sure in England itself there are ancient and honored forms of democratic control. Most of the people have the right to vote and their votes have great influence on the British Parliament and on the government which that Parliament sets up; but the votes of Englishmen have no such power over Parliament as the four hundred million disfranchised non-voting people nominally under the control of the English voter but really under the control of English investing capitalists. To disturb the foundations of this industrial imperialism is beyond the power or the wish of the English voter. The money invested here represents a fabulous sum. The annual income from raw material and cheap colored labor supports a powerful and efficient aristocracy. Moreover, the wants and wishes of the four hundred million subjects, overwhelmingly yellow, black and brown, not only have no effective voice in the British Empire but cannot bring influence to bear even on the British voter. Effort to extend self government among them, to protest against low wages and wretched conditions of work, to demand more and higher education are repeatedly put down as agitation, insubordination and even treason. The unrest however continues and today particularly in India it is heartening to see that Gandhi is demanding a greater measure of self government, even before this war stops. Would we could hear such news from Nigeria and the Gold Coast, ~~and especially from the West Indies.~~

OWEN WALLER

Owen Meredith Waller who has just died as a man who had something increasingly uncommon today among our group, and that was charm. He was a gentleman in the older significance of the word, with extraordinary attractiveness in his manner and speech, in his mental discrimination. This came from the fact that he was trained not only by the caterer clan of Virginia, but also at Oxford had some contact with the manners of the British aristocracy. He knew how to walk, he knew how to sit, he could bow graciously and above all he could talk. He had none of the slovenly slang of modern intercourse. His excellent, clear, beautiful English had been acquired not only in England but in the liturgy of the Episcopal Church.

Nor must one conclude from this that he was effeminate. He was anything else. He was an enthusiastic outdoor man. He loved to camp, hunt and fish; he knew how to sail a boat. When I first saw him with his growing family down at Sea Isle City, he was having tremendous thrills in putting his little sail-boat across the bar and curving, dipping and flying before the wind. He loved the "sport of kings", and he was frank and fine in his natural appetites. Women adored him and he adored them. But he was no cave man; he was gracious and gentle and understanding. Men welcomed him. I have seen the whole atmosphere of a room of tired and bored men leap to life when Waller entered. He always had an apposite story to tell. We often laughed at his stories. We affirmed that the size of his fish did not decrease by the telling; that in his tales he always occupied an important if not heroic role, which showed a certain dramatization by memory. But after all, don't we all do this? And in Waller's case, it was not accompanied by repelling boastfulness but by attractive narration.

He made with courage and ability one momentous change in life: trained as a clergyman, he always loved the Church, - its ceremonies, its vestments, its rolling periods. But the Episcopal Church did not offer in his day or perhaps today the widest welcome to a colored clergyman. So studying nights at Howard, Waller became a physician and a successful physician. I am sure it was not so much his deep technical knowledge of medicine which spelled his success, as it was the psychology of his bedside manner. The sickest person must have felt better and more hopeful once Waller had visited him. He radiated confidence and good cheer.

He smoked a rare weed but did not mangle it or distort his mouth. He smoked it slowly, gravely and with appreciation. He knew good whiskey and would roll rare wine upon his tongue. He was a gourmet with a Lucullan appreciation of fine food. It was a benediction to see him sit before a well-selected and carefully cooked meal.

32-12-29

There are those who deprecate this sort of character and life; who picture the really great human being as impatient with the world; with face set scowling toward the stars; and always in a hurry to do something or to be something or to stop something. But there is another and rarer philosophy: the ideal of the gentleman with courtesy, benignity and good manners; who loves the beauty of the world as it is and enjoys it; who is interested in this fair earth and not in the uncertain heavens; who takes life as he finds it and finds it good.

With all this inborn characteristic, Owen Waller was by no means insensible to ill and betterment. He was ever helpful to colored Episcopal churches. He was a member of the Niagara Movement; he was a former member of the board of directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; he joined many clubs and fraternities and worked with them. He helped and counseled the young, the unsuccessful, the discouraged; he patronized and invested in Negro business. He had no awe of white folk but met them eye to eye and face to face and usually so condescended to their level as to reduce them to speechless admiration. He was a fine man. I shall miss him.

"Because our lives are cowardly and sly,
Because we do not dare to take or give,
Because we scowl and pass each other by,
We do not live; we do not dare to live."

October 21, 1939

AS THE CROW FLIES
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Do we Negroes believe in democracy?

Do we believe that the more rich individual Negroes we have among us the better off are the poor Negroes?

If the more intelligent and well to do among us could escape the race entirely and leave and forget it, would they do it?

In that case what would the rest do and do you care what they would do?

What is the Negro Church really doing to justify the millions of dollars which it annually collects from the poor and expends?

Is there any real reason for the existence of our fraternities and secret orders?

TEN YEARS AGO

Nothing is so difficult to grasp and realize than the near past. We are apt to know what happened one hundred years ago and what it meant, but ten years ago - that is a different question. Ten years ago came as we think suddenly the depression. But it was not sudden; it was only the last and most devastating of a whole series of vicissitudes in our present method of carrying on business, of conducting industry, of employing labor. Between 1890 and 1929 the United States had eleven business cycles, that is, eleven different times there was depression and prosperity and depression again, until in 1929 the swinging of the pendulum was so tremendous and so world-wide that it dislocated all industry. But it was not a new thing: there was depression from 1891 to 1895; there was depression again from 1901 to 1903; there was a third from 1908 to 1909 and a fourth from 1914 to 1915. In 1919 there was a mild depression and a severe one in 1921-22. All this was not merely a calamity to the rich; the chief calamity was to the poor. Sixteen per cent of the workers were unemployed between 1914 and 1915 and twenty-one percent between 1921 and 1922, and then that we may realize what happened from 1930 to 1933 we must grasp the fact that over thirty-five per cent of persons in the United States willing and able to work could not find employment. ¶ Nor does this tell the whole story for us. If the average throughout the land was thirty-five per cent it is certain that not less than one half of the Negro laborers and perhaps nearer two-thirds could not find work. There has been almost no careful study of this plight of American Negroes. Least of all do Negroes themselves seem to realize what happened: how the little accumulations of property, small homes and savings accounts were swept away; what a change took place in ideas of work, of thrift, of accomplishment. If we would realize in some degree how our whole economic foundation has been twisted look how the distribution of our employment has changed between 1910 and 1930. ¶ Take the case of the farmers. This is not merely distaste for farming, leaving the country for the city by preference. It is what Charles Johnson and Mr. Embree have called the collapse of tenancy. In 1930 it has been shown that in a typical Southern farming district black tenants and share-croppers earned from $126 to $226 a year per family; that from nineteen to twenty-nine per cent of them were insolvent; that none of them lived in homes with running water or any other lights but oil lamps; that none of them had kitchen sinks; that less than one half of them could read and write; that they averaged less than two books to a home. These distracted penniless people became servants and laborers while Negroes in the cities tried desperately to get into business, the professions and the civil service; but neither business nor the professions paid as they used to. ¶ Had it not been for government help for direct alms distributed in tremendous amounts among American Negroes, they would have died widely of starvation. I have calculated that in 1930 of some three million Negro families that more than a million were unemployed and 300,000 had incomes less than $250 a year; that something like two million were getting incomes between $250 and $1,000 a year. Only 600,000 families were getting over a $1,000 a year.

FIVE YEARS AGO

Coming from this situation among my own people in America nearly five years ago, I went up into a high place and looked down upon the world. I saw Germany with a master whose power was forged by the radio. In no other era of the world could Adolph Hitler have made himself so absolute a ruler over fifty million human beings. Being able as he was to talk almost personally to every German, he seized control of the radio and of the newspapers and through them of political and military power; and he proceeded to make the German soul that they were oppressed and in danger from the world. They knew what oppression had been. They suffered after the war from hunger, insult and hopelessness such as even we Negroes in America have not experienced since Reconstruction. ¶ I saw them in 1936 in nearly every part of Germany and it was the same pattern: brooding, will to power, hard work and limited food and fanatical faith in one man who hated Jews and Bolsheviks and feared everybody else. ¶ I saw Poland. It was dark when I rode into Warsaw but where it was black then today it is red. I went through the bare, poor fields of White Russia with its vast estates. They now belong to Russia. I saw Russia and I saw its army. The red troops were present everywhere but especially they were gathering on the eastern border. Next to them was the feverish activity in industry, the new factories, the new power plants but beneath it all was the stoical unmoved Russian peasant. ¶ It was impossible in that journey of two thousand miles to be sure how far the increasing intelligence and wealth of Russia was going to continually be guided toward the welfare of the Russians. I saw China and Japan both of them singularly under the spell of Western civilization; but China benevolently inert and with unshaken faith in the benevolence of white folk, as she lay still exploited and stricken, sprawled across the beauty of her ancient civilization. And Japan under the spell of the West and of the efficient power of the industrial exploitation which the West was exercising, but with no faith in white benevolence; rather with bitter and armed suspicion. I did not see India but I felt the pulse of three hundred million, brown and black folk, pawns of the present world.

32-12-36

"I dimly guess what Time in mists confounds;
Yet ever and anon a trumpet sounds
From the hid battlements of Eternity:
Those shaken mists a space unsettle, then
Round the half-glimpsed turrets slowly wash again;
But not ere him who summoneth
I first have seen, enwound"

With glooming robes purpureal, cypress-crowned;
His name I know, and what his trumpet saith."

November 4, 1939

AS THE CROW FLIES
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

From the speeches of Congressman Mitchell, Good Lord deliver us.

To be in the army or not to be, that is the question. To insist on fighting white men's wars or to let prejudice save the flower of our youth for our own emancipation.

Carver has one great duty unperformed, the training of young Negro chemists in his own laboratory and with his own marevelous technique to follow in his footsteps when he dies.

Horace R. Cayton and George S. Mitchell have published through the University of North Carolina Press the most thorough study of black workers in the new trades unions yet made.

FRANCE

The French Empire differs markedly from the British Empire. In the first place it is not nearly as large, comprehending in all something over a hundred millions of people. In the second place the disparity between the rulers and the ruled is much less. There are in France forty-two million white Frenchmen and they rule over ~~in Africa~~ sixty-five millions of colonials. Of these sixty-five million, twenty-one million are black and in Africa; twenty-three million are in Asia and belong predominantly to the yellow race; another twenty million live in North Africa and western Asia and are a little difficult to classify racially. One may call the Algerians white but there is a distinct intermixture of Negro blood and a much larger intermixture in Morocco; while in Syria and western Asia there is Semitic which is kin to Mongolian blood. Beside these there are a million people, mostly blacks and mulattoes, who live in self governing colonies like Martinique and Guadeloupe. The first point that engages the attention of the observer is that all these people are represented in the French Parliament. In the British Empire not a single colony has a representative in the British Parliament; not even the independent dominions have a voice there. The representation of the French colonies in Parliament is for the most part emblematic rather than effective: Algeria has ten representative which means a little political power although not much in a Chamber of Deputies which has 618 members. Seven other Deputies represent the rest of the colonies. They at least giv those colonies a chance to voice their opinion on the floor of the Chamber, although their actual voting power amounts to little. On the other hand they have often been represented in the Ministry. The black deputy from Senegal has been more than once under-secretary in the Colonial Office and at another time was high commissioner in French West Africa out ranking even the governor; and Candace, who represents Guadeloupe, has not only been colonial under-secretary but has presided over the deliberations of the Chamber. This illustrates one thing characteristic of the French and by far the most helpful thing in the French Empire and that is their refusal to draw legally or by established custom a color line or a racial bar. I shall never forget sitting in 1919 in the great hall of the Trocadero and seeing a French marshall kiss the cheeks of a black Negro lieutenant from Senegal and a yellow Annamese lieutenant from Indo-China and bestow upon them both the Legion of Honor. Such a ceremony would have been impossible in England, Germany or the United States. Another point in favor of France is her refusal to establish a system of education for colonials which is deliberately designed to train them for a caste status. This with some exceptions England has deliberately done. She has either refused government aid to colonial schools or when she has given such aid has so cheapened and misdirected education as to make it impossible for any number of the students to be trained in modern ways. On the other hand it is possible for a Negro or a Chinaman in the colonial schools of France to prepare himself for French universities.

It is easy from these consider tions to jump to the conclusion that France is without race prejudice and a short of earthly paradise for the Negro. This is not true. When the black deputy from Senegal was made to out rank the governor of West Africa, the governor incontinently resigned. While it is possible for a Negro to go through the schools of the colonies and enter the French university, his economic condition and income make this seldon a reality. The French system of schools in West Africa for instance is ideal but after all it provides for only five percent of the million and a third children of school age in West Africa; and while full French citizenship is open theoretically to most colonials it is not easy to attain. There are 81,000 black French citizens in French West Africa, but nearly 80,000 of these are in Senegal and their forebears were enfranchised directly after the French Revolution. Between 1914 and 1936 only a thousand natives among the fifteen million blacks of Africa were made full French citizens. The reason for this is that France is not willing to spend much money for the uplift and education of her black or yellow colonials. She doesnot on the other hand exploit them as England does. Most of the great fortunes and large incomes of the English are based directly and indirectly on black slavery and Asiatic exploitation. This is not true in France. French fortunes have been built more largely on the exploitation of Frenchmen than on foreigners. Nevertheless the French have exploited their dependents. In the French Congo their action a few decades ago paralleled those of the Belgian Congo; and in general the French still keep before them the idea that a profit to France must accrue out of colonial government. This is a better picture than can be painted with most countries in regard to their colonial subjects but it is by no means perfect.

OUR SCHOOLS

Recent activities among Negroes show a revival of intelligent interest in our education. There is first the question of admission to the best educational facilities; secondly, there is the question of an active voice in the education of our own children; and third, there is the matter of adequate pay and security for our teachers. None of these questions can be settled academically and completely. Shall we get better training under present circumstances in schools entirely under our own control or in the general established schools of the nation? Can we widen our voice in educational administration and policy by following the example of Washington and Chicago and put Negro members on the general board of education in New York, Boston and Cleveland and above all throughout the Border States and the South. Have we the power to force equal pay for teachers in the public schools regardless of color? The equal pay movement is slowly progressing and has no logical difficulties to hinder it. Membership on boards of education is more difficult and depends upon political power. It has made little headway in the South. Admission to university and professional training so far as it is a question of choosing between good and bad training, there is no room for hesitancy. We must demand the best training. On the other hand in so far as it is a question of good training done in Negro institutions and good training done in white institutions, there is also no question. The Negro institution is to be preferred for Negroes so long as race prejudice remains as it is; so long as Negro teachers are excluded from those white institutions; so long as Negro students cannot share the social life of those institutions; and so long as the ideals taught in those institutions are ideals which inculcate Negro inferiority.

* * * * * * * *

Arthur Guiterman sings "AMONG THE ANGELS"

"'Whence did you come?' The pilgrim answered, 'Earth;
A fevered planet, yet I loved it well.'
Around him rang in soft, celestial mirth,
'Why, that was Hell!'"

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Cuss, cash, carry and crash.

There is one embargo that Congress did not repeal.

Freedom will not shriek when Dies dies.

The only person who seems to take Alf Landon seriously is Alf Landon.

Rockefeller says welfare and profit are the objects of business. In case there isn't enough for both, then what?

Catholics make black bishops in Rome but have great difficulty in making black priests in America.

Some ill-advised animal has been born without a father. It would be a rabbit.

EUROPEAN ALLIANCES

In 1936, when I was in Germany, Hitler and Goebbels were inveighing against Russia ~~and communism~~ in phrases worse than insulting. They had an exhibit to show the horrors of communism. Today Russia and Germany are in alliance against France and England. This leads us to further speculation. Suppose the nations of the world should arrange themselves in accordance with their attitude toward the color line: we would have on the one hand, Japan, France and Russia and on the other hand Germany, Great Britain, the United States and Italy. Such a rearrangement of nations would be no more inexplicable than the Russo-German Pact.

Japan and the United States

It is clear as day that the United States Minister Grew returned from America to Japan with distinct orders to go as far as possible by public threats toward stirring up war between America and Japan. It looks to certain Americans today as a wise move for helping England; but America should remember that when she, and Australia broke the alliance between England and Japan, she threw Japan into the arms of Germany and Italy. Analogous tactics today may bring Russia, Germany and Japan into a world dominating position.

John R. Lynch

John Roy Lynch born in 1847 is dead today at the age of ninety-two. He was born befor the Compromise of 1850 and was sixteen when the slaves were emancipated. He became a Justice of the Peace in Mississippi at the age of twenty-two and was Speaker of the House of Representatives at the age of twenty-four. In 1884 he presided over the National Republican Convention and later held offices and received recognition in an extraordinary way. He wrote one of the best books on Reconstruction that has been published. He was a small, thin, quiet brown man, typical of the best type of emancipated American slave. With only common school education, he wrote and spoke English, and had the manner and address of a gentleman. For many years most Negroes have forgotten him but in the end he cannot be forgotten.

27-12-25

THE FIFTEENTH WORLD WAR

Today again this world is at war. It is not as we often say a second World War. It is a tenth or a fifteenth major world war of our modern era, but concentrated for a second time in recent years in Europe. We may not forget the wars of the nineteenth century; There were 166 wars between 1800 and 1900 even counting some groups like the Napoleonic wars as one war. From 1900 down to our day there have been nearly 100 wars; or from 1815 to 1939 we have 10 wars of great magniture, 50 large scale conflicts and 200 minor conflicts. During the last three or four years Europe alone has been spending for direct armament $20,000 a minute. Today Germany in alliance with and also in the power of Russia, is fighting against the British and French Empires with Italy ready to take part on either side where the promised pay is greatest. The United States has foreign investments amounting to over fifteen thousand million dollars and most of this in the British and French Empires. Again the British and French Empires have under their direct and indirect control the larger part of the thousand million colored people of the world. We are allied to those peoples and thus in a sense our very existence is at stake but what is that stake? Does it depend upon the victory or the defeat of the empires which control colored labor?

AS THE CROW FLIES

by
W. E. B. Du Bois

To those who do not need them, voting for ham and eggs is awfully funny.

Congress has finished its fall advertising campaign in Washington and now goes home to sleep until after the Christmas drunk.

Says Russian Molotof drunk: "One swift blow to Poland by the German and Red armies and nothing was left." Says Russian Molotof sober: "Our troops entered Poland only after Poland had ceased to exist.

It is a shame that Dr. Jones, colored, was refused a $6,000 mortgage on the $10,000 home he was buying in Westchester; but it is a damn sight bigger shame that two thousand black farm tenants in Mississippi cleared on the average $105.43 for the whole year's work in 1933.

INDIA 1939

Watch India. India is today the strategic center of the up-surging colored world. The All-India Congress founded in 1916 said August 24, 1939: "The Congress has further clearly enunciated its policy in the event of war and declared its determination to oppose a war on India. The Committee is bound by this policy of the Congress and will give effect to it so as to prevent the exploitation of Indian resources for Imperialist ends. The past policy of the British Government as well as recent developments demonstrate abundantly that this Government does not stand for freedom and democracy and may, at any time, betray these ideals. India cannot associate herself for democratic freedom which is denied to her and which is likely to be betrayed. At its meeting held in Calcutta on May 1, 1939, the All India Congress Committee reiterated this policy of the Congress and expressed its disapproval of the despatch of Indian troops to foreign countries. In spite of this clear expression of opinion, the British Government has sent or is sending Indian troops to Egypt and Singapore against the declared will of the Indian people. Even apart from the war situation the Central Legislative Assembly has previously declared that no Indian troops should be sent abroad without the consent of the Legislature. The British Government has thus flouted the declarations of the Congress and the Assembly and has taken steps which might inevitably lead to India's entanglement in a war."

Since that the Congress has called for the resignation of eight of the elven provisional governments of British India in protest against Britain's decision to defer action on a central government until after the end of the war. What is this proposed central government for India? We must explain that next week.

ENTERTAINMENT

There is in the United States a colored quartet whose singing over the radio has always greatly pleased and entertained me. When, therefore, they recently came in person to give a concert in Atlanta, I hastened to hear them. I was disappointed. The concert bordered on being a cheap ministrel show with stale jokes on family life, religion and work. The quartet did not sing well a single piece of music. They deliberately changed the score and caricatured some of the best of the Negro folk songs and even classic gems like "Going Home", "Old Man River", and "Water Boy". The solo which their bass singer attempted was beneath contempt. I wonder why they did this? Were they deliberately letting themselves down to what they considered the level of a colored audience? If so, they made a grave mistake. When I left I felt as though I had been slapped in the face with a dirty dish rag.

THE UNITED NEGRO TRADES

32-12-20

Cayton and Mitchell say in their recent study of Negroes in unions: "In considering the history of the American labor movement, one is impressed by the fact that the struggle of the Negro for a place in industry and for acceptance by unions is not dissimilar in most respects from that of many immigrant groups. In the latter part of the last century many Russian Jews immigrated to this country. They were unorganized and worked at extremely low wages and thus tended to depress the wage level. The existing union organizations realized the danger of this threat but, because of racial prejudice, were hesitant to organize them. To meet this problem a group of Jewish labor leaders and intellectuals in 1888 organized the United Hebrew Trades. The U. H. T. cooperated with the A. F. of L. in organizing Jewish workers. . . . When Jews were not voluntarily taken into A. F. of L. unions, the U. H. T. organized them into unions and then forced the A. F. of L. to accept them."

They advise Negroes to do likewise which is a case of that voluntary segregation for the advancement of obvious ends which I have advocated; but Cayton and Mitchell advise this for the sake of "emancipating the mass of the workers from the ideological hold of the ultra-nationalistic, race conscious upper class." Nonsense; the "race conscious upper class" was never "ultra-nationalistic"; exactly the contrary. It is the upper class among Negroes and among every minority that is frantic to escape from the group into some wider, larger, more powerful group. Among American Negroes the upper classes have always wanted to be white or to be treated as white folk.

November 18, 1939 ?

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

God is reorganizing the Supreme Court.

Mexico still grips toward her land and her oil.

Hurley joins Lindbergh in holy crusade against all colored peoples.

The total property invested in Negro colleges today in the United States is less than the seventy to ninety million dollars which is the cost of one battleship.

States' Rights in the South is today the right to be supported by the Federal Government.

MOUND BAYOU

In 1890 Mississippi began the movement to disfranchise Negroes legally. In the Convention which accomplished this were two Republicans: George B. Melchoir, a white man and Isaiah T. Montgomery, the Negro founder of Mound Bayou. Senator George, the leader of disfranchisement, permitted Montgomery to retain his seat and in return Montgomery spoke in favor of disfranchisement and voted for it! John R. Lynch says "Why this man, who had the reputation of being honest and honorable, and who in point of intelligence was considerably above the average of his race, should have thus acted and voted has always been an inexplicable mystery." Does murder stalk today in Mound Bayou? "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform!"

INDIA

No casual reader feeding on English propaganda can picture the present plight of India. This land built on a substratum of Negroid people and overwhelmed in succession by western and eastern Asiatics, Mohammedans and Europeans today contains one-fifth of the human race numbering 320,000,000 who are 90% illiterate and work for an average of twenty-five dollars a year. England has plunged them into a debt which now amounts to four thousand million dollars. Nevertheless, led by holy men like Gandhi and intrepid fighters like Nehru they have demanded and been promised their own autonomous, democratic commonwealth. But in order to foil the majority of Indians from carrying this through, England has made herself the champion of every minority group in the country; playing upon their religious prejudices and their fears. So that today she is allowing less than seventy million Moslems together with a dozen autocratic, princely tyrants to over-ride the will of the vast majority of the Indian people and in the face of categorical promises for independence, England has transported Indian troops to fight outside the country and has declared India at war without the consent of the Indian people.

37-12-22

AGED YOUTH

Nothing is funnier than to see middle-aged youth of forty verging on to fifty years pleading for old men to give "us youngsters" a chance. Most of them had a chance but were so lazy and so busy with booze and prostitutes that they did not take it. Now wearing diapers they drap themselves over cabaret tables and weep. Youth is not a matter of years; it is a question of brains, honesty and tireless work.

WPA

Aping certain reactionary forces in the United States, it is customary for colored people to joke about the WPA, relief legislation and other "alphabetical" aid, which the Federal Government has resorted to to help the nation in the midst of disaster. This is an irritating mistake. Without the help of the Federal Government and various relief agencies, a large proportion of the colored population of the United States would have starved to death. It is not the part of wisdom to sneer at the hand that feeds you.

Walter Chievers shows ten reasons why we need relief: 1. Forty-five per cent of us work in the groups most largely unemployed. 2. Our wages are lower than whites. 3. Negro labor is being displaced by white labor. 4. We are first to be discharged and last to be hired. 5. Certain industries refuse to employ Negroes. 6. Some unions refuse to admit them. 7. Negro business has small capital and small opportunity. 8. The Southern tenant system is being overthrown. 9. There is scant provision for Negro unemployables. 10. Family life is broken up by poverty.

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

China licks the hand that slaps her, while Japan slaps the face that insults her.

Jamaicans have demanded dominion status in the British Commonwealth but they made the demand in New York, not in Kingston.

From 1789 to 1920, the United States Government spent 66,000 million dollars. Of this 52,000 million dollars went for war. This is the reason that we are so civilized.

From 1922 to 1936, we spent 4,200 million dollars on our navy and by 1936 we had painfully accumulated 3,800 million dollars worth of church edifices. Thus we can bring the world to Jesus and knock hell out of the Japanese.

SOUTH AFRICA

Of the mixture of blood in the Union of South Africa two colored Rhodesian teachers, J. G. Stuhardt and S. V. LeGrange, write: "The history of the racial make-up of the Coloured Race in South Africa, dates as far back as the days of Jan van Riebeek. As recorded by Professor Theal, The European settlement at the Cape was small and marriageable women were scarce; Jan van Riebeek therefore allowed mixed marriages with Indians and Hottentots. The first European to marry a Hottentot girl, Eva, was Peter van Meerhof the doughty explorer, and for this he was promoted to the rank of Surgeon as a wedding present from the Company. Van Riebeek described Eva as a virtuous young woman of Hottentot birth. Asiatics played a predominant part in the building up of this man of colour. Introduced as convicts from the Indian Islands they eventually became part of the permanent population of the country, as did the slaves from Batavia, Madagascar and Guinea. The slaves imported from Malaya included amongst others political prisoners of a high type of Malayan civilization."

EDUCATION IN JOHANNESBURG

In the larger Johannesburg area - the Gold Reef, or Witwatersrand, - there are approximately 60,000 Native children of school-going age. These are children of the 180,000 permanent urban African residents who have left their country homes and are at work in Johannesburg and its satellite towns. Only one school is provided by the Government, a wretched affair at Pimville Township of which the Government is thoroughly ashamed. This leaves education for some 59,000 children entirely in missionary hands. Meager grants-in-aid from the Government for teachers' salaries are obtainable by those schools who are fortunate enough to be registered. Buildings, equipment, repairs, etc., have to be provided by the missions, with the help of school fees paid by the children, - 25 cents per quarter; $1.00 per year. How are the missions shouldering their burden? As efficiently as possible under the circumstances, but far from adequately. Accomodation is provided to-day for about 22,000 children in some 60 schools. Thus, about 37% of the available children are provided for. Of these, however, 61% drop out before Standard I (third grade in America), and only about 6% reach Standard IV (sixth grade). But what of the thousands of children not in school; the 38,000 for whom no schools are within reach? A serious situation is developing here. For twenty years mission ries, Native Welfare societies, and others interested in the Africans have been pressing upon the Government the necessity for providing more funds for Native education. More have been provided, but they are still grossly inadequate. A conference, initiated by us through the instrumentality of a Rotary Club committee, was called together last October by the Johannesburg City Council to consider the subject of "Native Juvenile Delinquency". This conference revealed a state of affairs that shocked Johannesburg. Thousands of these children, without effective parental guidance in this rapidly changing transition period, and without the discipline that even poor schools offer, are crowding our juvenile courts and clogging the reformatory agencies. A continuation committee of this Conference is pointing out to Governmental, Municipal, and welfare agencies, the desperate need for a constructive program, including more schools.

37-12-16

SEGREGATION

Not only do Cayton and Mitchell propose a planned segregation of United Negro Trades" but here comes William L. Dawson of Chicago, former alderman of the city and now powerful Democratic Committeeman of the Second Ward. Mr. Dawson is backing Earl B. Dickerson for Congress against Arthur Mitchell and Dawson says according to the Associated Negro Press "that he played not party politics, but race politics. His friends say he amazed many members of the audience by strongly urging an adherence to political groups, irrespective of party that were interested in advancing the political, civic and economic rights of the Negro."

Planned racial effort for the salvation of the Negro race - call it segregation or what you will - is the path of the future.

22-12-12

December 9, 1939
16

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

It takes a chamberlain to talk gravely of peace without mention of India nor Africa.

Evidently God loves a cheerful liar.

Between cowards and hypocrites, I prefer cowards. I know fear.

~~It takes~~ H. G. Wells ~~to~~ tells England the whole truth: "every man without distinction of race or color is entitled to nourishment, housing, covering, medical care and attention sufficient to realize his full possibilities of physical and mental development and to keep him in a state of health from his birth to death."

WEST AFRICA

I am awaiting word from West Africa which I have not yet heard. Of the various centers of the earth, none intrigue me more than the lands that circle the Gulf of Guinea, the Gold Coast and Nigeria, old Dahomey, the former German Cameroons. ~~Take~~ for instance Nigeria alone is larger in area than all of the states of the United States on the Atlantic seaboard from Maine to South Carolina. It contains over twenty million people, all black save a few hundred. It has one city of 400,000, one of 140,000 and eight from 50,000 to 100,000. Despite its subordination to England, the overwhelming mass of its rulers including judges, magistrates and police are black, and a majority of the members of the legislative council are black. There are educated men there; with 250,000 pupils in school; twenty-one training schools and the beginnings of a university at Yaba. These Negroes in 1936 exported forty-five million dollars worth of palm oil and kernels, cotton, cocoa, ground nuts, hides and skins. Since the World War, Nigeria has compelled England to grant her elective representation in the government. But what is Nigeria doing today? What are her leading, educated, colored men thinking? Why is it that we American Negroes are not in closer touch with these folk? I do not like the silence. This is the time for British West Africa to demand its eventual freedom and independence.

A PROPOSED LYNCHING PARADE

Elmer W. Dean of White Plains, New York proposes a parade in Washington next winter of "We who have been Lynched":

As we glance over the statistics on lynching from 1882-1936 the state representations would run as follows: Alabama would have 47 whites and 296 Negroes in line; Arizona would be 'lily white' with a total of 29; Arkansas would total 285, with 59 whites and 226 Negroes; California would come with 41 whites and 2 Negroes; Colorado with 66 whites and 248 Negroes; Delaware 1 lone Negro; Florida a total of 272, 24 whites and 248 Negroes; Georgia would come marching through with 515, whites 37 Negroes 478; Idaho would be for whites only, 20 in all; Illinois, 14 whites and 17 Negroes; Indiana would have 33 whites and 14 Negroes; Iowa, 17 whites and 2 Negroes; even Kansas would have 35 whites and 19 Negroes; Old Kentucky would have 64 whites and 141 Negroes; Louisiana, where one cannot tell who is who, would classify them as 56 whites and 333 Negroes; Maryland would send along 2 whites to escort 7 Negroes; while Michigan would have 7 whites escorted by 1 Negro; Minnesota, 4 whites and 4 Negroes; Mississippi, the home of the very dark white senator would have the largest delegation, 41 whites and 522 Negroes; Missouri 51 whites and 70 Negroes; Montana 82 whites and 2 Negroes; Nebraska 52 whites and 5 Negroes; Nevada 6 whites and 0 Negroes. We would be just about half way through the states now. Perhaps the affair could be made so grewsome that by this time a number of whites had fainted seeing it visualized that they were being lynched as well as Negroes.

Then would come New Jersey with 0 whites and 1 Negro; Mexico 33 whites and 3 Negroes; New York 1 white and 1 Negro; North Carolina 15 whites and 83 Negroes; North Dakota 13 whites and 3 Negroes; Ohio 10 whites, 16 Negroes; Oklahoma 82 whites, 41 Negroes; Oregon 20 whites, 1 Negro; Pennsylvania 2 whites 6 Negroes; South Carolina 4 whites and 154 Negroes; South Dakota 27 whites, 0 Negroes; Tennessee 47 whites, 200 Negroes; Texas 143 whites, 345 Negroes; Utah 6 whites and 2 Negroes; Virginia 16 whites, 83 Negroes; Washington 25 whites and 1 Negro; West Virginia 21 whites, 28 Negroes; Wisconsin 6 whites, 0 Negroes; Wyoming 30 whites and 5 Negroes. According to these figures in a grand total of 4,673 there would be 1,289 whites and 3,384 Negroes. If we could get the whites to join in the parade, seeing they have been lynched as well as Negroes, well and good, if not get enough white Negroes to do the job.

TIERRA DEL FLORIDA

I have just finished a book and when I finish a book I take a vaction: sometimes of an hour; sometimes of a day; often of a week. In this case I rolled down from the heighths that are Atlanta with its smoke and mist and came to a land of flowers. The gobules of the hibiscus, long and red amid the dark green, appeared now furtively, now in massed beauty. The great crimson stars of the poinsettas raised themselves. Then came palms and golden oranges; the ghostly beauty of Spanish moss on ancient oaks. Further I saw the purple bloom of the bougainvillea rise in looped festoons. Loveliest was the ocean "The surge of the sound of the sea in my soul, the sound of the surge of the sea"; the long, white miles beside the surf at Jacksonville; the white, long miles beside the surf at Daytona. I saw one orange grove belonging to a colored farmer; seventy-two acres of beautifully tended fruit; a wide front lawn of bordered lofty palms, a new gray home, electrified. I saw a school and heard it singing which Mary Bethune had created. I found old friends and new beauty. I know again why one, Ponce de Leon, sought here the "Fountain of Youth" and found it.

December ~~25~~ 23, 1939 ?

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Peace, presents, good will and debts.

Florida is establishing a chair of democracy at Southern College. It should add a seminar on mob law.

The greatest casualty to date in the second World War is printers ink.

Current literature needs more words meaning "denounce," "demand," "deplore" and hold responsible."

Vermont honors black Lemuel Haynes who preached to white heathens and fought for American freedom.

CORDON SANITAIRE

Let us remember that Finland, Latvia, Esthonia and Lithuania consisted of land seized from Russia after the World War and designed as jumping off places for western Europe when they got ready to smash the Bolsheviki. They were always ready to gang-up with England, Germany and France against the new Russia. Suddenly the present crisis compelled Germany to make friends with Russia and Russia thereupon is taking back her stolen territory. The world is astonished, aghast and angry! But why? France seized her stolen Alsace Lorraine after the World War. England has been seizing land all over the earth for centuries with and without a shadow of rightful claim: India, South Africa, Uganda, Egypt, Nigeria, not to mention Ireland. The United States seized Mexico from a weak and helpless nation in order to bolster slavery; and incidentally, when Italy took Abyssinia she was enabled to do it by means of the oil and supplies which America furnished her in unlimited quantities and at the cheapest prices. This is the sort of world that has grown suddenly righteous in defense of Finland.

SORROW SONGS

Down at Fisk the other day Buell Gallagher of Talladega College talked about the attitude of Negroes toward spirituals and said this true word which ought to be read over the land and never forgotten "The Negro American wishes to be an American, fully and richly so. But let us not lose sight of the fact this America of which the Negro is a part will be poorer, inestimably poorer, the moment it loses the Negro's contribution in the melodies and other forms of culture. In the very act of cutting off his Negro heritage in order to be accepted more fully into American life, the young Negro impoverishes the culture he is trying to share. There never was a more convincing example of the stupid practice of cutting off one's nose to spite one's face. Let the spirituals be a part of the rich American life into which one goes!"

Discrimination

Down in Atlanta the Senior and Young People's Department of St. Mark's Methodist Church has made a report on discrimination against Negroes. They point out that in this city education, parks, playgrounds, health facilities all show color discrimination. The police court assumes that a Negro is guilty until he is proven innocent. Three million dollars is spent on parks for white children and only forty thousand on parks for Negroes. White teachers are paid an average of $1,950 a year while Negroes get $1,275. Books for white children cost $6.11 a pupil and Negro children $0.73 a pupil. They added "Perhaps this can be explained as a hangover from slavery. Yet there is no excuse for it. We should remember that 'you can't keep a man in a ditch without staying down yourself'."

The astonishing thing about this is that St. Mark's Church is a white church and that this report is the product of Southern white youth. This does not mean revolution in the South; it means progress. It took a whole column in the ATLANTA CONSTITUTION to explain away part of it.

CHINA

The people of the United States aided and abetted by our increasing and costly navy are working themselves into quite a dither concerning China. But the Chinese Exclusion law still stands. In the early nineteenth century the United States joined England and France in reducing the Chinese to vassalage. They kept and keep standing armies in China. They interfere in her local affairs; - for years the English collected Chinese custom taxes and regulated the Chinese tariff. Chinese industry, wages, and income have long been dominated by Europe. Yet today when Japan threatens to replace Europe and America as master of China, the white folk yell in distress. Their cry sounds like freedom for China, but it is not that. It is, 'cease interference with European "business".

39-12-11

Dec 30, 1939?

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Young Negro intellectuals face continual paradox: if they work as a group for great ends that is segregation; if they avoid each other and seek to work with whites they are not admitted. So what?

Did it never occur to Mr. Frank P. Graves, New York Commissioner of Education, that a colored college might sometime be given a Phi Beta Kappa chapter?

The sugar trust protects its American workers "against invasion from the tropics" but the tropics have no protection against the trust.

Did we see ex-president Hoover raging about Italy's attack on Ethiopia? But after all the Finns are blond.

The motor companies charge 11½ per cent for installment buying. They advertise 6 per cent, which is proof of business honesty.

The United States is making desperate effort to drive Russia and Japan into each other's arms. Is this the wisest policy?

Leo ~~Wyner~~ Wiener is dead. He was the Harvard professor who insisted that Africa discovered America.

THE AAX

I have at last reached desperation. I am founding and calling for charter members for the Association for the Abolition of Xmas. Jesus Christ today is not usually invited to his birthday celebration. Late in December the world gets the gimmes. Everybody becomes selfish, grasping and in debt. They begin hurrying, rushing and working. The newspapers dispense with news and are filled with advertisements of cheap gewgaws or impossible luxuries. Sweating, fighting crowds try to throw away their hard earned money to buy these things in order to give them to people who do not want them, ~~and do not need them.~~ The holidays become the helladays: clerks are crucified, mail men are murdered, junk piles are heaped to heaven, forests are denuded and children burned to death. Your friends and fellow citizens turn into pickpockets and confidence men. The poor little stricken Jesus aghast and horror dumb fades into the forgotten and in place of peace and goodwill we get drunk on New Year's Eve. In view of which I shall be glad to receive charter members into the AAX. There will be no membership fee.

WEALTH

Tiffany and Company published this advertisement in the TIMES:

Gold and diamond plume brooch	$245
Diamond bracelet	4575
Aquamarine ring	280
Pearl necklace	6600

I should like to translate it something like this:

Gold and diamond plume brooch	price of a major operation for appendicitis
Diamond bracelet	college education for Junior
Aquamarine ring	year's clothing for five underfed children
Pearl necklace	annual income of thirty-three Negro tenant farmers in Mississippi

37-12-20

DEWEY and TAFT

Two Republican candidates have thrown their hats into the ring. I like neither their size color nor fashion. Their platforms are in substantial agreement: one, reduce taxes; two, increase private profit; three, give the balance to relief. I am not interested in taxes except that they should fall on wealth and not on poverty. They should strike high incomes and not small purchases. The effort to uplift mankind through private business has ended in disaster and in the midst of that disaster the first people to ask for relief were business men. With partial return of prosperity they now propose to ignore eight million unemployed and to encourage individual enterprise among one-third of the nation which is unable to make a decent living.

MY DAY

There is a certain sanity and courage about Eleanor Roosevelt that all men must admire. She refuses to be head housekeeper of the White House and pour tea. She insists on thinking in public. She consorts with Negroes and Communists and says so. She discusses openly with keeness and with balance the things that thinking human beings are talking about. These acts and attitudes are costly. They bring enmity and bitterness but they also bring self satisfaction.

December 30, 1939
Jan. 6, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Mr. Leffingwell declares that managed money and planned economy will doom the profit system. So what?

Don't let the mere antiquity of the New Year resolution habit, keep you from doing what you know you ought to do and lack guts to attempt.

When Grade A Negro politicians break the law it is the naive honesty of their dishonesty that makes angels weep.

If the anti-lynch bill should become a law a number of its noisest supporters will have to go on relief.

Why wail? What has the world got that we cannot have: love, family, friends, flowers, trees, homes, learning, stars? What are we belly-aching about?

God pity the folk who exchange children for autoes. We are they.

RESIDUES OF CHRISTMAS

Some of my friends protest. They like Christmas. And if Christmas were what they imagine it is, I should like it too. If, for instance, it meant rest, not exhausting debauchery; peace, not bickering and quarreling; good wishes, not presents; kindness not expense; good cooking, not overstuffing; thrift and not debt; joy, happiness and laughter, and not envy, jealousies and sneers. If it meant this, and so far as it does mean this, I am all for it. But that ain't far.

DEWEY WISDOM

"Stop being half-way for a sort of creeping socialism and half-way for private enterprise." Splendid. This means that when Mr. Dewey becomes president of the United States, which God forbid, that the following examples of socialism will be abolished: the post office, postal savings, parcel post, one-half the expense of road building, old age pensions, insurance on bank savings, control of lawless railways, contribution of fifty million dollars a year to education, war pensions, some slight control of Wall Street gambling and a few other things of this sort. It means that under private enterprise the packers will again be allowed to can rotten beef; that business crises and financial disasters will go merrily on; that the stealing of insurance companies will be uncurbed; that banks will be looted and workers kept from uniting for higher wages and more decent conditions. Retorts Mr. Dewey with regard to such a business malefactors: "Name him; induct him; fine him." Yes and get in jail for infringing on private profit; for trying to run up against corporation lawyers; and for daring to say that your soul is your own, if any rich Republican wants it.

TARIFFS

37-12-5

One of the most important fights of the coming Congress will be the attempt of Republicans backed by organized wealth to overthrow the tariff concessions which the Secretary of State has made with various countries. All former efforts to reduce the taxation on American consumers which indefensibly high tariff restrictions put into the hands of American manufacturers, have proven impossible in open Congress. Lobbies of interests, lusting for gain, have made tariff legislation an orgy of political trading and graft. World war aggravated the situation, until nearly every great country strove to be self-sufficient and to produce at almost prohibitive cost, things which people might have bought cheaply in other countries if they had been allowed; and could in turn have earned their own living in lines where their own country had natural advantages and resources. No country has greater resources than America; no country needs tariff taxes less; in no country have such taxes concentrated power so completely in the hands of ruthless industrial tyrants. This strangle hold, Hull has partially attacked by a series of treaties which admit cheap goods from abroad to be paid for by things which we in turn can raise cheaply. He has thus brought upon the head of the administration the ire of every special interest which has thus lost its tariff graft. They are to get him in the next Congress.

FINLAND

Two thousand people met in New York to protest against the invasion of Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and Finland. Thousands of dollars are being raised for the defense of small nations. Russia as an aggressor has been kicked out of the League. But does anyone hear that blessed name Ethiopia? Does anyone see Italy stigmatized for her aggression, cruelty and treachery? When the world wanted to stop supplies for Italy's theft of a nation, what did the United States do? It sold Italy more than ever. If Liberia instead of Finland was being damned to hell, can you see Hoover trumpeting and bellowing for aid and defense?

~~January 6, 1939~~
Jan. 13, 1940

1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

NEW ETHICAL PROBLEMS

May I spend ten dollars for one dinner while other people are starving?

Can a man be sole judge of his income and expenditure without the intrusion of any form of democratic control?

Can any form of entertainment compensate for my living in slums?

When and where should I submit to "Jim-Crow" conditions?

War arises from wants unfulfilled. How far are my wants a basis for mass murder?

How far can I accept public benefits from which the public is excluded and for which the public pays?

How may I endure insult with dignity and be intelligent and well-mannered despite poverty and segregation?

How far must I accept responsiblity for the crimes and bad manners of my fellow human beings?

GEORGIAN AMERICAN

Thank God the newspaper called the GEORGIAN AMERICAN is dead after thirty futile years. It succeeded and absorbed the Atlanta NEWS which caused the Atlanta riot by publishing five extras in one day alleging assaults upon women by Negroes. It continued after Hearst bought it to be the worst panderer to low-class Negro hatred, Ku Kluxism and Jim-Crowism. Of all the papers of Atlanta if not the South it died not from the rivalry of better papers but from sheer inanition.

SKIN COLOR

Why Chinese are sallow, Europeans pale and Negroes dark, has been studied at Harvard and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The conclusion is that five different pigments, combined in different proportions, make for skin color: melanin and melainoid, carotine and two forms of hemoglobin, one with and one without oxygen. Moreover, these scientists have come to the disastrous conclusion that all races have the same five color pigments and that difference in color comes from different proportions of combination. This is disturbing because what scientist have looked for eagerly is something fundamentally different in the black and white skin and here they find only a difference of degree; and this degree depends on sun and diet and similar influences. What are we coming to in this racial investigation?

36-4-61

WAR AND EDUCATION

Let's keep hammering on two sets of facts: that ten different Southern states in 1935-36 spent $46 a year on every white child and $13 on every colored child in average daily attendance; and that the World War cost forty-two million dollars a day while the present war, even without fighting is costing much more than that. Moreover, our bill for education in the United States is far below our expenditure for "military preparedness" without any war at all.

Heywood Broun

Not the physical bulk of Heywood Broun, impressive as it was, raised him high above his fellow men. His distinction was his humor and his honesty. There are men who are sneering and cynical; they believe in nothing; work for nothing worthwhile and make smart remarks about the rest of us. There are others like Broun who are humorous and yet in deadly earnest. From high estate they can look down upon this crawling, wriggling world and laugh at it; but they smile not in derision but in sympathetic pity. Such men as Broun, know poverty and color caste, and the power of wealth and the petty jealousies of men. If they stop here, they become cheerful philosophers and have a place in the world; but if they are like Broun, they have courage to go further. If Heywood Broun had knuckled down like some current columnists and radio announcers, he could have been rich and successful and sat in Congress or in the Institute of Arts and Sciences; but Broun had that common garden variety of courage which made him fight his bread and butter as represented by the NEW YORK WORLD and several other aggregations of capital. He walked out into the ranks of union labor and got hustled by policemen. He consorted with scribes and pharisees and many much worse. But he was six feet of splendid manhood. He helped the cause of the American Negro when the majority of our fellow citizens was dumb. He is a great loss to American letters.

January ~~12~~, 1940?

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-4-58

The year 1939 was a flop for white folk and no wild triumph for the rest of human kind.

Why did not the whole world get drunk New Year's Eve and sleep if off so soundly as to forget what it is fighting about, if anything?

We end the decade in 1940. We do not begin one, thank God. Let's finish the present mess completely and get ready for a fresh start in 1941.

There is no comparing "The Birth of a Nation" with "Gone With the Wind". The former was cruel libel on black folk and helped cause the lynching of eighty Negroes in 1915. The latter is a conventional provincialism about which Negroes need not get excited. It is beautifully photographed, twice too long and adequately acted at least on the colored end.

KELLY MILLER

In the death of Kelly Miller, America looses one of its keenest minds. If his mental brilliancy had been backed by power of concentration and hard, continuous work, he might have left the world imperishable literary monuments. But Miller was not only intellectually lazy, but the very lightness and scintillating quality of his mind, easily beguiled him from drudgery and left him satisfied with epigrams, keen thrusts, telling but too often superficial criticisms. There arose a certain dualism in his character, which made him repeatedly misjudged: his swift mind would leap to a judgment, and he would utter it in subtle, biting phrase. Then on cooler reflection he would contradict this truer statement with more or less vague platitude, which did not ring sincere and often enraged the victim. He thus gained widespread reputation for instability of judgment and disloyalty to most causes.

This arose primarily because Kelly Miller was a crtic, not a statesman; a cynic, not a devotee. His mind played eagerly and joyously with all facets of truth, and was almost equally attracted by every aspect, but deceived by none. He could never so ignore and suppress his clear reason as to let mere emotion hurry him tumultously on.

He therefore never could have become a leader of the mass. He was too forthright, too intellectually ruthless. He might however have become a scholar - a great scholar, if he had been willing or so urged by his environment, as to put twenty-five years into some single, narrow subject of research, making himself master of a field of knowledge. It happened otherwise; it happened that he wasted precious years in uninteresting teaching and latterly in ambition to be president of Howard, from which God mercifully shielded him. He left no literary remains at all worthy of his mind; he pricked and irritated rather than inspired his students; he stimulated his audiences but did not inform them. Yet he was a most interesting and valuable man; he was a genial companion, an indulgent and sympathetic a kindly husband and father. He will be widely missed.

30-4-59

WHO OWNS THE EARTH

The philosophy of Henry George is being perpetuated by the Schalkenbach Foundation. They have just published a World Survey by Margaret Bateman who reminds us of the people who own the earth: the Marquess of Bute until recently owned one half the city of Cardiff, Wales with twenty thousand houses, a thousand shops and factories and land covering 117,000 acres. In Scotland twenty-five land holders own a third of all the land. In Germany in 1933, four hundred people owned an average of 13,000 acres each. In Italy four per cent of the land holders own two-thirds of the land. And about one-half of one per cent of these land holders own forty-seven per cent of all cultivated land. In Hungary three million people, one-third of the population, own no land at all and thirty per cent of the cultivated land is in estates of more than 1,400 acres each owned by twelve hundred proprietors. Of Poland's thirty-four million people seventy per cent are landless peasants living in appalling poverty. One Polish aristocrat owns 340,000 acres. ~~In Finland the big land owner still rules the roost.~~ Henry George preached that land monopoly was the basis of irresponsible power and the enemy of democracy.

January 28, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Hore-Belisha was a Jew, did that make any difference?

Riggle and twist as we may, there is one Negro problem: jobs that pay. And that is the one white problem too.

We sympathize with Gaines. We secured all his rights except food.

We are getting the judges; we got the jails; what next?

In the next campaign we may choose between Garner and Taft; or between Pat Harrison and Dewey; or between McNutt and Vandenburg; or between purgatory and plain hell.

FASCISM AND THE SOUTH

Rushton Coulborn, a professor in Atlanta University, said at the Institute of Public Affairs in the Southern Methodist University at Dallas, Texas in March, 1939: "When the American South goes fascist, look for something native to the soil, a movement which quite possibly will not even use the word 'fascist', since the word is unpopular. You may even expect it to deny its fascist character and foreign inspiration; yet it will contain all the fascist fundamentals expressed in the natural idiom of local politics. First, you may expect authoritarianism with the suppression of freedom of thought and an appeal to tradition; in the South the appeal to tradition would quite likely be to aristocratic feeling, for the American South has never quite forgotten its spiritual descent from eighteenth century England. Here would be a way of reviving in America, the British cult of aristocracy, one of the main defects of British leadership which the dominant American ethos is well qualified to eradicate. It is quite obvious, too, that the enemy within the gate will be the Negro, not the Jew. Expulsion and extermination of the Negro will not be practicable; for the Negro in America, unlike the Jew in Germany, is too numerous and too necessary as the economic basis of society. But the Negro is susceptible of social regimentation, of an enslavement of a subtle character expressed in rigid economic-legal terms, which are not technically slavery. The beginnings of such a system - all that the South could achieve without outside inspiration - are present in the 'Jim Crow' laws."

PHI BETA KAPPA

The triennial meeting of Phi Beta Kappa, which is the great scholarship society of American student life, will convene in San Francisco in September, 1940. At that time this fraternity founded in 1776 will admit to membership with the right of establishing their own chapters: Albion, Bucknell, Catholic University, Elmyra, Milwaukee-Downer, Wake Forest, Wofford, University of Denver, University of Wyoming. Beside these we place a list of the leading Negro A ranking colleges: Howard, Atlanta, Fisk, Talladega, Dillard, Hampton, Tuskegee, Johnson C. Smith, Virginia State, Wiley, Prairie View, Florida A and M., Bennett, Virginia Union, Louisville Municipal, A and T North Carolina (1936). Why is it that none of the colored colleges have ever been allowed to have a Phi Beta Kappa chapter? Is it because Negro scholars are not of Phi Beta Kappa rank? Oh no, because black folk in white colleges, with all of the handicaps, have in one hundred and fifty-five cases between 1874 and 1936 won election. Why then are Negro institutions thus discriminated against? We cannot imagine.

FINLAND

One writes us anent our "sarcasm": "Historical y, the Finns are a proud, frugal and self-respecting people. For centuries they were subjugated by foreign rulers. There is absolutely no justification, whatever for the seizure of land and the subjugation of peoples all over the world by Great Britain; nor can there be any defense whatever for Italy in Abysinnia. Alsasce Lorraine and Texas, I leave without the expression of an opinion.

"A nation, like a people, has the fundamental, the elementary right to govern itself - or to actively participate in the normal functions of the government under which they live. Negroes in this country, and throughout the world, have been waging an incessan war, down the years, for the right of self-government. Gabriel, Denmark Vesey, Nat Turner and Frederick Douglas are monumental examples of the dynamic, sagacious and fearless Negro men of Yesterday. Nor can we forget Toussaint L'Overture in Hayti, who organized his fellow slaves and from their flaming swords and muskets and statesmanship fashioned an enduring Republic."

Amen! but we still don't like Herbert Hoover.

36-4-64

January 27, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Some Protestants prefer war to Catholics.

Civil war has broken out again in Georgia. The cause is neither poverty nor Negroes.

If you want the truth about the wars of the world try a fortune teller and skip the daily press.

There is a corrupt bargain between Republicans and Democrats to use the anti-Lynching Bill as a decoy for Negro votes. The farce should be stopped.

Hitler is playing caged lion and trying to decide whether next to attack Sweden, Holland, France, Turkey, Heaven or Hell.

BOOKS

A lady writes from Birmingham, Alabama, "Some months ago we noticed in a column which you were then writing a suggestion about the organization and promotion of Negro Book of the Year clubs. We have for sometime been accumulating books by and about Negroes for the circulating book-shelf which the club owns. This year we would like to begin a Negro Book of the Year club in the hope that it would stimulate the buying and reading of more books by Negro authors. If you had any plans at the time you wrote the article as to how these clubs could operate, we would like to have you assist us in getting under way. We do not plan to confine membership to club members only but hope to include all persons in Birmingham who might be interested."

Here is a place for a New Year's resolution of the real sort. First, let us resolve to buy books. Women might determine to spend as much on books next year as they spend on hats or if that is excessive, one half as much. Men might make similar calculation on cigars, cigarettes, or even red neck ties. We assume that in this way the average Negro family of fair solvency could put five dollars annually into book buying; and calculating on a half million such families that would mean that in 1940 the Negro demand for books would amount to two and a half million dollars. They could make this demand for books on the market of which they approve; or they could make any publisher in the United States perfectly willing to publish any book which Negroes wanted published. In that way we could build a literature by and for Negroes which would be for the glory and edification of all men.

30-4-7

TO YOUR TENTS, O WHITE FOLK

There are today a number of voices wildly crying in the wilderness and pointing to the white nation an elegant line of wars and conquests which would be perfectly defensible, eminently gainful and at the same time conserve the white race. Here fellow philosophers so far apart as Patrick Hurley, former Secretary of War, and Charles Lindbergh, agree. Compose the differences, they say, between Germany and England, and France and Germany, and Italy and Russia; and all concentrate on Asia and Africa. Beat Japan, re-enslave Negroes and set China free for European exploitation. Enable Australia with six million people to continue to hold a continent the size of the United States for white people. Smash the South Sea Islanders to lower wage levels and strengthen the economic strangle-hold which Europe and North America have on hybrid South America. Here is a program of war and rapine calculated to occupy the Christian world for a century or more. The casualties, considering white control of airplanes and poison gas and the new machine guns, would be inconsiderable. The loot would be simply enormous. The skyscrappers of New York could be doubled in a night; the English aristocracy could escape deadening effects of the present income tax, and Paris and Berlin could be centers of modernistic art. Here is the crusade. To your tents, O white folk!

February 3, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES

by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Commissioner of Education Studebaker asks whether we should arm to attack ignorance or Japan.

A few judges with guts like Chesnutt of Maryland could knock race hate into a cocked hat.

We are in dire need of real news from the West Indies and West Africa. We are getting the loudest kind of silence.

Vote for the WPA, the CCC, the TVA and Social Security and don't let Dewey, Vandenberg, Gannett, nor Taft fool you into cutting off your noses to spite the South.

The case for and against birth control is simply the question of planned babies or babies by accident or force.

JAPAN AND CHINA

Some hope and pray that Japan is bogged down in China but the Japanese, already the greatest rayon producers in the world, have just formed the Sino-Japanese Rayon Manufacturing Company with Japanese control. Sixty-two thousand Japanese have come to live and work in Shanghai; five cigarette factories in Shanghai have passed into Japanese control. Electric power is being manufactured and distributed by Japanese throughout China and the control of utilities and manufactures in China are passing continually into Japanese hands. Is it possible that this is the reason Mr. Stimson is yelling with pain and not for any real sympathy for the Chinese?

ABOUT BATH ROOMS

I have often been reminded to enter a public protest against bath rooms that have no hooks. The general furniture of bath rooms has strikingly improved during my life time. There is porcelain and chrome-nickel, embroidered towels and bath mats; but how many times have I stood helplessly in such a bath room wondering where I could temporarily lay my garments without piling them on the floor. Once in a while I find a single hook; more often the smooth tiles of the bath offer no single resting place for a robe or a coat or a neck-tie. What I am in favor of is compulsory hooks in every bath room and periodic inspection by the authorities to see that this thing is carried out.

SLEMP

Our memories of the former secretary of Calvin Cooledge are not of the cheeriest, but we feel a sympathy with him when he remarked that Alf Landon "has, as is usual with many persons who know nothing about southern politics, never campaigned in the south, and know nothing about southern election laws, unjustly condemned the Republicans of the south.

"I doubt if Kansas would go Republican if every registrar was a Democrat, giving the Democratic party the selection of the voting personnel. Also I doubt if Kansas would go Republican if this democratic registrar had the right for 60 days to vote every Democrat by mail, under the absent voters' law, practically declining to vote Republicans in the same manner, the Democratic registrars also have custody of such Republican ballots."

36-4-9

AMERICAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION

The saga of the American Missionary Association must not be forgotten and Fred Brownlee's annual reports in these later days are readable. I quote from a recent one: "The dramatic impulse which set the work of The American Missionary Association going preceded its charter by eight years. It was in 1839, almost one hundred years ago, that the slave ship, Amistad, docked at Montauk Point, Long Island, instead of the west coast of Africa whither the slaves had ordered it when they mutinied along the shores of Cuba. It was that incident which fanned into flames the smouldering anti-slavery feelings of the founders of the Association. Our founders carried the Amistad case through all the courts until a favorable decree was had from the United States Supreme Court. Thus was added a strong stimulus to their determination to uproot slavery and all of its implications."

It was here that John Quincy Adams came in as lawyer and eventually as the one member of Congress who dared present anti-slavery petitions. It was the beginning of the end of slavery and yet when slavery fell the AMA knew better than to stop work. Then they really began work and were the first to establish the public school in the South. Today the organization is still working and not only working but thinking. This report ends with these pregnant words, "Furthermore, our treatment of minority groups in America bids us pause when we are tempted to speak out against the Fascist governments."

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Organized labor is literally raising the devil to the delight of all Little Steals.

We have so much cotton and such cheap cotton that we refuse to sell it to Japan thus nobly spiting our faces.

Jack Garner will never be President but he will name the next democrat who is.

If ever a soul suffered from false followers that was Jesus Christ: the Crusades, the Holy Office, the pious slave traders and now the Christian Front.

At the rate of two divisions a day the Associated Press is practically wiping out the Russian nation.

Earl Browder lied harmlessly but if all harmful American liars were in jail we could name a thousand who ought to rot a thousand year each.

TEXAS ROUTE NO. 244

One rides out from Houston at dusk through the lonely prairie and then suddenly on the right a hundred clustered buildings arise: forty of them are large school buildings, sixty of them are homes. I turn down route 244, a new concrete road recently built by the state of Texas as an approach to Prairie View State College. It is my third visit and I am always astonished again and newly inspired when I come here. First of all, here is a closed economy; virtually a town with a thousand students and five hundred members of the faculty with their families and helpers. It has, of course, its own electric plant and central heating apparatus, its roads, lawns and hedges, its community government. But in addition to this it raises a large part of its own food; it does its own laundry with modern machinery including dry cleaning; it has a great kitchen and dining rooms which cost $150,000 and has every modern facility. It is governed by W. R. Banks and he is not a czar. He believes in democratic methods and uses them.

TEACHING INDUSTRIES

I used to rail at the older industrial schools because of their failure really to teach industry. They taught old fashioned methods or disappearing techniques and they taught them poorly because the students did not have enough time. They were not to be sure complete failures: they furnished us with masons and carpenters, with cobblers and cooks but their output was small and not in the end effective and above all they expected success for their students through incorporation into current industry.

I have seen a new teaching of trades at Prairie View. Here the object is to train workers who will fulfill a direct demand by colored people at Prairie View and elsewhere. A student works in the kitchen and bakery six months then with the proceeds of his toil he goes to school six months. If he has not thoroughly learned the branch of the trade where he is working he goes back to finish another six months and so on. The result is that a trade is learned and learned thoroughly according to modern methods and is furnishing things which colored people themselves demand and can pay for. This is true in baking, laundering, dry cleaning, dairying, chicken raising, printing, shoe repairing, etc. It is the most practical way I have ever seen of teaching trades and approaches the technique of the celebrated German technical schools.

36-4-11

MR. LEWIS AND THE HOTTENTOTS

We have always assumed and still believe that John L. Lewis knows something about the labor problem but if by any chance he is as ignorant of labor as he evidently is of the morals of the Hottentots we beg to quote for his information from Dowd, THE NEGRO RACES, volume one, p. 60: "The Hottentots are docile, mild, cheerful and 'remarkable for their unselfish liberality, and their fervent attachment to their friends and kindred with whom they would share the last morsel, though starvation should stare them in the face.' They do not bear lasting hatred towards their worst torturers. Yet they are not lacking in spirit, and as enlisted soldiers under the British in South Africa, have shown themselves formidable in the wars against the Kaffirs."

February 27, 1940

24

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

In 1940, the colored tourist ignoring Europe will "Jim Crow" across his own America.

Not capital but labor leaders are enslaving labor today.

The Balkans like Negroes have long looked for help everywhere but within themselves. Now they are discovering - the Balkans.

Way out beyond cablegrams and war correspondents, Gandhi, wisp of a Christ, still fights British tyranny.

Who got bitten by his own big mouth? The Reverend Charles E. Coughlin and his un-Christian Front.

A proposed Republican platform:
1. No
2. Don't
3. Stop
4. Retreat and retrench

This is no phony war but is one of the cruelest and most ruthless drives for starvation, degeneration and murder, man ever saw.

RUSSIA

I am not at all in accord with John Haynes Holmes' violent reaction against Russia, much as I admire the man. I still believe in Russia. I still believe that ~~this country~~ Russia more than any other country in the world is making a frontal attack on the problem of poverty; and I believe that the problem of poverty is the basic problem of our day; conditioning al other problems of race, politics, industry and creative art. I never considered the Russians even after the Revolution as supermen. I expected them to stagger on in blood and tears toward their magnificent goal with many a stumble and retreat. I love the victim Radek more than the tyrant Stalin, but back of them all is the vast might of the Russian people; that people have overthrown capitalist monopoly; have organized industry albeit imperfectly; have made the only forward step in agriculture that the world has seen this century, and have exorcised out of a sodden, ignorant and enslaved mass of people extraordinary leaders and thinkers. For me this is not all but it is enough. I care not if in the face of this accomplishment they have murdered, suppressed thought and made ruthless war. With all they have accomplished more than they have destroyed.

STIMSONISM

Mr. Henry L. Stimson, former Secretary of State, has honored me with a circular letter in which he maintains that the policy of the United States and Asia is "pacific and evolutionary" while the Japanese policy is "militaristic and aggressive." He says that the American policy has been based "upon the conviction that a friendly, progressing, independent China would be the best guarantee of future stability and peace in the Pacific, and a great safeguard for the welfare and security of this hemisphere." He therefore proposes that the United States should take certain steps which will to my mind eventually lead to virtual and even open war with Japan; and he wishes my cooperation and support.

36-4-13

He will not get it. ~~Its~~ My absence will not hurt his movement, but I know perfectly well what America and Mr. Stimson want in Asia. They want low wages, cheap raw materials and increased private profit. They do not care a rap for the Chinese. They have excluded them from America by law and they propose to keep up that exclusion. They raise against them and the Japanese, the color bar and regard them as "lesser breeds without the law." They want China and if possible Japan as the backyard for their industrial and commercial activities and they have been fighting toward this end ever since Commodore Perry bullied helpless Japan into admitting "American civilization". I hold no brief for war whether carried on by Japanese or English or Germans or Americans; but if ever a continent had reason to fight and fear the Americans bringing gifts, it is the continent of Asia. P. S. Moreover, I don't rememb r Mr. Stimson's protest on Ethiopia.

February 24, 1940
March 2, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
BY
W. E. B. Du Bois

Why spend money for poverty, food, jobs and old age? Why spend money for anything?

Who remembers that in 1919, six thousand British, five thousand Americans, two thousand French and Italians fought in Russia to put down the Russian Revolution without a declaration of war and thus sowed the seed of the Russian-Finnish war?

Who remembers that in 1900, Great Britan, France and America without a declaration of war killed and slaughtered thousands of Chinese because the Chinese did not want foreigners in their land? China had to pay over four hundred million dollars for being whipped and looted. This was the real beginning of the present war in China.

THE NEW YORK TIMES

The Times sneers at Earl Browder's arraignment of sham democracy and says ironically "These sham democracies actually carry the fraud as far as not shooting or decapitating or electrocuting or hanging their people without a trial." Has the Times conveniently forgotten that since 1882, the United States has murdered over five thousand victims of lynching without according them a trial? Does the Times remember the victims of mob law in the United States from the Hampton Massacre to the St. Louis and Chicago riots without a single aggressor arrested much less punished? And does the Times remember how Louisiana got rid of Huey Long? We have a feeling that Earl Browder had a certain amount of truth back of his assertions.

McCROREY

There are a number of Negro leaders whose names seldom find place in the Negro press. They are quite unobtrusive men but they make history. One of these is H. L. McCrorey, President of Johnson C. Smith University. He has not only built and for thirty years conducted quietly one of the best Negro institutions of learning but he has been at the same time a great and forceful leader in the Presbyterian Church and not merely a leader of black folk but of white. Last January at the meeting of the Presbyterian Union which is the national organization of all Presbyterian schools in the United States including fifty white universities and colleges and three colored institutions, Dr. McCrorey was quietly and almost unanimously elected President of the Union. It was an extraordinary and well deserved honor.

IN DARKEST MISSISSIPPI

On January 27, the Mississippi State Educational Council composed of white men made a report to the governor which read: "The Negro falls far short of getting equal educational opportunities in the state of Mississippi, contrary to the law and constitution. . . . The term of most rural Negro schools is four to six months; that of white schools eight to nine months. Negro teachers are paid a fourth to a third as much as white teachers. In some counties $3 a year is spent to educate a Negro child, $40 a white. Average pay of Negro teachers has increased 40 cents a month in the last forty years. Negro schools in many instances are 'tumble-down shacks' worth 1 per cent of the white schools of the same communities. Negro teacher training is so inadequate as to become a 'mere joke' and Negro higher education is almost nonexistent. The petition asked that these 'differences' be equalized and that a law and medical school be established for Negroes."

36-4-15

A STUDENT WRITES FROM CALIFORNIA

"The 'viewpoint' I had taken was that the Reconstruction Era was not a period of meddling and ravishing carpet-baggers but an attempt by the rank-and-file of the South to advance democracy to include all the people. Some of the laws passed during those years, I wrote, are far more progressive and intelligent than laws now in effect throughout the cotton belt. It was surprising to me to find that even the professors in history and economics had not known of this. Frankly, my detailed knowledge was lacking, but I had studied Marx enough to know a little of social dynamics. Furthermore, I had been through the South and lastly, I have faith in the efforts of the People to work out their own destiny, provided they are given a chance. Asked by the Professors to corroborate my view with a whole string of bibliography I started another search and this time discovered your most excellent and thorough book, BLACK RECONSTRUCTION IN AMERICA. A faculty member to whom I showed your book said, 'If this is true more people ought to know about it.'"

March 2, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
BY
W. E. B. Du Bois

The Old Deal proposes the following changes in the New Deal program:

1. to stop insurance of bank deposits so that the banks can steal your savings
2. to rebuild the Insull monopoly and kill TVA cheap electricity
3. to let the farmers go bankrupt
4. to stop building houses for the poor
5. to stop trying to tax the rich
6. to remove the curb of fraudulent bond sales
7. to lift the fear of God from the Nine Old Men.

LUNCHEON

I lunched lately in Chicago with four young men and others. There were Langston Hughes and Arna Bontemps both looking a bit corpulent and yet young; both calm, generous and eager, and working and planning for the wants of the world. There was a new face there - young Richard Wright. A face good, strong and intelligent. Wright is not an accident; he has worked hard. Toward the end Allison Davis dropped by; a bit fine drawn but always a gentleman and a scholar. One feels a certain sense of relief and confidence in meeting four such sturdy pillars of the day to come. They seemed built for bearing weights on their shoulders; and there are weights to be borne.

KENTUCKY STATE

I have seen most of the colored state universities in Maryland and Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Texas and Tennessee. Kentucky State has been a new experience and a satisfying one. Like many of these schools it has but recently emerged from being the football of politics and for this very reason is still being starved for funds. Kentucky has always thought more of its horses and whiskey than of its educational institutions and it will not soon change but eventually it must, and at Kentucky State there are certain elements which foretell a fair future: first there are the rolling hills of the Frankfort region, singularly beautiful and suitable for vistas, when once this school is really and adequately rebuilt. The rebuilding has begun (and this is very fortunate) not mainly in bricks and motor but in faculty; in the kind of earnest young men who are seeking to teach a body of students who appear to the casual onlooker unusually interested and intelligent. The state pays ridiculous salaries, so that it cannot be money that is holding these young men. They like the work they are doing; they like the administration and they like the young people for whom they are working. There could be no more solid foundation for a great school.

36-4-17

ADVENTURES IN LECTURES

I have been talking again to audiences in many cities; to overflowing audiences of colored folk in Chicago and Detroit; to the City Club and a vast radio audience in Cleveland; and to the united colored school teachers and their friends at Dayton, Ohio. The colored audiences evidently want to an increasing degree thoughtful information. They have questions to ask and despite the rabble-rouser and the tub-thumper they can be educated by reason and the human voice. The widening growth and strengthening of the form idea among Negroes, is strongly indicated. White folk are less eager today than formerly to hear from Negroes other than entertainers. Yet they will if they must and their reaction is more inspiring than in the past. They ask almost resentfully at times for facts, instead of merely proffering sympathy. A Cleveland rector was astonished when I said that the Episcopal Church had done comparatively little for Negro education!

March 16, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

The world wants a philosophy for the impoverished and despised who have always formed and still form the majority of mankind.

What are we going to vote for: a job, or a job for a friend, or a graft for illegal business or a decent and just land for us all?

You are glad that a Negro book has at last become a Book of the Month. How have you shown your joy? Have you bought the book?

PROTECTION FOR CONSUMERS

Most people who buy, and that means all of us, forget two things: first, that the dollar which the consumer spends is capital; that thus no one who lives in any degree supported is absolutely without capital. Secondly, that consumers cannot depend upon advertising for advice as to how best to spend their dollar. There are honest advertisers but the majority of those people who advertize are thinking of the profit that they can make by selling and not of the service to the buyer. The buyer should, therefore, take every opportunity of getting expert and disinterested advise about the goods which he buys. There are two organizations in the United States which furnish this information for a nominal sum: one is known as the Consumers Research in Washington, New Jersey; the other is the Consumers Union in New York City. I belong to this latter organization and for reasons not unconnected with the Dies insanity test, I prefer it. This organization sends out regular reports based on the independent investigation of over two hundred specialists telling you what the best and most reliable and in the end cheapest goods are in all lines of merchandise. Only a foolish spender will neglect such an opportunity.

FIVE FOR FRANCE

Mercer Cook of Atlanta University and his friends are sponsoring a small but earnest and honest movement. Mr. Cook feels as so many of us do that France has often been his kindly host and mentor; that French civilization more than that of any other country in the world has stood for liberty, fraternity and equality. Because of this Mr. Cook asks all other Americans and particularly colored Americans who recognize the breadth of this attitude of France to send to him five cents which he proposes to transmit to the African soldiers who are fighting for France in order to secure for them the little things like cigarettes and soap and candy which soldiers need and miss. Mr. Cook is not discussing or considering the right or wrong of attitudes in the present war. He is saying: here are black men from Africa who are fighting for France because they conceive it to be their duty. We are going to help them to make their hard life a little more tolerable. Is there any Negro in the United States who can afford not to spend five cents for this purpose? Mr. Cook can be reached at Box 267, Atlanta University.

30-4-19

THE KNIGHT OF ESTREICHER

I stand with uncovered head in the presence of Stanislaus, Ritter von Estreicher. I met him first in 1894. He was a slim young Pole, fellow student with me at the University of Berlin. We belonged to some of the same organizations and we found on better acquaintance common interests and aims. He first revealed to me the Polish problem, the problem of the distracted and divided nation, deprived of freedom of speech and action; hindered in the use of their own native tongue and governed by aliens without their own consent. I told him about the problem of color caste in America. He invited me to come and visit his home and once I went to Krakow, one of Poland's great cities. I saw the University of Krakow where his father was librarian and where eventually he became a professor. I was entertained with beautiful hospitality. Then we parted, and for forty-five years I had no word of him. But I knew what he was going through. He fought for his fatherland in the World War. He became a scholar of distinction and a university professor in restored Poland, and then the wild waters of war again overwhelmed him and he became a prisoner of the German Nazi. They made him an offer: if he would become their representative and nominal leader of suppressed Poles they would make him Prime Minister of Poland. He refused. With nearly a hundred colleagues last October he was deported to a German concentration camp. On December 28, at the age of seventy, he died at Oranienburg near Berlin. It was on Oranienburg Street, Berlin, that we met in 1894.

26-4-20

March 23, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Another spring for a world wintering in blood and gloom.

Colored troops continue to pour into this cauldron of a white man's quarrel.

No peace proposed, not even the Pope's, asks peace for Africa; only for Europe.

No white sage has sense enough to see the Color Bar as the basic cause of world wars.

What difference does it make who is president? Wealth still rules.

On with the battleships; a single one costs more than is spent for the education of all black Africa for a whole year.

36-4-21

COMMUNISM AND THE NEGRO

Negroes in their attitude toward communism are for the most part making two fundamental mistakes by confounding two utterly different propositions: first, any American, black or white, has a right to believe in communism and to express that belief. That is what freedom of speech means and freedom of the press and these two rights are not only fundamental to American democracy; they are absolutely essential to the integrity of the human spirit. It does not make any difference whether you believe in what men say or not, you should fight to the finish for their right to say it. What they say may be against the law and such laws are usually unwise if not wrong. Nevertheless, if a man wishes to express his honest belief and take the consequences, he should be applauded for his heroism. I have been amazed and angry at the attitude of the colored press toward young Ben Davis becaused he expressed his honest opinion before a Congressional committee. What he believed may be wrong and his attitude may have lacked tact but he had a right to say it and I am glad that he did. Two, the right of a man to believe in communism and to express that belief does not prove that his thesis is right. Especially in the case of the American Negro, the communist program for him as laid down by the American Communist Party and by the Russian dictatorship is in my opinion fundamentally wrong. I believe it is not simply unwise to follow that program; I do not believe that any such program will emancipate the American Negro. That program assumes two things which seem to me untrue: first, that the class solidarity of laborers in the United States will hold across the color line and that the union of black labor with white labor will consequently bring a solution of the race problem. I think that this is carrying the Marxian dogma to absolutely unwarranted conclusions. Class solidarity among working laborers is a possibility; it has been realized in some cases; it may be realized more largely in the future. It is not true today in the United States. Today the laboring classes in the United States have on the whole more sympathy with the capitalist system than with the uplift of labor and especially they are so torn by race and group prejudice that white workers in the South would rather submit to disfranchisement and starvation than be put on an equality with black labor. It may be argued that this arises from ignorance on their part. Even if it does, it is true today and not even the over emphasized instance of some small degree of union between the white and colored sharecroppers in the Southwest can overcome the basic truth: that in the South color caste is stronger than economic class. Secondly, no program of force and revolution suits nor is likely to suit present conditions in the United States and it would be utterly idiotic for Negroes to assume that it will and follow in this dogma the interpretation of Russia rather than the evidence of their own ears and eyes. In no case has this truth been more clearly shown than in the Scottsboro cases. The only way in which freedom could have been quickly brought to these miserable victi s of race hate was through recognizing color caste in the South and fighting despite it for justice which could have been attained through Clarence Darrow and his associated white Southern attorneys. Instead of this the Communist Party tried to make this case a spring-board toward a class struggle between labor and capital in the South by arousing and consolidating the opinion of laborers throughout the world. They failed and left five of these poor victims still in prison.

36-4-22

In somewhat the same way the vitality and purpose of the Negro Congress has been stopped up to the present. When we think that the All-India Congress has four and a half million members there is no reason why a real American Negro Congress should not have at least two hundred thousand active, determined, dues paying members. They have not begun to attain this because planted in the center of their council is communist dogma which has hitherto estopped them from any realistic plan to emancipate American Negroes. All of their plans have run against the dogma that nothing can emancipate Negroes except world revolution for the emancipation of all labor. As an effective and realistic program this is pure nonsense. Let us hope that the coming session of the Congress will be led by common sense instead of communistic theory and will take the first point on its program, jobs for Negroes, and start at it with determination and knowledge of facts.

36-4-23

~~23 March 1940~~ April 27?

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Personally we would prefer to be a country whose integrity England did not guarantee.

The attitude of the Big Allies toward the Little Allies reminds us of that old story where the doting wife asks the taciturn husband: "My dear if the house should catch fire, whom would you save first, me or the children?" The answer was, me.

Attorney Francis E. Rivers has made the astounding discovery that race segregation was invented by the New Deal. We understand that he got his information from Herbert Hoover, while the latter was campaigning for Ethiopia.

And by the way, while Candidate Dewey is waving his mouth in the West who is District Attorney in New York? And who is drawing that comfortable salary?

GAMBLING

Among other serious economic misapprehension current among American colored people, perhaps their worst is their attitude toward gambling. They cling to the primitive idea that the gamblers' gains are the losses of nobody.

This is illustrated in current comment concerning the colored manipulators of Chicago's numbers racket whom the United States Government has recently called to account. It is alleged in extenuation of their career: first, that colored men conducted this racket and would not allow white gangsters to muscle in; secondly, that some of their gains were invested in prosperous Negro business and that thus the Negro race has gained by their activity.

It must be remembered that even in gambling where there is no cheating, the net result is a gain for nobody. The original amount of wealth is not increased; it simply changes hands and the community as such is no whit better off. This is the case in the newly emphasized pari-mutuel betting on horse racing. It is at best a ~~sordid and~~ dangerous yielding to the gambling instinct. But policy or the numbers is not only gambling but bare-faced cheating in addition, and all the more dangerous and reprehensible because it is stealing from children. It is taking the pennies of the poor and not simply transferring them from one set of hands to another set, but deliberately seizing and sequestering nine-tenths of the income and distributing the other tenth or more less judiciously as an inducement and advertisement to mislead the poor and the wretched.

Here are the poor Negroes of Chicago, one-half of them on relief and half of the rest in wretched poverty, giving of their poverty $50,000 a day for scoundrels to play with. It is no excuse that some poor part of this is invested in business and used thus to fleece the victims again.

Gambling based on deliberate cheating does not merely transfer wealth without adequate return; it steals from poverty and uses the income for debauching public opinion and making impossible that accumulation of needed capital which poor Negroes might have and use for cooperative enterprise.

UNEARNED WEALTH

36-4-31

Recently in New York City a girl of nineteen has been allowed for her expenses a thousand dollars a week. This is wrong. She is not to be condemned because this bounty has been given her; she has been taught no better and sees in it no ethical problem. Her parents cannot be blamed; they are dead. Her guardians are acting according to law and the decision of a judge. But the community and the nation, which facing starvation and unemployment, allows one comparatively irresponsible individual to spend in a week more than most families in the United States receive in a year are fundamentally in error. We must face problems like this frankly and change our laws and customs or the civilization which we represent will end in disaster.

March 30, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Open and shameless use of wealth begins already to forecast the trend of the fall election.

Our premiere squaw-millionaire has not only declared war against Germany but proposes to buy a seat in the United States Senate where seats are for sale - New Jersey.

Thousands of dollars are being spent in barn-storming and private campaigns. Who furnishes this money? Surely not poor people.

In Georgia a congressman has been indicted for turning an honest penny by the sale of postmasterships.

Calling all Allies: how can democracy control wealth?

SECRET INCOME

What is there so secret about a person's income that threatened publicity continually flares into bitter recimination and widespread propaganda? Income is not private and never was even among primitive men. Income is produced by human effort combined with the gifts of God and the effort itself is seldom individual but intricately cooperative. Income is not paid out of private accumulation, it is paid by present public production and living human services. Income is, therefore, a matter of vital knowledge to every human being. It ought always publicly to be known what every person's income is and whence it is derived and what services that person is giving now, or has given in the past in return for this income. Accurate continuous knowledge of such facts would enable democracy to work. It would give it something to get its teeth into. With equal publicity with regard to taxation we could see who is paying the bills of this country and who is not. We could know that the poor Negro in Mississippi taxed a penny on each loaf of bread is staggering under a greater burden of taxation than the Dupont family. I have said in the past and repeat now that the fundamental economic change which is bound to come in this world before civilization is again set straight depends upon certain simple acts involving a knowledge and realization of the truth, rather than on elaborate plans for total and revolutionary reform. If we knew the actual facts concerning income, wealth and taxation, we would not need to start reform. It would start itself.

DOROTHY MAYNOR

36-4-25

I sat in the gymnasium of Tuskegee the other night and heard the voice of Dorothy Maynor. Beautiful as I found her voice and charming as was her simple personality, the thing that continually leaped to my mind was the difference in opportunity for genius and talent among colored folk today as compared with yesterday. Hayes, Robeson, Anderson and Maynor deserve every bit of the acclaim that has come to them, but the recognition has come because of a slow but definite change in the attitude of the white world. We have had great and beautiful voices among American Negroes in the past, but they were not allowed to rise high enough to hit the public ear. I remember in my teens hearing at Fisk the voice of Sissy Dorsey, a clear bird like lyric soprano, but the world would not listen to her. At the same time came the lovely voice of Alice Maynard who too was unheard save by us few. In those days Tom Talley had a voice whose natural power and extraordinary range rivaled that of Edouard de Reszke but Talley, unknown, sacrificed his voice to Fisk University. Later at Atlanta we had in 1900 a notable soprano. I brought her talent to the attention of Henry Morgenthau, father of the secretary of the treasury, and he half promised help but someone said to him, why? What possible career is there for a colored singer? And he turned aside. At last the day is dawning; at last a great voice will be listened to by the world despite the color of its skin. The same recognition is coming to painting and sculpture; more slowly, but just as surely, in literature; but not yet, alas, in ~~income and~~ labor.

April 6, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

The world is becoming safe and safer for the devil.

Don't let your ire at segregation kill your race pride and induce you to give to the Census of white folk credit that belongs to black.

In other words if the Census taker is in doubt, dare to say that your family is colored.

What do the white fans want? If Louis knocks the contender cold in a round or so, he is a poor fighter. If the opponent runs so fast or crawls so low that Louis can't catch him, Louis is a poor fighter. If -- but what is the use?

the defeated

The Allies deserted Czechoslavakia, betrayed Poland, let Finland vainly fight her heart out, are jollying China and now are soft-soaping our own Welles of lonliness.

36-4-26

HOMEWORK

They are doing some practical things in Texas for county Negroes. The work is headed up at Praire View College and is called a "Home Demonstration Program". The ~~home demonstration~~ program is conducted and administered through: girls' 4-H clubs, women's clubs, unorganized groups, individual demonstrators, and county home demonstration councils. This year, 1939, the 373 girls' clubs had an average of 20 members each and the 477 women's clubs 19 members each. Each of the 33 counties, served by a Negro county home demonstration agent in 1939, had an active county home demonstration council to serve as adviser and disseminators of information. A council is made up of at least two representatives from each home demonstration club in the county. The Home Demonstration Staff offered and gave cooperation to all groups and agencies interested in improving home life and agriculture.

Five thousand eight-hundred fifty-one families had a safe diet served regularly in 1939; 6,254 families improved their food preparation practices including table setting and service; 2, 958 families filled balanced preserving budgets and planted 47,815 fruit seeds and 36,380 fruit cuttings, and ~~These people planted~~ 15,169 native shrubs and trees. Yards in 639 families were planned and 1,706 houses made more comfortable and attractive by adding a chimney or repairing a roof or making the foundation secure, or painting the house. "One thousand seventy- three porches and steps were repaired and 1, 131 windows added. The 8, 129 demonstrators and cooperators in Interior Home Improvement spent an average of $3.00 each improving kitchens and bedrooms. Thirty-two thousand two hundred and seventy dollars and seventy-six cents was spent by all club members making improvements in bedroom, living room, kitchen, and landscape which amount does not describe the beauty, convenience, and satisfaction resulting from their efforts."..... "One hundred and eighty-five women and girls served as Clothing demonstrators in 1939 while 13, 365, other individuals followed recommendations in constructing and selecting clothing. Clothes closets were built and remodeled, ironing boards were added, shoe racks and hat stands provided, and 38, 762 garments made as a result of the house visits ~~made~~, method demonstration meetings and meetings as result of demonstrations held by agents.

12-4-39

Through home industries the following products were raised and sold:

Dressed and live poultry	$ 8,449.52
Eggs	22,839.90
Fresh meats	2,221.92
Butter and milk	13,737.55
Fresh vegetables and fruits	18,500.61
Canned vegetables and fruits	1,039.48
Rugs, quilts and spreads	1,366.00
Total	$68,154.98

April 13, 1940

Amsterdam News

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Not fighting but starvation is the end of this war; not swift murder but slow.

It is suicide for the United States to cut down on relief and scuttle the WPA.

To ham-string the National Labor Law, that is the question.

If Garner can believe and practice disfranchisement, why cannot Bertram Russell at least question our silliest sex taboos?

Floods are the legitimate children of laziness and the fathers of famine.

THE WPA

The last broadcast report of WPA needs repetition and serious reading by Negroes: "Wages paid nearly four hundred thousand Negro workers employed on projects of the Works Progress Administration in 1938 and the early part of this year benefited some 1,504,000 persons including dependents, counting an average of 3.76 persons in each WPA worker's family.

"Southern States having the highest percentage of Negro workers to total WPA employment were Louisiana, South Carolina and Georgia; lowest percentages were in Tennessee and Arkansas. The proportion of Negro women to total employment on projects was highest in Texas, Virginia and North Carolina and lowest in Tennessee and Florida.

"The Works Progress Administration . . . saved the unemployed Negro worker from privation and want, and in a great many instances from actual starvation. It provided the Negro training in some types of work in which private industry had refused him opportunity for apprenticeship, and at the same time refused him employment because he lacked experience and training. Undoubtedly the Works Progress Administration in 1938 and during the early part of 1939 will be the means of opening some hitherto closed doors in private industry for the Negro in 1939 and 1940."

THE SECOND SOUTHERN CONFERENCE FOR HUMAN WELFARE

The forces that met in Birmingham year before last and came up ~~before~~ against the color line are meeting again this year at Chattanooga, April 14 and 15, and they deserve the support of all forward looking folk. This is what they say: "Marking the awakening of a new South more than 1,200 Southerners met together at the first Southern Conference for Human Welfare at Birmingham, Alabama, in November, 1938. Sensing the need for united efforts to solve the problems of the South we came together-delegates from the thirteen states, representatives from farm, religious, labor, business, Negro, youth and civic organizations, leaders in all walks of Southern life - to discuss and to draft a program for the improvement of our economic and social conditions.

"Despite the growing efforts of the Southern people, wherein lies the South's greatest asset and hope, these problems in large part are still with us - many have become intensified.

"Wage and freight differentials still work to prevent the South from assuming its rightful place in the Nation's economy.

"Poverty is widespread and millions are landless.

"Two-thirds of the Southern people do not vote. The poll tax works to disfranchise the poor in eight Southern states.

"Almost a whole generation of youth is growing up lacking proper education and without knowing steady work.

Mob rule and lynch law still exist.

"Everywhere we stand in need of better health facilities - hospitals and clinics are unknown in large areas of land.

"To meet these problems, to develop a more spiritual conception of human brotherhood, to make real equal justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, individuals and representatives of organization from the Southern states are urged to join in the second Southern Conference for Human Welfare."

April 20, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

The future hope of Europe lies not least in its present utter hopelessness.

It is indeed unfortunate that black and brown peoples at this time are not ready to throw off the yoke of Europe and stand free and independent.

Nevertheless it is clear that from two debauches of world war, European civilization cannot recover strength or prestige in less than five hundred years if ever.

The dark world of the twenty-first century must prepare then to face white America and decide whether the slave trade shall return or flow on.

SAN DOMINGO

That part of the island of Haiti which is called today the Dominican Republic and which is Spanish and mulatto in history as contrasted with the Haitian black and French has long yearned to be white. It is in blood overwhelmingly Negroid but has always been ashamed of this fact and sought to deny it. Its great leaders like Heureaux were strongly of Negro descent. Twice Haiti has dominated the whole island: once under the great Toussaint and again under the President Boyer. Recently, however, the Dominican Republic has refused to admit persons of Negro descent and cruelly murdered thousands of hungry Haitians seeking work and food. Finally it has magnamiously offered asylumn to Jews and Spaniards at nominal cost if they will come and help whiten the dark flesh which makes this land. It is all at once astonishing, disgusting and philanthropic.

CRIME

A Citizens Fact-Finding Movement in Georgia declares as all men knew, "Georgia needs a new penal system, lock, stock and barrel, radically revised as to methods objectives and philosophies". It declares that the old chain-gang system remains in effect and "It remains a system in which a man at odds with the law is regarded first as a machine for enforced and unremitting labor, rather than as a casual of society probably capable of redemption and of restoration to productive usefulness as a citizen."

Above all it is a system where the state sells the labor of criminals for private profit. This has been the worst thing in the South since the Civil War and is the child of that attempt to disfranchize the Negro by selling him into crime peonage.

RACE RELATIONS

The quiet but extraordinary growth of Race Relations Sunday in the United States is worth far more attention than it has received. The idea was the invention of George Haynes who was the founder also of the Urban League. This year Race Relations Sunday, February 11, witnessed extensive cooperation among Christian denominations. The Congregationalists supplied four thousand of their ministers with programs and posters. The Disciples of Christ supplied fourteen hundred churches with posters and the North Carolina Church Council two thousand churches. The Salvation Army took part. Presbyterians in the Southwest were interested and the YMCA and YWCA cooperated in distributing literature. An International Brotherhood Month has been an expansion of the International Sunday idea. Filipinoes, Chinese, Japanese, Indians, Mexicans and Negroes have contributed in Pasadena, California to group understanding. Gary had a city wide banquet; Chicago an all day conference; Ohio a series of interracial dinners and seven colleges white and colored in North Carolina united for an interracial service. Not only were there such passing meetings but increased attention to interracial betterment in long time community programs.

May 4, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

We have no right to assume that the collapse of Europe will automatically free Asia and Africa.

The Nazi theory of inferior races is directed against yellow, brown and black folk but the Nazi practice is to enslave blonds and divide brunettes into Jews and Italians, exterminating the first and embracing the last.

A decrease in public taxation and federal control means an increase in private extortion and corporate tyranny.

Modern advertising is an adroit combination of waste and lies.

There can be and will be in the United States no real Third Party movement because of the still Solid South built on disfranchisement; yet of this well-known fact no liberal dares talk.

THE DUTCH INDIES

Japan told the world that she would not idly permit ~~the control of the~~ Dutch Indies, in case Holland could not hold them, to be vested in white European or American control. America replied that she could not permit the Dutch West Indies in case Holland lost them, to be put under Asiatic control. This was a deliberate assertion of continued European imperialism in Asia and any number of white folk are desperately eagre on some such basis as this to transform the Civil War of Europe into a war of races.

TEN BIL ION

If one would frankly face the utter insanity of the present war, contemplate for a moment figures like this: England spends annually some fifty millions of dollars for religion, sixty millions for education, one hundred millions for police and three hundred million for health and unemployment insurance. All this amounts to less than six hundred million dollars a year. Yet this same England proposes to spend ten thousand millions of dollars next year for war; and this absolutely fatal disproportion of expenditure is repeated in Germany, France and Italy.

NATCHEZ

Recently in Natchez, Mississippi two hundred colored people were killed by fire in a ball room. What happened there can happen a dozen times throughout the South and in some places in the North. Southern states like Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia have no adequate laws for making places of public assemblage safe and if they have them (which they have) those laws are almost never enforced in the case of halls where Negroes are wont to congregate. I know one great Southern city pretty well. It does not have a single place of public assembly for Negroes which is safe and modern save in the case of three colleges and perhaps a half dozen churches. Most of the public entertainments take place in halls that are simple fire traps. One of the most recent of these halls built but a few years ago is on the second floor with only one means of exit in the corner and down a staircase with a narrow sudden turn. In the hall itself there are no windows on one side and the windows on the other side are boarded up. Time and time again three, four and five hundred people representing often the best colored people of the city are crowded into this hall.

HUMAN WELFARE

The second Southern Conference for Human Welfare held in Chattanooga, Tennessee is worthy of wide recognition and remembrance. Its basis was absolutely fair, with white and colored officials; white and colored members and unsegregated audiences. Beofre it came members of both races and all conditions, with wide and interesting messages. There was a fine straight forward talk by a young white minister from the University of Oklahoma. There was a more florid and sensational but basically sound plea for democracy despite race, from Maury Maverick of Texas. And colored speakers while not so forceful and outstanding as these two, made notable contributions. The slow but undoubted advance toward democracy in the South is obvious.

April 27, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Greetings to John P. Green of Ohio ~~after~~ on ninety-five years of living. Hommage to Judge George of Chicago.

Mark Hanna bought the presidency for McKinley and Wall Street. His daughter is out shopping for Dewey.

Hitler stuck his neck out in Norway but even then England can't chop it off.

Cordell Hull's first move as president would be to plunge us into war with Japan.

One concert of prayer is rushing up from the stock exchanges: Oh, Lord just fix things so we can all fight Russia.

It started as the white world against the colored. It now ends as Nordic against Nordic. God is very wise, bless his Holy Name!

ZIONISM

In the current Journal of Negro Education a soi-disant young prophet discusses Zionism and the "Forty-Ninth State." He pictures the Jew in Palestine as a colossal failure and ultimate segregation of the Negro in the United States as too horrible to contemplate. Inferentially he seems to regard Hitler as the result of Zionism!

Which is all astonishing nonsense. Modern Jewish Palestine is only twenty years old. During these years it has acquired a Jewish population of nearly 400,000 arriving until recently at the rate of 30,000 a year. One hundred thousand of the Jews are in agricultural settlements; they own 310,000 acres of land. Most of the Jews live in cities, of which Tel-Aviv alone has 140,000. The Jews run and own their own six hundred schools with seventy thousand students. These include the Hebrew University with one hundred teachers and eight hundred students. The Library has 400,000 volumes. There are five training colleges; nineteen secondary schools; thirteen technical schools and seven agricultural schools. ¶ The industrial development is going forward rapidly. In 1935, there were nearly five thousand Jewish enterprises representing an investment of over thirty million dollars and employing thrity-three ~~million~~ thousand people. They include chemical companies, oil and iron works, flour mills and a petroleum company with a pipe line to the Mosul oil fields. Timber, fruit and shade trees have been planted. Two thousand steamers and a thousand sailing vessels entered ports of Palestine before the present war. Ninety-five Jewish cooperative societies representing a capital of twenty million. The Jews share in government and the courts. The only thing that has stopped the extraordinary expansion of the Jews in Palestine has been the Arab population and the attempt on the part of English and Arabs to keep Palestine from becoming a complete Jewish state.

30-4-65

If this is failure, God send us Negroes some of the same article. ¶ What the wretched and scourged Jew would have done without Zion in this modern revival of race hatred is inconceivable. To say that segregation in Palestine caused anti-Semitism is to lie in the face of truth. In extreme cases segregation is the only refuge from insult and persecution. God send we American Negroes never face this ultimate necessity more drastically than we face it now; for even here and now, in religion, in education, in the public press and largely in industry, we are already ~~the~~ a "Forty-Ninth State."

May 11, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Floods are the children of laziness and fathers of famine.

Yes, no and liar - but what as a matter of fact did William Christian Bullitt promise the Allies?

The war so far is going against the English, physically, economically and morally.

310-4-33

England has avoided risks, played safe and betrayed Czechoslavakia, Poland, Finland and Norway.

England has a ghostly past: the African slave trade, Negro slavery, sweating Asiatic peons, exploiting African labor and making the Color Bar world-wide.

A victorious Germany will not help us but it can scarcely out-English the English.

As in the first World War the real victim today is France.

THE NEGRO VOTE

It is pure poppy-cock to talk of Negro support for a Third Party. Any Third Party movement today would make the triumph of Roosevelt and the New Deal impossible and put reaction in charge of government. Reaction would attack relief, curtail public housing, abolish the CCC, break-down labor legislation and overthrow the WPA. It would strengthen the rule of plutocracy in the nation. It happens by the Grace of God that the New Deal has been made possible by the hundred or more votes of the Solid South. Nothing can remedy this situation until the Solid South is split in sunder and democracy installed in its place. Then a real Third Party movement and a Newer Deal may come into being. Until that day a Negro vote for Dewey, Taft, Garner or Vandenberg is worse than thrown away.

ECONOMIC ILLITERACY

Our great danger today as a race is our inability to think logically concerning present economic organization. Our conservatism and reaction holds us bound by the philosophy of the nineteenth century. Even our intelligent and educated folk are largely economic illiterates. For instance, they do not believe and do not see these clear and provable truths:

a. The evil of private monopoly can only be prevented by public ownership.

b. The interests of an individual are seldom the same as the interests of the whole community.

c. Public Civil Service can secure better talent than private business for the same outlay.

d. The hope of private gain is not the best or most commendable motive.

e. Private enterprize with its aggressive competition is a monopoly that costs more than state taxation.

f. The problem of producing wealth is no greater, if as great, as the problem of using it properly.

g. The increase of wages increases profits and prices fall as wages rise.

WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY

The recent dismissal of a group of teachers at Wilberforce University including some of the most efficient and well-trained, brings again the plight and challenge to notice.
of this the oldest of our Negro colleges. For years this institution has given no real security of tenure, independence of thought, or reasonable promotion or proper salaries to the many excellent persons whom it has attracted to its teaching body. The blame for this rests squarely upon the shoulders of the African Methodist Church. This church not only sought the political partnership of the State of Ohio for the support of an institution which it could not carry on alone, but after that it was unwilling to make this a first class institution, and allowed it to be the football of church politics and petty politics of the state. Between these stools, the unfortunate and deserving university has fallen and continues to fall.

May 18, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-4-34

Evidently it was peace itself that "missed the bus".

It may be that now the Empire on whose field of battle the sun never sets will at last know how war really feels.

We may live to see George VI and his Queen visiting Hitler at Berchtesgaden and singing "Heil dir" "to a familiar tune".

Italy's heroic role at this time is a sad strain on Mussolin's strut and shout.

Old lies about Russia are being refurbished up and sold everywhere. Did you hear that one about the famine?

SEGREGATION

Republican campaign pundits are attacking the New Deal for appointing Negroes to jobs wher they principally serve Negroes; as, for instance, in housing administration, in credit unions, and in the Youth Administration. The argument apparently is that a higher appreciation of Negro ability would appoint Negroes to serve white people and white people to serve Negroes. This argument is both dangerous and illogical and is not really ignoring race but giving it excessive and silly emphasis. The real argument would be th t in appointment to public office you appoint people best fitted to attack the problems of their office; and in that case who knew the poverty and borrowing of the Negro farmer and teacher better than Henry Hunt? Who can attack the problem of Negro housing and of Negro youth better than those who have themselves faced the difficulty of finding homes and rearing children? In this respect perhaps then more than any other the New Deal deserves support of colored folk.

LOUISIANA TEACHERS

One has continually to turn to the realistic teachers of the South for pragmatic programs of uplift. They are segregated; they teach colored children; they are discriminated against in pay; they are denied often titles of ordinary courtesy and yet look at this program which the Louisiana Colored Teachers Association has recently adopted: organizing of teachers in each parish of the State into local organizations. Increasing participation and membership of our teachers in the Louisiana Colored Teachers Association. Exhibiting, by vice-presidents of the L. C. T. A., at the annual convention, improvements in Negro life and education in the various districts. Encouraging L. C. T. A. support of the program of the Louisiana Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers in a very definite and concrete manner. Assisting the school boards and the State Department of Education in creating public opinion for trades education in Negro high schools. Securing the active cooperation of the State Department of Education in providing vocational and educational guidance for Negro youths. Promoting nursery schools and kindergartens for Negro children. Emphasizing the value of the teaching of Negro history in all of the schools of the State. Working for higher standards of juvenile court service and for the establishment of a state institution for Negro juvenile delinquents. Creating a committee for cooperating with agencies interested in and working for Negro welfare. Creating a scholarship fund for assisting deserving students in Negro colleges of the State. Making a survey of all parishes for the purpose of ascertaining facts concerning our handicapped childrem. Sponsoring the organization of federal credit unions for the purpose of promoting thrift among the members of the association, and for creating a source of credit for provident and protective use. Creating public opinion for the Louisiana Colored Teachers Association and the Louisiana Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers through appointment of a committee on public relations.

This represents more earnest and unselfish and effective effort than the resolutions of a dozen Negro Congresses.

25 May 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-4-65

War is the time when work for peace should be most effective.

In war time without music or tinsel we remember that war is the organized murder and maiming of men.

We remember that war systematically and deliberately kills the most promising human beings living.

We remember that war aggravates and bedevils every human problem and makes it more difficult, if not impossible, to solve.

No outcome of the present war is going to help the American Negro or the Negroes of the world. Their problems after this war will be more difficult than ever.

MARIAN ANDERSON

Marian Anderson has sung a second time in Atlanta and the white city greeted her with large and enthusiastic crowds. Their appreciation was extraordinary. Her voice and manner has reached a high point of perfection. Few, if any singers, give me so great satisfaction. I have only one criticism of Marian Anderson and it seems hardly worth while expressing it, considering her great accomplishment; and yet it is a matter upon which I have always felt strongly. My criticism has to do with her singing of Negro sorrow songs and even there for the most part I am satisfied. I have never heard "The Crucifixion" sung with more beautiful understanding, not even in the case of Hayes. But Miss Anderson always caricatures at least one of the Negro songs and makes it deliberately funny, for instance, there is that extraordinarily poetic phrase "I went to the rock to hid my face, the rock say, no hiding place". That song is not funny and it is not meant to be funny and Miss Anderson should not caricature it. She should sing it with the same depth of understanding that she gives to most of her music.

CLASS AND RACE

Two incidents have emphasized in my mind the way in which economic class distinctions come to emphasize race differences. One incident had to do with Miss Anderson's Southern trip and the other with the delegates who returned from the General Conference in Detroit. When Miss Anderson first came to Atlanta last year, the auditorium in which she sang was divided evenly between the races: the colored people on the right and the white people on the left in orchestra, boxes and balconies. But the colored people of Atlanta and of no Southern city can afford the prices which white people can. They made great effort and occupied perhaps a third of the house instead of a half, which meant that there had to be some readjusting of seating and some white people were turned away from a house which was not filled. This year, boxes, dress circle and balcony seats among the best in the house were reserved for colored people while the white people had the floor and the rest of the house. All this division and discrimination was mainly a matter of income. Few colored people in Atlanta can afford to pay two dollars and fifty cents or more for a single seat on a single night, and the commercial agents who bring Miss Anderson, South, are looking to the sale of tickets for their profit. If colored folk could fill the auditorium; they could have it. In something the same way, I noticed as I boarded the train at Cincinnati, the large number of delegates returning from the AME General Conference. They filled the colored oaches and must have had an uncomfortable night. On the other hand if they had been able to pay for pullman accomodations, such accomodations could have been arranged for. Here one sees how race and economic class intertwine. Even the basic demand for separation would be soon ignored and forgotten if we had the income to buy decent accomodations. Indeed, in Atlanta, some white folk came and sat in empty seats in the Negro section. Equality of income precedes today equality of civil and political rights.

36-4-36

June 1, 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

The decisive triumph of Germany over the Allies will change the whole aspect of modern civilization.

The position of colored folk will be altered; of necessity they will become allies of conquered nations against a new white world master.

This new master cannot triumph without effective cooperation with Japan and India and the blacks of Africa.

The price of such cooperation may well be increased freedom and autonomy for the darker world, despite all theoretic race ideology.

If Germany does not win, the war can only end in virtual stalemate and such disastrous weakening of the power of Europe over the darker world as will give that world every possible opportunity to become free.

ROMAGNE

36-4-37

It is almost a forgotten story how thousand of colored troops were held in France after the first World War and put to work at excavating the stinking, rotten remains of the dead American soldiers and reburying them in the great cemetery at Romagne. It was a horrible, sickening job and time and again brought the black troops to the edge of open revolt. Strange are the bed-fellows of time: today over that cemetery are marching the planes and hosts of German soldiers, and the roar of murderous artillery is waking the awful dead. There is no sense in it; there is no reason; but there are the scars of terrible memory in the minds of myriads of black Americans.

BAYEN

The death of Malaku Bayen brings memories. One of the efforts of America and England has been to keep progressive and ambitious Negro groups from coming into contact and understanding with each other. When, therefore, Ras Tafari who afterward became Emperor Haile Selassie, started out to visit and get acquainted with the modern world he was welcomed to England, France and Italy but refused admission to the United States. Later he sent an Embassy of prominent Abyssinians here. They were escorted about by Government officials and every effort was made to keep them from meeting Negro leaders. Eventually, however, this policy was circumvented by the decision of the Emperor to send Abyssinian students to foreign countries for their education. Malaku Bayen was one of these and was sent to America. He received his college training in a small Western institution and then determined to study medicine at Howard. Here he took his degree, married an American colored girl and became eventually attending physician to the Emperor. He thus was in peculiar position to make liason between American and Abyssinian black folk; to interpret them to each other; to know their common aims and the ways in which they could realize them. He was an Ambassador of Pan Africanism in a singularly happy sense. Then came war, conquest and disaster. He struggled bravely and died in his fortieth year from what men call pneumonia and angels know as a broken heart.

RUGGED INDIVIDUALISM

Let us be free, cries American Industry. Let the individual develop, achieve, invent and enjoy the fruit of his own labor and skill. Let the Government stop seeking to chain and bind him and tell him what to do and how much he shall earn and how he shall spend it. Oh yeah! Well consider, for instance, the case of Antonio Meucci born in Italy and a resident of Staaten Island. He invented the telephone in 1871. This is not only attested by Garibaldi, the Italian patriot, who when driven from Italy lived with Meucci for a while, but it is attested by the records of the United States Patent Office: The Supreme Court of the United States in December, 1888, ruled as follows: "The Bell telephone should be called the Meucci telephone, because the Bell telephone has acquired the patent fraudulently." Later the Supreme Court revised this statement. Nevertheless Alexander Bell patented the telephone in 1876 and the law allowed the company to exploit the invention while Meucci died in poverty.

8 June 1940

Amsterdam News

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Has the world forgotten that spring is here?

Yet we have seen worse: once a Cotton Kingdom drunk with power declared through Taney in 1857 that slavery was perpetual. Once America seeking freedom from England was utterly smashed in war, her chief cities taken, her leaders outlawed.

Once Napoleon Bonaparte conquered the world.

Over the glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome sank the Pall of the Dark Ages.

30-4-38

Once they said in 1861 that they didn't want black soldiers; they said it again in 1917; they are trying to say it now. Suppose this time we take them at their word.

BOOKS

Joseph R. Dorsey, Probation officer of General Sessions, New York County writes me: "I would be pleased to hear more in your columns in the New York Amsterdam News or otherwise, about the wider purchase of bo ks by Negroes. The idea should be fostered. Have any practical plans been formulated for furthering the idea?" Axel C. Harvey writes: "I am among other things, building a library. In these troubled times it is a most worthy asset. . . . I shall be very grateful to you sir, for your most worthy advice and recommendations as to books, publications, where and how to procure, approximate cost, etc."

Certain attitudes must precede effective organization of book buying among American Negroes. First of all must come the habit of reading books. Americans read newspapers, only exceptional Americans read solid serious books. The publisher of Carl Sandburg's Lincoln, one of the great biographies of all times, boasts of selling 25,000 copies among 120 million people who are under the impression that they are leading civilization. Granted this book is costly and in four large volumes and that today the nation is poor, nevertheless 250,000 copies would have been a shameful small selling. The first step then toward re-organizing our book demand, reading individually and in groups, choosing each season a good book and substituting the reading of it for bridge playing. The dinner after will taste just as good.

MOTON

I am grieved at the death of Robert Moton. I have known him well since I first visited Hampton about 1900. He was a young man then and commandant of cadets. He and his partner, young Washington, who succeeded him as commandant were a joy to know and to chum with. They had sail boats; they loved to fish and wander; they were a committee to entertain visiting colored guests and I shall never forget the lovely days and nights that we spent in and about that beautiful pennisula. Then Moton was suddenly snatched away and made principal of Tuskegee. He was fitted for such a work in some respects but not in others. He was a kindly, all too kindly, disciplinarian and administrator but he was no politician. He was deeply sensitive and is dead today at seventy-two because of the overwork and worry of Tuskegee. # During those days I became estranged from him. I dislike his policy. I did not understand all his difficulties and attributed to him personally much that was only part of the intricate Tuskegee Machine and over which he had little control. One incident I vividly remember. His wife was ejected from a pullman car. A dispatch was sent to the Northern papers, saying that Principal Moton had no complaint; that he did not believe that colored people should try to ride in pullman cars. It was not until long afterward that I learned what a lie this statement was. A local member of his board of trustees, a white Southerner, had come forward after the incident and offered to handle the publicity. Moton courteously assented. It was the white man who sent out the statement and Moton was placed in the impossible position of calling a prominent trustee a liar or keeping still. It was characteristic of him that under these conditions he kept still. # Later we went to France together right after the Armistice either of 1918. We had no idea that we would be fellow passengers and at last we were even room mates. We had a most interesting voyage and beautiful experiences in Paris. Then at the behest of President Wilson, Moton went among the Negro soldiers about to return to America to placate them and ask them not to complain or make trouble. I was furious and attacked him after I returned with sledge hammer blows and kept this up until he published "What the Negro Thinks". Then I surrendered completely. There is no straighter, truer, more upstanding defense of Negro rights and demands than Moton's one book. I am still astonished that under the compulsions of Tuskegee he dared publish it. For that book and for his kindly sympathetic character, despite all compromise and attempts at adjustment, for these things I hold his memory high.

July 8 / 940

AS THE CROW FLIES

By W. E. B. DuBois

To date the Democratic Party is furnishing the Republicans not simply issues, but candidates.

The campaign would have been a clean cut fight between Finance Monopoly and the New Deal, but for two hindrances.

Franklin Roosevelt was once assistant Secretary of the Navy and wrote a constitution for Haiti. All this he can never forget.

Stimson hates Japan and Knox loves Big Business.

And a third party even led by Wheeler and Lewis has the same chance as the much-mentioned snow-ball in hell.

EXTRAVAGANCE AND PENURY

It is astonishing what men find themselves willing to spend for war and how they let it be spent. We are ready today in the United States to spend twice as much for armed murder as we ever spent for education, health and religion all together. We are willing to do this without adequately apprehended reasons.

There is no possibility of German attack across the Atlantic and no conceivable reason for such an attack.

When once there was a chance for a world police-implemented by American cooperation, to keep world bandits in order, we were unwilling to help, we were at the same time perfectly willing to arm the current first bandit.

For this mythical war preparation, we are ready to curtail appropriations for educations, to refuse money for health, and to stop the work of the W.P.A. and above all the only employment which we have open for the unemployed is employment in fighting each other.

THE REAL ISSUES

In the meantime, the real issues of the campaign that face the United States do not differ one jot or tittle from what they formerly were: first of all, the plight of the Lower Third of the Nation: that is of that part of the rich American people who either earn nothing or not enough to live decently; and who therefore, fill the ranks of the insane, sick and the criminal. That is our first and greatest job and is a more immediate duty than any danger of war or need of any preparation for war.

There is, secondly, the question of the cost of public services. Of the cost of that electricity which the sincere and plausible Mr. Willkie has spent a life in making expensive and inaccessible to the poor, not in a day when electricity may be the world's greatest and cheapest servant. This monopolizing of electricity or other monopolies today has been brought about through the control of Finance Capital which has been one of Mr. Willkie's great services to mankind.

By control through Facists methods, we have built up in the United States a Government within a Government which it has been the effort of two Roosevelts to overthrow, and the work is not yet done.

Finally, last and probably the greatest issue in this campaign as in former campaigns, is the discrimination among men, between the classes of rich and poor, between race and groups. All these are the campaign issues, but on them the fight will not be made, rather on almost anything else.

36-4-57

28 September 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-4-40

The Crow being genuinely puzzled would like to ask some Wise Man just what actually is the difference between the platform of Mr. Wilkie and Mr. Roosevelt.

Quite contrary to all that we have been taught, civilization today is threatened not from below but from above.

We can draft men to fight Hitler but not to fight poverty or ignorance - that would be Communism.

Race hate has brought clash not between black and white, and not quite between yellow and white, but very decidedly between Nordics, which proves that it is hate not race that is the deciding factor.

DISHING DIRT

I would like to have some of my friends try an experiment. When next you get together with your cronies and begin to explore the character and deeds of absent ones; after the dirt has been sufficiently dished and pretty nearly everyone has said everything nasty that they have heard about other folk; why not try to say something pleasant about some one of the victims? It will not be difficult. With all our faults and foibles all of us are doing some decent things. Why not mention them and remark en passant "It was nice of Jones to help that boy!" "Did you hear that Mary was doing well in her new job?" "They say Johnson is really trying to put over an honest job." I know people who make it a point to mention nothing but the good and pleasant things that they know about their friends. That I am sure is going too far. Evil cannot and should not be hidden, but on the other hand I know others, and they are legion, who never permit themselves to say a single decent thing about a human being. Such people poison life.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE

The film "Pride and Prejudice" which I have just witnessed, is a work of art and in addition to this it has a philosophy. Sit and see it. It is a picture of pleasant and enviable group life. It shows that England which we have been brought up to revere and envy. Where well-educated and good-mannered people with an income sufficient to keep them from ever being hungry or ragged meet each other not so much in the midst of work as in their leisure hours where there is time for entertainment and conversation and pleasantries. In such a situation the plot turns upon the assumptions of people of rank and great wealth over people of ordinary income. The heighth of happiness and renown is the legal right to spend $50,000 or more a year without having to work for it or worry about it. # The passing of this phase of civilization, first under democratic and labor revolt, and now under the reign of Hitler's fire, is the passing of a very beautiful and attractive thing. And yet the one forgotten fact is that this group of rich and charming people whom Jane Austin portrayed represents not a tenth not a thousandth part of the people of England; that most Englishmen then and now were poverty stricken sufferers, grasping and fighting after food to keep themselves alive. Even today as one columnist in the New York Times says of London "It is the biggest aggregation of human beings in the world. It contains some of the dirtiest and most hideous slums to be found in any metropolis. No where is the gulf between rich and poor so wide and deep." Such facts make the beauty of Pride and Prejudice put a false face on the real world.

THE JEWS AND US

There is no question but that the wave of anti-Semitic prejudice and persecution which is sweeping the world is being shared and imitated by large numbers of American Negroes. It is no uncommon thing to hear intelligent Negroes asset with some evidence of satisfaction that they do not like Jews. There is perhaps no more discouraging evidence of our failure to grasp the fundamental truth of present

5 October 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Senator Ashhurst has coined a pregnant phrase: "We choose in November between a Third Termer and a Third Rater."

We bull-dozed Japan; we insulted and exploited China as well as giving her arms; we stole the Phillipines; and now our Asiatic aggression brings us to the very brink of war.

Stimson, Hull and Roosevelt have driven Japan into the arms of Hitler.

Imperial England never gave the world democracy; neither will imperial Germany, so what?

The veil of Fall falls dark and bloody on a falling world.

36-4-41

THE JEWS AND US

There is no question but that the wave of anti-Semitic prejudice and persecution which is sweeping the world is being shared and imitated by large numbers of American Negroes. It is no uncommon thing to hear intelligent Negroes assert with some evidence of satisfaction that they "do not like" Jews. There is perhaps no more discouraging evidence of our failure to grasp the fundamental truth of present civilization. The source of anti-Semitism for American Negroes is not far to seek. It is simply slavish imitation of the whites. It is the feeling that if we agree with powerful white groups in their prejudices and hatreds we shall in that way be brought closer to them and in wider sympathy. This cowardly and shortsighted attitude is then rationalized and strengthened by the knowledge which Negroes think they have of Jews. In truth the knowledge which one persecuted minority has of the other is seldom truth. They see each other through the eyes and hear of each other with the ears of the persecuting majority. What most Negroes know of Jews is simply what most Nordics say about them and they receive that at one hundred per cent of its alleged value never stopping to consider that other people's accepting that same sort of testimony with regard to Negroes, explains a large part of anti-Negro hatred. Even the direct contacts between Jews and Negroes; between the proprietor of the corner store and the Negro laborer; between the Jewish capitalist and the Negro consumer; all that is distorted by ignorance concerning the pressure which is put upon Jews and the terrible history of their efforts at emancipation. We have got to realize that the forces in the world back of anti-Semitism are exactly the same facts that are back of color prejudice.

MUSIC AND LITERATURE

Negro music is distinctively American and American music is distinctively Negro. Today few persons dispute this or regard it as anything but natural and commendable. In a day when America meant crude pioneering and rude culture, when the European folk-song was half forgot and nothing came to take its place, the song of the slave arose out of his bitter life to give America that touch of human expression which its bare life demanded. With the sorrow too welled up, the joy of a simple folk, near to earth, with unforgotten memories of other cultures which in song, rhythem and dance, set the crude new world to frolicking. The stream grew and spread, not only among Negroes but among whites, until today American music has the indelible touch of Africa upon it.

A distinctive phase of American Literature has to do with the Negro. It divides itself naturally into two parts; the influence which the presence of the Negro has had on the themes of white American authors; and the self-expression of Negro authors arising from their own life experience. Both bodies of literature make an integral part of our national literature. One has but to remember the saga of the slave trade, the romance of the run-away slave, the crusade of anti-slavery, the Götterdämmerung of the cotton kingdom, and the mortal struggle of democracy in Reconstruction. In the midst of this, arises the mysterious personality of this emerging Negro, his tragedy, and fantasy, his hardly understood reactions. All this has formed and still forms the most fascinating and virile inspiration of American literary life.

12 October 1940

AMSTERDAM NEWS
AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

If there is anybody whom Mr. Wilkie has not promised everything, we would like his address.

Wilkie has repudiated the Jew baiter but the Jew baiter has not repudiated Wilkie.

Roosevelt has depended and must depend upon the solid, lynching, reactionary South for reelection.

So vote for Thomas? Sure, if you want to stand on principle but principle is a ~~damn~~ damned narrow and uncomfortable perch.

30-4-42

PAUL CRAVATH

I never saw Paul Cravath and yet in a sense I knew him. I knew his father as one of the great presidents of a Negro college. His sister and I were classmates. His brother was a boyish friend. But Paul Cravath did not grow up at Fisk and until late in life, had no particular liking for it. He became one of the greatest corporation lawyers, rich and powerful and he met few Negroes and even they were rather more than he cared to meet. To be sure he had inherited the Fisk tradition and in a sense felt compelled to support it in some degree but his heart was not in it. He believed in color discrimination. When, for instance, Miss Caterina Jarboro wanted to sing in concert on the Metropolitan stage, Cravath made some excuses and then flatly refused. Cravath did not like the Fisk strike and the forcing out of McKenzie but more or less half heartedly he came to the support of the reorganized school and did much to help it, but not as much as he might have done. He presented in a curious way the problem of the second generation who followed the folk who emancipated and enfranchised the American Negro. That second generation turned to wealth and power, and while they did not repudiate the work of their fathers they were secretly often ashamed of it.

EDUCATION

The influence of the Negro on popular education in America has seldom been stressed or understood. The public school originated in New England and the New Englanders planted it in the west. But in the South, slavery excluded it, not simply for Negroes but for poor whites. Long before Emancipation, the Negro established his own small schools, and the first and most successful exercise of his political power after enfranchisement was to plant the public school in the South, for all the people. Later, it was the Negro and his friends, who widely founded the popular Teachers College in the South, and out of this, under the leadership of Booker T. Washington, arose the philosophy of joining education to industry.

INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION

Of one thing the American world today is apt to lose sight, and that is, that in the midst of war and turmoil, the Industrial Revolution of the twentieth century, as answer and reaction against the Industrial Revolution of the nineteenth, goes on apace. Despite all we may say against the bugbear of communism and the threat of Hitlerism, nevertheless, modern capitalism as entrenched in the great democracies of England, France and the United States is falling. We may or may not call that fall Revolution, but of the fall itself there is not the slightest doubt. Capitalism envisaged free enterprize in which privately owned wealth hired labor in the open market, raised raw material and processed goods and sold them for the highest private profit that could be obtained. Not a single country in the world today no matter what its government is called or what its economic theories are, allows this capitalistic system to develop unimpeded. Government control and regulation has entered at every step. In all civilized countries there are distinct limits beyond which wages may not be paid laborers, even though the laborers are willing to receive it. The wealth which may be privately owned and the conditions of ownership are more and more limited by government interference. The methods under which raw material are raised and good processed are increasingly regulated by government. Finally not only is the amount of profit to be made limited but even that made is to an increasing extent taken away through taxation. All this is not simply the work of radicals and revolutionaries; it is the basic creed of most conservatives. Wendell Wilkie would not dare to abolish the principle of the surtax on income; ~~or~~ to radically change the various protective laws thrown around labor; or to allow the private exploitation of natural resources to go unregulated. Naziism and communism and the democratic way of government all agree that private enterprise is and must be the servant of the common weal and that government in business has come to stay. This Industrial Revolution is the most important thing that is taking place today. ~~The fall~~ It overshadows the Battle of Britain.

36-4-43

19 October 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

American Negro

England is not the first proud, rich, world empire to crash in ruins while civilization rolled on.

Hitler is not the last paranoiac to envisage world dominion while civilization rolled on.

Out of the muck and mess of this mad murder must emerge new freedom which includes not only the right to vote but the right to eat.

DILLARD AND LORAM

Two men died last summer of widely different origins and training and yet united in their sympathy with and knowledge of the Negro race. Charles Loram was a white South African who went so far in his liberal attitude toward the black race that he found it adviseable to accept a professorship at Yale University. It would have been easy there to forget colored folk and their problems. Yale is adept at that. But Loram hindered this. He kept up his interest in race problems; he cooperated with the Institute of Human Relations; he was an active member of the board which sought to promote the Encyclopaedia of the Negro and every year he brought a group of students South to visit institutions of learning. His humor and unaffected earnestness endeared him to wide circles of men.

James Hardy Dillard was a white Virginian but not, thank God, of the old school. He belonged to the newer post-Civil War crop. He had neither strut nor side and hid his deep feelings under a careless cloak of good nature with penetrating humor and untiring persistence. He performed the miracle of making Southern School board and school officials recognize, in numbers of cases, Negro children as a part of their task. Dillard's administration of the Slater and Jeanes Funds was a miracle of path breaking accomplishment. He held on to his work almost to the last breath of a long and varied life.

.36-4-44

There are no obvious successors today to either of these men and their going is a challenge to new blood.

THE NEGRO IN AMERICAN CULTURE

Beside distinct lines of accomplishment and influence where the cultural gift of the Negro is manifest in distinct impulse and movement, there is clearly manifest in American history the influence of men of Negro descent, who working as individuals, have made a mark as Americans, and in so doing, showed how the ~~influence of the~~ group to which they belonged and to which they owed much of their training, thought and method, has brought out their genius. Inspired by a sense of creative power and lack of appreciation by their fellows; trained from childhood to consider themselves Messiahs on whom the salvation of their people depended, many generations of young Negroes have made their very handicaps, incentives to more intense efforts to achieve; with the result that in widely varied lines, they have made notable contributions to American life. In music they have not stopped with their own folk song, but sung all music with rare voices and became composers of striking originality. In literature, they have taken their place as American writers of distinction; they have gained recognition as painters and sculptors; and on the stage, both here and in Europe, they have ranked high. Their inventions have often been at the basis of American industry, and even in science, where their entrance is often barred, their names stand among the valued and gifted. There is scarcely a field of American effort in which, early or late, some American of Negro descent has not done his part - now in a role of distinction, now as a less well-known but indispensible helper.

26 October 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

The Negro smeared Wilkie with just enough truth to make an Irishman rush to the defense of a German.

Al Smith has walked out so often that he has forgotten where home is and the rest of us don't care.

Suppose a conquering Hitler should buy American at a whopping profit? Wow! The Patriots!

To date the only differences between the Republican and Democratic platforms are Roosevelt and Wilkie.

DAVID F. HOUSTON

The chairman of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York is dead. He was rich and prosperous and had served in the Federal cabinet as Secretary of Agriculture and Secretary of the Treasury. I knew him as a student of economics and government in the Harvard graduate school in 1891 and we had some characteristic American experiences. As a Carolinian he did not like Negroes and as a Negro I did not like Carolinians. But we had to meet and we were introduced anew at each meeting. "Mr. Du Bois have you met Mr. Houston?" I would look up with vacant interest and murmur "Mr. Houston." "Mr. Houston, you have met Mr. Du Bois?" Mr. Houston under his heavy eye brows would glance just above my head and murmur. I never caught just what he said. The thing that I did catch was the extraordinary path open before him without any particular effort on his part. He was not a man of brains but he had a certain heavy dignity. He became excellent material for college presidencies in Texas, Missouri and the District of Columbia. He was the kind of man that President Wilson liked: he did not talk back, and he passed gradually into a lucrative and well-paying insurance position. Of such is the kingdom of the American heaven.

HUMAN CULTURE

In all human culture there is need of emphasize on the value of group action, of the continuous, co-ordinated purposeful working together of groups of persons who for varied reasons voluntary and involuntary have been thrown together and are known to each other; who have evolved common memories and common ideals. Such a group is formed by the American Negroes of today and they are in a position to help not only themselves but all America to realize the common democracy from which they themselves have been so long and so widely excluded. It would be a calamity if they should assume that the disappearance of their group life and racial effort would erase the color line. We need to remember, as I said before, that human culture goes forward by group effort and that what we need to emphasize today, is the respect of group for group; the knowledge of group by group, the freedom of group effort and the recognition of the essential equality of the individuals who form the different races and through whose efforts, a diffusion and selection of human culture traits will eventually bring to the world real civilization.

THE WAR

Slowly the face of the world conflict is changing and the center of strife is veering toward Africa. This is as it always has been. Ever in the crises of the world from 5,000 years before Christ until 2,000 after, soon or late Africa has become the center of contention: the center of Egyptian imperialism; the center of the strife between Rome and Carthage; the center of the Crusades; the birth place of European capitalism; the grave of colonial imperialism. We must watch with intense interest the rise and fall of the curtain on this third act of the drama.

2 November 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

30-4-46

Funny place, this America.

My great great grandfather come from Africa. I am still a Negro. Willkie's grandfather came from Germany. He is not a German. How come?

Flynn's Irish grandfather kept pigs in the parlor which makes Flynn a Son of the American Revolution. Why not?

Roosevelt has not stopped lynching, unemployment or race discrimination. Who has or will?

NEGRO RELIGION

Negro religion in the past and now has come in for much good-natured ridicule. No one can gainsay the influence of Negro methods of worship on white America - in music, the religious frenzy, the very intonation of the sermons. The methods of the Salvation Army are taken bodily from black folk, and the net result of this cannot be ridiculed. But deep within this; in an age skeptical of all things, it was the function of the ultimate, exploited and degraded of America, to hold faith in the ultimate triumph of good. It may have been a childish way of spiritual survival, but its pragmatic success is its proof and justification.

LANGUAGE

Swahili is one of the great languages of the world. It is a Bantu language of East Africa mixed with many Arabic and other elements. Its name is derived from the word meaning coasts and it has been spoken and developed for years by the coast dwelling traders dwelling inland from Mombasa and Zanzibar. Today it is the lingua franca of all East Africa and can be used from Egypt to South Africa and from the Indian Ocean almost to the Atlantic. It is a musical language, rich and expressive, and has to be learned not only by Africans but by white people living and journeying in Africa. Swahili words and phrases have found their way into English. Books and dictionaries have been published and something of the beauty and lilt of the language and the sharp wisdom of its proverbs can be read by the curious and by scholars.

METHODISTS AND EPISCOPALIANS

One of the most curious developments of our day is the plight of the Methodists. First, the African and the African Zion Churches withdrew from Methodism because of discrimination. Then Southern Methodists withdrew because of slavery and at the time of emancipation Southern Methodists set aside the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church as a separate institution. In the twentieth century the Methodists began to preach unity. With infinite pains they united the Northern and Southern Methodists, segregated Negroes in separate conferences but the Northern Methodists did not invite the African Methodists and Zion Methodists back to the fold nor did the Southern Methodists reunited with the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church which is Christianity and the color line. Now come the Episcopalians. The Bishop of Georgia with tears in his eyes says that he cannot have a church conference where a meal is served nor assemble his Christian brethern in any hotel in Georgia. All of which goes to show that Christianity in the United States simply will not work.

9 November 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

"The tumult and the shouting dies, the Captains and the Kings depart."

I can see how an honest man and thoughtful Negro could have persuaded himself for various reasons not to vote for Roosevelt but for the life of me I am unable to understand how any such person could have voted for Wendell Willkie.

30-4-47

We trust that Mr. John L. Lewis is now enjoying peaceful sleep o'nights, but we doubt it.

The war turns it face toward Africa "Semper novum quid ex Africa."

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

A wise group of American leaders including men like Franz Boas, McKeen Cattell, Wesley Mitchell and Lloyd Imes have said "When forces exist, as we believe they do now exist, whose objective effect - if not their secret purpose - is the destruction of civil liberties, blindness to facts becomes dangerous, pious protestation of liberalism becomes mockery, and failure to speak out courageously becomes criminal. The objective effect, furthermore, is to create war hysteria and to incite witch hunts at a time when unity for peace in the face of international events is a condition for our further progress as a nation of free men. . . . We recognize particularly that serious efforts are being made to silence and supress the Communist Party. We regard as significant the fact that precisely now Earl Browder, its General Secretary, has been indicted on data which the government has evidently had for years." We may add to this the fact that Browder's wife has just been ordered deported to Russia. One does not have to be a communist to insist that communists have a right to express their opinion so long as such expression does not incite to open violence. That is what is meant by freedom of speech. Freedom of speech which only includes that which you want to hear or that which you think others should hear is not freedom but slavery.

THE REPUBLICAN PROGRAM

Away back in February the program of the committee headed by the late Glen Frank was presented to the party. It criticized the New Deal, but it was not entirely reactionary. It stood for a labor program, for expansion of the farmers' market, for regulation of public utilities, for federal housing and health and an adequate social program for uplift. What has become of all this and what evidence is there that the Republican Party is going to adopt any such forward looking bill of rights?

16 November 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Any candidate supported by the New York Times and Joe Louis ought to expect to be defeated.

Mr. Willkie accepts the verdict. We thought he would.

There are a number of prophets who are now explaining.

For the first time in the history of the nation both major parties openly asked for the Negro vote and considered the conditions and demands of Americans of Negro descent. This marks an epoch.

JOE LOUIS

It is perhaps human nature that a person is secretly ambitious to do that which he is not engaged in, which he has never tried and concerning which the normal chances are that he has no ability. Despite this, common sense warns that a shoemaker should stick to his last. This may not always evoke the best ability for every deed but it will keep the square peg out of the round hole. I have always admired Joe Louis not simply for his fine physique, but for his attitudes: his refusal to grin and make a monkey of himself; the care in spending his money; his love for his mother and especially his clean fighting without alibis. But Joe Louis cannot write nor make speeches. His education and native ability does not lie in this line. He makes himself simply ridiculous when he goes on the platform. This is not because he has not a right to his political opinions or a right to express them; but it is because he himself has no ability to express them and that his astute and thoughtful manager can express them a great deal better. We hope that Joe Louis will not repeat the farce of the campaign or succumb to the petty temptation of political monies. He has too much to lose.

IRELAND

Talk of chickens coming home to roost, England certainly has a hen-house full. East Indians have been boombed just as frightfully and with a larger percentage of loss of their wealth and ~~loses~~ lives than London is suffering under attacks today. Nothing in all that England has lost and may lose in the first and present World Wars approaches what she did to Africa during the slave trade and during the partition. ~~Even dramatic just now is the attitude of Ireland.~~ The plaint of the Irish people against the English is a terrible indictment: unprovoked war, sequestration of soil, exploitation through rack-rents, famine and pestilence, religious persecution, political slavery and the actual selling of some of the natives in the American slave trade. The Irish have not forgotten this. They cannot forget it. They cannot forget that today one-fifth of her soil and nearly one-half of her population is withheld from her jurisdiction and governed by England. Now comes the time when England needs Ireland and needs her desperately. The recent destruction of English ships is a graver threat than the airplanes over London. To fight this menace England needs naval bases in Ireland which would be two hundred fifty miles nearer the main and vital lanes of English commerce than any English ports. This concession, Ireland bluntly and firmly refuses. The situation is a tragedy. But whose is the blame?

23 November 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

"O Black and Unknown Bards": Can you sing to the world today that undying song, "I am going to lay down my sword and shield; I am going to lay down my burden; down by the river side; I ain't going to study war no more"?

We are going to send no men into this World War. We are going to send airplanes and ships and apparently our ships, which are preparing to race around the seven seas from Hawaii to China and from the Carribbean to the Artic, are not going to be manned by men. Perhaps this is the reason Negroes are needed only as servants.

"We want no territory" said Lodge, says Hull; but because we stole territory from Spain in the Spanish War we have got to protect our loot in the Orient and tax the American poor one hundred million dollars per battleship.

I wrote a bit about the Democrats quite early in the campaign. If I mistake not, However, I did not publish it. I am publishing it now or again with suitable changes in tense and preening myself for a prophet.

36-4-40

THE DEMOCRATS

Garner would have been the best candidate that the Republicans could have put forward. He believes in caste and practices it daily. He does not profess to have principles. He is a politician in the sense that he seeks to get for himself and his friends whatever can be gotten, in any way, or at any price so long as his gain exceeds the loss. Moreover, his Solid South added to the Northern city vote would have put him the White House; Garner did not expect the Democrats to nominate him but he did expect to dictate whom they should nominate. If McNutt had won the Democratic nomination, it would have been because of his photograph and because nobody had the slightest idea of what he stood for; which probably meant that he stood for anything which would be to his advantage. Hull is prehistoric. He is an English freetrader still living in the nineteenth century, who thinks that freedom means profit and imagines that the welfare of China and South America is the same thing as American profits from their trade. His eye is always on those prfits. Of Democrats who mean anything and who look forward to a rebirth and rehabilitation of the New Deal; not a single one had a ghost of a chance. This brought us back to Roosevelt.

Why any man should want to suffer the agonies of a presidential term for twelve years, when he could be released after eight, is beyond my comprehension. I don't believe anyone does, but when a man puts his hand to the plow he not simply must not, he often cannot let go. Whatever Roosevelt's mistakes and shortcomings have been, he is the only living man who can lead the United States further on the path which will eventually abolish poverty. The abolition of poverty is the one great duty of the twentieth century. All the monopolized wealth and most of the brains of the United States are set against this program, because the abolition of poverty also means the abolition of great individual riches and the equitable and equalitarian distribution of wealth. Who wants this? Only those who really believe in democracy and few of those do who say they do. Franklin Roosevelt is the only man in sight that has a chance to pursue this path. His will not be the straight way of the Lord, but it will be infinitely straighter than Dewey, Taft, Vanderburg, Hoover, Willkie or any other hundred Republicans could or would make it.

~~23 November 1940~~
Dec. 7

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

In Stewart County, Georgia the Negro population furnishing seventy-one per cent, of the population according to the census of 1930, is contributing seventy-five per cent to the draft.

This sounds familiar. Evidently the United States is going to defend itself to the last "Nigger".

A strong and resourceful Negro leader now knows that you cannot serve God and Willkie.

The nation is well rid of pious Barton but still has a mess of spoiled Fish.

I wish to God that Roosevelt had not tried to monkey with a beautiful old custom for an ugly new reason - retail profit. What with turkeys in June and Franksgiving, the old harvest holiday "ain't what it used to be, many long years ago". If Willkie had had good sense here was a plank which might have given him his missing five million votes.

If the President of the Negro Congress has been advising, as the papers say he has, a racial party, because the two major parties do not do our will, he is fooling with dynamite. You can have, and unfortunately today must have a degree of racial segregation in residence, in economic organization, in cultural traits, and you ought to organize and act accordingly. But in politics such racial segregation is impossible, because only a majority party can win; and we are not a majority but a small minority, we must choose between the two major parties or court a possible third party which may become a majority. If the third party has no chance to become a majority, we are sunk, and must choose the lesser evil of the two major parties. But to talk of a racial party is to talk arrant nonsense.

THE WORLD WAR AND THE JEWS

I was lunching not long since with an English Lord who has been lecturing from New York to Chicago and from Chicago to New Orleans. A young Jew was also present, one of the delicate, intellectual type with the face of Christ and wearing spectacles. He was interpreting the World War as primarily a fight in defense of mistreated minorities. But his Lordship waved a deprecative hand, "Oh, No," he said, "England is not fighting for Jews or Poles. It is fighting to keep nations from being attacked." "But", protested the young Jew, "here in the United States at least public opinion has been more aroused by the treatment of the Jews than anything else." "Not at all", was the answer from a man about whom the best Americans had been swarming for several months. "On the contrary most Ameridans I have met, have said that his treatment of the Jews was one of the best things that Hitler had done." I sat quite dumb. I knew what the Englishman said was true. Democracy, so-called, is not fighting for Negroes, Jews, Poles nor East Indians; it is fighting for corporations called nations, in which the English nobility has the largest stake.

30 November 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

A world slogan: kill the Thinker; hail the Stinker.

"Oh, say can you see by the dawn's early light" anything really worth looking at?

I lived through a war when we begged like hell to fight and then fought like hell to beg.

I know I am dumb, but please tell me again just why are we training soldiers?

THE REPUBLICANS

The Republicans led by the unbeatable Mr. Willkie are thinking some things they do not yet dare to say. The burden of that thought is this: if the Solid South, where democratic methods are not practiced, had not been in Mr. Roosevelt's pocket without a campaign, it is possible and even probable that Wendell Wilkie would be President of the United States; that in the next Congress because of these same undemocratic methods a Georgia senator will be chairman of the all-powerful Senate's Foreign Relations Committee and a South Carolinian president pro tem of the Senate. Because of their longer "service and consequent seniority the vast majority of key committee chairmanships in both houses of Congress are now held by Southern members." In the Senate, Glas of Virginia, professional "nigger" hater heads appropriations; Harrison of Mississippi, finance; Texas guards military affairs; South Carolina presides over agriculture; North Carolina over commerce; Tennessee over the post offices; Louisiana over manufactures; Georgia, immigration; and Alabama over irrigation. Turning to the House, we have first a Texas speaker; North Carolina runs the powerful Ways and Means; Georgia, Naval Affairs; Alabama, banking; Texas, the judiciary; Georgia, the Civil Service; Texas, rivers and harbors; Virginia, fisheries; Texas, agriculture; Mississippi, flood control; Texas, public buildings; Louisiana, public lands; Florida, territory; and Mississippi, war veterans.

Editor: For God's sake, put this in readable type; it's worth it!

36-4-50

Now whose fault is this? Certainly it is the fault of the Republican party. It was the Republican Party, having enfranchized the Negro finally in 1876, bowed to a deal between Northern Industry and Southern oligarchy, and allowed the South to disfranchise the Negro by legal and illegal means. It is the Republican Party who every since that day has refused to raise a hand to re-establish democracy in the South. When Mr. Willkie gets through weeping over his defeat, he might sit up and look the situation fair in the face and say: There can be no democracy in the United States so long as voters in South Carolina and Mississippi have from two to four times the political power possessed by voters in Michigan and New York

14 December 1940

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

A Walla Walla guy writes that I am over estimating the abilities of colored people. Perhaps; but at any rate today I could scarcely underestimate the abilities of whites.

Come now Dies, Hull and William Allen White; one more good shove and we will be fighting the whole damned world.

It looks as though the sun may change its mind after all and set somewhere on Britain.

Rome fell and the world still stood. Europe may die and yet most men live and thrive.

The only strikes allowed from now on will be those demanding low wages, unemployment and no taxes on war profits.

Is Japan's seizure of Saigon a threat to Europe, or was England's fortification of Singapore a threat to Asia? Or both?

DEGREES

We learn that the Rev. T. B. Hill, associate pastor of Canaan Baptist Church of New York City has received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Ideal Bible College of Illinois. We regret to say that the Secretary of State of the State of Illinois writes us that "examination of the records of this department does not disclose a corporation domestic or foreign under the above name." and the United States Office of Education of Washington, D. C. also has "no information about the 'Ideal Bible College of Illinois' concerning which you inquired." In the past the sale of honorary degrees from spurious colleges has been a lucrative traffic. For this reason we would advise Mr. Hill and others to inquire carefully into the "Ideal Bible College of Illinois" and ascertain whether it exists and particularly whether it has any right to grant degrees. We suggest this because as a current paper says "Dr. Hill is well-known in civic and veterans' affairs in New York and Philadelphia, having served as historian for ten years and seven years as chairman of the executive committee of the George T. Cornish Post of the American Legion, Philadelphia."

SWAHILI AGAIN

Someone has been interested in what I said recently concerning the Swahili language. My correspondent will find in the Bantu Studies, a journal published in South Africa, an interesting article on "Swahili Prose Literature". "Practically the whole of Swahili literature which has come down to us from ancient times is, as we should undoubtedly expect, in the form of poetry. Some of it goes back to the XIIth century, and much of it exists in MSS. written in the Arabic character, which is singularly ill-equipped for writing the Swahili language. . . . There is, however, a mass of traditional folk-lore and other stories, together with proverbial and gnomic sayings which in many cases have a story behind them. All Bantu languages are rich in this kind of material, and a very large section of it resembles the Uncle Remus tales collected from the Negro population of the United States. Swahili has its own indigenous stories, of animals who talk and behave like human beings and of local heroes of the past." Of current Swahili literature there are a number of books written in Swahili by whites; as for instance, "A History of Africa" and a general history, a book on African exploration, the travels of H. M. Stanley, the biography of Khama and Booker Washington. There are also two excellent volumes on problems of hygiene, housing and agriculture. Native authors are the late Canon S. Sechoza and his daughter Mary who wrote his biography. C. D. Brenn has translated "The Arabian Nights" and the Reverened Y. Abdala and S. Chipond have written popular books of Swahili stories, and there is a good deal of writing by natives in monthly gazettes, especially the Mambo Leo published by the Tanganyika Government. A Swahili bibliography contains about eleven hundred items.

21 December 1940
Amsterdam News

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY
W. E. B. Du Bois

36-4-53

England suggests that if the United States will fight her battles and finance them, Britain will triumph. We are inclined to agree.

There is in the present agitation of Negroes a dangerous paradox. On the one hand they are slapping the United States in the face for its discrimination in the defense program; and on the other hand they are protesting their eagerness to fight for their country and never to betray it.

If you love your country, suffer for it; don't bargain. If you hate it for rape, insult and slavery, say so and don't lie.

Otherwise you will seem to paraphase the national anthem into something like this:

My country 'tis of me
Land of the noble We
Of me I sing.

"Political and economic freedom go hand in hand" says the President. On the basis of economic freedom Negro slavery and the more modern wage slavery were built. Individual freedom is one thing. Freedom for predatory corporations is quite another.

CHRISTMAS, 1940

A revision of the Gospel according to Saint Luke

And it came to pass in those days that there went out a decree from Washington that everybody should be taxed.

And Joseph Johnson went up from Virginia out of the city of Richmond unto the city which is called New York, to be taxed, with Mary Johnson, his espoused wife, being great with child.

And she brought forth her first born son and wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in an alley because they did not rent rooms to colored people in the hotel. And there were in the same city so-called shepherds keeping watch over the tax-payers.

And lo! the angel of the Lord came upon them and the glory of the Lord shone round about them and they were quite naturally sore afraid.

And the angel said unto them "Fear not! For behold I bring unto you good tidings of great joy. For unto you is born this day in the city of New York a Saviour which is Christ the Lord. And the shepherds asked "Is he a Jew?"

And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying

"Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good-will to men!" And the shepherds asked: "Do you mean all white men?"

And it came to pass as the angels were gone away the shepherds said one to another "Let us now go and see this thing that is come to pass. It sounds a bit fishy. And they came with haste and found Mary and Joseph and the baby lying in the alley.

And they said, "My God! he's black, let's get out of here!"

28 December 1940
AMSTERDAM NEWS

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

THIRTEEN RESOLUTIONS FOR 1941

1. I am going to stop being sorry for myself.
2. I will heed the history of my fathers and be proud of their struggles.
3. I am going to be glad that I can see and hear, taste, smell and feel.
4. I am going to look at sunsets, hear symphonies, smell flowers, sip wine and feel the tight gripped hands of friends.
5. I am going to forget the mean, the cruel and the vindictive and remember the broad, and intelligent and kindly.
6. I am going to seek Peace and Joy; but when I fight, if fight I must, I am going to hit fair and straight with all of my strength; and when I weep, I am going to stand and weep openly.
7. I am going to ignore little things, trifles, petty insults, glances, slights and exclusions and fix my attention on heighths and breadth, thunder and earthquakes and infinite and eternal ends.
8. Without stooping to prove or deigning to explain, I am going to assume my equality with the Great, my acceptability to the Good and my superiority to cads, sneaks and climbers, white green or black.
9. I am going not only to admit, but to believe, that there are no human depths where blood as good as mine does not flow and no heighth to which my blood may not confidently and triumphantly aspire.

10. I am going to worship truth and truth only in whatever guise it may come; whether it be ugly or beautiful; sweet or bitter; and whether it leads to hell or heaven.

11. I will not waste Immortal time whimpering for money or clamoring for fame, rather let me hide and do and dig and delve for the deed's own sake and not for the bribe of wealth nor for the froth of cheap notoriety.

12. I will lift up mine eyes to the sunshine never forgetting the music of rain, the majesty of clouds and the hiding of mist.

13. I will face each sunrise with one prayer: There is no God but Love and Work is his Prophet.

Opening paragraph

1841

One hundred years ago, 1841, was for us a year of marvels. In that year the Negroes of the Amistad who had killed the captain of a slave ship and brought it from Cuba to New London had gone through a year and a half's imprisonment were freed by the grace of John Quincy Adams and the Abolitionists and returned in November to Africa. In that year, led by Madison Washington, one hundred thirty-four slaves overpowered the officers of the ship Creole enroute from Richmond to New Orleans and took the vessel to a British port. There eventually they were freed and the British Government paid the United States one hundred ten thousand dollars for the privilege of setting these black slaves free. These two matters alone, not to mention others, should inspire us to renewed resolution in 1941.

4 January 1940
Amsterdam News

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Amazing is the whirligig of time.

At last the Eaglet sleeps in the Eagle's arms; at last Napoleon's son lies in Napoleon's tomb beneath the great dome of the Invalides.

A peasant painter has flouted the double eagles of imperial Austria and conquered the French Empire.

What may not we, sons of black African slaves; and they, spawn of yellow coolies, whom Europe once chained and kicked, yet live to see?

Amazing is the whirligig of time.

36-4-55

The Draft

I have long known personally a high government official to whom I wrote recently concerning possible discrimination in the selection of young Negroes for the draft. He replied as follows and his words may be taken as authoritative.

"As you know, the present law specifically provides that there shall be no discrimination on account of race or color in the interpretation and execution of the Selective Service Act. I understand from the General Staff Officers of the War Department that it is the intention of the army to provide organizations and facilities for the proper percentage of colored trainees and white trainees from each of the states based on the proportion in these states. This will not mean that during any one month the proportions can be accurate. The present quota of 800,000 trainees is to be filled between now and the end of next June. During that period the state quotas will be adjusted from time to time as more definite figures become available. . . .

"The Army intends to provide for the correct percentage and to call for the proper numbers in each state based on the proportion of ClassI-A men as between the races in the particular state. For the immediate present, however, the percentage of colored trainees called will be considerably less than the proper proportion because of lack of facilities. This comes primarily from the fact that there are now only two or three percent of Negroes in the Regular Army and National Guard, and, while new organizations are being activated and others are being planned, it is impossible over night to produce the non-commissioned officers and training cadres necessary to properly care for the trainees. For this reason, the January call for Negroes will be small, but in February this will be increased rapidly and shortly after that the proper percentage of colored and white will have been inducted. . . .

"Of course, the time of induction represents no discrimination, since the selectees will probably serve the same twelve months' period no matter whether they start in January or in March. It would be a very real discrimination if equal facilities, which include not only barracks, hospitals, and other physical facilities, but also the necessary organization, including supply sergeants, cooks, training cadres, and other personnel were not available when either white or colored selectees are inducted. As you are doubtless aware, the law required that men not be inducted until necessary facilities and equipment are available for their reception, and regardless of the law, this is the only proper policy. . . .

Selective Service, both as a matter of law and as a general policy based on the need for national unity under existing conditions, is based on fair and equal treatment for the races in this most important phase of national defense, and I can assure you that everything possible will be done to see that this policy is carried out."

I have great faith in the writer of these words. I have little faith in the United States Army and none at all in Southern Draft Boards. I shall watch the event with interest.

18 January 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Amsterdam News

Whatever China today represents in weakness and inefficiency is due to Great Britain aided and abetted by the United States.

To Japan alone is due the fact that the whole continent of Asia is not today in hopeless serfdom to Europe.

Revolution is not violence and violence is not revolution.

Peace and change and progress are the insignia of real and successful revolution.

All the world is facing revolution today but the only nation successfully resisting it and ignoring it and refusing to discuss the plain facts is the United States of America.

Demands made by a minority without power are a silly waste of breath in a day when we need breath.

RUTH DANIELS

Ruth Daniels of Los Angeles, California writes me as follows: "I am a nineteen year old girl and have read nearly all of your works. I would like to know truthfully (1) if you love the colored race as much as you works say (2) if you have ever cursed the fate that bound you to such a race as the Negro?"

One does not love or hate a group composed of millions of people, save as a figure of speech. What happens in the relation between an individual and a mass of other individuals is a personification of certain individuals as standing for and typifying the large group. In that way practically everyone loves and has to love the group who furnishes the larger number of the individuals with whom he comes in contact. When he thinks of mother and father as belonging to a particular race, of brothers and sisters, of the great mass of his friends, of those unknown but historical personages who make up his heroes and heroines; out of such known and more or less clearly apprehended personalities, he builds up a group ideal which he loves; for whose happiness he is eager to work, and for whose defense he takes up cudgels and fights lustily. He does not, if he is wise, act uncritically, or deliberately distort the truth. He realizes that there are persons in his own family and among his friends who are not ideal and loveable, but he understands them. He knows that thoroughly to understand a human being is to excuse and explain his faults. On the other hand, he is apt to be less critical and fair concerning persons who belong to a group with which he is not connected; with whom he has few contacts and little understanding. Here it is quite possible for him to "hate" races and nations, because their representatives with whom he has had contact have been unpleasant and cruel and lacking in understanding toward him.

I think that my appreciation of the plight of the Negro peoples of America and of the world has grown rather than diminished during my thinking life; that I realize today as never before, how much they have accomplished, how desperately they have struggled and how deeply they have deserved the triumphs they have made. I have never been ashamed of them. I have never "cursed" the fate that bound me to them. Rather I have been and still am, profoundly thankful that I had a chance to be identified with them and to work with them. I do not believe that identification with any other group of people would have brought me so much of happiness and satisfaction.

On the other hand, I understand Ruth Daniels and many of her companions. Often it is the people nearest to you and most bound up in your personal life that treat you with the least consideration and hurt you most deeply. That explains the bitterness of family feuds and of intra-racial hatreds. There has been in human history no deeper animosities than those between the factions of the Irish people, between the blacks and mulattoes of the West Indies, between the Prussians and the south Germans, between the individual Italian states. But these hatreds and cruelties are the festerings and exacerbations of ~~the~~ unusual and exaggerated personal contacts.

They are all too human, but they are individual rather than social and they characterize narrow, provincial and uneducated people, rather than those who have risen to the breadth of gentle understanding. An American Negro who finds between him and freedom and opportunity, the ignorance, carelessness and lack of faith of black folk, is apt not to see that beyond this black wall which looms chiefly because of its nearness, is reared hills and mountains of white injustice and slavery and caste. And that the difficulties that he encounters within his own race are not so much causes as results. Ruth Daniels goes on to say that "I am not writing out of curiosity for a life depends upon your answers!" Be of good cheer, Ruth Daniels, human nature and more especially the human nature of black folk, is worth believing in; and when you have once proven to yourself the worth of your belief and faith in them, you may essay a further and higher step and believe in all folk not because of their race and color but because of their humanity.

36-5-24

25-26 January 1941
Atlanta University
Atlanta, Georgia

Pittsburgh Courier

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-25

It is unpatriotic to stop war profiteering by demanding high wages. What are mere wages any how?

The only problem apparently that colored Americans have just now is that of fighting just as hard and senselessly as anybody else so long as they are allowed to die and become impoverished like other people.

Inter arma, the followers of the Prince of Peace, get lockjaw as well as influenza.

Everybody is a suspicious scoundrel who does not today recognize England as the permanent abode of the saints of God.

DEFENSE

If anybody is attacking America, America ought to defend itself. But who is attacking us just now? Nobody. Who has ever attacked us? England. Who may attack us in the future? Germany, perhaps. But she would seem to have her hands full without that unnecessary excursion. On the other hand, if we are fighting in self-defense, why have we got a fleet in Asia? Do we own anything in Asia which we did not ourselves steal? And is our object in being there to help the Chinese or the Javanese or rather to see that no one gets the opportunity of exploiting them as completely as we want to? What are we afraid of in Germany? Do we fear Hitler's race theories? They are exactly the theories which we practice here in America. Is Hitler's attitude toward Africa different from our own? Not if we remember the slave trade. Is Hitler's attitude toward Asia different from our own? We still deny the right of Chinese, Japanese and Indians to become American citizens.

THE ANSWERING JEWS

The Jews are quietly taking in their belts and going to work. They are used to oppression and they know how to fight it. We are still under the impression that somebody else is going to do our fighting for us. There are in the United States, four and a quarter million Jews. They propose in the year 1941 to raise twelve million dollars for the Jews of Palestine, an average of over three dollars a head. And they are going to do it. This is deliberate Jewish segregation. Do the Jews believe in segregation? They do not. But the only refuge that the harassed Jewry of Europe has today is Palestine. They are, therefore, going to make segregation in Palestine possible and profitable and at the same time they are going to work for an unsegregated humanity. If this teaches the Negro of the United States nothing, they cannot be taught.

Amsterdam News
1 February 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

By

W. E. B. Du Bois

The War hysteria is at full blast.

Roosevelt has been inaugurated for a third term.

The great problem before him and the world is not Hitlerism, nor help to Britain, but War - the absolute stoppage of war as weapon of civilization.

I did not see the inauguration nor hear the inaugural but this is what President Roosevelt ought to have said. But he did not say it.

FOR PERMANENT WORLD PEACE

36-5-26

My Friends

Shorn now of all further political ambition, without political debts to pay or party allegiances to encumber me, I want to address myself frankly and clearly to the one dominant and outstanding problem of our day - WAR. War must be abolished or civilization will end. At the first possible moment all and every war between nations must be made just as illegal, wrong and punishable as the private fight and feud between individuals. In order to accomplish this and solely for that reason, the United States is preparing to fight and is going to fight with every ounce of its wealth and strength. We do not propose to enter this war simply to preserve the British Empire. We humbly acknowledge our debt to Britain: for a great literature; for the development of Parliamentary government; for high technical efficiency in manufacture and trade; but we also in strict justice must put on England's shoulders, heavy responsibility for the present plight of the world: for the forcible subjugation of large areas of the world and many millions of people, without giving them voice in their own government; in the ruthless exploitation of great numbers of the world's population - the rape of their wealth and resources primarily for the well-being and luxury of the upper classes of England;for maintaining a monopoly of the use of the high seas; for developing the Negro slave trade and colonial imperialism, so as to make possible the ruling of the world by a minority of its population and building thereon the doctrine of the eternal inferiority of the majority of mankind.

We are not entering this war to conquer Germany or to punish Hitler and the National Socialist Party. We are glad and quick to acknowledge the debt of civilization to Germany; for the magnificent and priceless gift of its music; for its high development of science and education; and for the technical efficiency of its splendid industry. This is a Germany which we will not and cannot destroy. But we hold that whatever Germany has suffered - and God knows she has suffered - from England, France and America, that the method of war which she has chosen to right wrong ~~because it~~ is futile and fatal. And although it is a method of social change which Germany certainly did not invent, yet the very frightfulness of the efficiency with which she is waging the present conflict, will not in the end right wrong but will utterly ruin both Germany and England, return Europe to barbarism and set human culture back a thousand years.

We are therefore entering upon a War to end War - not in the empty phrase of a quarter century since, but with a real, practical, definite object. As the most powerful nation of the world in resources and intelligent man-power, representing as we do all nations and races of mankind, we solemnly renounce as we gird ourselves to fight to the death, all desire for territory, dominion over others, increased wealth, trade or power, and hereby declare our object simply and solely, the settlement of disputes and differences; of oppressions, hurts and insults, by peaceful conference, argument, investigation and appeal; the settlement of these causes of dispute and conflict, by the widest practical appeal to democratic control, and the final enforcement of the decisions thus arrived at by an international police army, of which I pledge the army and navy of the United States, as the first nucleus, and promise to place it at the earliest practical moment, at the disposal of a World League of Peoples.

As a first step toward this Federation of the World, I demand from England and Germany, from Japan and Italy, a cessation from War, and agreement to the principle above enunciated, and an assembly of a World Council, with an international police army and navy at the disposal of an elected executive.

Amsterdam News
8 February 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

No person knows the Negro problem of America who does not know the South.

The race problem of this land cannot be cut up into separate individualities nor can it be physically divided into North, South and West. So long as eight million people live South of the Mason and Dixon Line, conditions among these people constitute the race problem of America.

Never even when I lived and worked in the North did I cease to visit the South and study the South and know the South.

TEXAS AND THE SOUTHWEST

The other day I drove a thousand miles straight across the Southern South. I started from Atlanta and drove to Birmingham, the city of coal and iron; thence in Mississippi I rode from Meridian to Vicksburg, visiting the capital of the state and where, thanks to black troops at Fort Hudson and elsewhere the Father of Waters still runs "unvexed, to the Sea". Then I went down into Texas.

36-5-27

At Prairie View, that rapidly developing center for the study and inspiration of the Negro in the Southwest, we held a "School of Philosophy for Negro Agricultural Workers." There were with us two white specialists from the Department of Agriculture in Washington, a white professor from Louisiana State University and in addition to these the President of Tuskegee Institute, Charles S. Johnson of Fisk and myself, - all under the planning and direction of W. R. Banks. On Thursday we talked of a "desirable agricultural program" and I sought to paint in a general social background of the whole present economic situation. On Friday we talked of the "place of government in a modern society" with Charles Johnson and the Louisiana State professor. On Saturday our subject was "problems of social adjustment and administration" with President Patterson and Dr. Taeusch of Washington and ending with a panel discussion. In the afternoon we gathered in groups and talked and discussed situations with a hundred and more field workers from every part of Texas.

I put it to you frankly friends of Chicago, Washington and Boston, can you afford to miss this sort of thing and continue to talk sincerely about race relations in America?

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI

I was once invited to teach at what was then Lincoln Institute and refused because I did not like conditions there. Since then I have visited the institution three times. Recently I was present and spoke at the celebration of its seventy-fifth birthday. It was an inspiring occasion. Physically the institution is still in swaddling clothes but it has a fine plan of building, partially on paper and partially in brick. But beyond that it is beginning to realize itself. From being a little isolated "colored" school poorly equipped and without funds, it has become one of the state universities of Missouri. It has a body of curators who look and act like independent men and it has a new young president who has vision.

At the same time this institution illustrates the paradox of Negro thought. Some of the best Negroes of Missouri are bitterly opposed to the institution. They do not want a segregated institution of higher learning in that state. They say that in a state which has only six per cent of Negroes ought to have one state university open to all. Theoretically they are quite right. At the same time the University of Missouri is not open to Negroes and until several generations die, it is not going to be. What are we going to do about it? The best possible thing to do is to make Lincoln University a fine outstanding institution of learning; to crown the worked of those colored soldiers who founded it during the Civil War. Lincoln University should become a great institution of learning, well-conducted, a haven for scholars and scientists, and an inspiration for art and literature. It should not imitate the University of Missouri. It should, in its own way and in its own fields, excel it. And those persons in St. Louis and Kansas and elsewhere who are hanging back and criticizing and not putting their shoulders to the wheel are going some of these days to be ashamed of themselves.

Amsterdam News
15 February 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

If Willkie keeps on "me-tooing" and copy-catting Roosevelt, he will elect him to a fourth term.

"We can't be free alone," says Matthew Woll, the le der of Jim Crow trade unionism in the United States. We sure can't.

Do not let the propaganda about Australian prowess fool you too much. Most of the fighters on both sides are brown and black.

England has captured Lethe and the land of the lotus-eaters which will help her to forget an inconvenient and undemocratic past.

36-5-28

ECONOMIC ILLITERACY

The matter which gives me most concern today among educated Negroes is the utter failure to understand or discriminate between legitimate and illegitimate business; between mere profit-making and social welfare. Too many Negroes of intelligence assume that if a person or a corporation or a method of getting money succeeds in amassing wealth that that is proof of its value and evidence of its part in advancing the interests of the Negro. Such uncritical assumptions are fatally wrong and they are illustrated by the case of Edward P. Jones and his brothers and associates who have for years been head of the policy gambling racket in Chicago. It is said that these organized gamblers have actually taken in sixty million dollars in the last decade. One of them is now making small and partial expiation of his crimes by two years incarceration in the penitentiary. Far from this illiciting any criticism or feeling of disgrace and wrong on the part of most commentators of the Negro press, it is defended on the ground that these men hold government bonds worth a half million, industrial stocks and bonds worth a quarter of a million and real estate worth three hundred thousand. They also operate tailor shops and other business together with a department store employing two hundred persons! The fallacy which we are trying to conceal here under the cloak of apparent success is that systematic stealing from, debauching and deceiving of thousands upon thousands of poor, ignorant, ill-nourished Negroes justifies a smart gang of crooks in organized gambling, graft and bribery. It does not. Not ten department stores nor millions of dollars in bonds and real estate can undo the evil of organized crime among Negroes especially in large cities, aided and abetted and often financed by the white underworld. No legitimate advance in economic security and the common decencies of civilized existence can come in this way.

Business enterprise is not good in itself nor is it to be judged simply by its monetary success. It is to be judged alone by its contribution to social welfare and human uplift. If it makes the kind of goods which people ought to consume and makes them under circumstances which furnish decent wages to the workers and with no unjustifiable profit to the employer it may and usually does add to the sum of human comfort. If on the other hand, it manufactures subtle poisons or deals in wholesale and deliberate cheating; if instead of encouraging thrift and hard work it encourages dependence upon luck and chance; then it may easily be and usually is an absolute evil which ought to be fought by all available social weapons. The significance of the present change of public attitude toward business and business enterprise, toward capital and income, lies in this new stress upon the social value of the efforts and actions which business involves. It goes farther than that to say that business cannot stand alone and over against the welfare of the consumer; that it is not what a person can sell or induce people to pay for which spells legitimate business, but rather widespread ability to buy and to buy with knowledge and discretion and for the uplift of the buyer as well as the seller.

Amsterdam News
22 February 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-29

Mr. Willkie will run on the Democratic ticket in 1944 and thus complete his series of political metamorphoses.

Suppose we do break wholesale into war-time jobs, what will happen when peace comes as come it must - and stays?

Why not send Mrs. Bethune now to look England over and ask Winston a few pertinent questions about India and Africa?

Don't let the cablegrams fool you; it isn't Australia that is whipping Italy in North Africa; it is brown Indians and brown and black Africans whom Australians despise and exclude. But the Aussies are in the limelight because England knows how to manufacture history.

FISK

The President of Fisk University is a Quaker and does not believe in War. Some of the Fisk graduates are alarmed at his refusal to cash in through the present war hysteria. They have written me among others to ask my attitude and I have hastened to say: "I am glad that Fisk University up-to-date has not yielded to war hysteria and tried to ca italize it by beating the tom toms of war. I have lived through one period of deliberate and prolonged propaganda for war and partially succumbed to it, until I really believed that the first World War was a war to end war, and that the interests of colored people in particular were bound up in the defeat of Germany. I have lived to know better and my opposition to war under any circumstances has been immeasureably increased. I still believe that defensive war is justifiable but I utterly refuse to believe that there is any excuse for the United States entering the present world war. We are not being attacked; there is no reasonable possibility of our having to defend ourselves. On the contrary in this war we are trying to attack Japan because of race prejudice and we are defending China not because we love the Chinese but because we want to exploit them. I do not believe that the British Empire stands or has ever stood for democracy. It is idiotic to talk about a people who brought the slave trade to its greatest development, who are the chief exploiters of Africa and who hold four hundred million Indians in subjection, as the great defenders of democracy. The British Empire has caused more human misery than Hitler will cause if he lives a hundred years. I appreciate England's many gifts to civilization and suffer with her suffering but I do not forget nor minimize historic facts.

I know that Fisk University and other colored institutions are being greatly influenced by the example of Hampton. Hampton has as its new president a man who ~~may~~ make, and so far as I know, will make, a good president; but the mere fact that as a former publicity man he used the present war husteria to advertise his advent into Hampton, does not mean that all the other Negro institutions must fall pell-mell in the same direction. Fisk University as an institution of learning has a right to keep calm and stay aloof from this war insanity. It should attend to its business of education and appeal for support to those who believe in education and not to those who are advocates of organized murder. I, therefore, hope that Fisk University, its officers and students and it alumni will take a firm stand against all participation in the present war and against the present insane rush to overturn civilization in the name of defending it."

Atlanta University
1 March 1941

Amsterdam News

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

We are terribly afraid of the German fifth column but the English sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth columns range the land unhindered and unafraid.

Mr. Willkie has been trying to pull Irish chestnuts out of the fire for the English with indifferent success. He is now considering China and we trust he will not forget Africa.

36-5-32

Listen, Bishop of New York, did you ever no a guy called the Prince of Peace?

If God is omnipotent, I do not ~~know~~ understand him. But if he is as worried and helpless in this world mess as we are, He has my soul's full sympathy.

I have seen the Tuskegee cadets flying and it was a soul stirring sight.

a Letter FROM SOUTH AFRICA

"I am a born Hollander, but British Subject and have been a temporary Secretary to President Kruger and also a former diplomatic representative, knowing not only Europe but also the U. S. A. where I have quite a number of acquaintances. I visited the States four times and know Mr. Pierpont Morgan (father) quite well, and other prominent people.

I am interested in the gradual development of the South African Negro. The government does already a lot for the natives, but it is by far not enough. I know the Minister for Native Affairs and am befriended with his Official Secretary and both of them would gladly help me, if I could raise the necessary funds.

Do you think that a general move among the 8 millions of Negroes in America could be made in favour of the very intelligent South African Bantu and Zulu? Supposing each American Negro would offer a dime, or still better a quarter we would arrive at a sum large enough to buy a very extended farm or land along a river in a healthy country, and begin to build a real town, with special schools, hand and home industries, farms ('model' ones) with first class dairies, price bulls and cattle, sheep, etc., etc.

It would be of course very good if a picked dozen or so of American Negro-Instructors would come here and help. I may say that I am a first class organiser, distinguished myself in organising help for the Russian Refugees (League of Nations) and also for the half famished Vienna children whom in 1920, by tens of thousands, our committee sent to Holland. I am an elderly bachelor, had my own farm in Russia (my mother had been Russian) with my own school, church, embroidery-industry, needlework, etc.

I would like to pick Negroes with fine voices and have an American vocal teacher teach them to learn choir singing with American songs: also to teach them dancing; and last not least, I am dreaming of a large training school for cooks, house maids and male servants, who after having finished 'our' school, would be able to get at once employment on much higher wages as the more or less uncivilized 'boy' from his Kraal. Also a first class orchestra I am thinking. Please do give me a hand. If necessary I might come over to your country and give interesting lectures to make propaganda for my intended scheme, if you think it would be useful.

As I say anything I would suggest with your moral and financial help, would be sure to be approved by the Minister for Natives Affairs, whose intimate friend is General Smuts.

Don't let us loose time: do it now! 'our' township, beautifully laid out with lots of trees and flowers and gardens before each cottage, with swimming baths, children's playgrounds, sporting grounds etc., etc. should become a model-place, to which from near and far even "white" people would travel; a kind of a show place besides the deep moral undertaking that it would represent.

Amsterdam News
27 February 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by
W. E. B. Du Bois

30-5-30

The United States diplomat to Bulgaria got into a cheap brawl at a liquor house by bribing the orchestra to play "Tipperary". Suppose the German ambassador to the United States should call for "Deutschland ueber Alles" in a New York night club?

A Baptist minister from Texas who has killed his man has just told the Georgia legislature that what Texas, Georgia and the world need is wholesale preaching on hell!"

A Negro weekly informs us that the Germans recently deliberately murdered two million Senegalese soldiers. The total population of Senegal in French West Africa is 1,790,000 and the total number of French soldiers killed in the First World War was only 1,350,000. We grow more like the white press every day.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

I have received from Father J. E. Coogan of the Society of Jesus and Professor of Sociology in the University of Detroit, the following letter: "Having for a long time been interested in your mighty efforts to better American racial conditions, I read with great interest such insight as you give into your mind in "Dusk of Dawn". There amidst much that impressed me favorably, I was distressed to note your very casual and half contemptuous treatment of religious matters very sacred to me. Is it really so certain that the fight of the French government against the Catholic Church (p. 29) was 'to curtail the political power of the Catholic Church'? Is that matter within the field of your special competence? And does not the contrasting attitude of secularism and of Catholicism towards the racial problem suggest that Catholicism towards the racial problem suggest that Catholicism deserves more than such a passing slur and deep silence? And then your treatment of St. Paul. You were seventeen, I believe, when you were given a doubtful construction of his, 'If meat maketh thy brother to offend . . .'; and in consequence you remark, 'I have never had much respect for Paul since.'

RP Now that manufacturers are censoring school text books why not let patent medicine quacks, loan sharks and gamblers have a crack? They have been frightfully maligned.

What saves that snap judgment from being the rankest prejudice, as great an evil in religion as in race? Perhaps if your mulled thought of Paul had been his, 'There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for you all are one in Christ Jesus,' your appreciation of him might be more generous."

To this I replied: My dear Mr. Coogan: I touch religion lightly in my writing because I do not wish to hurt any one's feelings and have the deepest respect for religious convictions. On the other hand, when I must express myself I try to express what I believe is true. I have made eight trips in all to France and I know something about French history. I think I am within the bounds of historical accuracy to say that the main fight of the French against the Catholic Church in the nineteenth century was a fight against the political power of the church; that there were other interests involved is true, but I believe the political aspect was the most important.

In the case of St. Paul what I was discussing was not what St. Paul actually said but the interpretation put upon his saying by the Fisk University church and the way in which that prejudiced me against St. Paul. That Paul did and said other quite commendable things I am perfectly willing to admit. I do not, however, regard him as among the great religious teachers.

Finally, as to the relation of the Catholic Church toward slavery, the slave trade and the Negro problem: I think that its moral delinquencies are indefensible and that it makes a po r showing as compared with current philanthropy. Notwithstanding the work of the individual priests and occasional general pronouncements, the Catholic Church defended the slavery of Negroes for four hundred years. Even today a black man in Uganda has a better chance to enter the priesthood of the Catholic Church than an American Negro and this will still be the truth as long as the Irish hierarchy dominates. Most Catholic seminaries will not even admit a Negro and the only one that is trying to train Negro priests is German in foundation and conduct. I do not for a moment discount the work of Saint Benedict, Peter Claver and Katherine Drexel. I admire the forward movement in labor relations undertaken by Father LaFarge and others, but in general the struggle of the black man in America for recognition of his manhood rights has been carried on in the face of the reaction and studied indifference of Catholics.

36-5-31

I am sorry to offend your convictions by these statements but I am a student of the truth and not a missionary of religion.

Amsterdam News
15 March 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Beachem of England who makes pills and orchestras says that swing has destroyed white prestige. Apparently it needed little for its destruction.

We seem to remember that less than a thousand years ago some colored politicians suggested that Willkie was German. For that indiscretion they lost their jobs. Now Willkie comes bouncing back from Europe and suggesting what "we German-Americans" should do.

We must stop and stop forever the custom of speaking of a few privileged nations as the World, and calmly ignoring the majority of mankind. This is but the twentieth century's counterpart of speaking of a nation's aristocracy as the nation and ignoring nine-tenths of those who are common folk.

Modern education is only partially successful. It has evolved an intellectual elite and a small body of scientists; also a large number of partially educated people and a vast number of folk who must be called ignorant. We can do better than this but it will cost money. While there is no limit ~~for~~ to what we are willing to spend for war there are distinct limits as to what we wish to spend for education. Therein lies our present paradox.

The current organization of industry, call it what you will, with its profits, wages, interest and capital; with its credit crises and depressions, its unemployment and booms is too imperfect to last. It must be changed and bettered, and science and reason must do the job and begin it now.

One of the many astonishing occurrences today is the publication of an autobiography but one of the greatest leaders of India. It is accepted ~~to be~~ as true, restrained and beautiful and loyal in essence to the England of which Nehru is a subject, and yet this same England fighting for survival and for "democracy" has locked Nehru in jail and is keeping him there.

Current modern culture has sinned against the light. It has technical mastery of material and force such as mankind never knew today, yet it refuses to permit a mass attack on poverty so as to eliminate ignorance, disease and crime. Instead of this it wills war.

A hundred years ago in 1841 the English seized Hong Kong, China, with far less right than the Japanese had in seizing western China. The only excuse which England had was that she desired to force the selling of opium which she raised in India on China, ~~which~~ China had tried to stop its people from using this drug. Every device of cheating, bribery and force was used until at last Hong Kong was seized as a base where England could smuggle opium into China against the will and well-being of the Chinese nation. Today, and in defense of America, we are concentrating in eastern waters warships, so as to secure the ownership of Hong Kong to England.

Amsterdam News
22 March 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Peyton Anderson sends a dime to my South African Dutchman but adds "Tell that Hollander just what he can do. Then please give my dime to the first person you know who senses a pole cat as an integral of 99.9% of all white bulls."

We have now entered the war to save Great Britain for reasons best known to somebody beside me.

36-5-34

The defense of French Africa will be carried on by black men and black men, English and native, are helping to emancipate Ethiopia. Yellow Asia has compelled white France to give back to Siam the land she lately stole.

Germany rules Europe from the English Channel to the Black Sea and from the Vistula to the Atlantic. Even at that the sun sets on her empire and there are some people free of her toils which cannot be said of England.

THE NEGRO POPULATION

The first estimates of the Census of 1940 indicate that the Negro population of the United States is probably more than holding its own. The growth of this American element from 1790 has been astonishing. We numbered one million persons at the beginning of the nineteenth century and 8,833,000 at the beginning of the twentieth century. In 1940, it is estimated that the non-white population of the country (~~of which Negroes form over 95%~~) numbered nearly thirteen and a half million. This population has increased during the decade 1930-1940, 7.7% as compared with an increase of 7.2% among the whites. No estimates are yet available concerning the proportion of this colored group which is Indian, Japanese, Chinese, etc., but in 1930 Negroes composed 95.2% of the colored group. The proportion of colored folk in the American population appears to have slightly increased. There are probably about twelve and a half million in the United States. The colored American population has had the greatest increase in the cities where it has increased in the last decade by 19%. On the other hand, it has actually decreased in the rural areas. In each of the twenty-six states where data by color is available the proportion of colored people at work is much greater than that of the whites due to the large number of working colored women. In the United States as a whole over 37% of colored women fourteen years of age and over are at work while the corresponding per cent for white women is twenty-four per cent. The labor force of the nation in 1940 was composed of forty-seven million whites and five and a half million colored. The whites represented a little over one half of the corresponding population while the colored people represented fifty-eight per cent.

A BOOK OF THE MONTH CLUB

Nearly fifteen years ago when the book of the month club idea began to spread several of us tried to explore the possibility of a Negro Book of the Month Club. We went over the matter very carefully with publishers and those who are expert in these lines, and concluded that we could not expect from the colored public sums large enough to make the Club go, and beyond that, we were not at all certain that every month there would be a book that we would feel like recommending.

I am sure, however, that each year there is published a book by a Negro author, or a book on a subject in which Negroes are interested written by a sympathetic white author. We ought to induce 1,000 or even 2,000 Negroes to buy such a book simply by calling it to their attention, and by stressing the fact that it ought to be bought. This would involve a judgment by a jury whose names should carry conviction.

With a careful beginning ~~with effor~~so as to make the selection of the jury as catholic and authentic as possible, I think the thing might go. The main point is, if Negroes are going to find publishers who are willing to take the risk of publishing their thoughts, the publishers must be assured of a sale. Any publisher who can see a sale for a thousand books will be willing to publish almost any book. A Negro Book-of-the-Year Club with a thousand subscribers would, therefore, insure the publication of a large number of worthwhile books.

36 5-35

Amsterdam News
29 March 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

The first military medal awarded in the war in East Africa was given to Corporal Asamu of the Kings African Rifles. Should we cheer or weep?

Street cars in Warsaw are marked Benutzung durch Juden verboten. We are more terse in the United States "whites only".

A Canadian back from the Congo tells of the primitive tribes scaring their children with stories of civilization.

A drunken Italian citizen of Trieste called a policeman an "Englishman". He was sentenced to ten months imprisonment.

AGAIN MY CATHOLIC FRIENDS

I have an astonishing postal card from Miss Bernadine C. Blessitt of 204 West 140th Street which reads "In reference to your answer to Rev. Coogan in last week's Amsterdam News - I am in accordance with your criticism of Roman Catholic policies toward the race problem, and I am a Catholic myself, coming from a family that has been Catholic for four generations. However if we can be polite enough to address Protestant ministers by their clerical titles, why should not the same regard be shown a Catholic priest who is under more strenous vows and therefore more deserving of the title of Father or Rev. Father? A man's title is the badge of his profession and he is properly addressed by that title whether he be doctor, dentist or priest. 'Dear Mr. Coogan' is definitely out of form. Such gross disrespect is inexcusable unless due to ignorance."

This is for me quite unanswerable.

SOUTH AFRICA

There has been rioting in South Africa between those in favor and those against the war. Two hundred thirty persons were sent to hospitals with injuries. Beside these ~~were~~ eight civilians and seventy-five soldiers were arrested. Meantime the Union of South Africa has begun to recruit natives and colored persons for the war and many of them are already fighting in East Africa.

IN THE PHILLIPINES

Our Filipino cousins have their troubles. "Our tenant farmers are living and working under conditions that are onerous and burdensome. Rates of interest are usurious. The ignorant and the poor are exploited in different forms. In the rice provinces such practices have become institutionalized . . . . In some remote parts, even now, for every cavan of rice borrowed at planting time seven cavans of palay are paid at harvest time. Tenant farmers are used as the proverbial hewers of wood and carriers of water. They are not paid for labor in making improvements though these improvements result in the benefit of both the landlord and the tenant. They live in hovels; their yards are unkempt; their pigs are mongrel; their chickens are non-descript; in brief, they live in very miserable surroundings. On top of these, we find our farmers among the most inefficient agricultural producers of the world. Our methods are antiquated and wasteful. The fertility of our soil is being depleted rapidly and, with rare exceptions, nothing is being done to rebuild and improve it. Our population is increasing and the needs of our people are multiplying. Unable to supply our present requirements, yet we are draining our source of supply rapidly with little or no regard for the requirements of the generations to come. The people of our rural communities are living under pre-Magellan conditions. While in the centers of population we find running water, electricity, cinematographs, radios, modern means of transportation, and all the other modern conveniences, these are denied to the barrio inhabitants. While it is true that we did not have these things before, yet in the early days there was a sort of common denominator in our standard of living. The contrast between the rich and the poor was not so marked and consequently not so odious."

Amsterdam News
5 April 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Browder is sent to jail not for lying but for being a Communist. We may disagree with his beliefs but it is cowardly evasion to call it crime.

Our Lend-Lease Bill costs us four times as much money as the whole public school system of the United States in a single year.

If it is wrong to strike for higher wages, it is certainly right to strike for lower profits and high time too.

The Louisville-Courier Journal has unearthed a letter written home by Lieutenant Holcomb who captured the "Amistad" and its crew of slaves after they murdered their way to freedom. His comment is "You can have no idea of what these two whites have suffered!" We have a clear idea of what the sixty stolen Negroes suffered.

36-5-37

BASUTOLAND

Sixty thousand Basutos have been attending the installation of their new Paramount Chief. Seeiso Griffith was chosen to succeed his dead predecessor by the Pitso, the national council. He came dressed in a European suit and riding a fine black thoroughbred horse. He was greeted by tens of thousands of horsemen on the outskirts of Maseru. The heralds sang his praises according to the ancient rites and then the Chief dismounted, took a huge sword and went through the ceremonial dance as the people cried "Peace, Peace! Rain, Rain!" He begins his rule over 660,000 blacks in South Africa and is a direct descendant of the great Moshesh.

THE CALHOUN SCHOOL

The Calhoun School of Lowndes County, Alabama as Mrs. J. W. E. Bowen reminds us in Zions Herald, still lives. It was founded by two cultured New England women, Miss Dillingham and Miss Thorn, and through their efforts brought astonishing cultural contacts to the black belt of Alabama. It was a center not only of education but of land buying and art, and secured the interest of Thomas Wentworth Higginson, the Hallowells, John Bigelow and others. I remember my visits to this lovely and inspiring spot. The founders have passed on, the work lives.

FROM THE DUTCH WEST INDIES

From away to the south, four hundred miles beyond ~~Cuba~~ Haiti and just above Venezuela, comes an air mail letter to me from Neuberry M. Lardy of Orangestad, Curacao. He says "I notice many books written by you and your colleagues but the prices are too high for us. They would enlighten the Negroes here and make them more conscious of themselves if we could get them. May I suggest that, just as we can purchase the works of other races in cheap paper binding, why cannot the Negroes of America get together and do the same? Their work would be new to us and of great interest and thousands might be sold in a short time. I will do my best to help, for I feel sure that the venture would be both a financial and social success to the race."

Amsterdam News
12 April 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-38

My friend, Commander Romero of Peru, has been visiting Atlanta. His Peruvian friends resident here knew me, but assured him "Du Bois is a rabid pro-Nazi." It has taken me a good part of my life to explain and explain again ideas which I wish to promote. Of this I do not complain, but I do plead for at least willingness to understand before final judgment.

In this world crisis I believe in four things:

1. In revolution, that is, not in violence and murder, but in fundamental change particularly in the organization of industry:
   a. in production for use and not for private profit
   b. in planned distribution of wealth and services and not in chaotic gambling and ~~wealth~~ luck
   c. in the utter abolition of the paradox of unemployment in a world which desperately needs work of all kinds.
2. We have three proffered cures for the mess of our present industrial system: the first is the communistic cure which believes that production for use and distribution according to need and the abolition of unemployment can only be affected by violent immediate revolution. I do not believe that this is true but in the case of Russia, revolution came not so much by deliberate plan so much as by blind outside force. Since it has come I hope that democracy in industry will eventually replace bureaucracy.

3. Hitler's cure is state capitalism and the dictatorship of a single political party acting in the name of a so-called master race. The rationalization of German industry is a splendid accomplishment, but the utter repudiation of democratic control and the silly worship of race, make this aspect of Hitlerism one of the most dangerous things in the modern world.

4. The English cure, which America echoes, is "democracy"; but the British Commonwealth of Nations is not a democracy and the United States is not controlled by democratic methods. Above all neither England nor America have any clear plan to introduce production for use, planned distribution and the abolition of un-employment. To be sure the English Labor Party and the American New Deal are looking in this direction but they are violently opposed by the unbroken English aristocracy and by the entrenched and organized wealth of the United States. So long as these groups are in power, it is idle to call the present war, led by them, a war for democracy. In consequence of these four beliefs I cannot see in the present war any answer to the critical problems that front the modern world. I do not regard Russia as a scapegoat but rather as the greatest single hope for future industrial democracy and her neutrality in the present conflict is the best promise for that hope. I do not regard England as a suffering saint. For all the sorrow and blood and disaster that have followed upon the masses of her people I am deeply grieved but I am unable to forget that her ruling classes have for two centuries made other people suffer in the same way and with no clearer cause than the English are suffering today.

I desire the defeat of Hitlerism so far as Hitlerism stands for the denial of a people to have a voice not simply in their own government but in their conditions of work and in the distribution of wealth; and in so far as Hitler foolishly advocates a theory of race which has no basis in science, philanthropy or common decency. But on the other hand, the mere defeat of Hitler is no final gesture and no guarantee for the regeneration of the world unless that defeat leaves untouched the national control of capital and the raticnal planning of the economic state which Hitler to be sure did not initiate but did expand and perfect. So far as England and America wish to smash this aspect of Hitlerism along with his dictatorship and race theory, insofar they are wrong and dangerous.

Amsterdam News
19 April 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

If Hitler triumphs the world is lost; if England triumps the world is not found.

36-5-39

England is re-conquering Ethiopia with South African troops. This bodes ill for an independent Ethiopia.

Hitler has changed plans: instead of smashing England he is trying to hammer Europe into one self sufficing fist and then dispute Britain in Asia and Africa. To this there is one answer: the pawns, yellow men and black, must assert their own will to resist alien dictatorship either German or English.

AGAIN THE CATHOLICS

One cannot indict a race and one cannot indict a church. Any great human organization shows every human mistake and foible. At the same time I resent the assumption of Harold A. Stevens of New York that only a Catholic knows the facts about the Catholic Church or has a right to criticize it. He says, for instance, "There are 386 priests devoting full time to the Negroes in the United States and approximately the same number giving a portion of their time to work among the colored." I do not doubt but what there are seven hundred and fifty Catholic priests working among colored people today and I am glad to know it, but I wonder why Mr. Stevens did not mention the number among these who are colored, because that is the gist of my criticism. It has long been the policy of the Catholic Church to train a native priesthood; to train Irish priests to sheperd the Irish people; African priests to shepherd black folk and Asiatic priests to guide Asiatics. Why is it that among American Negroes they do not follow the same practice? Why is it that Mr. Stevens fails to mention the number of colored priests among these seven hundred and fifty? Is it because he is ashamed of the number? If he is not, I am. And I print the number here in capitals, FIVE. In other words in all these seven hundred and fifty priests ministering to American Negroes only FIVE by the latest statistics that I can find (and possibly I have not found all. It may be six; it may be seven. Even if it is ten it is a miserably inadequate number). Why is this? I wonder if the answer lies in a cryptic phrase which creeps into another letter from Father Coogan of Detroit when I complain of the few American Negro priests and of the generous admission of the Negro to priesthood in Uganda. He says that the Negroes of Uganda are "unspoiled". It would seem that American Negroes are spoiled.

Isn't this a hell of an answer!

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING

The East Tennessee News reports that in my recent speech at Tuskegee I "clearly indicated" a "change of attitude as concernsplacing higher education above that of industrial training." The News is quite wrong. I still maintain that the end of any education is not to make men carpenters but to make carpenters men. I said this forty years ago and I am still repeating it with increased conviction.

Amsterdam Star News
26 April 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

There is only one enemy of Democracy and that is Poverty.

There is one and only one father of crime and disease and that is Poverty.

There is one and only one permanent program of Reform - abolition of Poverty.

THE WAR ON POVERTY

In February, 1939 Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary of Peoples Lobby wrote an article entitled "Americans must win the war on Poverty or be Kidded into Foreign Wars"; we quote at length "A nation's internal or domestic situation profoundly affects its foreign policy. America is today in almost the worst condition of its history. Our debt about equals national wealth. . . . It estimates that in November last year 21,300,000 people, or about one-sixth of our population, were receiving one or more forms of public relief. . . . Last year, 1938, the total relief bill was almost $3,000,000,000, or approximately three times as much as the bill in 1933. . . . At least a million farm families are on relief or need help. We have at least 2,000,000 surplus employables for our economic system. In 1935, 742 corporations, about one-sixth of 1 percent of the corporations reporting, had - Over half of all cash, close to half of all notes and accounts receivable, less than three-tenths of inventories, nearly two-thirds of tax-exempt investments, nearly two-thirds of non-tax-exempt investments, nearly half of all capital assets, and approximately two-fifths of other assets. Most of these corporations, including major railraods, were and are heavily overcapitalized.

"Americans are now in the grip of the world's worst dictators - the one-tenth of the people who own most of the means of production, distribution, and exchange of everything the American people need to eat, to wear, to live in, to work in - and to enjoy a decent American standard of living. About a third of Americans can't get by on what they are permitted to produce, another third can barely get by, but can't put anything by for old age or unemployment or sickness, and only a third live high or near-high the big owners and their hangers on.

36-5-40

"Government has made laws which let a few people determine what most of us can have, and only Government - that is Congress chiefly, and State legislatures, can change laws, so people can produce and consume what they need. Can Government make private owners of factories, oil wells, and mines produce peoples' needs? Government can meet those needs when Government owns factories, oil fields, mines, et cetera, and taxes land speculators so people can rent land to raise crops. The untaxed value of land in New York City is over $7,000,000,000.

"Appeals to patriotism are Governments' favorite way of getting people's minds off the pangs of their poverty. Don't be fooled by the Governments's talk about lining America up with the 'democracies' against the 'aggressor' nations. The war to make the world safe for 'democracy' failed. Can a war to save imperialist 'democracies' work any better? Don't you need to be protected from the system we helped save in the World War, which denies you a job, and refuses you a hand-out when you can't get a job from it? War is supposed to make us forget our poverty and is apt to make it a jail offense to mention it. Let's get the low-down on the 'have-not' recent aggressors' and the 'have' old-time aggressors, for Great Britain is the mother of imperialism.

Amsterdam Star News
3 May 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

When opportunity knocks be at least in telephone connection with your home.

Here is the paradox: a Negro cannot enter industry by scabbing on white labor and yet that is the only way by which a Negro can enter industry.

Who is responsible for the non-employment of Negroes: the employer who won't hire him or the employee who won't work with him or both?

If you were offered a job only on condition that you work with Negroes would you take it? Careful now, this answer is serious.

36-5-41

A TEACHER

I remember very pleasantly a visit I had in Youngstown, Ohio a number of years ago when I met a successful colored lawyer W. M. Howard. Mr. Howard writes me saying "Since you were last in our city we have succeeded in placing one Negro teacher in the mixed school system. Her name is Miss Mary Ella Lovett and she is obviously a Negro. There is always a funny as well as a tragic side to many of our successful fights for Negro participation in this democracy. The Board of Education adopted a rule in 1916 that all applicants for positions in the school system must be residents of Youngstown. Negroes in this community knew that for twenty-four years, but made no preparation, so when the opportunity came we had only one Youngstown Negro with a High School and grade certificate from the State Department of Education; consequently, we hadonly one eligible.

"Dr. Pliny H. Powers, the former Assistant Superintendent of the Cleveland, Ohio, school system, is our present superintendent of schools under whom this advancement was made. His children were taught later by Miss Chestnut, one of our Negro teachers in Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Powers has established a system of having annual examination conducted, I think under the auspicies of the National Educational Society or the National Teachers Association. Negroes know that, but in the last examination had in February of this year only one person took it. So you see we have an opportunity, but we are not doing much with it."

SLAVES

I have read in the American Weekly an interesting comment on early American slavery by Dave Landers: "Course, Africans weren't the first slaves in America. In the British colonies were a few Indians, just like the Spanish had in South America, but they didn't take kindly to slavery. Just curled up and died. Then they brought out indentured folk from England; convicts, folk who sold themselves for their passage and the guarantee of a living. Colonists asked for condemned felons to be sent to the plantations, so instead of hanging them they transported them to the Virginias and so on. I often wonder how many of the fine old families had a gallows for a family tree. After the battle of Worcester in 1650 over 1,000 Scotsmen were sent as slaves to Amerida, and eighty years later Jacobites were transported regularly.

"Course there were Africans in the Spanish Americas and West Indies. That started when a fellow named Las Casas, who believed as most Christians did that it was wrong to enslave Christians but okay to put infidels into slavery, suggested that as Africans were infidels it would be a good ideas to catch a few to work in the Americas.

"That started something."

Amsterdam Star News
10 May 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

By

W. E. B. Du Bois

Read and think on these words:

24-5-93

If thirteen million people starve to death, it is because they are stupid.

Many American Negroes today are virtually starving.

There is no such thing as lack of useful, needed work.

There is wide and dangerous lack of adequate wage and income for certain individuals

Facing these paradoxes the world is changing its economic organization today to meet them and is planning further change.

We as a minority group must plan also, not in opposition but in intelligent accord with this general world planning.

We must especially beware of propaganda and distortion as to the present economic conditions and changes in the world.

1. We must not assume that business enterprise and economic welfare are synonymous terms and assume that because a business is profitable it is for that reason beneficial to the race or nation.

2. We must not assume that because racial organization cannot hire thirteen million Negroes, it cannot and should not hire thirteen thousand or more.

3. Because, as a minority group, we must in the main conform to the national economic patterns, is no proof that we cannot by intelligent action influence these patterns to our advantage.

Finally, we must get at the facts by the latest scientific technique:

We must gather, study, test, and interpret these facts.

Within limits of law and order we must experiment with and test remedies.

We must remember that the starvation of Negroes in the United States benefits nobody; that full employment at a living wage for all Negroes as well as all whites, is at once the greatest patriotism and the greatest defense against war and evil.

The FIRST PHYLON INSTITUTE and Twenty-Fifth Atlanta University Conference took with them ~~two~~ subjects for study and discussion in preparation for another Meeting in 1941.

In preparation for this conference I sent out April first a call. May I repeat it here?

36-5-43

The bell has struck for the long wished planning of the American Negro's path to economic independence under the guiding leadership of a Talented Tenth.

It was emphasized in the past that training for skills was absolutely necessary for the Negro. It was added that skilled training alone was not sufficient when skills changed, prejudice increased and national unemployment forced us to idleness. It was perceived that in such case higher education must furnish such trained leadership as would guide the mass of American Negroes out of unemployment and exclusion from skilled trades into new methods and fields of earning a living, new ways of abolishing poverty with its evils of crime and disease, and enable us to build a self-sustaining culture in America with a blossoming of art and literature.

But this is only possible if our educated Negroes use their ability and training, not simply for their own profit; not simply for conspicuous consumption; not simply for imitating the mistakes of a decadent civilization now crashing in shameful ruin.

We can only save the world and ourselves if we use our knowledge, our brains and our efforts to begin the planning of a new civilization such as will serve the needs rather than the whims of men; will produce goods for use and not simply for private profit; and will distribute goods and services for the well-being of mankind.

This will be no quick, easy job. It will require the painfully and carefully planned effort of many years merely for reasonable beginnings and it will look to a hundred years of experiment, trial and error, and steady growth for the realization of its full fruition.

This movement should confine itself to no artificial lines of color, race, nationality nor geography; but it must begin now and here with our black folk of America because ours is the instant need and the beckoning opportunity.

Let us gird ourselves carefully and deliberately:

1. To learn what our present economic condition is, not in vague generalizations; but in minute, careful, historical and factual study covering the whole United States and penetrating every state and locality.

2. As we know the truth, historical and present, let us begin slowly and persistently to plan the remedy – to lay down long term plans with infinite pains and never satisfied experiment:

(a) To put the Negro to work.

(b) To ensure for him a decent wage and a civilized standard of living.

(c) To organize his consumers power.

(d) To introduce into his own efforts democratic control of industry and income.

(e) To build eventually on this solid sub-structure of self-support, a political power for organizing real democracy based on government of the people, for the people and by the people, and extending into the control of property, income and industry.

(f) Finally and primarily, to build a new world of culture by loosing human talent of every kind from the chains of poverty and prejudice so that the world may sing and paint and mold, write and portray and say with voice and action whatever it will, unfettered and unrestrained. Not in war, violence, agitation and hatred come peace and civilization but in creative work, human cooperation, the equality of the souls of men and utter freedom of truth and fantasy.

Amsterdam Star News
17 May 1941

36-5-44

AS THE CROW FLIES

by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Lest we forget: This is Spring.

There are little light green leaves and ever more beautiful flowers.

There is the gentle patter of rain giving the earth new birth.

This is a world where "every prospect pleases and only man is vile."

One man is dead who ought to have lived forever: Charles Edward Russell was one of the men which this world is least able to spare. I think perhaps looking out from his high window he was glad to die.

THE GREAT SMOKIES

I have just ridden through the Great Smokies from Sevierville to Clingman's Dome, six thousand feet above the sea, through Bryson City over to Murphy and Neal's Gap down to old Dahlonega, to Roswell and Atlanta. It was a dream of beauty and resurrection to look down from bare and wind-swept heights to all the hundred shades of green in the lush vale below, to see the dogwood and the laurel and tiny blooms and vines, to realize the great unfettered strength of these vast mountains and swim and whirl along the roads above, beneath and between them. It was another higher and sweeter world. It was a revelation of springtime and beauty and of the way that the earth out of the destruction of storm and the masque of snow comes forth dressed for a new life and new hope and new realization.

THE TRADITION OF FISK

There are many institutions larger than Fisk University and far more sumptiously housed. Some of the greater and older ones have tradition upon which they may look back, and which uphold their faith in the future but I know of no American institution which has so romantic a past and one which still lives in the vivid present as Fisk. I sat in chapel and looked up at the picture of the Jubilee Singers, some of the faces are beautifully done and on the whole the posing is not bad. The Dutch painter who did it, could not paint a black skin. He could not conceive it; and yet with all its shortcomings, here is that astounding story: a story of a group of young people singing new and weird music; the hesitation with which white folk first heard it, shunting the dark singers to the loft, lest they startle religion; and then the beginning of that triumphant crusade in Beecher's Plymouth Church, all over the churches of the North, in Europe before kings and emperors, the world over. And then at last they bring back money to build Jubilee Hall. There is no building in Europe, Asia or Africa much less in America that affects me like Jubilee Hall. It leapt full-built from the throats of singers. It was the first miracle of the Negro folk song. We celebrated yesterday seventy-five years of the life of Fisk University.

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS

I had rather unusual greeting when I came to Springfield to speak for the Pathfinders and other organizations. Standing beside the mayor and a Citizen's Committee I saw first Lincoln's Monument and Borglum's writhing countenance of the dead emancipator set[illegible] before it. I went in and put a wreath upon his coffin and then I met the governor. It was all simple and touching courtesy which I appreciated. It was easy to talk to that audience.

CLEVELAND AND CHICAGO

The forum habit, after many a struggle, I think is growing stronger among colored people. I mean the habit of hiring and paying a speaker who has something to say worth hearing and then giving him an audience and asking him questions. I have seen the custom grow in Indianapolis and Detroit, and this year in Cleveland and Chicago. It is the finest approach to intelligent democracy which our age has invented and an off-set to dull sermons and orations which have neither content nor real knowledge. The audiences in the four cities mentioned, mainly colored, compared favorably with the Saturday Lunch Club of Minneapolis.

Amsterdam Star News
24 May 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Hess was the one Nazi leadern concerning whose honest beliefs and lofty idealism there could be no question; Goehring is a fat Junker and Goebbels is Mephistopheles.

All Haile Selassie, King of Kings and Welcome home again!

The frankest failure of American democracy is open confession that the nation cannot tax the rich and must loot the poor in order to defend the nation.

How about lynching Lindbergh and Wheeler and arranging for the beatification of Dorothy Thompson?

THE TWIN CITIES

I have recently addressed two thousand students at the convocation in the great Northrop Auditorium, University of Minnesota. The provision made at this astonishing institution of learning for its fifteen thousand students is overwhelming. One wonders on the one hand whether the fortunes spent and the efforts put forward are really appreciated and worthwhile. There is, for instance, the new Coffman Union where I sat at lunch and answered questions. There is so much of museum, publication, radio, recitation room and laboratory in this city within two cities that one looks South and wonders how little beginnings of university training can cope with and rival this. The answer is neither clear nor easy. I spoke to the homelier and much more unified group at Macalester College and to the Department of Sociology down at Evanston. The education which I received in these three lectures was worth the effort.

36-5-45

FROM YALE

"Incidently I think that it is possible at least at Yale to get a thorough appreciation of the importance of the Negro in American life, an understanding of his history, and a desire to make by objective scientific procedures contributions toward the solution of problems of Negro life. I honestly do not believe, though I do not know, that a Negro college could give me a more fundamental, a more objective, and at the same time a more appreciative, knowledge of the history and culture of our race, insofar as it can be obtained through such indirect experiences as lectures and reading. Dr. Davie tells the story that, when he was teaching the undergraduate course in race relations, he was asked by a Southern student whether he had actually known any Negroes who were cultured, refined, and intelligent. He replied, 'Why yes, in fact they are the only Negroes I know. I admit there may be others but I just do not know them'. He reports that the Southerner was astounded and that the rest of the class roared with laughter."

(final sentence) Well - if the American Negro is not interested in his African cousin, or not yet interested, tackle him by the Prestige question.

FROM SOUTH AFRICA AGAIN

I am delighted with the contents of your note and not a bit discouraged. If the American Negroes, apart from the "local"-American and burning question I think I am acquainted with, would take up the matter as you and I wish it, it would greatly add to their prestige, internationally add, all over the world. Look at the Jews. Whether we like them or not, we cannot help admiring them for their admirable unity and powerful activities among exclusively the Jews all over the world. ~~Jews of different trades if I may say so, different characteristics, habits and ways: compare those of North Africa, of Greece and Turkey, of Asia with those known in the United States and you will hardly recognize them as brother-Jews, I mean as belonging to the same Jewish race. Maybe I had better said "tribe" instead of "Race".~~ However you will understand me. That organized ~~Great~~-Jewish Help materially before all, adds a great deal to the inter-Jewish Prestige. And why should not one of these very wealthy Harlem Negroes begin by signing a handsome subscription and why could not those eight millions of American Negroes bring up the dream of $800,000 - each one a dime - to begin with at once? You cannot imagine certain things that happen here to the "natives" as they are officially called here, ~~whilst, coloured are half-castes, a separate clann, which personally I do not appreciate~~. Only a week ago a fourteen year old boy had been beaten to death by his white master, who got away with 8 or 9 months of hard labour - one is revolted when one reads these stories which ~~do~~ repeat themselves."

add to the sentence

31 May 1941

Amsterdam Star News

As the Crow Flies
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Those who want to go to war are the ones satisfied with pre-war conditions. We who are dissatisfied are not so eager.

If Hitler wins, down with the blacks! If the democracies win, the blacks are already down.

The great corporations are so patriotic that they are paying five thousand dollars a day a page to advertise their unselfishness.

The Southern coal operators are working day and night for China but not for West Virginia.

I trust the readers of Negro Youth, Vol. I, No. 1 will not burst out in recrimination against its editors before taking careful thought. We might as well face the fact that black people in the United States and especially in the West Indies have long resented the attitudes of mulattoes. In the West Indies this resentment was for many years if not entirely today absolutely justified. The mulattoes did not donsider themselves Negroes and tried so hard to escape identification with Africans that very often the resentment and hatred between mulattoes and blacks exceeded that between blacks and whites and certainly that between mulattoes and whites. The mulattoes, of course, had their own point of view. By law, often if not always, they were free and heirs to at least some of their fathers' wealth and their low status was the result of illegal treatment and cheating. The history of Haiti and of most of the West India islands represents these unfortunate relations between full-blooded Negroes and half-castes. There have been echoes of this attitude in America especially in Charleston and New Orleans and among Northern Negroes particularly before the war. On the other hand it had been the determined policy of all Negro leaders in our time to ignore the difference between full-blooded Negroes and mixed bloods and the continual and increasing intermarriage between these two groups has erased for the most part the sense of difference. On the other hand there is still an attitude among Negroes, not only among mulattoes but among blacks to look upon black people and black blood as something undesirable and contemptible. The lot then of a black man even among his own people is often not enviable and involves more of discrimination and segregation than in the case of mulattoes. It is, therefore, quite natural that from time to time an outburst of indignations such as Negro Youth represents should come and that the hurt beneath that outburst should express itself in quite unjustified attack, slurs and innuendoes against mulattoes. So far as I am concerned I am not at all surprised at the revamped and refirbished and ancient lie that Marcus Garvey's expulsion from America was due to any action or wish of mine. There is ample printed evidence of the support and praise which I gave Garvey for much of his work and the warnings that I often voiced which if they had been followed would have doubtless left him alive today.

36-5-46

There is, however, one matter connected with this Negro Youth propaganda which is serious and disturbing and that is the attempt to use it for economic ends; for promoting cooperative effort among Negroes as Negroes for the sake of intra-race antagonism. This is not only bound to fail but looks very much like a deliberate attempt to exploit the ignorant. We have an idea that the real colored man in the woodpile here is "the founder and field director of the Consumers Economic Union."

Amsterdam Star News
7 June 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-47

The burning question is does democracy and the American way of life give anyone a right to oppose our entrace into the war.

If not, then we are always compelled to do what the owners of the press, the radio systems and organized industry order us to do which is exactly what I call dictatorship.

Of course, there is no real danger but it would be funny if they got all the Negro leaders roped and tied in Washington advising somebody to do what he never intended to do and never will do. In such case the ordinary black man out in the ~~sticks~~ Styx might get a chance to hear himself make a few broken remarks.

We used to plan to fly to heaven but today the earth seems to be flying to hell.

THE FRANCES PLAZA APARTMENTS

This is to repeat and emphasize an act which as the Survey Graphic says "deserves a monument". First, a Negro family in Philadelphia which had been on relief for five years wins $150,000 in a gambling game which ought to be illegal but is not.

There was every temptation and every expectation that this family would go crazy, act silly, waste its money and attempt social climbing. But Pearl Mason went to Raymond Pace Alexander and said "I been thinking that my people has got to get two things. They got to get theyselves homes where the roof don't leak, and they got to get hospitals."

After paying the federal income tax, the Masons had $95,000 and the first thing they did was to pay their debts and the first debt was $2,133 for relief. They did not have to pay this debt. The world owed them a living. The Quaker City had to keep them from starving. The nation had stolen all their labor for three hundred years and most of it for another hundred. They did not stop to argue about this. They went down and paid back every cent of relief which they had received.

Then they look around for a Negro architect. They could not find one for the job they wanted done. We always complain that there is no opening for the kind of thing that we want to do and then when the opportunity comes we are not ready to do it. This is a natural result of haphazard education and employment but nevertheless it makes us talk small. Then they ran up against American business and had to pay $30,000 for property which was not worth half that sum and what long since should have been condemned and seized. They tried to use Negro contractors and the contractors couldn't do the job. They had never had enough experience. They tried to borrow additional capital from banks and insurance companies which had so much money lying idle that they didn't know what to do with it. They were unable to borrow.

They prayed and under the circumstances, I don't see what else they could have done.

Finally, the New Deal, or what is left of it, helped them and the Frances Plaza Apartments went up planned for forty-three families. Two thousand other families are waiting for vacancies.

There are so many lessons to be drawn from this extraordinary event and I will not try to draw any more.

Amsterdam Star News
14 June 1941

36-5-48

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

If you want to lose friends and jobs just oppose war, defend strikes and declare that even communists have rights.

It is proposed to reduce the college course to three years during the war; but why so many years and why so short a time? Let's make it one year for every one forever with time out for inherited impudence.

When it comes to the right to vote, the power to pay two or three thousand dollars a page for advertising puts my little ballot and yours sound asleep.

Anybody with time to waste might now draw the deadly parallel column on Willkie the horny-handed dirt-farmer of that hick town in Kansas; and Willkie the London and Wall Street welcher.

HESS

The saga of Rudolph Hess shows that the Germany of the nineteenth century is not dead. In that Germany was always a streak of mysticism, a love of fairy-lore and a utter disregard of reality. One remembers what they used to say of Europe: to France the land; to England the sea; to Germany the empire of the air. This has been fulfilled in strange ways and the air which Germany dominates is hers mainly by flying might but there is still that upper ether, that idealism, that will impracticable desire for immaterial things which characterises Hess. I remember in 1936 when I head his impassioned declaration of devotion to Hitler there in Weimar where I walked as a student. No one could doubt his sincerity; no one could say here was a mere charlatan, a liar or a thief. He not only believed; he had the will to believe.

What he had done today is part and parcel of that idea. Whether he did it with Hitler's consent or in opposition to the whole Nazi set-up, matters little. He dared single handed and alone to try to bring understanding between two great nations who are murdering each other. Whether his mission fails or not, it was a fine gesture.

FROM CALIFORNIA

From Hertha Vogelstein: "I just finished reading Dusk of Dawn and with my best wishes for the new year of your life I want to combine my thanks for your having written this book.

"When looking back you will be aware of all the plans that have not been carried through, of all the aims that have not been attained, of all the high and, nevertheless, practical ideas that have not become true. This I fully understand since I am a German refugee who still believes - in spite of Hitler and his helpers - that some world-old schemes of humanity and mankind will not become reality but with the cooperation of the Germans and through the enthusiasm of the German spirit, - as it is manifest in Bach and Mozart and Beethoven; in Kant and Schiller and Holderlin.

"Being aware of all the failures, please, do not forget on your birthday what you gave to America and to the world by being this singular personality, by proving throughout a long life those abilities of mind and soul that may be most efficient when being permitted to work freely for the sake of mankind but that are shining forth even more when handicapped and kept in the background by the deficiency of that same mankind for whose sake they are striving.

"Leaving alone your personality for whom I have the deepest veneration, I admire most your flexibility in attacking the Negro problem from another standpoint time and again. The fact that you do not acknowledge the aversion between Black and White being caused by the difference of races but rather by prejudices and by the intention and the wish of white people for having an entire group of people working for them appeals to me very much. Looking at it from this point it would be an extremely important achievement if one day everyone would have to realize that the only differences in existence are those of 'being", 'Wesen' and of what we are longing for. It would be the start of a new world to be compared with the moment when Copernicus moved the Earth of Man from the center of the world rather to its periphery."

21 June 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B . Du B ois

I am an American. So what?

My country has gone to war but whom are we fighting and where and why?

What can we successfully fight for?

Meantime I am in Cuba. Cuba Libre! And Cuba is peaceful and beautiful.

CUBA LIBRE

Why have I never been to Cuba before? T he sail from the United States to Cuba takes less time than that from New Y ork to B oston. T he change in climate, culture and scenery is infinite and striking variety. Cuba has an history which I have known in theory and now see partially in fact. And Cuba is colored.

THE CUBAN COLOR LINE

I t is difficult to sense and set down with any degree of accuracy so curiously vague a conception as the color line. Yet here are certain facts which I give provisionally based on previous study and observation and on long conversation with people white, brown and black in Cuba. First of all the Cuban racial situation is quite different from that in Jamaica, Haiti and the United States. This arises from the fact that the mass of black immigration to Cuba in the eighteenth century was balanced and perhaps more than balanced by the flood of white immigration in the nineteenth century. The result has been an intermingling of blood which makes Cuba on the whole a country of octoroons. Or to put it another way, of the four million Cubans probably sixty per cent have more or less Negro blood; thirty per cent have evident and acknowledged Negro blood; and only eight per cent or some three hundred twenty-five thousand are what we may call pure Negroes. To this racial mixture has been added a small American Indian ingredient and a Chinese element from the importation of coolies in the early nineteenth century.

36-5-54

But this physical miscegenation is less significant than the culture integration. More than most countries of mixed Negro and white blood Cuba is culturally unified. In its estimate of great men there is no thought of color line: Maceo and Gomez, brown and white, have the most magnificent statues in the city and the culture contacts between black, brown, yellow and white are interrupted only by economic differences. No doubt in miscegenation the tendency has been deliberately to breed white but on the other hand the black element stands and now without prestige and honor.

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Cuba is noisy; the people, the carts, the autos, yell and bang and scream.

Cuba is clean. There is no smoke or dust and one can wear white and be happy. Also there are almost no mosquitoes.

Cuba is hot, but for many hours during every day and night there are breezes from the all surrounding sea and when they come your soul is tuned to enjoy them.

Cuba is colored; light colored broidered with black.

36-5-49

THE ISLAND

Many of us thoughtless think of London as England; of Rome as Italy and even of New York as the United States. In the same way persons visiting Havana might think they have seen Cuba. They should remember that formerly Cubans spoke of going from Havana to "Cuba" and by Cuba they meant the eastern province of Oriente with its capital Santiago. I have motored from Havana to Santiago, stopping in Santa Clara, Trinidad and Camaguey. I have motored eastward through and beyond Havana into Pinar del Rio. Thus in a short time and very superficially, and with but a smattering of Spanish, I have gotten an hasty view of this beautiful and historic and important island which is the sugar bowl of the world. I am amazed that more colored Americans have not made this trip, and that I have waited so long a time to make it myself.

COLOR IN CUBA

I come back to this matter which I have already touched upon, because despite its logical lack of importance, it has tremendous cultural and social implications and ~~nobody and~~ almost nobody talks about it.

I said before that Cuba is essentially octoroon. As I have traveled eastward in the island I am disposed to think that less than forty per cent, perhaps not more than twenty per cent of the Cubans, are of exclusively European descent. As one goes eastward the evident skin color increases; one sees many more Negroes in Oriente than in Havana. Nevertheless, the pattern is for Cubans gradually to breed white and to eliminate color. They are, however, in this way failing to make the most of the beautiful browns. You see brown skins them and see a good many of them but they are not as predominant as the near-whites. In other words, Cuba has not discovered, as we have in the United States, the beauty of the brown skin.

ECONOMIC AND POLITICS

You will find that the average Cuban of better class, both white and colored is critical of Batista. They tell stories of graft on a large scale and they are afraid of further revolution toward communism or gang rule. On the other hand, the reason for B atista is clear: he represents the revolt against American capitalism and its Cuban representatives. There is political graft by American and English capitalism as represented in the West Indies and South America by industrial graft. It is the monopolized power of taxing the masses to the limit for transportation, for much of the food, for all public services and for many raw materials. Thus Cuba spells poverty. T he West Indies spell poverty. Wealth and riotous wealth is only manifest in the great white capitals of the world. White Americans in a country like Cuba represent color caste which they can force upon Cubans by their economic power. B ut more than this, and the cause of this is that America has control of all powerful capital and capital Cuba needs and begs for on its knees. Cuba alone knows no color caste. It has no race segregation or race discrimination but Cuba it does have social patterns along the color line, enforced only by general consent, except when America puts behind it color caste, discrimination in wage, and military force.

Amsterdam Star News
~~5 July~~ 28 June 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

I have been having a month out of the world of war, and realize how little important news there really is.

I have spent a week motoring between Havana and Santiago de Cuba, twelve hundred miles, full of beauty and extraordinary human interest.

I have seen the city square and its meaning.

36-5-53

THE CITY SQUARE

I know the New England Common and the public squares of the continent but I had never seen anything quite like the Cuban city squares. I presume it is Spanish in origin, but in practically all Cuban cities of any size, like Santiago, Santa Clara and Matanzas and villages like Trinidad and Ciego de Avilla, there is in the center of the town a small square. There are trees and flowers, seats and wide promenades. Life begins in the square suddenly about sun-down and lasts until nearly midnight. Almost always there is a band and a well-trained band which plays neither jazz nor swing. Always there are pretty young girls promenading not necessarily chaperoned but very correct and demure. There is no flamboyant flirting, but the village is there or the city is there represented on the whole according to its social strata: there are white people, yellow people, brown and blacks. The blacks are less often represented but they are always there. ~~Sometimes but not always they are servants.~~ The band plays, the children romp, the men and women promenade, and there is a continuous murmur and noise of conversation, laughter and music. It is a lovely social occasion. There is no drunkenness but there is endless gambling through the state and private lotteries. On perhaps two sides of the square the radio is blaring the news. This keeps up until midnight; in some cities until early morning. Finally, the band plays the Cuban national anthem and marches smartly out.

THE SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS

The Governor of Oriente, the largest province of Cuba, kindly received me in audience about noon and offered a very delicious cocktail. Then when I asked him some questions about schools in Oriente, he said "the superintendent of schools, I am sure, will be glad to talk with you." So I went over to the office of the superintendent of schools. A colored woman, intelligent-looking and well-dressed, received us. She welcomed us to chairs and talked about the schools of Oriente. There are one million one hundred thousand inhabitants in Oriente which means that probably two hundred thousand and more are of school age. Of these ninety-five thousand are enrolled and the attendance is fifty-six per cent. I saw a map of the schools; where they extend back into the mountains and country districts. I saw some of the newer and finer schools along the highway which Batista has built. As I left thanking the lady for her kindness, I said to the interpreter: "And what position does this lady occupy?". "Oh," he said, "this is Senorita Causse, Superintendent of all the schools in the Province of Oriente."

THE HEIGTHS OF BONIATO

After an up-lifting experience always seek the heigths. The Governor sent his own car, his chauffeur and an interpeter and circling Santiago de Cuba we wound up into the great hills until we stood five thousand feet about the sea. Below was the pale cream of Santiago clasping the little bay in her arms with the jewel of Morro Castle. Around rose the hills green with palms, tier on tier; they are the hills of Haiti for yonderward and eastward and over the sea lies Sainte Domingue.

12 July 1941
Amsterdam Star News

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Out of another world of singular beauty with the confusing tracery of pattern, but echoing our world, I come back to solid earth.

The Russo-German War compels nearly all of us to rearrange our thoughts and forecasting.

In 1936, hearing the bitter and disgracefully lying attack of the Nazi assembled at Nuremburg upon the Russian state, I saw a Russo-German War as inevitable.

In 1940, the astounding treaty between Russia and Germany was logically defensible but made me change my previous conclusions.

Now in 1941, the attempt of Hitler to subdue Russia and to fight communism with everything that communism stands for except democracy, sets me puzzled and awhirl.

AFRICA

If Hitl r wins, and in the long run he cannot win, Africa will be parceled out between Germany and Italy. Its people will be subjected to an attempted caste system resembling slavery, except that they will be tra ned to certain modern techniques; techniques which if they are at all valuable to the conqueror will mean his eventual disaster. All of the new cultural patterns which have held revolt in Africa back: Christian missions, modern education and modern languages, will have their holds loosened and one may expect a frightful whirl of unloosened passion which no power in fascist Europe can long hold back.

ASIA

If Hitler wins, and he cannot win, there will be no recognition of Chinese or Indian nationality, so long as he can help it or has power to oppose it. India may temporarily fly to pieces through religious, racial and political faction but not for long. The power which has built the Indian Congress will eventually weld a new unity. And China will see her salvation not in white England and America but in brown India and yellow Japan. Logically Japan, if the fascists win, would dominate Dutch India, British East India and Australia. But that leaves the puzzle of the relation of Japan to Hitler and Mussolini. Eventually Japan must make a tremendous choice. Outside of her justifiable hatred of Great Britain and suspicion of America, she has got to realize that the new industrial revolution which has already essentially transformed the Western World which she has been imitating, must be yielded to in Japan; that will be easier than it appears, for as Matsuoka, himself, once told me: within and essentially, Japan is already communistic.

HITLER

But Hitler cannot win, simply because no such organization as he has today built up, can long command the brains, the loyalty and the man-power which will enable it to conquer the world.

Amsterdam Star News
19 July 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Georgia is beautiful this July beneath a flood of rain. Yesterday I saw a splash of earth, crimson brown with frame of ~~dark~~ lush green grass and tree; crepe myrtle flowered through.

36-5-51

We pass through the strains of change: wage after relief, want after wage, sudden wealth; sudden despair and for all of us, the future darkly veiled.

We have suffered, but nothing of all our ills, from the Middle Passage through the West Indian cane fields and the Southern cotton fields, has hurt more than the hell through which millions of human beings of all colors are being thrust today. Only we who have suffered can sympathize.

WILBERFORCE

The Bishops and trustees of Wilberforce cannot pass the buck to President Walker. He was not a canny, nor a tactful administrator; but he was a hard worker and he had brains; and he did one unforgettable thing for Wilberforce after a lapse of eighty-four years: he made Wilberforce for the first time in its history a class A college, recognized as such by all its fellow colleges in the Middlewest. For the first time a Wilberforce degree had recognised academic standing. In order to do this Walker ousted incompetent teachers and made enemies. Omelets call for broken eggs. In politics undoubtedly Walker was indiscreet; but my God! Wilberforce, itself, has been indiscreet in politics since 1889!

WANTED, A PRESIDENT!

Some young man is looking toward Wilberforce with shining eyes. He has finished his course; he has gotten his degree. Sneer and make fun of this degree business if you ~~want~~ will but it calls for hard work and sacrifice and it recognizes, no matter how imperfectly, accomplishment. This young man wants a job. He does not care how hard it is or how much it demands in long hours, suffering, and fatigue. He wants to do a good job and the trustees of Wilberforce are looking at him. But let me hand him one word of warning. Let him look the bishops and trustees squarely in the eyes and say: I will accept this position on one condition and that is that its honor and power be united; that I be not only president of Wilberforce University but also head of the State Combined Normal and Industrial Department. In other words that I be an executive not only with nominal but with actual power over the state budget and the church budget under fair rules of procedure. I will not accept the absurdity of two heads to one institution: one called president and the other controlling the funds. If you give me this position, I'll work and work hard, not to be bishop, but to make this institution worthy of its great name. If you won't give me this position, then you can let Wilberforce go straight to hell, whither she is already hastening.

Amsterdam Star News
26 July 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-52.

We do not know what is happening in the world.

We have no reliable data concerning the war between Germany and Russia. The Associated Press and others are fighting brave battles of guess work and pure fiction.

Yet the destiny of an era is being settled on the great plains where once Attila, the Hun, rushed to the overthrow of Rome.

REORIENTATION

The war between Russia and Germany reorientates all our thinking whether we will or no. Before that the colored people of the world and particularly those of Negro descent saw England fighting Germany and Italy in the name of democracy; and Germany and Italy attacking the problem of the relation of politics to industry. England was not a democracy and Germany was putting politics in industry not for the world's good but for the good of those who dominate the German state. If, however, England did win democracy might grow within her Empire by sheer force of logic and despite the past. If Germany won, after having established the principle that work and income are just as much objects of political action as elections, the very impact of this mighty idea might overthrow the faults and limits of class and race. The one thing that seemed in my mind to insure the spread of democracy in industry whether England or Germany won was Russia because Russia was one country which despite all excess, failure and back-sliding had frankly faced the greatest problem of our day: the problem of poverty. She did not solve this problem, but she faced it.

RUSSIA AND GERMANY

Now Germany has laid aside all camouflage. She essays to lead Western Europe against communism. She attempts to halt the spread of the idea that capital belongs to the state; that the state must control industry; that the end and object of all political and industrial life is the well-being of the working masses. This throws the world back a whole generation. There remains no question between democratic and totalitarian methods of government. There remains only the question of the object of any government. The hopes of the modern world rest on the survival of the new conception of politics and industry which Russia represents. England and America see this but see it dimly and act with hestitation. Neither of them really wishes to fight for the kind of industrial democracy which the best ideals of Russia represent, and which must eventually triumph or modern culture fails.

Amsterdam Star News
2 August 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-55

Where shall we fight? In Iceland, the Dutch Indies or Dakar?

Whom shall we fight? Germans, French, Russians or Japanese?

Why should we fight? To kill Hitler, to support England, to overthrow communism or to uphold monopoly in steel, aluminum and oil?

ECONOMIC ILLITERACY

Nothing is more important in the world just now than straight thinking in economics; otherwise we cannot understand present political problems. Take, for instance, the following fourteen statements:

1. Private property is created by individual effort
2. It belongs, therefore, to its owner to be disposed of as he wishes
3. If he squanders it, it is his to squander and his loss
4. If he saves and invests it, he deserves credit and reward
5. If he gives it away, he is a public benefactor
6. The state has a right to tax him but this right is limited and must not be carried far enough to be confiscation
7. The employer gives work to labor
8. For this he furnishes capital which is his property, and for the use of which he should be paid
9. The worker receives wages
10. The amount of wages is determined by the profit of the employer
11. If the employer cannot make profit he will not employ labor
12. The more profit the employer makes the more labor he is willing to employ and the higher wages he is willing to pay

13. Unemployment results when employers cannot make profits

14. The cure for unemployment is higher profits

Of these I consider eight abolutely wrong; five partly wrong and only one right. What I call economic illiteracy is the belief in the essential accuracy of all these fourteenth statements.

I should be very glad to discuss in this column or personally any of the statements made above and indicate the arguments and proofs for and against them. It is the greatest danger of our day that the social sciences which treat the most pressing of present questions are trying as completely as possible in practically every institution of learning to turn away from the real fundamental and vital questions and lose themselves in mathematics and statistics.

A

1. PRIVATE PROPERTY IS CREATED BY INDIVIDUAL EFFORT
2. IT BELONGS, THEREFORE, TO ITS OWNER TO BE DISPOSED OF AS HE WISHES
3. IF HE SQUANDERS IT, IT IS HIS TO SQUANDER AND HIS LOSS
4. IF HE SAVES AND INVESTS IT, HE DESERVES CREDIT AND REWARD
5. IF HE GIVES IT AWAY, HE IS A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR
6. THE STATE HAS A RIGHT TO TAX HIM BUT THIS RIGHT IS LIMITED AND MUST NOT BE CARRIED FAR ENOUGH TO BE CONFISCATION
7. THE EMPLOYER GIVES WORK TO LABOR ○
8. FOR THIS HE FURNISHES CAPITAL WHICH IS HIS PROPERTY, AND FOR THE USE OF WHICH HE SHOULD BE PAID
9. THE WORKER RECEIVES WAGES
10. THE AMOUNT OF WAGES IS DETERMINED BY THE PROFIT OF THE EMPLOYER ○
11. IF THE EMPLOYER CANNOT MAKE PROFIT HE WILL NOT EMPLOY LABOR ○
12. THE MORE PROFIT THE EMPLOYER MAKES THE MORE LABOR HE IS WILLING TO EMPLOY AND THE HIGHER WAGES HE IS WILLING TO PAY
13. UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTS WHEN EMPLOYERS CANNOT MAKE PROFITS ○
14. THE CURE FOR UNEMPLOYMENT IS HIGHER PROFITS ○

20-31-6

Amsterdam Star News
4 October 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-56

We always imagine war as a fight to the death between two principles We always imagine an election as a strife to the end between two ideas. Neither is either. In a war contradictory and paradoxical efforts are on both sides and what either side is really fighting for and desiring neither knows.

There has not been an election in any existent or non-existent democracy where the real questions and issues were clear cut and well-defined and put in such a way that one could vote.

In the present war the cause of our hesitation and double tongue is not merely that those who are mouthing democracy do not admit democratic methods in most of the work of the world ~~and~~ but also that those who are leading totalitarianism are not agreed either with themselves or with others as to the goal toward which they are pressing.

In the United States there are men like the President himself who are eager for the survival of England and willing to accept with that survival much that has made the name of England a scourge to backward and striving peoples of the world. There are those who like Lindbergh wish the triumph of that state domination of capital and industry which Hitler represents even if it brings with it the internecine strife between races and continents.

There are those who like the cabinet minister whom Churchill recently defended hope to high heaven that Germany and Russia will kill each other off and leave the world to the mercy of that imperial industry which once wrecked it and will wreck it again if given a chance.

There are those who believe as I believe that the Russian Revolution in its essence and depth of real meaning was greater than the French Revolution, with more vivid promise of healing the ills of mankind than any movement of our day and we believe this despite the murder of Trotsky and dozens of great Russians who dared to disagree with Stalin.

Under such circumstances what are we to do who sit and listen with nervous folded hands and see the contradiction and paradox builded by the hands of others? One thing we can and must do: know the past; watch the present; and think clearly and unwaveringly toward the future.

Amsterdam Star News
11 October 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

698

Knockouts by Joe Louis are rapidly ceasing to be news.

Pity poor Martin Dies whom Roosevelt is now feeding red herring for breakfast.

And where, may we inquire, is doughty Bishop Manning with his anti-Russian crusade?

Alas, for all friends of Peace and Freedom.

36-5-57

IRONY

I never pen a bit of irony but some reader standing on his head retorts. For instance, I sneered at the fact that "It is the deep and prayerful hope of many followers of Christ, that Germany and Russia will in the end kill and ruin each other, while England and America step in and sift the ashes."

Whereupon, Edna Glasgow of Brooklyn, New York writes me hastily and advises me to acquaint myself with "more knowledge of the strength, justice, and tolerance of Russia"!

And this to me who for thirteen years has defended Russian ideals ever since my first visit in 1928!

THE NEW WAR ALIGNMENT

I have just written an inquiring editor concerning the Russo-German and the Russo-British alliance and I have said: If the United States, Great Britian and France had not from 1917 to 1932 done nearly all in their power to prevent the Soviet Union from success in its momentous experiment in the economic rebuilding of Russia, Hitler would never have gained his present power. The great democracies forced the Soviets into the arms of Hitler. Now that he too has betrayed Russia and conquered France, it is not magnanimity but expiation for former sins which should make England and America join Russia in opposing Hitler with every effective weapon.

236

On the other hand the sudden American love for China is not repentance for the race hate that still excludes Chinese from our shores, but simply fear of losing to Japan the immense profit of exploiting Asia. The control of Asia by Asiatics could not possibly have such frightful results as the exploitation of Asia by Europe has already had. Let England and America get out of Asia, and clean up their own mess in the Western World.

THE MOVIES

Marshall Gray of Chicago writes me. "While discussing the movie industry as a propaganda agency to maintain the concept of Negro inferiority by always protraying Negroes in the movies as domestics or clowns I met with such a united protest of this belief of mine that I am writing to you to give your opinion of the matter, namely, that the movie industry is guilty of using the movies to maintain the theory of white superiority among the whites as well as among Negroes. I was so shocked that so many Negroes were willing to defend the movie industry that if you agree with me, I should like to see some effort made to acquaint the American Negro of this insidious propaganda."

I have replied saying "The attitude of the Negro toward the movie industry is something like this: Negroes have received some recognition and employment; the roles which they portray have improved somewhat in character during the last twenty years, that is, the Negro appears now not simply as clown and fool but now and then in more human and natural roles. On the other hand, all Negroes are quite aware that anti-Negro propaganda still goes on through the films; that in every scene that brings in a jail there will be Negro prisoners prominently displayed; that the Negro clown is still frequently used; and that almost never can a Negro take a role which involves real manhood.

357

The result is that Negroes hesitate in arraigning the movies because proper attack calls not for mass condemnation but careful reasoned yet persistent criticism. It is no failure to recognize what Negroes have done and been allowed to do in the movie industry, to say that their continued limitation for the most part to minor and disreputable roles, is unfair and a dangerous source of race prejudice. There is no reason in the world why the movie industry should not give Paul Robeson a role worthy of a man, and find a dozen Negro actors who could portray self respecting and heroic men and women.

36-5-58

105

FEDERAL SECURITY

The greatest step taken by the New Deal toward social reform in the United States is illustrated by federal housing and what is loosely called federal security. Throughout the United States, Negroes have been enabled to buy homes through the help of mortgages at a low rate of interest secured by the United States government. Despite the machinations of real estate agents this has been a tremendous boom to colored folk. In addition to this low-cost housing has been furnished by the Federal Government in a dozen different centers of Negro population North and South. These things are pretty well known but in addition to this the work which the government has done for social security is not so clear to the average man. The Federal Security Agency has recently issued eight brief pamphlets to explain just what the Social Security Act means and does. Six of these pamphlets are written by Ira De A. Reid and two by Charles L. Franklin. "Before August 14, 1935, when President Roosevelt signed the Social Security Act, most workers got no help when they lost their jobs. Only one State had a law providing for unemployment compensation - out-of-work insurance to tide people over until they found work once more. When bread-winners grew too old to work and lifetime savings were exhausted, they often had no protection against want because the program of 'old-age and survivors insurance' did not exist. For dependent children, and the blind there was often no help at all."

Today fifty million workers have Social Security Act number cards and three million needy old people, children and blind are receiving public assistance. Moreover, today the newspapers tell us that President Roosevelt is about to lay before Congress plans which will increase the number of persons aided to eighty million and extend old age insurance to farm laborers, domestic servants and workers in charitable institutions.

Du Bois, W. E. B.
Amsterdam Star News

36-5-21

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

It is the world baseball series that prevents the World War from driving us all nuts.

The Secretary of the Treasury asks an extra six per cent on unusual profits while Congress puts on many of us something like sixty per cent extra tax on unusual losses.

The death of Justice Brandeis reminds us that a multitude of Americans of highest respectability bitterly opposed his elevation to the Supreme Bench solely because he was a Jew.

It will be difficult for many Americans to remember that the constitutional right of free speech involves the right of Charles Lindbergh to say exactly what they do not happen to believe.

Ignorance is far more dangerous than Hitler. Why not kill it with a fifty billion dollar blow?

Harlem may cavort, but she will get a black member of the New York City board of aldermen only by having sense enough to give a solid vote to one Negro candidate.

THE PARADOX OF EDUCATION

A young Negro professional man writes me as follows:

"I have ~~just~~ purchased and read Dusk of Dawn which is just what I needed to crystallize the concept of race herein developed. I have long suspected it but I am too young to have drawn it from my experience and have not been educated to gain it by scholarship. Furthermore the interpretation of historical data, revelant to the Negro, was a technique unknown to me until after graduation from college. I therefore very clearly understood your description of the final, if later, realisation of the bonds between race, economics and politics. There are many in high places who still do not see it. All of this has caused me to doubt that a Negro can be best educated for his problem in life in a white school. I refer only to liberal arts colleges. . . . I am an A. B and M. D. with three months graduate work, all in white colleges. I have always felt that the very best education obtainable was not offered. . . . If I had been in your classes at Atlanta my whole life might have been changed. After reading Frederick Douglass' autobiography where ultimate solution is promised on the basis of a very exceptional life, and taking stock today to see how much of his prophecy has been realized; I was thoroughly disillusioned especially on the heels of interracial flare-up as a result of the defense program. I was disgusted and felt what's the use for a black man, until I came to the solution the chapter Revolution in Dusk of Dawn. Here is definitely an open door if we can find men capable of using it."

THE FACING OF THE PARADOX

There is no clear and final answer to this young man's dilemma but one thing we have got to face, and that is a persistent and exclusive education of colored American children in white schools not only will not solve our problems but will raise other and difficult problems. I was reminded this summer of a daughter of a friend of mine who returned from a well-known New England college. My informant said "I am sorry for her. She is graduated now and has no friends." On the other hand, there is no doubt that the average Negro college is more poorly equipped both in teaching force, library and laboratory facilities than the best white colleges and that consequently education there has more difficulties. But on the other hand, and this must never be forgotten: the spirit of manhood and womanhood, of pride of racial and individual accomplishment, cannot be found in white colleges; and those colored folk educated there in nearly all cases reveal their handicap in bitter criticism of their own people, basic ignorance of the Negro problem and exaggerated ideas of the eternal domination of the white race.

36-5-22

I do not for a moment advocate the withdrawal of Negro students from white colleges. On the contrary I believe they should press into them and take every advantage of their unparalleled offers for training. On the other hand, no Negro can be thoroughly educated for the life which he is to lead unless at least a part of his education is received in a well equipped Negro school with Negro teachers. The time will come when this will not be true but that will be long after all of us now reading and thinking are dead.

Amsterdam Star News
25 October 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-59

There are nearly enough Englishmen passing the hat in America to form a fair size army of continental invasion.

And by the by, who is the American secretary of State, Lord Hull or Cordell Halifax.

Lindbergh may be dead wrong but German victories make him sound like a prophet.

In return for dribbles of aid we are putting religious pressure on Russia but billions can extricate no promise from England to free India.

THE A. M. E. BISHOPRIC

Bishop Reverdy Ransom is a brave man and often during his long life has spoken true words at great cost. But he has made no more valuable contribution to the advance of the Negro race than his recent dramatic bringing to light of the widely alleged bribery in the election of African Methodist Bishops. Since the last general conferences of 1936 and 1940 there was widespread gossip. I have heard it openly stated that a successful candidate for the bishopric paid as much as four thousand dollars cash for his election. I could find no proof of this assertion nor do I know if it is true now, but I do know how widespread and circumstantial these accusations were. ~~made~~. The fact that today one of the oldest bishops in the church is taking up this subject leads me to believe that these charges have something behind them.

As Bishop Ransom says the African Methodist Church is the largest and oldest institution among American Negroes which is practicing a democratic form of government. The Church is self-supporting and elects its own officials. Nevertheless, as the Bishop says, some of the present leaders "allegedly spent money lavishly to procure their election". Is not the time come, when a thorough public investigation of this charge should be made by the church itself, helped by honest, reliable, disinterested outsiders?

JAMAICA

The present struggle for the effective right to vote in Jamaica calls for the sympathy of all American Negroes. In 1838, 255,000 slaves were set free in Jamaica for which the English government paid their owners nearly thirty million dollars. There ensured a period of severe depression, the crops of sugar and coffee decreased and all of this misfortune was promptly charged to lazy, black, free labor. Wages dropped as low as sixteen cents a day and then often were not paid. In 1849, the great Thomas Carlyle scolded the Negroes and told them that they would have to be "servants to them born wiser than they were" and that whites were wiser. It was at this time that the first great leader arose in the person of George William Gordon who began an agitation for reform. In spite of the fact that he was a rich mulatto and married to a white English woman, he saw the plight of the blacks and became a leader of the masses. Meetings were held; the blacks were aroused and in 1861 began a riot in which twenty-two persons were killed. As a result, the English governor executed three hundred fifty-four persons by court marshall and killed without trial eighty-five. In addition to these 439, one hundred forty-seven others were killed after the riot had ceased. A thousand Negro homes were burned and Negroes flogged and mutilated. Gordon, himself, was hanged. The constitution of the colony was withdrawn and in 1866 the island was made a crown colony with no right of self-government. ~~This story will be continued in our next issue.~~

In 1886, the voters were given a right to elect a majority of the legislature although the governor and his council still retained large powers including rights of taxation, control of the land and tariff regulations. Meantime while the status of the Jamaican peasant remains low, there arose a large class of educated, well-to-do Negroes and mulattoes. Better educational facilities were provided and commercial and political preferment. Nevertheless, all Jamaica clamored for broader political power and recently the British Colonial Office offered them a new constitution which increased their political power considerably but on the other hand left in the hands of the governor the right to veto all legislation and even to enforce his rules by proclamation. This the legislature refused to accept and we now await further steps on the part of the British Colonial Office.

36-5-60

Amsterdam Star News
1 November 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

BY
W. E. B. Du Bois

Man cannot live by complaint alone.

Servile, uncomplaining satisfaction with evil is death.

Holy Moscow is what the Russians used to call it. I can remember the magnificent blaze of its golden domes stretched across the plain as I saw it thirteen years ago.

36-5-61

Those in America who think that Russia and Germany will kill each other while we get a chance to loot Japan are bound to be disappointed.

There is no death; there is no failure; there is always hope so long as the sun rises day by day and the seasons pass in their glory.

EFFORT FOR UPLIFT

There are social movements necessary among American Negroes, which they themselves can forward despite economic dislocation, despite racial discrimination and despite world war. One is this matter of residential settlements. There have grown up in the recent past a number of excellent new groups of American Negroes in residential quarters. Theoretically many of us are ashamed of them and declare to God that we will accept no such residential segregation. This is, of course, poppycock. If we are going to develop as a group and as a race we have got to have places to live in respectable neighborhoods with congenial neighbors. We can seldom find these in white settlements. The best that can be found there is patient tolerance of our presence, with the very least possible social contact but with the manifest advantage of city and commercial services better than in most places. On the other hand, in settlements like Morgan Park in Maryland, Sixteenth Street in Washington, and at least fifty similar enterprizes, we can find greatly improved city services and congenial neighbors together with companions for our children and beautiful homes. There is no question but that this sort of development is going to increase among American Negroes and it ought to increase. Instead of being necessarily a step toward permanent segregation it will in the long run be a mighty stride toward showing conclusively to the world that a black neighborhood can be culturally as fine as a white neighborhood. If after that the whites continue to refuse social equality that is their burden and not ours.

CULTURAL CLASSES

There has long been and still is a certain inner stress and strife among American Negroes with regard to class differentiation. Theoretically our tendency has been angrily to deny we make any attempt to recognize and develop better classes as distinct from the masses and the semi-criminal and criminal outcasts. On the other hand and despite such disclaimer in sheer self-defence, class differentiation has gone on among us, is going on and must go on. It is not a question as to whether there shall be classes among American Negroes but rather the question is one of ideals according to which the classes shall be formed and methods through which such differentiation shall be realized. In practice, of course, this is exactly what we have been doing. When in earlier days mulatto free Negroes violently disassociated themselves from black slaves, this was not purely and fundamentally a question of color. It was a question of legal status, education and economic advantage. All these lay with the free mulattoes. Gradually this pattern has changed and is still changing. Today the main basis of differentiation is income and cultural training; while back of that lies the necessity of self-defense against criminal and anti-social tendencies. The Negro group as such has no police force. It must express its will by silent social pressure and not by force. But it is certain that it cannot allow open gambling hells and dens of prostitution to establish themselves next door. It has got to fight them and drive them away. They cannot countenance dirt, brawling and irregularities even when they are not entirely criminal. There must be certain standards of life and conduct. In order to protect and encourage such standards, there has got to be intelligence and sufficient income. Intelligence means that our boys and girls must go to good schools. Where the public schools are not good we must seek to better them and in the meantime, if possible, use private schools. But our children must be educated. In the matter of income we strike the greatest paradox. Some of the worst anti-social elements among us are making the best incomes. It takes quiet, firm and determined action to keep these elements out of contact and association with the better clas es. Yet it must be done and done openly and clearly.

36-5-62

All this brings us to a consideration of the masses. The overwhelming mass of colored people everywhere is still poor, relatively ignorant and exposed to disease and crime. On the other hand, out of these masses all of us have risen in the past; our better classes will rise from them today; and our hope for the future lies in the strength and ability that these masses can furnish. Our duty is to keep the paths open for the rise of the mass of the people and on the other hand to keep the door shut against the criminal, the lazy and the deliberately ignorant.

8 November 1941
Amsterdam Star News

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Eternal vigilance is the price of race equality.

Separate racial institutions are not the first but the last demands of men.

The cost of segregation is the price of manhood.

If the price of manhood is nothing but segregation; then pay it. But be certain of your facts.

All of which philosophy arises from the current discussion as to the training of Negro officers in the army. The problem that faced us in 1917 was different from the present problem. Then, in the rush of raising a sudden army, the authorities decided that white officers and Negro officers could not be trained in the same schools. We made every effort to change this decision but Woodrow Wilson was adamant. Today Franklin Roosevelt has decided other wise and Negro officers are to be trained in the same way and in the same places as white officers.

36-5-63

To some people this seems to settle the problem, but, of course, it does not settle it at all. The question remains: is this provision being carried out? Are Negroes being admitted to training for status as officers? How many are being admitted? Under what conditions are they being trained? Are they being treated with reasonable fairness and being given a man's chance? Or, under cover of vague orders and general permissions are they being systematically and silently, for the most part, excluded from this training?

Answers to these questions bring two extreme reactions on the part of colored people, each equally indefensible. We know, of course, that whenever colored men are given a chance to try for preferment in company with white men they are not going to be received with enthusiasm; they are going to suffer a certain amount of discrimination; and that effort is going to be made to discourage them. We expect this and all we ask under such circumstances is a reasonable chance. On the other hand, when some people here of these cases of discrimination they immediately throw up the sponge and ask for the drastic step of separate, segregated training.

On the other hand, some folk having won the theoretical battle of equal admission to opportunity, immediately shut their eyes and ears, and usually their noses, and declare that all is well because there is no segregation. But it does not follow that all is well. It does not follow that the discrimination discovered and noted is negligible, or what we might expect, and really does not hinder opportunity. It is quite possible that the hindrances are fatal and that under a fair facade of equal race treatment, lurks discrimination which will pretty certainly deprive us of Negro officers in the American army.

The same thing happens with regard to schools. We fight, and rightly fight, a proposed segregated school. Our fight is won. Promptly we go to sleep. We fail to see that while colored children are admitted, the criteria of admission is made unusually unfair and the treatment of the children after they get into the school is so insulting and discouraging that they soon leave. What really was called for was active determined investigation and pressure to make the theoretical equal opportunity of the schools result in equal opportunity and treatment. And this calls for just as much work and agitation and expenditure of money as the prevention of a separate school. If, finally and with every effort it is impossible for the children to get decent treatment in the school, a separate school is not only admissable, it is a thing that the victims have got to demand.

In the case of training of officers today, we do not have the facts before us. I know of no way in which I can learn how many Negro officers are being trained and under what circumstances, and yet these facts are indispensable in this case. They are indispensable in this case and in a hundred other cases of racial discrimination. We have organs which teach us to yell like hell when we are hurt but we have few which conduct tireless, continuous, calm search for facts and show us where and when and how much we are being oppressed and cheated. It is exactly this which we need. We ought to be willing to stand discrimination up to a long limit before we ask for separate institutions. But when discrimination passes that limit and when we know the facts and h ve them proven then we have got to decide which is more important: racial equality which is not equality, or segregation which at least in part will gain for us our main objectives.

30-5-64

What is our aim in the training of Negro officers. It is not mere desire for show, the gratification of Sam Browne belts and shoulder straps. It is because we know today at our cost that the mastery of this world belongs to the masters of technique; that only by knowledge of the ways in which the natural forces of this world can be captured and guided can we have a seat at the world's table of equality. We used to think that what was called for was mental efficiency and moral character. We were right but we only get a chance to show our mentality and our character as we become masters of that technique which is today reducing the world to slavery under Hitler and which yesterday under France and England was doing exactly the same thing on a less spectacular scale. If we can gain this mastery of technique through having our gifted young men trained as officers in a great modern army then we should be willing to submit to any hardship or discrimination in order to accomplish this. But if this is not being accomplished then no mere mirage of equality should keep us from demanding a separate camp where our aim can at least in part be gained. What then are the facts?

Amsterdam Star News
8 November 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by
W. E. B. Du Bois

"What can they be bowing under wild and wan?
Speak and push the clouds asunder; wave a dawn!
It will make them rise and wonder
Whither we are gone."

That America alone can whip the world, is a silly idea that imitates Germany in head-long, swine-like descent to the sea.

I am still watching, and as yet not a single peace project or scheme for re-building after this war, faces the future of Africa.

If La Guardia wins, democracy is justified of its works in New York. If he loses, democracy fails fatuously in the commercial and intellectual capital of the nation.

Can the white peoples expect to continue to rule this world by a monopoly of finance, capital and technique? Or would it be far wiser to distribute learning widely among the peoples, to make capital increasingly common property in ownership and to give the widest training to all classes and nations in modern technique? Of course, theoretically this is the only path to millenium. Practically, not a single nation on earth is willing to embark upon this program.

We need to emphasize and reiterate the strong words which Euclid L. Taylor of the National Bar Association voiced before the American Legion Convention in Milwaukee: "The ideology of the dominant white South is no different from that of Hitler. Hitler believes in a superior Aryan race to rule the world. The white South believes in a superior white race to rule the United States. Both Hitler and the white South believe that those whom they rule must be debased. It is the spread of this poisonous prejudice of the white South, in industry, in business, in the Army and Navy, which has driven the American Negro to fight for the right to fight."

A white woman writes me from California: "For some years, many years ago, I lived in the bayou section of the 'piney woods' north of Lake Pontchartrain in Louisiana, before there was any railroad connection with that region, and 'sand-schooners', etc., crossing the lake from New Orleans, were rowed or poled up and down the Bogue Falaya and other rivers by Negroes who sang a number of songs and spirituals which, so far, I have been unable to find in any anthology or anywhere in print." Some of them were quite unusual, some really very beautiful, and recently, in talking over with others the possibility of preserving them, the thought occurred that it might be practicable to plan an uniquely different radion program by using these in a series that would include actual incidents and experiences with which they were contemporary, also some particularly picturesque bits of history regarding that whole region, intimate sympathetic delineation of some of the outstanding Negro personalities there, plenty of humor, (~~in no way derogatory, including no slur or slight~~) an occasional delectable recipe such as the French Negro element delighted in, and that I have never found anywhere else, (~~as bait later on, perhaps, for some food sponsor?~~) an appealing word-fabric of the daily background out of which these particular songs and hymns were, literally woven. Early morning sun, and the jolly songs and rousing versions of bible stories that matched those buoyant hours; and then others, that seemed part of the moonlight nights drenched with the fragrance of magnolia and jasmine and all the forest scents of the riverlands - mellow rhythmed music of haunting cadences, and again the searching appeal of upwelling prayer that must have first been born of depths of need we all have sometimes known - a unison of some of the finest voices I have ever heard, with the beat of the oars far in the distance at first, then nearby for a few moments, then fading into the night again as another bend was rounded. . . .

"There is a point I am particularly desirous to 'get over' gradually in the course of such a series - the utterly unselfish devotion (and occasionally very real heroism) of all those to whom the care of young children was entrusted; and the inescapeable fact that all of us whose early lives were conditioned by those times are, literally, under libelong obligation for that conditioning - for health, for the education and breadth of experience made possible by a financial competence based upon the labor of others who are still unrequited for what was then forcibly taken from them. It should not of course be 'preached', or 'rubbed in', but just a sentence or two once in a while, a propos of some particular incident, the speaker's own depth of feeling and sincerity evident in tones of his voice.

36-5-70

"Psychologically, this is a 'time of reckoning' all over the world, both inwardly and outwardly - some such realization as this must have come to many others besides those whom I know personally? If 'the note is struck', possibly it would find echo in the understanding of an increasing number, and could perhaps eventuate in some unison of constructive action?"

Amsterdam Star News
15 November 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

We had in 1930 among American Negroes, a million and a half persons engaged in domestic and personal service; of whom nearly a million were what we call ordinary servants. In no other line of work, except agriculture, do so many of us make a living.

36-5-65

Most of us in our own lives, or in the lives of our immediate ancestors, have been in domestic service.

Without the income which the colored servant earns the race today could not survive.

Domestic service today and especially among Negroes, involves three contradictory aspects: first, it is a condition of caste; secondly, it indicates maladjusted labor conditions; thirdly, it involves social service of the highest value.

It is because in our thought and discussion we continually mix these three aspects that our attitude toward domestic service is so illogical and ~~valueless~~ wrong.

CASTE

Consider for instance, the domestic servant as an illustration and survival of caste conditions. The servant is called by her first name and denied any title of courtesy. The servant must enter the house by the back door; must address the members of the household by titles of respect; must eat separately from the family and can have no visitors, save at designated times and places. It is this aspect of domestic service that repells so many self-respecting people and especially repells the educated young people. How far re-organization of domestic service can rid itself of this anachronism and survival of former serfdom and slavery is a question, but it will undoubtedly come through greater efficiency in the service rendered, higher pay and better conditions of work.

MALADJUSTED LABOR

Most servants today are servants not by choice but by economic compulsion. They either have not been able to succeed in other work because of lack of intelligence and efficiency; or having succeeded in other lines and having done their work well they have, through no fault of their own, lost their jobs. Being compelled to enter a line of work already overcrowded they find themselves underpaid in money wages, compelled to take their wages partly in board and often in food and second-hand clothes, and often their hours of work are unlimited and the conditions of work are bad. If they sleep outside the house, they have considerable distances to travel. If they sleep in they have poor if not unsanitary bedrooms. Arrangements for their meals are casual. Just what work they are to do from day to day is not clear and definite, and depends to an extent upon the whim and temporary disposition of the mistress. Conditions like this throw into the field of house service a vast number of not simply inefficient persons but persons whose whole attitude and work is unsatisfactory and wrong. Such servants feel themselves victims of general economic disorder. They hope to escape from their work as soon as possible. They go about their service negligently and give the occupation a bad name both among employers and laborers.

SOCIAL SERVICE

On the other hand, and in direct contradiction to the matters considered there is no single line of occupation which can match in ethical value and economic return the work which a faithful and well-trained servant can render. The selection and cooking and serving of food is a profession of the first order. The cleaning and arrangement of a home is a matter of fundamental necessity. The care of the sick and the care of children; the receiving of visitors; the treatment of friends and relatives; all this is most intimate and delicate work. So much so that literature is full of pleasant and even abject thankfulness to servants of the high type which furnishes this sort of labor. But manifestly two things are necessary to secure this labor: first, unusual inducement not simply in money but in sympathy, treatment and desert on the part of the master. And secondly, on the part of the servant unusual and even professional training. This training may come by inheritance and it may come through schools. For the best results it calls for high school and even college training; for a knowledge of physics and chemistry, of the social sciences, of history, of psychology. But evidently if the college trained person of high character is going to be attracted to this work it must more and more lose its caste conditions, be organized to protect its wages, hours and conditions of labor and become a respected branch of human endeavor. In these three lines then lies the problem of domestic service not simply for Negroes but for all men.

36-5-66

Amsterdam Star News
29 November 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-67

Who ever expected to see England and America hailing Russia as the hope of the world?

Who represents the Prince of Peace today: Kurusu or Hull?

Who is the real traitor: Little Steel or John Lewis; or is it not really Big Steal.

The New York Negro has gained some splendid political victories. What is he going to do with this political power?

AGAIN ENGLAND

England is sitting pretty. Russia is fighting her battle in the East; America is fighting her battle in the West; India and Australia are protecting her in the South. The United States is paying her expenses and South America is feeding her.

Is this unfair to England? Is this saying that Hitler's program for us and the world is better and more promising? No. It isn't. But it is saying that the overthrow of England will not take from the world, and especially the colored world, the menace of England. We are facing a choice between two evils. The mere fact that England is the lesser evil does not make her program good.

H. G. Wells the greatest and bravest thinker of modern England supports this when he says: "Our record of land warfare upon the western front, let us face up to it, has been shameful. Outside Europe there has been an emergence of fresh names and a progressive improvement of our military record, but in Europe, and in spite of Joseph Stalin's plain appeal to us to get busy upon the western front, there is paralysis."

ETHIOPIA

The threat of England is shown in her treatment of Ethiopia. Way back in 1896 she egged Italy n to seize Abyssinia. During the World War she promised Italy a free-hand in Ethiopia. After the World War she allowed Italy to seize Ethiopia. Then when the second World War opened, she promised to restore the Emperor. She has done this, but her deeds have a string to them. She has not recognized the independence of Ethiopia. It is commonly believed that she intends to make Ethiopia a protectorate with an English "adviser" to the Emperor, which means that the Emperor will have to accept any "advice" which this Englishman gives. She has not yet recognized the right of Ethiopia to cancel the concessions in mines and lands by which Italy was proposing to strangle this land of the blacks. It may be that England will simply transfer most of these concessions to Englishmen. If this happens or anything like it, ~~it~~ it will be a betrayal of black Africa similar to the betrayal of Egypt and Uganda.

OUR DUTY

The political power of Negroes in America should naturally be used for their own protection but beyond that they should reach out their hands and influence to help Africa and to help Ethiopia in particular. They ought to make it known to the administration that ~~their~~ our fantastically generous help to England is predicated upon ordinary decency in her treatment of Africa after the war and that the United States will not stand by and see Ethiopia transferred from Italy to England in the face of the conscience of the world. We ought to let ~~it~~ this be known that this is the price of our loyalty and cooperation.

OUR VOTE

Big Industry and Big Business must come more and more decentralized and under state control. The Negro's political problem rightly directed will gain him increased access to these national services. Moreover, the legal difficulties in maintaining and developing such group development is being helped today by the same forces that are emancipating and making class-conscious white labor in America. The curtailed political power of American Negroes, if intelligent, can be thrown to strengthening the laws for coope ation, and making the American consumer a definite, active power, instead of a passive victim. The rights of organization for economic purposes which labor demands can be used by black labor as well as by white labor. Moreover, such a movement will meet little opposition for many reasons, some of which are contradictory. There are Americans who would be glad to have it tried simply in order that it should fail and prove to Negroes that their only hope in this country is to be a docile, unambitious labor caste working for low wage. Such cheap labor will save America the costly necessity for colonial development. Other Americans hope that such an effort will succeed, either wholly or even in part, and thus justify their faith in humanity.

36-5-68

Amsterdam News
6 December 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

36-5-71

I am writing from Cuba whither I have flown above land and water to carry greetings from North America to all the Americas.

It is significant that in the Platica which the National Committee of the United States of America on International Intellectual Cooperation is holding in Havana, the American Negro is present as rightfully representing American citizens. Haiti is also there and others.

It is significant that in the future relations of the countries of the American continent the Negroes of the United States are going to take their rightful part.

A LETTER

A colored girl has written me from Brooklyn telling of her listening to a talk of mine at Atlanta University. She says "It is at this moment a hurt, bewildered, strangely puzzled girl at the age of twenty-one writes you today and humbly seeks your advice. Advice I promise in sincere faith to follow and keep. Dr. Du Bois, twenty some years ago a war was started, people were killed, not people of one race but of many races. Hatred's bitterness, frustration and opposition was auctioned off at high bids on Life's Auction. Into this chaos, I was born, not only me but millions like me, born to a mother who was fifty and a father fifty-seven. From them I inherited wisdom, wisdom that mell ws with age, but I was youth and youth still does not posses the wisdom our elders have. Into this world I came. I knew not of its chaotic mess and being a baby I cared less. Then I began to grow. Yes, like a seed I grew until I reached the age of seven years and I too knew what a veil of darkness was. But how cruelly I learned for the way I learned has left a scar that can never heal. A little mulatto girl smiled upon me that day, but she opened her mouth and she whispered, 'You're black, I can't play with you.' I smiled that day, I've smiled many a day since then Dr. Du Bois. Many have said 'Ruth, you've a beautiful smile', and the irony of it is I still smiled. It took an old woman , an ex-slave, who with her gnarled hands and care-worn face to see behind the mask. 'You've a beautiful smile, child', she said, 'but your heart is broken.' Even at her I smiled until I fell at her feet. She picked me up, this angel of God, laid me on her worn out bed and prayed for me. But can prayer heal an open wound, I think not, it can relieve but not heal. I guess as Topsy said, I just grew, but as I grew I learned things: I saw people hating races despised by each other and dear God I saw children and old women begging for food to eat, for a crust of bread. I saw buildings they call homes dilapidated, run-down, unhealthy conditions, filled with every possible kind of vermin you can imagine. I was young, a child, I couldn't do much, if anything, but I couldn't eat and sleep and see this. I'd dream about it. I joined organizations. That's when I first learned for self not for others. I learned bribery, but I got out, I couldn't stomach this. But inside of me was a voice saying: there must be a way for these people. I began to delve deep in my studies, but you can't study and think of those things. How I got through high school only God knows, maybe through my mother's influence, maybe one of God's miracles. Then I reentered the college of my youth. I tried to make a go out of it but you can't when things aren't right. How I got through I don't know either, probably through the president's goodness. Then I left my home town and came here. My father's death a year before and the fact was brewing caused an emotional setback. Through sheer will power I pulled myself back to normal, but I became a recluse. War broke, I who like many was just beginning to enter the battle ground of life, were given a jolt. Is this a mark that we this generation must carry - twenty-one years. What can I do to avert these problems.

I bow in humility before thee, Dr. Du Bois, I ask how can I a young Negro girl, twenty-one years of age help in these times? What can I do and how can I do it? Where can I most help? And last, I ask a personal problem: why is there so much prejudice within a race? Why do people hate because of color? Does color or character matter. Sometime will you write a column on that? I am told I'm very attractive; am told by members of both races, but that does not alter the fact, my skin is dark. I am fully aware that the dark girl carries a great responsibility because so many are uncouth. But I try to carry myself like a lady and try hard to remember the little courtesies that are due the other person. But that too does not alter the situation. I find too men just don't marry dark girls unless extraordinary. When I entered the office of a prominent Negro citizen in New York here and a leader of our race, I overheard on my way out: "attractive, but too dark!"

36-5-72

AN ANSWER

One cannot deny the basis of truth in this letter. There is no doubt as to how this girl feels and why she feels that way. And yet there is also more or less unconscious exaggeration. It is true that black girls in looking for work and in looking for mates are handicapped as compared with mullattoes. But it is not an impossible handicap. There have been many men wise enough to recognize souls despite skins and certainly there have been employers not so silly as to refuse to hire ability. Black girls have had their successes in the world. One has only to remember black Nefertari of Egypt, Black Patti and Mary Bethune of our day. But with all that can be said the solution depends upon us. Are we going to let the color line of the white world enter our own colored world and ruin it? This may not be an unexpected result but it is certainly a stupid one.

Amsterdam Star News
13 December 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

At the invitation of the American Council of Learned Societies I have been attending this month in Cuba, a Platica, a series of discussions, in which numerous distinguished intellectuals from Europe and the America took part.

Among the universities represented were Columbia, California, Chicago, Michigan, Harvard, Montreal, Mexico and Chile. Other universities were represented indirectly by former professors; these included the Sorbonne, Vienna, Madrid, Oxford and Barcelona. The only Negro institutions represented were Atlanta University and the Haitian Ecole Normale des Instituteurs.

36-5-73

It was a stirring experience to meet in Havana certain men of world-wide reputation: there was Jules Romains of France; and Count Sforza of Italy; Henri Bonnet and Henri Laugier also of France, and Guiseppe Borgese. There was the great Cuban liberal Ortiz y Fernandez; a former Minister of Foreign Affairs of Norway together with authors and poets. Bellegarde of Haiti was one of the most widely known and best liked of the fifty or more delegates and I was very proud of the position which he occupied in the esteem of all. From America came Louis Adamic, Max Ascoli, Freda Kirchwey, and Richard Pattee.

It was a fitting introduction to this curious and intriguing meeting to fly from Atlanta to Havana. It was the longest journey in the air I have ever taken, something like two thousand miles in all - and the comfort and ease and convenience was astonishing. There was no vestige of racial discrimination and the sense of being above a tired and distraught world had infinite compensation. Awhile we rode above the clouds looking down upon a silver glory filled with cliffs and rolls and fluffy waves glimpses through

of mist; below the dark earth of the Florida everglades; above was the cloudless grey-blue sky. Then came the sea. Sometimes it looked like a glacier of ice and snow; sometimes a single cloud hung over it like a cotton bowl or skein of silk; then we dropped and swooped and grandly swirled and I am in the midst of the broad, clean, cream colored city of Havana.

Perhaps most enlightening in this meeting was a new orientation, a new centering of earthly affairs. Here were men and fine men, cultivated scholars, gentlemen of high social standing who showed their breeding in every movement. And yet they were refugees. They had been driven out of their homes and often away from their families. They had been spit upon and beaten. One felt the tensity of their feeling even when the subject under discussion did not warrant it. I can hear Laugier, humped-backed and near-sighted, almost screaming with shrill voice over some proposed change of word in the resolutions. I can see the calm thin Sforza with his emotions always well in hand and yet kicked across the world in the prime of life.

Looking upon these fellow human beings I wrote out one night a resolution to present to the conference. It was not adopted, but it expressed my thought and I am sure the thought of many others:

"We who represent the brain workers of the world, meeting in Havana in this day of the agony of civilization, solemnly reaffirm our unaltered belief in freedom of thought, breadth of emotion, and liberty of life. We do not dare attempt to apportion among men and peoples of the past, the full balance of blame for a paradox of culture, which has mingled human misery and degradation with miracles of technique and triumphs of knowledge. But in the horror of the present, we unhesitatingly place the guilt for this new and bl ody sweat of mankind, upon the shoulders of those apostles of reaction and deliberate cruelty and hate who, today increase evil without hope of good.

"We disown all those, who for envy or profit or blind delusion deny to any human being the elemental rights of man. By safeguarding the strength of men, protecting the souls of women and educating the minds of children, we still seek to break from the necks of humanity, the chains of poverty, crime and disease and free mankind for creative effort and civilized life. We welcome to fellowship in a new crusade, all men of every race, creed and hue, for a world movement toward Peace, Beauty, the Good Life and the free Spirit.

"Toward this we see ~~our~~ path alone; a democracy where every man has a voice in government, in art and in work; where every voice has the power of thoughtful utterance and every soul, the will to see the stars."

36-S-74

Amsterdam Star News
20 December 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Youth of the world! We who are about to die salute you!

Sorokin says "The great crisis of sensate culture is here in all its stark reality. Before our very eyes this culture is committing suicide. If it does not die in our life time it can hardly recover from the exhaustion of its creative force and from the wounds of self destruction.

36-5-75

Spengler says "It remains now to sketch the last stage of Western science. From our standpoint of today the gentle sloping route of decline is clearly visible . . . before us there stands the last spiritual crisis that will involve all Europe and America.

THE CUBAN PLATICA

Most curious to me were the Americans and I mean all the Americans: from the West Indies, Central America and South America. They represented perhaps fifty million or more dark Negroes and Indians yet the only dark race openly represented at the council table was impersonated by Bellegarde and myself. I could not help wonder about this. ~~In the countries represented there were to my knowledge at least thirty million persons of Negro descent and perhaps ten million more Indians.~~ In none of the nineteen republics is the color line drawn as clearly, openly and legally as in the United States of America. Yet the United States felt compelled, for what reasons I am not sure, to have as one of its representatives an American Negro. Haiti, of course, being openly and avowedly a Negro state, was represented by an obvious mulatto. But Brazil with its eighteen million Negroes and mulattoes felt no urge or reason to have one of them present. The same was true of the Cubans among whom sixty per cent have Negro blood. Of course, there were many indications in the features of whites present of Negro and Indian descent but it was not a frankly acknowledged descent although perhaps none of these darker folk would have denied it.

The point is, and that is the thing of greatest importance, these darker people of the West Indies and South America are thinking "white." Their whole conception of the world is a white world. They do not have, as we American Negroes are beginning to have the idea of bl ck and colored cultural patterns; of a world not where one color or form of feature predominates and rules but where several sit side by side, e ch speaking its own language.

I have a pretty distinct idea that the elimination of the more deeply col red people and the obviously Negroid people from public life in South America and the West Indies is very largely by their consent. Of course, at home, in Rio de Janeiro, in Havana, in Jamaica, dark folk are evident in high places but when the country is represented outside its boundaries, by common consent, it chooses white men. I believe this is a tragic mistake and if persisted in will tend to eliminate the darker races from the world because of a concerted rush and scramble on their part to become white. This plan is quite possible of accomplishment. It is clearly evidenced by Cuba. It can be seen in Chile and I presume in Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela, certainly in Mexico. But its mistake lies not simply in the tragedy of narrowing and repudiating souls who happen to have dark skins and krinkly hair; it lies much more evidently in the crying need which this world has for variety of culture, new points of view, new standards of beauty. I believe that much of this decline of Europe and white America in the last few generations comes from a persistent breeding through women who are merely pretty without reference to strength of physique or stamina of brains. The colored girl who wrote me a week or so ago should be reminded that the homely, strong-willed, and clear brained white woman has absolutely no chance in conventional public opinion when in competition with doll-like regularity of countenance and fairy-like form of limb.

36-5-76

Amsterdam Star News
27 December 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by
W. E. B. Du Bois

The Man from Mars walked diffidently along the streets. He had just flown from Atlanta to New York and was slightly dizzy. It had been so peaceful up there above the clouds. His dress was homely and not well-pressed, so that when he accosted the smart American on Broadway and said

"I beg your pardon -"

The American was brusque and answered, "No dice!"

The man from Mars looked a bit surprised and said, "I only wanted some information."

The Westerner-on-holiday-in-New York glanced at him again. "Oh," he said, "I thought it was a touch."

"A what?" asked the Man from Mars, looking a bit bewildered.

"Oh, I guess you don't speak American," said the Westerner. "Come on, let's have a drink?" The Man from Mars hesitated and then followed. They sat down at an oaken table with ornate chairs, and the American said, "What's your?".

"Just a glass of water, " said the Man from Mars.

"What?" said the American.

"I thought you said - a drink."

"I see," said the Man ffom Mars, "just water - " "Now, what I wanted to ask was this: it is Christmas time. I see decorations: green and holly, and afar off up there, there is the massive outline of a great church. Just what do you people really believe in?"

"Oh, we are good Christians; Baptists in fact, most of us."

"I see," answered the Man from Mars. "I had heard this but could hardly believe it. You mean this? He took out a Bible and thumbed it rapidly and read:

"And there was in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. . . . And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

"Why, ~~yes~~ yes-s," said the American. Of course you know we are fighting now."

"Fighting?"

"Of course, we are. Where did you come from? We are at war. The whole damn world is at war."

36-5-78

"Oh, I see," said the stranger. "Then, you are not practicing just now this beautiful bit: "He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth."

"Yes, we are," said the American. "We are practicing it good and plenty. You see that hill up there? That is Morningside Heights. We are building up there the biggest, the costliest, most beautiful cathedral you ever heard of. It is called The Cathedral of St. John, the Divine."

"I have heard of him," answered the Man from Mars. He read:

"He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still. And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last."

"Yes, ~~of course~~ sure," answered the American, "but listen: we aren't doing any miracles and we ain't prophets but we are going to clean up this world if we have to hang, Hitler, Mussolini, Franco and Hirohito. We have got to make this a decent world. That is the reason we are building that cathedral up there. Why do you know there are ten windows or maybe it is twelve that cost fifty thousand dollars a piece."

"Yes," said the Man from Mars, hastily. "So I understand, but after you have hanged all these folks, then what?"

"Then," said the American, "we will have a big celebration. We will have the biggest chorus that ever sang the l ngest anthem ever written to the highest notes ever voiced, and we will march and shout and ~~celebrate~~ get drunk. Say, did you ever see a New Year's Eve in New York?"

36-5-79

"No," said the Man from Mars, "I never did. ~~have.~~"

"And look here, do you know how far it is from the door of the cathedral to the high altar?"

"No," said the Man from Mars, answers "and if you will pardon me, I don't give a damn."

The American looked at his retreating figure as he sipped his second brandy. "That's what I have got to say about these foreigners. They just don't understand. Hey, boy, got an afternoon edition?"

Amsterdam Star News
10 January 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

DEBIT AND CREDIT

In the Year of Our Lord 1941 in account with
The American Negro-

DEBIT

36-5-16

In the following matters we colored folk in the United States have reason to grieve with the treatment and conditions which we have received at the hands of the world: 1. War. War under any circumstances is a disaster and particularly does it bear heavily and often fatally upon suppressed social classes. No matter who wins this war, we suffer.

2. Economic discrimination. While we have made many advanced steps in employment it is still more difficult for a Negro to get a decent paying job than for any other element in our population.

3. Discrimination in the army. The basic wrong here is the organization of our national army on race lines so far as the Negro is concerned. It makes absolute equality of treatment physically impossible.

4. Propaganda of race hate. The shrewd politician who is governor of Georgia finds it still good politics to advertise the fact that some people advocate equal educational opportunity for Negroes.

5. Wilberforce. The trouble at Wilberforce has not yet found basic correction. The school pushes on under a temporary arrangement.

6. We have lost this year some irreplaceable leaders: Ernest Just, our greatest biologist; Harry C. Smith, often wrong-headed but always courageous editor; George Arthur, modest and efficient social worker.

CREDIT

We have reason to thank the year and the world for these clear marks of advancement:

1. There are Negro aldermen in New York and New Haven - the latter a woman.

2. Education. In Negro colleges in 1941, forty-one thousand students were enrolled and five thousand graduated. A bill for Federal Aid to Education, designed to decrease race discrimination is before Congress. Legislation has given the Department of Labor $50,000 to continue the study of higher education among Negroes. The first Negro president is elected at Virginia Union, Richmond. A colored girl is queen of the senior prom in the school of education, New York University. Dixon, Phi Betta Kappa leads his class at Bowdin. Broadcast of Freedom's People under the auspices of the United States Office of Education.

3. Union Labor. There has been some break in the anti-Negro labor union set-up as in the case of painters in Kansas City and machinists in the District of Columbia Navy Yard.

4. Anti-Discrimination orders. Both Knudsen and the President, himself, have issued advise and orders against discrimination in the hiring of labor under the defense effort. Negroes are admitted to the air corps. A Negro gets a million dollar contract in defense housing at Louisville.

5. Memorials. The James Weldon Johnson memorial collection of Negro arts and letters has been established at Yale. The Gilpin Homes are building in Richmond.

6. Distinctions. L. D. Reddick becomes lecturer in Negro history at the College of the City of New York. Paul Robeson and Dorothy Maynor continue to sing well. Barthe secures a second Guggenheim. Marian Anderson receives the Bok Award of ten thousand dollars. Dean Dixon conducts a symphony. Reporters voted that colored Homer Brown is the second ablest member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives. A Negro is put on the New York State Parole Commission succeeding Lou Gerhig. Negro subalterns are appointed in the C. C. C. A Negro acts as foreman of the New York County Grand Jury. A Negro judge is appointed in Chicago. Joe Louis.

7. Books. The following books published in 1941 by Negroes deserve especial credit: Logan's Diplomatic Relations of the United States with Haiti; Locke's Negro in Art; Johnson, Growin Up in the Black Belt and Statistical Atlas of Souther Counties. White authors have published books about Negroes which deserve reading: Buckmaster's Let My People Go; Warner, Color and Human Nature; Carpenter, The Negro in American History School Textbooks; Willa Cather, Sapphira and the Slave Girl.

36-5-17

Amsterdam Star News
17 January 1941

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

THE MISSIONARIES

36-5-18

They were grouped just outside the docks of the Bull Line in New York, and were really in the way. The head stevedore growled at them several times; but they were so polite and humble that he didn't run them off as he was sorely tempted to do.

"I beg your pardon, Sir" said one of them at last diffidently.

The head stevedore looked them over sourly in the growing light of the morning. He noted that they were dark -- quite brown, with curly hair, and dressed in long robes, none too clean, instead of pants. This did not improve his temper.

"What now," he snorted.

"Why, Sir, we were wondering if perhaps you would be good enough to direct us to St. Thomas' Church"?

The "Sir" and the deferential attitude mollified him a bit.

"St. Thomas? Will it be in Harlem?"

"I think not" answered the leader, in extraordinarily good English; "We have letters to the rector of St. Bartholemew in Harlem. But first we must see the rector of St. Thomas, which we are told is the most powerful in the city. The Bishop of Canterbury--"

"They mean the toffs' church in Fift avenoo," volunteered a by-stander.

"O," said the chief stevedore with more respect, "You better take a cab."

"No, no!" protested the dark man, "We are but poor missionaries, with little money. We will gladly walk. We are strong."

"You'll need to be" said the stevedore, directing them as well as he could. "It's a good six miles"

They smiled gratefully, and trudged happily away with their miscellaneous bundles. Under lowered eyes, they restrained their wonder at the mighty city and the milling Christmas crowds; murmuring apologies, walking off the curb here and there and dodging cars; the butt of much curiosity, many snickers and remarks, until a bit weary they came to staid and haughty St. Thomas. A policeman eyed them suspiciously as they attempted to find entrance. They bowed low before his uniform of authority, and showed him a great aristocratic-looking document "From His Grace, the Arch bishop of Canterbury to the Rector of St. Thomas."

36-5-19

Soon the motley group was standing humbly, and yet with lighted countenances before the rather astonished and certainly very busy rector. He read the Bishop's letter glanced at his visitors and read again. Then he stared at them with a puzzled frown. Finally he said with a perplexed gasp:

"If I get the implications of His Grace's letter, you are here to convert" he coughed- "to convert America, to Christianity?"

"Yes, Sir, we —

"And why, might I ask, did not you first convert England?" And he frowned again at the letter.

"That was our intention, too, Sir. But the Archbishop said that just now England was busy, very busy; and at any rate, he was sure that if America could be converted to Christianity, England and the world would immediately follow. He added Sir that he had great Hopes!"

The Rector could hardly repress a sarcastic smile.

"And why, pray, do you not consider us Christians already?"

The dark man looked uncomfortable and apologetic.

"We beg a thousand pardons" he said softly; "We would not think of offending, but you see we are humble followers of the Great Missionary, who came to us in Africa from America, years ago."

"I see," said the rector, looking relieved "And you want money to carry on his work in Africa. -- Well, we are pressed, but --"

"O, no Sir, no. We want no money. We have plenty for our few needs. We want simply to preach Christianity to poor, dear America, for no reward--just to convert them"

"And why," asked the rector, haughtily, do you and the Archbishop of Canterbury think us heathen?"

"Well" stammered the speaker, looking genuinely distressed, "We may be wrong-- we sincerely hope we are; but do you believe this? Read, Brother Iguenye." A very little black man unstrapped a bible from his pack and read in a high sweet voice.

> "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth....Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God....Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.

36-5-20

The Rector turned red.

"Sir," he shouted,"We are at war."

"I know it answered the leader. "War is terrible, is it not? And I am afraid it is unchristian. Christ said:"--

Again the sweet, clear voice of the little black man arose,

> "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you."

The Rector arose

"There is a law against sedition," he shouted

"Yes"said the leader "They crucified Christ!"

"If you don't get out---"

"Let us pray," said the leader; and all the black men dropped to their knees and intoned:

"Our Father, which art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name--Thy Kingdom come---"

AS THE CROW FLIES

by

W.E.B. DU BOIS

The time for determined and purposful fighting is not when all is progress and success, but in the day of clouds and discouragement. Then battles are really won.

Organized Race Riots, Inc., are working overtime and with some success. Yet from the Cincinnatti riots of 1841, through the Philadelphia race wars of 1829 to 1840, the New York Draft Riot of 1863, the riots of Reconstruction from 1865 to 1876, the First World War riots of East St. Louis, Chicago and Washington, down to Mobile, Beaumont, and Detroit, it is only in the current series that the organized Negro-Hater is in hiding, clandestine, and absolutely without open defenders. In every previous outbreak, the killers were aggressive, open, loud-mouthed and truculent. This is progress even though it is through blood.

There is no shadow of doubt but that a people who under handicaps such as ours, continue to make slow but steady and indisputable progress, will eventually emerge as a free people.

Consider the plight of our enemies when they are reduced to saying as did the Alabama Drydock and Ship-building Co., in Mobile: "This is to advise that anyone regardless of rating, found~~ing~~ reading any newspaper or other periodical, with the exception of Fore and Aft (the Company publication) whether they are on shift or off are subject to discharge!" This applied to 20,000 whites as well as to 6000 blacks. When the leading white editor of Mobile protested against judicial bias he was clapped into jail. As often as white America kills its own liberties in curtailing ours, our freedom is in sight.

Investment in Colonies after the war

A California banker writse me concerning my article, "The Realities in Africa", in the current Foreign Affairs. I replied:

I am convinced that the development of Backward Races ans Lands cannot be left to the unguided and uncontrolled power of private investors. Private investment should be welcomed, but it should be under control in Africa, even more than it is in England. In England and all civilized countries today, the wage of labor, conditions of work, the work of women and children, are regulated in the public interest; fu[illegible] more.

popular education is required, rules of sanitation and health are enforced and we are about to enlist on a program guaranteeing regular employment and security in sickness and old age. The public cost of this legislation cuts down the profits obtainable by private industry. Private investors then seek investment in territories where such costs can be evaded; where as in Africa, labor works long hours at 30 to 50 cents a day; where the cost of education and public services ~~xxx~~ paid for by public taxation are negligible. This sort of profit ought ought to be curbed by international legislation and guardianship. And this not simply for philanthropy, but for further insurance against future revolt, war and turmoil.

AS THE CROW FLIES

by W.E.B.Du Bois

After a fiery furnace like that through which our race has just passed, comes the hush of sober afterthought. We suddenly realize that we are not simply angry, murdered people voicing our just resentment in word and deed; no! we are 13 million victims amid ten times that number of fellow Americans; and on them our fate in the long run depends by sheer force of numbers. It is not for us then to express in plain English all we think and feel just now. On the other hand there is no call for us to lie. My good friend, Henry Hunt of Georgia, who today stands before God; used to say in his often day of trial: "I can keep still in seven different languages!".

38-12-55

On the other hand this is no day for weasel words; for denying the eternal justice of our demands and complaint. In calm, measuredreasoning; in unanswerable fact and reference this is the day for steady courteous insistance:

Neither this nation nor the world can exist half slave and half free.

Lawlessness and lynching proves nothing but the spiritual bankruptcy of the nation permitting it.

Until the American Negro becomes a free and equal American citizen, democracy in this land is impossible.

If whites and colored folk cannot live together in peace and progress in America, they cannot live together in Europe, Asia or Africa.

The real war will be won in Detroit, not in Palermo, Orel nor Guadacanal.

Someone asks a very simple question: " Why doesnt England raise the wages of South African Natives? The answer is complicated. One might say, "Because the Union of South Africa is independent of England." But this is not true save in a technical sense. Not only is South Africa absolutely dependent for sheer existence on the British army and navy, but the great mass of invested capital which is the life blood of South Africa; her whole commercial organization, credit and transport centers in London; which means that for income, wage, bread and butter and almost air to breathe, South Africa depends on Great Britain.

Very well, why dont the Englishman pay the African Negro a decent civilised wage, instead of allowing him to strain in poverty and disease for 25 to fifty cents a day? Let me try to explain. Did you ever see the English countryside, in Spring? Yonder is a lovely cottage, nestling in green trees and lawns. A demure and well-trainmaid servant, in clean, becoming uniform opens the door. "Yes, Mrs. Smith is home -- who shall I say is calling? Your hostess appears; she is white-haired, elderly, thoroughly charming and intelligent. There is no trace of color prejudice; no, indeed, her people have always been interested in yours; she is of Abolitionist stock. You stay to tea perhaps to dinner; you have a most enjoyable time, surrounded not by luxury, but by every comfort. You depart, saying , this is real life, this is independence. For the lady is independent; she does not work -- others work and work efficiently for her. Among these "others" are black men in Africa and Yellow men in China. The bank in London has invest- her father's money in enterprises which make enormous profit out of cheap colored labor. The lady does know, could hardly find out just what is the cause of her comfort. She is a charming and "independent English woman. If the wages of South African natives were raised, she might have to give up her cottage and maid and go to work.

The wages of South African natives are not raised.

AS THE CROW FLIES

by W.E.B.Du Bois

It will not be easy this Summer really to rest. Anxiety is too heavy and too widespread.

A vacation is a state of mind. It follows upon bodily rest if one is physically weary. But the weariness of most men today is mental, not physical.

38-12-57

To the man whose thinking has grown stale, whose emotions lag, whose hope, faith, and creative urge are dying, what is needed is not Atlantic City, nor Chicago, nor anywhere necessarily in space. What such weariness needs is other thoughts; the thoughts of others and time to follow them. They are all written down for the souls who have leisure to follow. Imagine a summer with Francis Bacon, John Locke and Robert Owen?

Blue-prints for the Post-War Period.

First of all employment; not the best possible employment, nor the highest paid; but employment that is steady and leads somewhere in breadth of view, in oppertunity of accomplishment.

Organized, co-operative effort to know or find out how far others of your friends or race are also employed. It will not do to leave this to the government, to legislation, to chance. Each one of us has a stake in the others employment, in the others well-being. And nothing in science takes the place of personal knowledge and interest.

Strenth andpurpose in organization. Let the bridge clubs wane. Bring slowly tentatively and intelligently back, the reading clubs, the book circles, the efforts to know and understand the new world, slowly reforming after the chaos of war.

Do not be vastly surprised at crime, sickness and poverty; these are the children of war. Every war xx spawns them and everyone is angry and annoyed when they appear. Not disgust but understanding and scientific remedy is what they call for.

Above all, take into your thought and plans, the Returned Soldier, white and black; young, wrecked, dis illusioned men will surround you; there will be bitterness, bravado, wild imaginings and calloused cruelty; such are the costs of war. You must pay them. You must not hesitate. You cannot.

Finally, build for a future; forge forward toward that brave new world which you talked of in war and afterward promptly forgot. What is that world? Where is it?

Why not use this vacation to find out. If you are embarking upon a journey, is it not worth while to plan it, to know where the end is and the object?

Surely; but believe me, after this war, there will be myriads who will try desperately to forget it quickly, immediately. Who wil say , it is past and gone; never mind what it was about; never mind what caused it; forget it.

This is the American century. Let's grab the world and eat it. Let us as imperial masters, rule mankind as heirs of decrepit England. We own the Air and the Sea. We own the food and iron and oil. We've trained rulers to help our navy keep islands and colonies in their places. Up and on.

When you hear this foolish and fatal talk, what will you say, my friends, What do you know enough to say?

If you wish to know, read this summer:

Waldo Frank: South American Journey, NewYork, $3

Carey McWilliams: Brothers under the Skin, New York, $3

Richard Sterner: The Negro's Share, $4.50

Social Insurance; Report by Sir William Beveridge, $I

Wood Gray The Hidden Civil War $3.75

Anna Graves: Benvenuto had no prejudice against Bronze, $2.

Herbert Agar: A Time for Greatness, $2.50

Harold J. Laski: The Revolution in our Time, $3.50

AS THE CROW FLIES

by W.E.B.DuBois

If the bill to abolish the discrimination against Chinese in our immigration laws passes Congress, it will form an amazing commentary on this war; first, it will prove that the attack on Pearl Harbor forced America to acknowledge the equality of the white and and yellow races; secondly, it will show that the war with Japan was unnecessary, since a similar yielding to Japan would have avoided the chief cause of war.

We have sent to Russia quite characteristiccally, our biggest guns: Secretay of the South, Hull; and two millionaires, from east and west. That gives us complete representation. Just what Stalin will think of it remains to be seen.

If Mr. Rooseveldt should consult us (which he will not) we would advise him to end the Third Term and call it a day, and a long, good one. Then we would sit back and watch a campaign between Wallace and Wilkie, withput much caring which won.

38-12-60

The British - American army is leisurely marching north in Italy, viewing such scenery as the Germans leave behind. We only hope they reach Rome before the Russians march into Berlin.

We still miss, in all the post-war planning , any effort on the part of American Negroes, to lay down special and detailed plans for themselves. They have stated again and again, with clearness, force and ingenuity, just what they want to make themselves free and equal citizens of this republic. They have been pointing out for twenty-fiveyears and more just what white Americans should do to bring this millenium to pass. But they continually fail to indicate just what they themselves should do to make this happen. The implicit and dangerous conclusion seems to be, that only action on the part of the whites can free American Negroes, and that all we can do is to exhort them to action.

But can we do nothing to make such action easier and more likely? And is not such possible action quite apart from brute force? Of course, and there are many courses of action. Wherefore instead exclusively of studying racial tensions, or praying for inter-racial understanding why not say: How can we ourselves attack crime among us? How can we reduce illiteracy? How can we secure fuller employment at decent wages? How can we select ability among our youth and give it a chance?

Let us admit that in all these lines we are doing something; but our effort is half-hearted, because at bottom we do not believe we can accomplish much worth while unless the white effort preceeds and leads ours. This is nonsense, and only a part of the hypnotism of present white civilization over the colored world. True it is that thefact that we are deprived of many ordi nary organs of social control, makes our problem more complicated and difficult; but their solution by us is far from impossible, and then accomplishment , despite hindrances is the essence of the race problem in America. Either we solve it mainly by our own unaided effort or we perish. The sooner we realize this the better for us.

We can reduce Negro crime to a minimum by our own effort. For what else in God's name is all our vaunted religion, our thousands of loud-voiced ministers, our uncounted churches? Let us test our religion by one and only one measuring rod: reduced crime.' Allelse is poppycock and bald hypocrisy. Our crime, so far as it is not sheer deviltry and carelessness, is sickness and poverty. Let us attack sickness and poverty. Thirteen million sensible human beings , able and willing to work, can support each other, either by direct employment, or by intelligent group bargaining with the industry of the land. We cannot force our way into white industry simply by wage-cutting or begging; we can only do it by selling our labor through modern selling methods.

And of that problem of sickness and illiteracy, more next time.

38-12-61

AS THE CROW FLIES
By
W. E. B. DuBois

38-12-58

Never did I expect to hear General Motors play "Solidarity Forever"; but I heard it last Sunday. Now anything can happen.

England and America are convinced that Russia is now rependant, converted and ready to play the captitalistic game. I am afraid that this is wishful thinking.

Comes again the unanswered question: After the collapse of Germany, there will still be Germans. What are we going to do about it?

There is no greater question facing American Negroes than that of health. Here Negroes, like so many other classes and groups, have made the least scientific advance. The mass of us still regard disease as a matter of chance or misfortune or ill will. One has but to visit a colored drug store to see that most of the space devoted to the medicine is filled with useless patent stuff, nostrums, dangerous drugs and even poisons. Only last year I heard two prominent Negro pharmacists openly reccomend over the radio the long discredited "Black Draught' for general use.

Yet Medical Science has made great advance in the last fifty years. The arrest or cure of disease is possible to astonishing degree today. Length of life has been greatly extended.

We American Negroes have shared somewhat in this lowering of the death rate; our men die at the rate of 1,578 per 100,000 while whites die at the rate of 1,128. The difference shows what we have got to do in order to become civilized. We are dying of diseases of the heart, of tuberculosis, cancer, pneumonia, kidney diseases, hemorrhage and softing of the brain and diseases of early infancy. Among 250,000 colored children born alive each year, 22,000 die within the year. This is a variable slaughter of the innocents.

What are we going to do about it? We can do a great deal, we can change these figures fundamentialy; of course we can read the science of health and teach the facts; but more important than all of this, we can change our whole arrangement of physicians and hospitals and our attitude toward them. The private practising physicians catering only to the sick must give place to social medicine. Social medicine is a group organization with physicians on a fixed salary; with available hospitalization and with organizations designed by educational training to prevent the people of the group from getting sick, rather than merely curing them after becoming sick. Group social medicine is largely in vouge in England, under state control. It is increasingly practised here under private enterprise. We Negroes ought to take it as one of our first and most important cooperative efforts. It is feasible, it is of proven practibality, it is cheap. It is our best road to health, survival and civilization.

38-12-59

42-86-95

British Royalty in Africa: The following statement is made by West Africa concerning the visit of King George and the royal family to Africa in February 1947. "The people of South Africa—all the people—have to settle their own difficulties and problems. The trend of feeling at the U.N. meetings and the indications of the U.S.A. and other policies affecting dependent peoples cannot have been without influence in South Africa. Meanwhile, British West Africans, will be glad to know that, whoever had made the arrangements for the tour put forward a programme which affords his Majesty the fullest opportunity for seeing Africans in the Union as they live and work. In such areas as Lovedale (where European boys several of whom became leaders of the community, and African boys were trained together), Umtata, and the three territories of Bechuanaland, Swasiland and Basutoland, this will apply more particularly.

The Belgian Congo: A returned official reports of the Congo in 1946.. "I returned to Belgium at the beginning of 1946. In view of the splendid war effort of the Negroes and the promises made to them, I thought that their lot would be improved. Alas! The big financiers have been enriched as a result of the war, while the lot of the Negroes is more wretched than before--- "It is intolerable that, on the pretext of civilization, after sixty years of occupation-sixty years devoted to exploiting the blacks-beatings are still compulsory.

"One of the worst evils in the Congo is prostitution and the diseases arising from it, syphilis, etc, as well as sexual perversions. It is not unusual to see in large centers of population six year old Negro children, particularly little boys, indulging in this vile profession because it is more lucrative.

"Needs have been created for the Negroes; but on the other hand, they are given no chance to fill these needs. Just to give you an example, let me point out that the policemen in Banzyville at the end of 1944 got eighteen francs monthly, food included. But two or sometimes three cigarettes cost one franc; while for the whites a package of twenty cigarettes costs three and one half francs."

The Gold Coast: The Africans now have a majority in membership of the Legislative Council of the Gold Coast; but this should not deceive anyone. The Legislative Council is an advisory body, and can only recommend laws. It is the Governor, in whose hands the chief law-making power lies. The governor is appointed by the Colonial office in England, and the Colonial office is notoriously influenced by the great investors in West African industries, agriculture, and mining.

42-86-99

PAN-AFRICA

by

W. E. B. DU BOIS

President, Pan African Congress

42-86-96

Ethiopia: Oxford University is giving local examinations in Amharic which is the major language of Ethiopia.

Egypt is making a false claim to the Eritrean port of Massawa. Neither historically nor morally has either Egypt or Italy any claim to this port.

The emperor of Ethiopia has sent to Chiang Kai-Shek four thousand dollars to relieve the famine districts in the Chinese province of Hunan.

Kenya: In 1944, the Kenya African Union was founded "to bring unity and understanding among the tribes of this colony; to cooperate with our members, representing African interest in the legislative council; to protect the rights of our people in the field of politics and economics; and otherwise." It asks for six representatives on the legislative council, and indicates a new phase of constructive political advance.

Northern Rhodesia: It is proposed that in the legislative council of 1948, there shall be two African members elected by the Northern Rhodesia African representative council.

Population of South Africa: It has been recently estimated that in the African territories from the Belgian Congo, to Uganda, and Kenya, southward; there are fifty million people consisting of forty-six million black Africans, two and a half million Europeans, three hundred and seventy thousand Indians, and just under a million cape colored and other colored people. This is based upon estimates and only partial censuses.

The Colonial Press: A report says.... There is in the Colonial territories themselves, an appreciable daily and weekly press published and owned by Europeans, by Africans, and by peoples of African descent. Against the European publications, the local African press stands weak and defenceless. It is handicapped in various ways---by lack of capital resources to provide adequate machinery, skill and staff; transport and distribution facilities are inadequate and primitive; while the illiteracy and extreme poverty of the colonial populations preclude the possibility of a large circulation and a secure financial base. Added to these, the Law of Sedition is like a sword of Damocles ever hanging over their heads. All these prevent the African Colonial press from becoming a vital factor in the life of the people.

42-86-97

"Yet there are signs that the African people's press is on the move despite these tremendous handicaps."

The Egyptian Sudan: The Umma, or people's party of the Egyptian Sudan has sent an appeal to the United Nations, from which we may quote... "The Sudanese have a legal and moral right to independence. From the dawn of history up to the last century, we have been independent. Neither Egypt nor Great Britain had any claim to sovereignty over us."

"In 1820, Mohammed Ali, the Turkish ruler of Egypt, acting in the Turkish interest, invaded us in order to exploit us by taking our natural riches, and by selling our youth into slavery and bondage."

In spite of the fact that Mohammed Ali, assisted by Islamic leaders who formed the pioneers to his invading army, maintained that the conquest was in the name of the Ottoman Kalifa, with a view to join the Sudan with the rest of the Moslem world within the framework of the Turkish Empire, the Sudanese fought the invading army in many battles until they were defeated by weapons superior to their own.

From that time until our liberation by the Mahdi, the Turkish flag flew over the Sudan, and under its shadow flourished one of the most oppressive, inhuman, and corrupt regimes in the whole history of mankind. In 1885, under the Mahdi, we regained our freedom and for fourteen years we were completely independent, adknowledging no master except our own rulers. These fourteen years of freedom erased any claims based on the sixty-five years of misrule that had gone before."

" In 1898, the Sudan was invaded for a second time, but on this occassion, the invading forces were not Turkish troops, but a joint force made up of British and Egyptians, The present existing administrative rights of the two powers in the Sudan are based on this conquest. Neither Britain nor Egypt had any rights prior to 1898."

86-58-24

PAN-AFRICA

by

W. E. B. DU BOIS

President, Pan African Congress

42-86-100

Liberia: The late Raymond L. Buell wrote in his last book.." The Liberian Centenary comes in 1947. Already the Monrovia Government has appointed a Centennial Commission, which is working out an elaborate and expensive program. Now there are two ways of celebrating this Centenary. One is merely by eulogizing the Liverian Government and people--and they deserve certain eulogies because of the fact of survival. But eulogies as such will merely cover up deep-seated maladjustments. They must be accompanied by a real rehabilitation program. If the second century of Liberian independence is to be more promising than the first, there is not much time to lose in getting such a program under way.

Basutoland: The British High Commissioner of Basutoland thus described the colony in 1945.." The Basuto are a nation, not a tribe; in fact their tribal origins are extremely diverse. They were made into a nation from many heterogeneous elements by one man -Moshesh-who was not a chief by birth or origin, but who became both a warrior and a statesman. He withstood the impact of the Zulus, of the Matabele, of the Koranas and, less completely successfully, the Trek Boers of the Orange Free State. At a great age he handed over the nation he had forged and the lands he held as an independent ruler to Queen Victoria. Legally, Basutoland is a British Colony, and the Basuto of Basutoland are British-born subjects. Bechuanaland and Swaziland are Protectorates, they have never been legally and fully annexed. Legally, the Natives are still the subjects of their own hereditary chiefs, and otherwise "British protected Persons."

42-86-101

Basutoland is the Switzerland of Southern Africa. In winter much of the land is under snow and even in summer the nights are cold. It has a high rainfall. There is range after range of extremely steep mountains and deep narrow valleys. Transport throughout more than two-thirds of Basutoland is by pack animal and the Basuto are a nation of horsemen. Basutoland is I believe, the only place in Africa where Canadian hard wheat is cultivated successfully.

Gold Coast: On July 3rd, Sir Alan Burns, Governor of the Gold Coast opened the first Legislative Council ever to have an African unofficial majority and thus history was made amidst the colourful spectacle which marked the occasion.

Participating in the ceremonial pagentry of the occasion was Sir Osei Agyeman Prempeh II, K.B.E., Paramount Chief of Ashanti, who accompanied by a numerous retinue, "crossed the river Prah" and thus broke a two hundred year old custom.

Messages were sent to the Council by H.M. the King as well as Mr. George Hall, Secretary of State for the Council with an unofficial majority as signal evidence of the progress in the political evolution of the people of the Gold Coast and Ashanti territories. It expressed the hope and confidence that the power of greater control over their own affairs will be used by representatives with a full sense of their heavy responsibilities and mindful of the furtherance of the welfare of those whom they represent.

2 April 1947

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois
President of the Pan African Congress

Delegates of the National Council of Nigeria and the Cameroons have toured these countries and been welcomed with enthusiasm. The people have subscribed $48,000 for sending a delegation to London to protest against Richard's Constitution with its ordinances on minerals, land and the appointment of chiefs. To all these, the people are strongly opposed. The delegation declares that the British Government informed the Nigerians eighty-five years ago that its ultimate aim was self-government. The Richard's Constitution is a retrograde step.

****

42-86-1

The Italian Peace Treaty signed by the Council of Foreign Ministers provides that Italy renounce all right and title to Italian territorial possessions in Africa; that the final disposal of these possessions shall be determined jointly by the Soviet Union, the British Empire, the United States and France within one year after the treaty was signed February 10, 1947. Until then the colonies continue under their present administration. Meantime Count Sforza, Foreign Minister, demands the revision of the treaty and the restoration of the former colonies. The United States Ambassador has stated that this country is willing to revise the treaty if other powers agree.

****

The twenty-ninth session of the International Labor Conference arranged for draft treaties covering fundamentals of social policy in non-self-governing territories and the association of the peoples of the territory in framing and administering measures for social progress. The treaties will stress the general principle of non-discrimination, labor policy, education and the status of women. These treaties will come up for adoption in the Geneva meeting of 1947.

****

A British-French Medical Conference was held in Accra, Gold Coast last November. There were experts from the Belgian Congo, Portuguese Guinea, Liberia, French West and Equatorial Africa and the four British West African territories. Representatives of the British and French health service recommended technical cooperation in health matters. Another conference will be called in 1948 or 1949. International work in health and medicine in Africa has been carried on since 1907. The Rockefeller Foundation especially has been fighting yellow fever and the United Nations propose a world health organization.

****

The question of the relation of the government to the raising and marketing of cocoa in West Africa has been settled for the present by establishing two marketing boards: the Gold Coast marketing board will have ten members of whom four at least nominally will represent the cocoa farmers and the other six the government and cocoa buyers. The Nigerian Board will consist of three to five members appointed by the government with an advisory committee on which farmers and commercial interests will be represented.

****

In 1926, the governments of Kenya, Uganda, Tanganika, Zanzibar, Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland began a series of annual meetings to coordinate matters of interest commong to these governments. Their last meeting was held in October 1946. Among other things they discussed the future of Makerere College, the Negro institution of higher learning in Kenya. They propose to bring the annual income of the college up to $180,000. Of course none of the native peoples was represented.

****

The African Representative Council of Northern Rhodesia assembled in November, 1946 for its annual meeting. They are to advise the governor on matters concerning the African people. The Colonial Secretary sent them a communication in which he stated that in 1948 this council would have power to elect two members to the legislative council of the colony. "I wish to congratulate you on your past achievements and to bid you to look forward to your future responsibility.

7 April 1947

Pan Africa

by
W.E.B. Du Bois

It is said that the House of Commons spent just six minutes in considering the new constitution for twenty-two millions of people in Nigeria. The Nigerians are protesting that the constitution is neither adequate nor democratic.

Minerals in the British colonies are now, wherever possible, placed under ownership of the crown. The mines are operated under government auspices but this does not mean that they are socialized or under the control of the native peoples. As a matter of fact, they are under the control of the British Colonial Office and the Colonial Office is controlled by the investors and the corporations who are exploiting minerals.

Ethiopia's total revenues after five years of effort are about twenty million dollars a year which is a small budget for so large and populous a country. Nevertheless, the empire is seeking to introduce compulsory education for all children.

Robert Gardiner, formerly of Fourah Bay College, is now associated with the United Nations. His change is indicative of the situation in West Africa. He was categorically promised the principalship of Fourah Bay College which is the best Negro college in West Africa. But when he returned after study abroad, he became only an instructor and his appointment as principal was delayed. When he indicated his intentions to join the United Nations, immediately the British charged that he was not loyal to West Africa. Gardiner is protesting against the educational program of the Colonial Office for West Africa. He wrote recently: "submission to the dictates of the Secretary of State for the Colonies will fail to arouse the enthusiasm, support and confidence of West Africans. In circumstances such as this, where the authority of the Colonial Office seems to conflict with the aspirations of the local peoples, some grounds for compromise must be sought; and there are many such points of agreement in the offical proposals and the alternative suggestions put forth by the Achimota and Fourah Bay authorities. We must read into the proposals of the Secretary of State not the whittling down of the scope of work of our college but the broadening of her basis for further progress and development. If Ibadan secures a staff which commands the respect and confidence of the authorities of Achimota and Fourah Bay and the peoples of the Gold Coast and Sierra Leone, West African students will be attracted there."

42-85-3

Early in 1947 Doctor Willard Z. Park headed an UNRRA mission of twenty professional and secretarial workers in Ethiopia. It had its headquarters in Addis Ababa and studied agricultural conditions for a report to the Ethiopian government. The central committee made available one million three hundred thousand dollars of United States money for relief and habilitation supplies for Ethiopia. With this sum, agricultural tools and seeds were to be purchased and sent to Ethiopia free of shipping charges.

The West African Students Union, an organization with headquarters in London, has been raising money to increase its usefulness in that city. The secretary reports pledges of two hundred and forty thousand dollars and the late dean of Westminister before he died made an appeal for further funds.

One of the problems of British Colonies is the number of East Indians present in various colonies. British Guiana has the largest number, 157,000, out of a total population of 361,000. Trinidad has 175,000 out of 522,000; Jamaica has 26,000. Tanganyika in Africa has 35,000; Uganda 26,000 and Kenya 47,000. The relation of Indians and Negroes are complicated by the attitude of the whites who try continually to throw them into antagonistic groups. But various efforts are being made to bring them into understanding.

A new legislative council in the colony of Aden Africa was inaugurated January 6, 1947. The council will consist of the governor, four ex-officio members, four official members and eight non-official members. This, of course, means that the governor has the right of legislation but it gives the natives some chance to discuss proposals and the scheme is, of course, accompanied by the usual statement that the power of the native population in law making is going eventually to be increased.

4-98-24

14 April 1947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

The radio at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, broadcasts three programs daily:

One in Amharic, one in English and one in Arabic. The Amharic program consists of news, music and comment. The Arab program includes news from the Sudan, Morocco and Egypt; sometimes there are lectures. The English program includes the British Broadcasting Corporation views, hymns and commentaries.

The Ethiopian Herald commenting on the peace treaties with Italy says in a recent article: "The Treaties which are in general like the drafts submitted to the Paris Peace Conference determine for the former satellite nations such questions as frontiers, political, military, naval and air clauses, withdrawal of Allied Forces, reparation and restitution, economic and technical matters. In the Italian Treaty the United Nations' Security Council assures the integrity and independence of the Free Territory of Trieste. In the case of Ethiopia, the first victim of the European Aggressors, there is a dark and unholy silence with regard to her frontiers. Although her economy was dislocated, her land pillaged, the adverse geographical isolation caused by Italy's aggression, and the separation of her seacoast still leaves her insecure, while the Peace Treaties attribute urgency to the restitution of the satellite nations, this subject is postponed. To the satellite nations--certainty; to Ethiopia, an Ally, a victim and a peace-loving nation by tradition--uncertainty!"

We have had, of course, scant news of the contact of the King and Queen of Great Britain with African natives during their recent trip. Most of the notices have been slight and unimportant anecdotes. There is, however, one note over International News Service which shows that the King and Queen on their trip to the Northern Transvaal were brought into close contact with the African natives. Some ninety chiefs paid tribute to the sovereigns and an address was made by Doctor Noridi Molema. Molema is a well educated African who has written a book on the Bantu and who spoke to their Majesties in perfect English. The Transvaal has always been the most backward and reactionary of the South Africa states.

9-98-24

The English War Graves Commission reports that the graves of Negro soldiers are being taken care of in the Sudan, Ethiopia, Eritrea, the Somalilands, Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika. There are headstones, trees and shrubs in most of these places but the number of the dead is not reported.

An English writer in West Africa speaks of the Nigeria of today as compared with the past: "Perhaps the most important factor in the development of a country is its means of communication. In those days, journeys had to be done on foot through paths, and people had to carry their loads; some beasts of burden; such as the ass and the camel, were used, but this practice was restricted more or less to the far north; canoes were used in the southern creeks; communication was very slow and the outside world had little or no influence upon this country. The means of address was almost exclusively oral. Today, we have "push" bicycles, motor bicycles, motor cars, motor lorries, railway trains, motor launches plying our water-ways, and aeroplanes; our mode of address is no longer exclusively oral; we have post and telegraph facilities, the airgraph letter service was introduced during the last war, the radio and wireless services are at our disposal. By means of steamships and the aeroplanes, cablegrams and the radio we communicate with foreign lands thousands of miles away.

"It used to take a man three months to travel from Ibadan to Kano; today that journey is done by train in less than two days and by the aeroplane in a few hours. By means of the radio, a listener in Nigeria hears the King or the Prime Minister as he delivers an address in England, feat that could not be accomplished in less than three to six months in days when middlemen had to relay the message in writing at first and orally at last. This giant improvement on our means of transportation and communication has a tremendous effect on all aspects of our life today. It has greatly widened our outlook, and has thus drawn our attitude to trade, education, social conditions, politics and economics; it seems as if these changes have combined to render the younger generation somewhat impatient and a little, though pardonably, fastidious."

42-83-7

11

21 April 1947

Pan Africa

by

W.E.B. Du Bois

42-88-8

[16] Of conditions in the Belgian Congo the International Labor Review for May-June 1946, says that nearly one-third of the male population of the Congo is engaged directly or indirectly in work for European undertakings. Among the natives there is increased and almost passionate interest in the social evolution that is taking place. This makes it dangerous to try to reduce the wages which the workers received during the war and unemployment must be relieved in some way. The war-time order which compelled all adult able-bodied male Africans to engage in agricultural labor has been repealed, and there is some movement toward a general reform in education. A government council and provincial councils were set up in July 1945, which provide for the representation of Africans.

[23] South Africa has been called the "happy hunting-ground of race prejudice". There are contacts between the English and the Dutch, Jews and Gentiles, Europeans and non-Europeans, Bantu and colored, Europeans and Indians. The combination of these contacts and prejudices produce an endless variety of attitudes on racial and cultural relationships, and presents a field of study of how the different groups of people in the world are going to be able to live together in amity and prosperity.

[7,8,9,10] About one hundred and sixty-five thousand West Africans were in the British army during the war. That meant that they had a regular money income for a number of years and civilians prospered because of the money they earned and spent. When these soldiers were demobilized there were not enough paid jobs in civilian life to fit in all the clerks, motor-drivers and others into civilian life. There are plans for better roads, better medical facilities, better houses and purer water; but so far they are principally plans.

Prosperity of three of the four colonies are linked with the commodities of world market. Nigeria depends on palm oil and ground nuts; Gold Coast on cocoa; Sierra Leone has no significant export crop. Gambia has ground nuts. There are difficulties about land ownership and land use which has led to a large debt problem for the farmers. The West African is at a dangerous stage of development, with a number of educated professional men, graduates of British universities in the towns, and shading off to less well-educated leaders.

42-86-9

[23] The newly-formed working committee for non-Europeans under the chairmanship of Rhinault-Jones, director of the South African Institute of Race Relations, is trying to establish more Y.M.C.A. centers for the Bantu in South Africa. Appeal has been made for funds to send twenty young men to the Hofmeyr School in Johannesburg for a special six months course. In mine-compounds, municipal hostels, and native townships, leaders will provide recreation and relaxation for their people by developing study clubs, evening classes. The work is planned for the whole of South Africa, but naturally has only just begun.

[18] The proposed changes in legislature in Northern Rhodesia provide four instead of two members representing African interests, and of these four, two will be native Africans, selected by the Northern Rhodesia African Representative Council.

28 April 1947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

[7,8,9,10] There are at present studying in the United Kingdom three hundred and eighty-one students from Nigeria and West Africa. It is difficult to provide places for West African students in England owing to the claims of white ex-service students.

42-88-10

[7] The new constitution of Nigeria has gone into effect. It is complicated as so many British Colonial Constitutions are apt to be, and is difficult for foreigners to understand. There are three regional councils north, west and east, with their three houses of assembly; and in the north one house of chiefs. These councils choose the unofficial element in the central legislature. In the assemblies, the unofficial membership will have a majority vote and the regional bodies can discuss finance but have no power of legislation over financial matters. The central legislature has authority over all Nigeria, some twenty-three million of people, but here the governor has certain powers "in reserve", which means that he is the ultimate legislative power.

[8] At the opening of the legislature of the Gold Coast, three elected members boycotted the meeting as a protest at the way in which the constitution had been adopted.

[23] While the King and Queen were in South Africa, they saw something of black folk, but the worst things were carefully kept from their eyes. Common Sense which is published in Johannesburg, South Africa, says: "The protection of royal eyes calls for great care in the Border region. Here the reserves are worst because they are the oldest, and the simple pastoral people who were settled on them more than an hundred years ago have let them become desert in many parts, - so an official of the Agricultural Division of the Native Affairs Department reports. He says that 50 per cent of the reserves are bad, and 40 per cent terrifying.

The King's drive from Kingwilliamstown is tactfully timed to start at 5:45 p.m. Dusk will have fallen on the arid regions that must be traversed before the comfort of the White Train is gained once more. Any contact with the Africans in these parts would be unfortunate for they are really too poor to make an effort to look respectable. An undue proportion are widows, because the mines have drawn their labour from these reserves for a very long time. In spite of the excellent conditions in the compounds, as well as the pay (2/1d to 2/8d a shift), a large number seem to succumb to chest diseases and leave their wives to battle alone. Unfortunately, they infect their families when they return home."

42-8-6-11

Common Sense adds: "The sensitiveness of South Africans to overseas opinion is the measure of their own qualms of conscience. If that is not so, why this adolescent nervousness? That is surely the way to maintain South Africa's good name, and a healthy system of democratic government.

The way to do precisely the opposite is that taken by the Government in refusing to give passports to two Indians to go to India, and to a coloured woman to attend a Conference in England. If anything further is required to convince overseas opinion that South African treatment of non-Europeans is as illiberal and tyrannical as some of the speakers before UNO declared, the Government has here handed them the evidence on a plate."

sent 5 May 1947

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

(3, 12) It is discouraging to find that the great liberal, Carlo Sforza, Italian Foreign Minister, is not only bewailing the loss of Trieste but also declares that the loss of African colonies to Italy will "endanger western Christian civilization". This is an astonishing point of view.

There is no possible historical doubt of Italy's role in East Africa. She tried to seize Ethiopia because she had lost Tunis to France; she became the cat's paw of England in attempting to reduce Menelik II of Ethiopia to a vassal, and finally treacherously attacked and cruelly punished the Ethiopians in a war that precipitated the World War.

Sforza says that the loss of Italian colonies "is felt keenly not only in Rome but in Paris", and he hopes that it will also be felt seriously "in London and in Cape Town". He is certainly right so far as Cape Town is concerned.

(11) The Egyptian Sudan is not a colony but a condominium set up in 1899 by treaty between Great Britain and Egypt. The British and Egyptian flags are used, and supreme authority invested in a governor-general appointed by the Khedive on recommendation of the British. All Europeans and natives are on full terms of equality before the law, and there are no special privileges for whites. The Sudan is in fact run by military men in a highly centralized bureaucratic government. Education at the Gordon Memorial College is designed for training civil servants in the northern Sudan. In the southern Sudan, education is in the hands of the missionaries who are chiefly interested in converting the heathen. There has been efforts on the part of the government to separate the northern and southern Sudan, so as to annex the south to the British African Colonies.

In 1910 a Governor-General's Council was constituted, made up of British heads of departments. The District Commissioners are British and the deputies were Egyptians up until 1924, when the assassination of the Governor-General led to their expulsion and increased employment of native Sudanese. So called "indirect-rule" was introduced, which recognizes government by native tribal chiefs. This was opposed by the educated Sudanese who knew that these rulers were puppets of the British. Later a system of local government was introduced with municipal town and rural councils and some provincial councils.

21-98-12

The traty of 1936 between Britain and Egypt gave the Sudan some hope of autonomy, but nothing has been done since. The Sudanese fought in the Second World War against the Italians and in defense of their own boundaries without help from Egypt. They joined the allied forces in Eritrea and in Abyssinia and also in North Africa.

(23) Here is a picture of a black tenant farmer in South Africa. His name is Moena; he is fifty-four years old, gray-haired and growing blind. His body is bent and he is sun-tanned and wrinkled. He has served fifteen farmers during his life for periods of from one to five years. They have bought land and automobiles, while he is still desperately poor. As a worker he has built himself ten different houses, built dams, worked twelve hours a day or more. His last master paid him very little, but loaned him fifty dollars, which made him practically a slave for life, because he could not repay it. After forty years of work he owns three chairs, one table, an old stove, a couple of chickens, a cart and two horses. He says "my chief complaint is that I feel so insecure. I have no house of my own; I cannot vouch for the future of my children and yet I have done what could be reasonably expected of me."

(1) Sidi Mohammed, Sultan of Morocco, has come out in defense of the Arab League. In a recent speech at Tangier he said "this wise League has been established in this land which has reenforced union among all the Arabs in the East as well as in the West" and has "permitted them to unify their paths and to march toward moral progress and grandeur of Islam and Arab glory." This black Sultan is a direct descendant of Mohammed.

Sent 15 May 1947

U

Pan Africa

by

W.E.B. Du Bois

[23] Sometime ago the Native Representative Council in South Africa adjourned in protest. The Council told the officials that during the ten years of its existence it has been only addressed once by the Prime Minister and that the Minister of Native Affairs never attended its discussions. Its minutes were never placed before the House of Representatives nor translated into Afrikaans.

Recently spurred by world criticism of South Africa conditions Prime Minister Smuts spoke to six leading members of the Council and promised to enact legislation to giving "some measure of responsibility; some executive authority to the elected representatives of South Africa colored race". He said "we cannot ignore native opinion in this country. We cannot have government which ignores the vast mass of people living here."

However all this was merely a promise and nothing will be done to implement it before the national elections of 1948.

[6 near 7] India proposed to the United Nations Council last fall that the Cameroons and Togoland which ~~was~~ were divided under the Mandate System after World War I should become a nation of some two hundred thousand square miles and nearly three and half million inhabitants. This would be one of the richest agricultural and ivory-producing areas. Togoland which has in addition thirty-five thousand square miles, a million and a quarter inhabitants was a self-supporting colony of Germany before the first world war.

Few people realize the rapid growth of consumers and buyers cooperation in Jamaica, West Indies. It began in 1938 with some consumers stores many of which failed. The government then set up a board and a modern cooperative movement began, called the Jamaica Welfare, Limited.

This includes movements for study for working together; for saving; for buying, selling and owning together.

In 1945 there were reported five hundred and eighty three different cooperative organizations with a total membership of nearly eighty-five thousand persons, and assets aggregating nearly five hundred thousand dollars

A white South African writer has this to say of the future of Africa: "...we must surely feel that in the ultimate test it is merit not colour which will decide leadership in Africa."

"Like all politicans, however, General Smuts has his stock-in-trade of pipedreams. He has his much respected ivory tower too, into which he retreats with sometimes dazzling speed (I'm thinking now of two encounters in New York, one with Dr. Kuma - 'these people don't understand us'; and the other with Mrs. Pandit - 'it's a cruel world, my child')".

[12] Little has been said of the role which Ethiopia played in the meeting of the foreign ministers in Paris. Ethiopia was represented by a small delegation. Its chief was Ato Aklilou Habte-Wolde. The other principal delegates were the Ethiopian Ministers, in England, Blatta Ephrem Medhen; in the U.S.S.R., Blatengheta Lorenzo Taezaz; and in France Ato Tasfae Tenagnen; also Ato Taffara Worq, Private Secretary to the Emperor.

It is notable that the Ministers in London and Moscow are both Eritreans by birth. The deputy delegates included two Somalis, Sheikh Omar Azhari and Haji Farah; and Lij Membere Yayehirad, who was Director of the Ministry of Justice. Ato Imirrou Zallek was Secretary to the Delegation and Tacile Shiffran a Press Officer.

The Delegation from the outset attracted the attention of the press and the public to a marked degree. It happened to be the first to enter the Luxembourg Palace on Monday, the 29th July, when the Conference opened, and the romantic name of Ethiopia and the striking costume of the sheikh - a green robe surmounted by a white turban - combined to give distinction to the entry.

71-98-24

The first Ethiopian delegate, Ato Aklilou, was the spokesman for his country in the general debate, and his speech, delivered in French, made a marked impression. He made it clear at the outset that the Italian policy of aggression against Ethiopia long preceded the Fascist regime. As France had to endure the invasion of Germany three times within a century, so Ethiopia had to face invasion from Italy three times within half a century. For Ethiopia, then, the peace settlement was a question of a positive assurance that she would be exposed no lohger to invasion. The key-note of his plea was that Ethiopia should have justice, that she should be able to at last to live in peace, free from fear of fresh invasion, that the losses from the past invasions should be restored, that she should no longer be separated from her children in Eritrea and Somalia, torn from her by Italian aggression; finally, that she should no longer be deprived of direct access to world markets, but should have her own ports.

Italian massacres in Ethiopia during February 1937, two years after the invasion, are thus described by eye-witnesses: "... the shooting never ceased all night, but most of the murders were committed with daggers and truncheons. Whole streets were burned down, and if any of the occupants of the houses ran out from the flames they were machine-gunned or stabbed with cries of 'Duce! Duce!".

The London Times reported this massacre in its issue of March 3, 1937 as follows: "With rifles, pistols, bombs, knives and clubs, served out for occasion, gangs of Black Shirts and workmen went through the native quarter, killing every man, woman and child they came across. Others with flame-throwers and tins of petrol fired the flimsy huts and houses and shot down those who tried to escape."

The News Chronicle reported as follows: "So many thousands of Ethiopian men, women, children were massacred, that they cannot be buried, let alone counted. The authorities are, therefore, piling the bodies into heaps which are soused with petrol and set on fire."

Yet the Council of Foreign Ministers has admitted no claim of Ethiopia for reparations.

42-86-16

Sent 19 May 1947

Pan Africa

by

W.E.B. Du Bois

Mr. Norman Manley of Jamáica speaking in London, November 1946 said: "I do not pretend to know by what miracle of effort, Africa will effect amalgamation of the Continent, but I know it is essential for the final development of the African people themselves. I equally well know that the status of the African the world over will never be regarded as that of a free man by the peoples of the world until Africa is a united and amalgamated Continent. That that is well understood by African leaders in Africa I have no doubt; but we in the West Indies have made in the last ten years a good beginning of wiping out insular failings, insular jealousies and of recognizing that differences and jealousies on small matters is the greatest curse that can afflict peoples; and that others in the like case may look at our condition and profit by it. Indeed the majority of West Indian leaders fully realize the importance of Africa with our own interests and the link with other interests and our own; and I assure you it is a considerable stride forward we have made recently."

The attitude of Africans toward missionaries is described in a recent edition of West Africa: "Old men in Africa, sitting around their fires and over gourds of palm wine, shake their heads for the days that used to be, when a man was a man and, with his spear or sword, bow and arrow, feared no foe. They complain that missionaries have spoilt everything and they weep that missionaries have 'made women of them.' The missionaries condemned their weapons and enjoined them to be like 'gentle Jesus, meek and mild' and, meanwhile, fellow-countrymen of some missionaries came with guns and bayonets and overpowered them. Missionaries have made the young lose customary respect for age, and all is confusion, so say these old men. 'We must desecrate the memory of our ancestors in order to qualify for the City with Golden Gates?'

42-88-18

"Some young people have complaints too: 'the missionaries came with the Bible and asked us to kneel down and close our eyes in prayer. They asked us to lay our treasures in heaven and take no thought of the things of the earth. While we knelt and prayed, race-fellows of missionaries came with swords and guns and planted their flags. When we arose from prayer, our land was gone. When we complained, our illiterate fathers were made to sign treaties selling our land for a few cases of trade gin, beads and cowries.

"Our old men thought they were only granting permission for temporary stay and peaceful trade, but did not know that they were parting with our land, a thing which nobody in Africa can do; because land in Africa belongs to the people as a whole - dead, living, unborn. Each generation holds the land in trust for future generations and none can alienate it. The missionary tells us good people must go to church. We have been to his country. His countrymen hardly go to church."

M. Gaston Monerville, Deputy from French Guiana was elected president of the French Council of the Republic which is the name of the Senate according to the new French Constitution.

Mr. Monerville is a Negro and was formerly under-secretary of state for colonies. He succeeded M. Champetier de Ribes who died recently. Mr. Monerville won the ballot by ten votes over his opponent, Mr. Henri Martel who is a member of the Communist Party and was supported very strongly by this party.

In acknowledging his election, Mr. Monerville said, "It shows that there are bonds between the homeland and the territories overseas that are truly fraternal.

[6] The President of the French Republic, has been making a tour of West Africa in April and May. He visited St. Louis, Conakry and Bamako, and continued to Gao. This is an effort to strengthen the loyalty of African tribes toward the French Government, after the severe revolts in Asia and Madagascar.

Sent 26 May 1947

Pan Africa

by

W.E.B. Du Bois

(9) In April a member of Parliament asked the Colonial Secretary concerning broadcasts in Hausa to the ten million Hausa-speaking peoples in British West Africa. Mr. Creech Jones answered: "Broadcasts in Hausa are already made over rediffusion systems from six stations in Nigeria and it is hoped to provide this year three new stations, all in the Northern Provinces. The resumption of Hausa broadcasts from the Gold Coast is also being considered. The question of arranging broadcasts in Hausa from London will be kept under review. At present, there is an insufficient number of receiving sets in the Northern Provinces of Nigeria to justify the use of staff and wave-lengths urgently required for other services." He was then asked if a supply of broadcasts would not create a demand for sets? "Hausa is understood by more British subjects, outside India, than any other language, except, of course, English".

42-26-19

(6,16) As far back as 1939 conversations were held between the French and British Colonial Offices with a view to copperation. In November 1945 France and Britain held a discussion in London. In Dakar in May 1946, the French and English had talks on veterinary medicine and on medicine in general in November 1946. Also talks on colonial matters have taken place between France and Belgium, and Belgium and England; and a joint session of the three countries will be held in some European capital.

This means of course that the colonial powers are at their usual practice of seeking to settle colonial matters by conference between white colonial officials with almost no representation of the colonials. This is a program which can never result in complete success.

(13, 19) The British Empire is planning slowly to transfer its imperial outposts to Kenya in East Africa and Northern Rhodesia in South Africa. In this way they hope to be able to hold their colonial world. There is only one miscalculation and that is they expect that the Negro in the future, as in the past, is going to be acquiescent under this plan of empire which has the blessing of the Unionof South Africa and its child, Kenya.

(12) (13)Ethopia at the Paris Conference of Foreign Ministers was the first to enter the Luxembourg Palace on Monday, the 29th of July, when the Conference opened, and the romantic name of Ethiopia and the striking costume of the sheikh-a green robe surmounted by a white turban-combined to give distinction to the entry.

The first Ethiopian delegate, Ato Akilou, was the spokesman for his country in the general debate, and his speech, delivered in French made a marked impression. He made it clear at the outset that the Italian policy of agression against Ethiopia long preceded the Fascist regime. As France had to endure the invasion of Germany three times within a century, so Ethiopia had to face invasion from Italy three times within half a century. For Ethiopia, then the peace settlement was a question of a positive assurance that she would be exposed no longer to invasion. The keynote of his plea was that Ethiopia should have justice, that she should be able to at last to live in peace, free from fear of fresh invasion, that the losses from the past invasions should be restored, that she should not longer be separated from her children in Eritrea and Somalia, torn from her by Italian aggression; finally, that she should no longer be deprived of direct access to world markets, but should have her own ports.

42-86-20

Pan Africa 2 June 1947

by

W.E.B. Du Bois

~~CRIMES~~

In the Bahama Islands sixteen per cent of the population or about 11,000 people are registered voters. Many of who are qualified under the law have not registered. About thirteen out of twenty-nine members of the Assembly are merchants. It is generally agreed that the constitutional machinery must be further overhauled.

In Barbadoes the government consist of the Governor, Legislative Council nominated by the governor and a elected House of Assembly. The main legislative power lies in the governor and the House of Assembly. The Governor has a Executive Committee of nine which includes four members of the House but these are chosen without regard to their party representation and have no collective responsibility. There is, therefore, often a deadlock between the executive and the legislature and collective responsibility for the legislature is demanded for future government.

(8) In the mines of the Gold Coast, West Africa, malaria is no longer the chief cause of death but has been displaced by tuberculosis. This is due to bad housing and living conditions in the villages. Much of the labor used is imported from neighboring colonies and consequently the British disclaim responsibility.

(7) There is in England an organization of officers of Native Administration Staffs in Nigeria; while in Nigeria there is a Native Organization called the Federal Union of Native Administration Staffs. These two organizations are working for the establishment of local government. The cost are borne largely by the native authorities and especial effort is being made to raise the low salaries paid the administration service; to institute cooperative savings and purchase. A native solicitor has been appointed as law officer to this union. There is also a public relations department and a scholarship fund.

(23) E.S. Sachs, South African Mineworkers' Delegate to the International Labour Organization has written an account of South African Goldmining workers' conditions in an article in the Manchester Guardian of September 6th. The goldmining industry employs about 40,000 Europeans and 360,000 Africans who came mainly from the Union, Nyasaland, the Rhodesias, the Portuguese and High Commission Territories. Nine-tenths of the African workers are indentured labourers who leave their families, land and stock, to work in the mines for an average cash wage of fifty cents per shift which is exactly one tenth of the wage paid to the European miner. The miner is provided with food and medical attention but receives no sick-pay or leave-pay except for Christmas Day and Good Friday.

42-86-22

The workers' absence from home for long periods not only disrupts his family life but also seriously dislocates the tribal subsistence economy. But landlessness and abject poverty combine to drive him irresistibly to livelihood in the mines. The prosperity of the Goldmining industry is astounding; of the fifty million pounds annual profits more than one-third is absorbed in dividends.

by

W.E.B. Du Bois

(23) The South African Government by severe repressive measures succeeded in breaking the strike which involved nearly two-thirds of the 300,000 African gold miners. The strike began in August last year with a demand by the Johannesburg gold mine workers for a $1.60 per day wage increase and spread so rapidly that it soon enveloped nearly 200,000 workers. The strikers received considerable support especially from from the Transvaal Municipal African Workers Union and the Indian passive resistance movement of South Africa. Reports from South Africa show that during the period of the strike at least thirty Africans lost their lives and untold hundreds were seriously injured during the brutal suppression of the strike by the police.

Mr. Creech Jones, Secretary of State for Colonies in Great Britain in a recent address said: "So far as Britain is concerned, I think we can assume today that the old Imperialism has come to an end. ...Imperialism has come to an end, too, because it has been subjected to a pretty fierce criticism by economists, by socialists and others who exposed its inner content and made clear that it implied a position of privilege and economic dominance which was unstable and which would bring much danger to mankind if it were persisted in.

"This purpose, so manifest in British policy in recent years, is unfortunately, very much misunderstood in the world today. We are still the butt of a good deal of fierce criticism because we have not paraded before the world the constructive purposes of our administration. There has been, only recently, a number of statements by responsible people in American public life in which Britain has been characterized as an Imperial power pursuing her own material aims and little actuated by the purpose of winning freedom and building up the social life of the people in the Colonies.

"It is unfortunate, too, that this view is shared by those of Negro descent in the United States. The fact is there and we must face it for the reason that this view tends to imperial relations between the great nations; it tends to poison a great deal of the comradeship and the goodwill that ought to exist between the peoples and leads to no end of misunderstanding."

42-6-8-24

(7) One hundred years ago, George Maclean died. He was an Englishman who after five wars between the British and the Ashanti, tried to patch up the differences between the two nations. He was a far-seeing man who in 1831 sent two princes of the Ashanti royal family to England to be educated and made a treaty of peace between the two nations. Missionaries were introduced into Ashanti. He signed treaties with the Ashanti chiefs and practically recognized the celebrated Bond of 1844 which legalized the relations between the two countries.

The chiefs met and formed a legislative body but the English merchants overthrew the work of Maclean and war began again in 1860 which lasted ten years and finally resulted in the British conquest. The work of Maclean was a recognition of the freedom and independence of West Africa; it was overthrown by the British exploiting merchants.

There were two thousand eight hundred vacancies in the British Colonial Service between June first, 1945 and March thirty-first, 1947. More than 14,500 applicants applied for these vacancies in the Administrative, Educational and Engineering Services. This shows why it is that the British do not educate natives for colonial positions: too many Englishmen want the positions, where the pay is high and conditions of work attractive. A correspondent of the Socialist Daily Herald in England asked "why is it we do so well with primitive people, but once they become educated we seem to fail?" The reason lies in the above figures.

Pan Africa

by
W. E. B. Du Bois

The Fifth Earl of Harewood, who has just died, married a daughter of King George V. The vast fortune of this family was founded upon their ownership of slaves and land in Jamaica and Barbados. Slavery had been the source of wealth of numerous British families, who in many cases have also shared Negro blood.

(12)

The Emperor of Ethiopia has recently made a strong case for returning to Ethiopia her colonies of Eritrea and Somaliland. He declares that the people of the area are Ethiopian by blood and history; that the population of Ethiopia is fifteen million and that of the two colonies have ~~14,000~~ only 1,400,000; and it would be a costly farce to set up central administration for these colonies; that the people of these provinces are anxious to return to Ethiopian citizenship of which they were deprived in 1890 by Italian conquest; that the powere who deprived Ethiopia of access to the sea, take toll of Ethiopian exports and imports, and often refuse to furnish ships; that one can gauge how much the American public knows or cares about Ethiopia, by the fact that Henry Wallace made not a single reference to Ethiopia in his European speeches on American Policy.

When Britian needed the help of Ethiopia in the war, including Eritrea and Somaliland they promised freedom to Ethiopia and restoration of these colonies.

(12)

Coal deposits are known to exist in several places in Ethiopia and in some cases are being worked for fuel; also the Sinclair Oil Company which has a fifteen year Ethiopian concession is shipping drilling equipment from the United States. The oil which they have good prospects of producing will be a part of the Middle East oil problem.

(12) In April there arrived in Ethiopia from the United States a consignment of 330 cattle, 60 sheep, and 120 hens selected carefully for improving Ethiopian breeds.

(12) Waizeru Senedu Gabru has produced a play in Ethiopia called "In Graziani Days", which dramatizes the resistance to Italian Conquest. Her own brother was murdered by the Italians and she was a part of the patriot resistance. The Ethiopians were deeply stirred when the play open at the Empress Menen School for Girls, Addis Ababa.

42-86-24

On Empire day , the King of Great Britian sent a message to the colonies declaring that the great ideal of "brotherhood was the foundation of the Empire, and that all were members of one family, brothers and sisters of each other. At the same time it was brought out in Parliament that admission to the army and navy of Great Britian is confined to British subjects "Of pure European descent"; in the Royal Air Force alone is membership open to all British subjects without discrimination of race or color.

(8) Cocoa is still disturbing the British Parliament; a member complained in May that "We in Britian are having to pay a needlessly high price for our cocoa, while the West African native grower is getting an extremely low price." It was explained that while government controled cocoa is sold at the New York price , no concession is made to the British consumer and none to the African grower.

23 June 1947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Before the war the standard wage in Bermuda was two dollars a day. The war forced wages down to a dollar a day and there was no price or rent control. Workers at the American base received three dollars a day and competed for homes. Trade unions existed and had the right to strike; but their members had no political rights, could not establish a political fund nor publish a newspaper. Only about twelve percent of the adult population have the right to vote which is based on land and many landholders thus have several votes. In 1939 the Hotel Association boasted "Bermuda is not a democracy, taxation is negligible". Education is compulsory but not free and the teachers are poorly paid. There are separate schools for white and colored children. Colored people do the menial work. There are no civil service examinations, and the local hospital which has a government grant paid out of taxation refuses to train or employ colored girls. It has no free beds for the poor. The Bermuda Workers Association with a membership of five thousand has been agitating against these conditions and the British Colonial Office is promising some changes. A Royal Commission is about to investigate conditions and the colonial secretary has promised that colored girls will soon be trained as hospital nurses.

Mr. Creech Jones, Colonial Secretary, plans to attend a conference at Montego Bay, Jamaica next September, to discuss proposals for closer association of the British West Indian colonies. The conference will be attended by the Governors of Barbados, British Guiana, British Honduras, Jamaica, The Leeward Islands, Trinidad, and the Windward Islands. From each colony three delegates, nominated by the legislature, may be members of the conference. In the meantime the colored people themselves propose to hold an earlier conference, in order to consolidate their demands. Representives of some of these colonies have been in the United States confering with American Negroes.

42-8-29

(14) At the pre-historic conference at Nairobi three pottery heads of outstanding merit were mentioned. They are now on loan to the British Museum and reveal the existence of an early cultural group in the central plateau of Nigeria. The most remarkable exhibit is a beautiful human head which may have been a part of a statue.

(6) The visit of the President of the French Republic to West Africa in April is the first of a series of colonial tours. He plans next to go to South Equatorial Africa, Madagascar, Djibouti, and Reunion. He expects to visit also the Cameroons next January and after that the French West Indies Islands.

30 June 1947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

(14) Kenya is of great strategic importance. It stands at the crossroads of Islam and Christianity, and is becoming more and more a center of the British Empire whence developments in the Near East and India will be watched. It will be developed as a military and naval base, and is already an important air junction. There are large agricultural schemes. Thousands of African soldiers just demobolized after overseas service are in Kenya; they have experienced a standard of living much higher than before and are demanding a chance to work at decent wages.

The British Boxing Board of control still insists on barring non-European persons from contesting in the professional boxing championship of the United Kingdom. They may compete for Empire titles but not for British titles.

(6) The Anglo-French conference on West Africa Road Rail and Telecommunications, opened at Dakar, French West Africa, May ninteenth. One African member of the Legislative Council of Nigeria ~~is~~ was among Nigeria's representives; and on the other hand, two African members of the Council of the French Republic visited Lagos in British West Africa recently, before proceeding to Paris for the next session of the council. This means that a small beginning is being made of recognizing Negroes as having the right to speak for Negro countries.

(8,9,10) An English periodical says: "One of the most pathetic features of the West Coast scene is the egerness for education which will lead whole families to deny themselves necessities in order to provide schooling for a gifted lad. They buckle down to lessons with an avidity which is incredible to one used to the English boy's stolid acceptance of the inevitable."

42-82-31

(8,9) Delegates from the Gambia Labour Union, the Gambia Amalgamated Trades Union, the Sierra Leone Council of Labour, and the Trades Union Congress of Nigeria attended a Pan-African conference of trade unionists at Dakar last month. There were fifty-eight delegates representing eighteen organizations.

A ban has been imposed on all public meetings and marches, except under police permit, in Jamaica. The ban, which expires in twenty-eight days unless renewed by the Governor prohibits a Socialist demonstration which was to have taken place. The tense situation in the island is due to the approach of the first general elections, and the high cost of living and unemployment.

Barkley b 9-8237

7 July I947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

(I0) The economic history of Liberia has been a desperate effort to get use of ~~foreign~~ goods capital. It began with the British loan of $500,000 in I870. Of this Liberia actually received less than a fifth, she tried to repudiate the balance, but was forced in I906 to make a second loan with a British company. This was spent in about two years and again little resulted. Receivers for the loans were appointed after the First World War, but it was evident that Europe did not intend to treat Liberia fairly, and she turned to the United States. The Firestone Company loaned her five million dollars in return for large concessions, and three-fourths of this went to pay off the previous loans. After the Great Depression, Liberia appealed to the League of Nations and was offered assistance but on terms which threatened her sovereignty.

President Barkley turned from the loan policy and eventually balanced the budget. In I936 he drew up a three year plan, which resulted favorably by I939. A hundred and thirty miles of roads were completed and farming plots were alloted on a cooperative basis. Agricultural supervisors were trained.

Under the present President Tubman, a harbor ~~costing~~ being constructed at an estimated cost of fifteen million dollars ~~$240,000,000~~ has been completed, with the assi tance of the American Navy. Tubman has restored a great deal of land seized from the tribes and has widened the basis of suffrage, including women.

(7, 8, 9) According to medical statistics in the four colonies of / British West Africa, veneral disease and tuberculosis are showing high rates. In 1943 authorities treated sixty-two thousand cases of veneral disease in a population of twenty six million. The rate among troops was even higher.

(7,8,) The Farmers Committee of British West Africa has sent out the following statement concerning government control of cocoa sales: The Proposals on future policy contained in "the Report on Cocoa Control in West Africa" are timed to start from the season 1945-46. This being so, it is obvious that The Colonial Office were evidently feeling rather embarrassed to suggest establishment of "trusteeship", after having widely advertised "partnership" with the Colonial peoples. In order to overcome this difficulty, the Proposals are being concentrated exclusively on the so-called Co-operative Societies which are established in accordance with the Co-operative Ordinances. Such Co-operative Societies on the Coast are, indeed, under Government trusteeship, i. e., under strict Government supervision without any right of direct relations with the outside without Government permission. At the same time, such a move has some extra advantages, because Co-operation is rather popular now adays; and because the real character of West African official Co-operation is generally unknown, it could be easily confounded with the free and spontaneous Co-operation movement as it is known elsewhere and thus command a large measure of popular approval and support.

I4 July I947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

(7, 8, 9,) The bulk of Gold Coast Cocoa up to 97 per cent, is produced by farmers who are collectively organized in accordance with the suggestions of the Nowell Commission's Report, with an admixture of special native characteristics which make such organization more understandable and acceptable even to the most illiterate farmer in the distant Bush, without impairing its genuine cooperative spirit.

These farmers are the majority of the population of the Gold Coast and Ashanti, and the bulk of cocoa growers of Nigeria. They are not mentioned at all in the recent report on cocoa control except that they would be obliged to submit themselves to the proposed Government Selling Organization. They declare that such discrimination against the real cooperative Societies of the Gold Coast and Nigeria is incomprehensible. These cocoa producers were almost wholly responsible for the West African cocoa delivered at self-sacrificing prices and for the Cocoa sales effected by the Cocoa Control during the war. They are the majority of the population of West Africa and as such have been helping the Empire's war effort in every way possible such as man-power, money contributions, augumented produce deliveries, etc. The discrimination, say the farmers, is utterly unjustifiable.

"The Farmers Committee of British West Africa Limited would be quite fit to manage the whole affair of the proposed centralized sales in all its aspects. However, if it is insisted upon, they would be agreeable to accept eventually government supervision. They have their plans to meet every emergency and in this connection they are of the opinion that first of all a special International Cocoa Council should be formed, which would consist of representatives of cocoa producers and consumers all over the world." They futhermore, consider that such a Council would greatly simplify the task of centralized sales of West African Cocoa and that it would also safeguard West Africa's future in the world cocoa trade. "At the same time, the improved scientific research as proposed in the Report, especially if conducted in harmonious collaboration with the Farmers Committee, on the one hand, and the augumented Produce Control on the other hand, would give the fullest satisfaction even to the most exacting consumer of West African Cocoa beans."

42-8-6-35

Madagascar, is an island near the east coast of Africa considerably larger than the whole of France. It is inhabited by a mixed population of Negro and Asiatic descent, who since I8I0 have been ruled by the Hova tribe. Under these monarchs the island attained a considerable degree of civilization; but during the nineteenth century, both Great Britain and France tried to seize control. The French were eventually successful and took over foreigh relations in I885. Finally in I895, Queen Ranavalona III was dethroned and exiled to Algeria where she died in I9I7. Madagascar became a French colony.

During and after the first world war there was widspread conspiracy to get rid of the French, but the quality of French officials was improved. Since then universal compulsory education, from eight to fourteen, has been introduced and some local autonomy given, with the integration of many of the natives into the civil service. Native troops were used in both the first and second world wars. Since the second world war widspread revolt has arisen in Madagascar, the details of which are not clear. In July I947 however, several thousand native rebels assaulted the capital of the island and a battalion of reinforcements were landed. The situation is still uncertain.

21 July 1947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

(17) When the Portuguese arrived at the mouth of the Congo river in the fifteenth century, there had existed for centuries, a great state among the Ba-Congo with its capital at the city now known as San Salvador. It extended over modern Angola and back as far as the Kasai and upper Zambezi rivers. The Negro Mfumu or Emperor was induced by the Portuguese to accept Christianity, His son and several other young Negroes were taken to Portugal and educated. Eventually several of these Negroes became priests of the Catholic Church. Others distinguished themselves at the university, one at least, a bishop. The kingdom of Congo eventually was partially overthrown by the invading Bantu from the north and east, but a ruler with the royal title still reigns today. He is Pedro IV King of Portuguese Congo, a man 75 years old. He arrived in July in Italy with seven hundred pilgrims, on route to the Vatican City, where he will present two great ivory tusks to Pope Pious XII. The King said "I shall be the first of my family, that dates from the Pharaohs, to see the Pope."

(2) When Tunis and other parts of North Africa, including Algeria and Morocco, were liberated in 1943 by the allies, it was hoped that the French would pursue a new policy. Tunis had been occupied by German and Italian forces late in 1942. Facist rule was ruthlessy enforced by the French Resident-General. The people of Tunis resisted and helped the allies overthrow the Facists. Nevertheless outrages against the population continued with executions, martial law, no freedom of the press and no elections. In August 1946 the Tunisian National conference met and despite police viligence they spoke their minds. These are some of their declarations:

"Whereas, Colonial Empires, rightly held to be a cause of rivalry between powers and a source of international conflicts, have been solemnly condemmned by the United Nations."

"Before I88I Tunisia was an autonomous state and internationally recognized. France imposed a protectorate, which was never ratified by popular consent. After 65 years, this protectorate has degenerated until today it has become a regime of colonial exploitation. A protectorate impoverishes the indigenous people; robs the Tunisians of their best lands, makes over to the state officials, who are nearly all French, more than two thirds of the budget over which the people have no control."

The congress asked for independence "immediately." After the resolutions were carried unanimously, the leaders of the congress was arrested on the spot and put in jail for a month without trial. Eventually popular agitation was so great that they were released.

28 July I947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Great Britian is planning to increase trade with her African colonies to offset the dollar shortage at home. They are asking the United States not to interpret this as discrimination against American exports which they promised to avoid when negotiating the loan. In other words, while self governing dominions can make their own bargains with the United States, the African colonies will have to let Great Britian bargain for them with a resultant loss to the colonials.

Gugsa the Ethiopian prince who turned traitor to Ethiopia during the Italian invasion, was put on trial for treason in Ethiopia in March. Nine judges were on the bench, and at least one of these was English. There were five counts in the accusation.

The Windward and Leeward islands of the British West Indies cover one thousand two hundred square miles with a population of 360,000. They held a conference on closer union in January I947; as a step toward the future West Indian Dominion. Most of the delegates were elected members of the legislative councils of their islands, and the chairman was a colored West Indian, Sir Clement Malone, chief justice of these islands. The delegates agreed on amalgamation of these two sets of islands under the name "The Carribean Federation" with headquarters at Granada. They proposed a strong central legislature with power over customs, income tax and post office. They recommended that there should be adult suffrage with a literacy test and that membership in the legislature should depend on an income of four hundred dollars a year, or property valued at eight hundred dollars.

(8,9) Since I939 the British Government has had control of the buying and selling of cocoa in British West Africa, especially Nigeria and the Gold Coast. The West African Produce Control Board which carried on this work has admitted recently in Parliament, that the net profit on cocoa transactions made in eight years has been $81,200,000. This is the sum which the farmers of West Africa claim should be returned to them and and not retained by the government.

42-86-39

(I4, I5) J. Merle Davis, director of social and industrial research for the International Missionary Council and author of Modern Industry and the Africans is in charge of making movies for African natives. He has a grant of $55,000 from the Carnegie Fund, and East African governments have supplemented this. It was found that the native women would not take part and so boys had to be substituted for the female characters. The players are payed seven dollars and a half a month, and a white and black staff collaborate.

Synchronized speech records have to be made in six or more tongues and in some cases black commentators tell the story. The first program was shown to three thousand natives at Banta. There are comedy films and films explaining facts like the poll tax, housing, etc. The British authorities greatly fear the American films because they may give the natives wrong ideas of white supremacy.

4 August I947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

(I9) Here is an education relief appeal from Port Harcourt, Nigeria, British West Africa, issued in August in I946. It says that in a mass meeting of the Aro-Chuku Improvement League held in August it was revealed that none of the schools run by T. K. Utchay had received government help or aid for teachers; that Utchay had spent over $2,400 above what the students had paid in. It is proposed, therefore, to raise four thousand dollars as a gift to Mr. Utchay.

"Mr. Utchay is not teaching his own children or those of his own town or tribe alone, but he has educated the children of all nationalities in these schools. He did not open his school at Arochuku alone, but his best work is done at Port Harcourt and Aba where every other nation is fully represented.

"It is time that we Africans should encourage true sons of the Country so that patriots may multiply. When we find a person with strong character who will not sell our rights because of hunger for wealth or honour, we should sup ort and protect him, so that he will be incouraged to continue in an undertaking which is for the welfare of the whole people."

The German writer Wallaschek says, "The general character of African music is the preference for rhythm over melody; the union of song and dance; the simplicity not to say humbleness of the subjects chosen; the great imitative talent in connection with the music and physical excitement from which it arises and to which it appears appropriate."

The economic condition of Haiti showed great improvement during six months of I946-47. The revenues of the state amounted to over six million dollars, which was nearly two million more than the amount collected in the corresponding period of I945-46. Expenditures were about five million dollars which indicated increased expenditure for public work, education and agriculture. The total public debt of Haiti as of March 3I, I947, was $8,900,000. This was a decrease from the ten million dollars owed in I946 and the twelve million in I945. Of this debt, about six million dollars is forei n debt. July seventh there came the welcome news that the Haitian government had deposited six million dollars in the United States to pay off its national debt owed to private and foreign interests.

42-86-41

President Dumarsais Estime made this announcement and also revealed that a ten million dollar plan to develop Haitian industry and agriculture was to be launched. The bonds were to be sold within the country. This apparently marks the end of the control of Haiti by the United States. A large part of the debt which the government has paid was unfair robbery as in the case of the well-known railway deal where a company which had done nothing sold its fr nchise for millions which the nation had to pay.

(23) A conference of the Trade and Labor Council of South Africa was recently held in Port Elizabeth. Nearly one hundred trade unions were represented and I70 delegates representing I35,000 workers. On the other hand, nearly a half million black workers were not represented, simply because 450,000 of them are prevented by law from organizing unions. Progressive Industrial Unions have been demanding that the Industrial Counciliation act be extended to non-whites but the craft unions still oppose this. Since the war the craft unions are supporting a government scheme for parallel but second class unions for natives under government control. However, Negro unionists were admitted to the Trade Council by a narrow vote. On account of this some delegates representing two thousand white unionists withdrew from the Council; among these were representives of the mine workers union, and there is threat that the engineering union may also withdraw.

II August I947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

(23) When General Smutts, recently talked for the first time to the Native Representative Council in Cape Town, he suggested that the Council might be granted a few functional powers, subject to the authority of government which would retain the final decision. Among the new powers might be a share of management of the natives land reserves. The Negro representive of the council, Professor Matthews, replied as follows: "The demand of the African people is for a chang in Native policy, not for a share in giving effect to a policy with whose fundamental principles they are in total disagreement."

(I5) Mable Shaw, an English missionary, writes that she was once standing on a hillside near Lake Tanganyika watching the sun rise with a little African girl beside her. The child was eager to scale the mountain. She climbed up to a piece of jagged rock and finally stood upright upon it, poised and confident. She stood motionless for a few seconds, her small and beautiful figure outlined against the glory of the morning sky. Then she looked down to Miss Shaw and said, "Do come up here; I can see all the world!" Then lifting her head, she added, "and I can see all the stars," and finally, standing on tiptoe and throwing her arms above her head, she said, "I believe I can almost touch the feet of God."

(7,8,9) Margery Perham in a speech over the British broadcasting system, spoke of th situation in West Africa as illustrating two sets of cultural institutions either running in different directions or running toward each other and threatening to clash. When Britian first set up governments in West Africa they established legislative council which were little parliaments with the governor playing the part of the king; but the kings which they imitated were James I or Queen Elizabeth and not

George VI. He was not only thus an absolute monarch but also a prime minister making policy, head of the civil service, and speaker of the House of Commons. Then these colonies began choosing representives of the unofficial population, white, brown and black to sit on the governors council, along with his officials to help with advice and criticism, but without power. Now the first Africans are sufficiently educated to discuss problems and to be members of the council by election. The unofficial representation in the various councils is in majority but this majority is not wholly an elected majority. Indirect Rule came in to permit the tribes to run their own local affairs and improve and modernize them; but educated and advanced Africans want to rise above the tribal life, and are beginning to talk the language of nationalism and Western democracy, demanding that the legislative council become a real parliament. They criticize Indirect Rule because it tends to stagnate and move toward reaction.

42-88-43

R. K. P. Pankhurst writing in the New Times and Ethiopia News says an important word: "The paradox of modern economic development from the point of view of colonial revival lies in the fact that over-production in the United States of America, coupled as it is with acute political polarisation into the Anglo-American and Soviet Russian blocks has entirely disrupted the old order of society.

The clock has turned the full circle: the colonial areas, upon whose subjugation the might of Western Europe prided itself, are now once again of global importance--yet to-day it is their progress and well-being which is necessary to the well-being of the people of Europe, whose standard of living can only rise with that of the dependent and colonial peoples. In the words of the British Government's "Economic Survey for 1946," the restoration of Asia and Africa is "necessary to enable the Eastern Hemisphere countries to make their currencies convertible, and so allow us (Britian) to use our surpluses with them in order to match our deficits" with America. The same argument may be applied with equal force to the countries of Europe generally.

Total colonial liberation is essential for the progress and well-being of the colonial peoples themselves; nor, if we consider the matter from the purely European standpoint, can we forget the words of Karl Marx: "A nation that oppresses another cannot be free."

42-8-9-44

Yet the tragic question is: can the colonies be saved in time--can their salvation, their liberation come from the colonial Powers themselves; can the Great Powers be trusted to restore to their dependent peoples the independence which they stole so long ago?"

I8 August I947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

(7) Mary Slessor was a Scottish woman who was born in I848 and died in Nigeria in I940. Before she was thirty as a missionary she was apreading a new conception of motherhood in British West Africa, fighting taboos and customs. Especially she opposed those which condemned twins to death by killing, and the abandonment of the mothers. Miss Slessor adopted numerous twin children and saved their mothers lives.

Little attention has been paid to the attempt of France to consolidate and build into a new society her colonial empire. She has planned an organization of a French Union, including all colonials and all people of France itself. Also a Council of State with an Assembly of the union. But revolt in the Far East and in Madagascar have hindered this accomplishment. Some attribute the hesitation of France to her conservatism and the greed of French settlers and businessmen. This brings her to hesitate in colonial as in her home affairs between reaction and revolution which neturalizes her energy. Sooner or later France must make a choice either as to complete assimilation of her various peoples or progressive emancipation. At present the French people in France have been cut off from the rest of the world for five years and do not understand the nature of the crisis which confronts all imperialism; especially French settlers in the colonies do not realize the great idealogical currents of today against colonialism.

The French Press and Information service says in a recent release. "In deciding to establish the French Union, the French nation chose, perhaps without realizing it, to embark upon a great adventure. Some people, and not the least important, fearful of future dangers, deplore the fact that France has assumed so great a risk at such a time. To avoid this formidable undertaking under the present unfavorable circumstances, they think that France should not have invited dolonial deputies to sit in her first Constituent Assembly; that she should have tried to gain time and "let the storm blow over". But was not this first step a consequence of the Brazzaville Conference and of the actions of the Provisional Government at Algiers, that also acted under the pressure of circumstances? And is not the very choice of the phrase "French Union", a phrase of unquestionable expediency, explained by the unity of the empire, which in I943 rallied, as if by miracle, throughout its length and breadth, in a common effort to liberate the "mother country?" And is it conceivable that, after these years of tribulation, of fidelity and heroism, in a world stirred by such new and powerful currents, France could once more yield to the bureaucratic routine of colonial administration? Our acts bind us, because they form a chai . We cannot return to the past. Nor can we do things by halves. Although it is not yet constituted, the French Union forms a whole, as is proved everyday by the sympathy and fellowship that are developimg within its borders. It must be built as a solid bloc with France or it will disintegrate into fragments. If France cannot make it the successor of her colonial empire, it is the latter that will disappear, like the Dutch and British empires now falling apart around us."

42-86-46

25 August 1947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

(16) Belgian colonization united the Congo basin, inhabited by nine million colored Africans, to the economic destinies of nine million Europeans. Here, the backward condition of the tribes and the powerful technical organizations created by the whites favors the rule of the great industrial companies. In this fief of the Catholic mission, the African languages are encouraged and the people are carefully shieded from all outside influence. Any change that might be a first step in social or political development along Western lines is considered dangerous, and anyone who advocates rapid emancipation for the colored workers is suspect. The material prosperity of the Europeans, obtained through the use of new techniques, is in sharp contrast with the relative intellectual and social stagnation of the native population, in a land which as yet presents no political problem, byt whose riches are an object of envy for the great industrial powers. If the weaknesses of the colonial administration in this region become too obvious, they will probably not be overlooked by business men in search of raw materials; especially if these latter can count on the moral support in the United Nations of the apostles of black emancipation. The Trusteeship Council will undoubtedly exercise close supervision over the Belgian Congo in the furure.

42-86-47

(20,22) Portugal has always considered its empire as part of its own soil. Following a logical line of reasoning, the mother country has promoted the settlement of a large number of whites in this colony. Angola has proportionally twenty times as many Europeans as any other country of tropical Africa. Intermarriage has increased correspondingly and the "race " problem has been solved by the intermingling of the different bloods. The class problem and merciless exploiting of the poor masses still remains. Angola, like Mozambique, is protected for the moment by its remoteness and relative poverty. The policy of assimilation, even of fusion, often followed with great assiduity, has not prevented the ports of Portuguese India, any more than it has prevented French Pondichery, from being invaded today by the great wave of emancipation that is sweeping Asia. There are historical fatalities that nothing can conjure away.

(I4) British East Africa was settled by immigrants from the Union of South Africa. Three or four hundred Dutch farmers came in I903 and were joined after the first world war by ex-service officers and privates and English industralists. The total area of Kenya is about 225,000 square miles of which only about 40,000 square miles ~~is~~ are capable of cultivation. Of these 40,000 square miles the government gave over II,000 square miles to Europeans. One of them, Lord Delamere, acquired over one hundred thousand acres of the finest land at one penny per acre. The result was that in I935 the natives forming 80 per cent of the population had but 20 per cent of the land area and this the least fertile, being swamp and desert, and infested by the tetse fly.

42-86-48

Up until recently the natives had no representation in the legislature council. They now have one and soom may have two members. But a significent change has come; it was forcast in I923 when the whites of Kenya got frightened at the influx of East Indians and the prepondence of natives and sent out a manisfesto called "The Thermopylae of Africa, Kenya colony," in this, they propose that at the British Empire should give up its attempt to dominate Asia and should concentrate on Africa. It is of interest to find that today under the Labor Government this is exactly what is happening. The British Empire unable to hold India, and also being on the verge of relaxing its hold upon Egypt, is going to concentrate its military and naval power in East Africa as a stronghold of a new British-African imperialism. It will be interesting to watch further developments of this idea.

6 September 1947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

British ast Africa is part of the world which must be watched in its current history at development. It consists of five countries, in order of their size the nglo-Egyptian oudan has 969,000 square miles; Tanganyika 360,000 s uare miles; Kenya 225,000 square miles, Uganda 93,000 square miles, and Somaliland 68,000 square miles. In population these countries have six and a half million in the Egyptian Soudan, five million and a half in Tanganyika, four million each in Kenya and Uganda and less than a half million in Somaliland. Together they form a vast area stretching from Egypt to Mozambique, and comprising the richest and most valuable mount in land of Eastern Africa, except Ethiopia. Together these countries are nearly as large as all Europe and have a population larger than that of the rgentine. Great Britain is trying to hold this area as its new life line to Asia. The Sudan belongs historically to Egypt and Egypt is trying to regain its owner-ship. The black Sudanese are divided. One party wishes to stay with Egypt. The other party, a accusing the Egyptians of drawing the color-line choose proppective independence under the British flag. Uganda is legally independent with its own King, but is held as a British Protectorateand economically a prisoner of White Kenya. Its entire trade goes through Mombasa. Tanganyika was a former German colony and is now a Mandate; Great Britian is under solemn promise to give it eventual self-government. In each case there is going to be a fight of European Empire and African freedom and Autonomy.

42-86-49

11 September 1947

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

The price of cocoa in the United States is now three and a half times as high as it was before the OPA controls were abolished. The United States is the greatest consumer of cocoa in the world. The present quotation for cocoa is the highest during the last 125 years; therefore the cocoa buyers in America have gone on strike and are determined to cut their buying until the price goes down.

The price has gone through some remarkable changes. After the First World War, cocoa jumped from ten to twenty-five cents a pound. By 1921 it had fallen to five cents a pound; by 1937, thirteen cents a pound brought a reduction in consumption and again cocoa dropped five cents a pound.

Now it is selling at between thirty and thirty-four cents a pound. But all this is simply the American consumers view of the situation. Cocoa as a matter of fact is practically a monopoly of the British Empire. The British Empire controls price and sale of cocoa in West Africa, and has done so since the opening of the Second World War. It controls the amount of cocoa raised among the various British buyers and sets the price which the buyers must pay the cocoa farmers. These cocoa farmers are Negroes working on their own plantations and they raise by far the largest part of the cocoa of the world. There are cocoa plantations in the West Indies raised by the usual momopoly methods but their output is too small to affect seriously the main price.

The cocoa farmers in West Africa regularly share in every fall of price and are reduced to poverty and to mortages. But when the price rises then the cream of the increase goes to the great British cocoa merchants like the Cadburys. These merchants have strong influence with the Colonial Office. They either make the powerful colonial governors or at least they veto the appointment of any persons whom they do not like. A career in West Africa with high salary and pension depends upon the great merchants of England.

In the present pinch of British economy, one of the ways to get dollars is to raise the price of cocoa, especially that sold to America and the result of this is not to enrich the cocoa farmers but the British cocoa merchants. This is a sample of the intricate ways in which capitalistic economy is working today. A man in New York like the president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company is receiving one hundred dollars an hour. On the other hand, thousands of miles to the west is a poor black peasant in West Africa who is lucky if he get one hundred dollars after five years' work. To some people all this is a matter of desert, hard work, "free enterprise" and "private initiative", but to those who know it is an elaborate system of theft covering the world.

The center of the cocoa industry in West Africa is the Gold Coast with 91,000 square miles and four million inhabitants and Nigeria with 372,000 square miles and twenty-four million inhabitants. Both of these countries have a high rate of illiteracy because of lack of schools but each has a small well-educated intelligentsia who are leading the people in social and political reforms. Their great difficulty has always been as an Englishman recently said that out of ever ten dollars worth of produce which they raise nine went to England and one dollar was left at home.

42-86-51

15 September 1947

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Once upon a time the word "Bondelschwarts" evoked among intelligent readers the response: "Southwest Africa" and "Smuts". But that was twenty-five years ago and we have forgotten. On September 8, 1922, the Assembly of the League of Nations listened to a speech by a Negro from Haiti, Dantes Belleg rde, calling attention to the "League's duties to mankind" and referring to "the recent reported massacre of Bondelschwarts Hottentots by a South African expeditionary force." Bellegarde asked full investigation. The United States controller of Haitian finances promptly disallowed the Haitian delegate's expenses as a member of the Assembly, but the Assembly ordered the Mandates Commission to investigate.

42-86-53

The Commission was embarrassed. It had no right to investigate or summon any witness except the South African Government itself. Prime Minister Smuts admitted that to quell "a revolt" he had sent a force of 390 men with four machine guns and two bombing planes against a tribe of natives of whom less than 200 were alleged to have had shot guns and only 45 guns were actually found. The South Africans killed over a hundred men, women and children, and wounded several hundred more.

"Why?" asked the Mandates Commission, very politely. Well the real reasons for the revolt were not clear. But a commission of inquiry appointed by Smuts, himself, showed that these natives had not paid the tax on sheep dogs. The tax which the Germans, when in control, had not levied at all, had been raised by the Union from no tax on one dog and $1.25 on a second, to $5 on the first and $50 for ten dogs. The natives could not pay and between September, 1921 and January, 1922, over a hundred of them had been arrested as tax delinquents and fined ten dollars each.

There were oth r grievances connected with the fact that hereditary chiefs had bee n displaced and that the poor Boer farmers pouring in from the Union (over 20,000 between 1914 and 1936) had no money to pay hired labor and scarcely needed to, as they were allowed to "recruit" their own labor wherever they found it. Natives naturally complained, but as the white commissioner testified "there was no mass insurrection", and the rising could have been prevented by timely action by the authorities. The Mandates Commission decided in a burst of understatement that the occurrence was "regrettable" and the repression "carried out with excessive severity."

Thereupon, General Smuts and South Africa, being satisfied that the Mandates Commission was powerless, rolled up their sleeves and went to work. They gave the law-making power over these 300,000 square miles of territory with 300,000 natives exclusively to the Administrator, with a council elected by the whites. They allowed the natives to keep 15% of the land and gave 30% to the whites outright with good prospect of getting the other 55% in due time. They transferred the Union native legislation bodily to the Mandate, with pass-laws and concentration areas. Practically black labor was reduced to serfdom and not a single government school has yet in 1947 been established, although the government gives a pittance to 4,000 native pupils in the 83 mission schools which serve the whole colony.

Why is Mr. Smuts, the great humanitarian, so anxious and insistent on this great expanse of desert, somewhat larger than Texas with only one inhabitant to a square mile? The fact is there are diamonds, gold, tin, vanadium and other minerals in the territory and a good trade in hides. These are being developed by investors from Europe and America. Before the last war over a hundred million dollars of foreign capital had been invested in Southwest Africa, and the Union government had obligingly stepped in and helped protect the diamond monopoly in accordance with the pattern now in use in the Union of South Africa.

Sept. 15 1947 Insert To September 1947

FORGETTING THE BONDELSCHWARTS

By W. E. B. Du Bois

Once upon a t i

Once upon a time the word "Bondelschwarts" evoked among intelligent readers the response: "Southwest Africa" and "Smuts". But that was twenty-five years ago and we have forgotten. On September 8, 1922, the Assembly of the League of Nations listened to a speech by a Negro from Haiti, Dantes Bellegarde, calling attention to the "League's duties to mankind" and referring to "the recent reported massacre of Bondelschwarts Hottentots by a South African expeditionary force". Bellegarde asked full investigation. The United States controller of Haitian finances promptly disallowed the Haitian delegate's expenses as member of the Assembly, but the Assembly ordered the Mandates Commission to investigate.

The Commission was embarrassed. It had no right to investigate or summon any witness except the South African Government itself. Prime Minister Smuts admitted that to quell "a revolt" he had sent a force of 390 men with four machine guns and two bombing planes against a tribe of natives of whom less than 200 were alleged to have had shot guns and only 45 guns were actually found. The South Africans killed over a hundred men, women and children, and wounded several hundred more.

"Why?" asked the Mandates Commission, very politely. Well the real reasons for the revolt were not clear. But a commission of inquiry appointed by Smuts, himself, showed that these natives had not paid the tax on sheep dogs. This tax which the Germans, when in control, had not levied at all, had been raised by the Union from no tax on one dog and $1.25 on a second, to $5.00 on the first and $50.00 for ten dogs. The natives could not pay and between September, 1921 and January, 1922, over a hundred of them had been arrested as tax delinquents and fined ten dollars each.

There were other grievances connected with the fact that hereditary chiefs had been displaced and that the poor Boer farmers pouring in from the Union (over 20,000 between 1914 to 1936) had no money to pay hired labor and scarcely needed to, as they were allowed to "recruit" their own labor wherever they found it. Natives naturally complained, but as the white commissioner testified "there was no mass insurrection", and the rising could have been prevented by timely action by the authorities. The Mandates Commission decided in a burst of understatement that the occurence was "regrettable" and the repression "carried out with excessive severity".

Thereupon, General Smuts and South Africa, being satisfied that the Mandates Commission was powerless, rolled up their sleeves and went to work. They gave the law-making power over these 300,000 square miles of territory with 300,000 natives exclusively to the Administrator, with a council elected by the whites. They allowed the natives to keep 15% of the land and gave 30% to the whites outright with good prospect of getting the other 55% in due time. They transferred the Union native legislation bodily to the Mandate, with pass-laws and concentration areas. Practically black labor was reduced to serfdom and not a single government school has yet, in 1947 been established, although the Government gives a pittance to 4,000 native pupils in the 83 mission schools which serve the whole colony.

42-858

Why is Mr. Smuts, the great humanitarian, so anxious and insistent on this great expanse of desert, somewhat larger than Texas with only one inhabitant to a square mile? The fact is there are diamonds, gold, tin, vanadium and other minerals in the territory and a good trade in hides. These are being developed by investors from in Europe and America. Before the last war over a hundred million dollars of foreign capital had been invested in the Southwest Africa, and the Union government had obligingly stepped in and helped protect the diamond monopoly in accordance with the pattern now in use in the Union of South Africa.

In other words, Southwest Africa is part of that vast investment of industry in Africa which depends for its profits on the low wages of labor, primitive conditions of work and the seizure of the land. Small wonder that Great Britain agrees with Mr. Smuts, while United States, represented by the pious Mr. Dulles has climbed carefully on the fence to overlook the situation.

42-86-59

[1947]

FORGETTING THE BONDELSCHWARTS

By W. E. B. Du Bois

Once upon a time the word "Bondelschwarts" evoked among intelligent readers the response: "Southwest Africa" and "Smuts". But that was twenty-five years ago and we have forgotten. On September 8, 1922, the Assembly of the League of Nations listened to a speech by a Negro from Haiti, Dantes Bellegarde calling attention to the "League's duties to mankind" and referring to "the recent reported massacre of Bondelschwarts Hottentots by a South African expeditionary force". Bellegarde asked full investigation. The United States controller of Haitian finances promptly disallowed the Haitian delegate's expenses as member of the Assembly, but the Assembly ordered the Mandates Commission to investigate.

42-86-54

The Commission was embarrassed. It had no right to investigate or summon any witness except the South African Government itself. Prime Minister Smuts admitted that to quell "a revolt" he had sent a force of 390 men with four machine guns and two bombing planes against a tribe of natives of whom less than 200 were alleged to have had shot guns and only 45 guns were actually found. The South Africans killed over a hundred men, women and children, and wounded several hundred more.

"Why?" asked the Mandates Commission, very politely. Well the real reasons for the revolt were not clear. But a commission of inquiry appointed by Smuts himself showed that these natives had not paid the tax on sheep dogs. This tax which the Germans when in control had not levied at all had been raised by the Union from no tax on one dog and $1.25 on a second to $5.00 on the first and $50.00 for ten dogs. The natives could not pay and between September, 1921 and January, 1922, over a hundred of them had been arrested as tax delinquents and fined ten dollars each.

There were other grievances connected with the fact that hereditary chiefs had been displaced and that the poor Boer farmers pouring in from the Union (over 20,000 between 1914 to 1936) had no money to pay hired labor and scarcely needed to, as they were allowed to "recruit" their own labor wherever they found it. Natives naturally complained but as the white commissioner testified "there was no mass insurrection", and the rising could have been prevented by timely action by the authorities. The Mandates Commission decided in a burst of understatement that the occurence was "regrettable" and the repression "carried out with excessive severity".

42-86-55

Thereupon, General Smuts and South Africa, being satisfied that the Mandates Commission was powerless, rolled up their sleeves and went to work. They gave the law-making power over these 300,000 square miles of territory with 300,000 natives exclusively to the Administrator, with a council elected by the whites. They allowed the natives to keep 15% of the land and gave 30% to the whites outright with good prospect of getting the other 55% in due time. They transferred the Union native legislation bodily to the Mandate, with pass laws and concentration areas. Practically black labor was reduced to serfdom and not a single government school has yet, in 1947 been established, although the Government gives a pittance to 4,000 native pupils in the 83 mission schools which serve the whole colony.

Why is Mr. Smuts, the great humanitarian, so anxious and insistent on this great expanse of desert, somewhat larger than Texas with only one inhabitant to a square mile? The fact is there are diamonds, gold, tin, vanadium and other minerals in the territory and a good trade in hides. These are being developed by investors from in Europe and America. Before the last war over a hundred million dollars of foreign capital had been invested in the Southwest Africa, and the Union government had obligingly stepped in and helped protect the diamond monopoly in accordance with the pattern now in use in the Union of South Africa.

In other words, Southwest Africa is part of that vast investment of industry in Africa which depends for its profits on the low wages of labor, primitive conditions of work and the seizure of the land. Small wonder that Great Britain agrees with Mr. Smuts, while United States, represented by the pious Mr. Dulles has climbed carefully on the fence to overlook the situation.

25-98-24

22 September 1947

PAN AFRICA
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

There is a liberal element in South Africa but as many persons have said, "it is a poor sort of liberalism". Dr. Peattie calls it "sham liberalism," Senator Brooks has warned th t the time "in which honorable compromise is possible is drawing to a close." Professor MacCrone has pictured increasing race tension and hopes "that white South Africa will not allow itself to be driven mad before it is destroyed." Professor Frankel formerly of Witwatersrand University says, "that while the superstructure is sometimes as brilliant as Hollywood, the foundations are those of slavery, serfdom and ignorance." Dr. A. B. Xuma, the Negro leader has pointed out that democratic government, when it is real, does not discriminate against any section of the community, and that the government of South Africa does discriminate.

Native Policy is breaking down, and White South Africa has given up the way of real liberalism and has decided that"equal rights for all civilized men" could not be achieved and that democracy is impossible. In the South African Parliament the discussion of native affairs led only to a dead-lock. The Prime Minister said that the attempt to segregate the African people into rural reserves had broken down; this , of course, everybody knew. The urbanization and industrialization of the African people and the impoverishment of the land make all this obvious. Nevertheless, no proposal was made except the Trade Unions Bill. This provided for rigid racial segregation, restricted the right of association and prohibited strikes. It was entirely unacceptable to responsible African leadership. Even this poor proposal brought attack from the Boer nationalists, who called it a surrender to the agitatiors". In reply, the minister of Native Affairs made an apologetic answer and had no forward step to propose. In the (Transkei) the by-election for a white man to represent the natives h v been boycotted by the majority of voters. The Asiatic Act, which was South Africa's answer to the severe arraignment in the United Nations, is inadmissable to the Indians. The proposals for representation in Parliament are too meager and the property restrictions are highly reactionary. The Union of South Africa has made no step to put former German Southwest Africa, which it holds under mandate of the dead League of Nations, under the new Trusteeship of the United Nations.

42-86-61

Yet this medieval slave-ridden oligarchy is placed in the front rank of the "democracies" of the world. It is a situation too tragic to be even ridiculous.

SEPTEMber-29,19

PAN AFRICA
By
W. E. B. Du Bois

42-86-24

Sierra Leone is one of the oldest and most interesting of British colonies. It was established in 1787 as a refuge for recaptured African slaves which British trade tried to suppress early in the nineteenth century, after establishing it in the eighteenth. Investment in British West Indian sugar made cheap labor in other parts of the Caribbean dangerous and Britain tried to stop the trade. Eventually, an American project of the same sort was established in Liberia and became a separate and independent state.

For a long time Sierra Leone expected independence but eventually it became the center of the new political imperialism of British West Africa, with its liberties and quasi-independence gradually suppresed in a council of twenty members. Seventeen members were appointed by the governor. Sierra Leone has been agitating for a council majority of elected members.

Governor Stevenson announced three years ago that he was going to give the people a more acceptable set of laws. To the dismay of the people a bill was introduced and passed into law which was even more restrictive than the old constitution. It vested in the Governor powers both undemocratic and unnecessary. It reduced the city council, of the capital city Fre town, to a mere department of the central government. People refused to register for the purpose of the election, thus creating a deadlock and the matter of the new sonstitution had to be suspended.

After two years the proposal has now been resurrected and a new constitution is to be drawn up. The people ask that in this new constitution the Governor not be given power to approve, disapprove or amend, either in part or in whole, the financial estimates of the council; it asks at least twelve elected members, with seven appointed members.

Also, in Sierra Leone, there has been long argument concerning college training. Fourah Bay College is one of the best in Africa, but it has limited funds from missionary societies, and has been repeatedly attacked for not conforming to the industrial type. It is proposed now that this college be given some government support.

The present Governor is retiring in January. He has made many injudicious appointments, and his attitude toward the new constitution has been regrettable. But he is said at heart to be sympathetic and not self-seeking; but certainly he has not been too bright in his mental processes.

Sierra Leone lies for 189 miles along the Atlantic West Coast of Africa, between French Guinea and Liberia. It has the greatest seaport in West Africa and an excellent harbor. Its area is 27,699 square miles, or it is about the size of Ireland. Its population in 1931 was 1,672,000. It produces ginger, palm kernels, gold and diamonds.

Among the great sons of Sierra Leone are Dr. Edward Blyden and the present Minister of Liberia to the United States, Mr. King. As is usual in British West African colonies, Sierra Leone is divided into a colony and protectorate; the colony still having some remainder of the democratic forms with freedom vested in the original settlers. The protectorate is the vast, rich hinterland, and is governed autocratically by the Colonial Office of the British Empire. Freetown, the capital, is a pleasant city, although very hot, lying beneath the great Lion Mountains after which the colony is named.

Oct. 8, 1947

October 6, 1947

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

The problem of Eritrea is simple. Eritrea is the part of Ethiopia which borders upon the Red Sea. Here is the port of Masawa which is one of the two outlets which Ethiopia has to the sea and to foreign trade; the other one is Djibouti seized by the French and the port of Berbera, in Somaliland seized by the British, in the latter half of the 19th century.

42-86-63

Egypt tried to get a foot hold in Eritrea and after annexing the Soudan was hurled back by the revolt of Mohammed Ahmed, the Mahdi. About the same time Egypt was occupied by the British and had to submit to British administration. Both the British and the Egyptians had to retreat before the Mahdi who held the Sudan for sixteen years. The only help upon which the British could rely was Ethiopia and this was obtained by a promise not to encroach upon Ethiopian territory. The treaty was signed in 1884 by the British, Egyptian and Ethiopian governments guaranteeing the frontiers of Ethiopia including what is now Eritrea. Ethiopia carried out her share of the contract, and halted the forces of the Mahdi.

Nevertheless in 1885 the British induced the Italians to occupy the port of Masawa. The Italians spread along the coast and occupied Eritrea. The Emperor Johannes of Ethiopia was caught between the Italians and the forces of the Mahdi and killed in the battle which took place. In 1896 Italy, encouraged, tried to conquer the whole of Ethiopia but was defeated at the great battle of Adua by the Emperor Menelik. Between 1896 and 1935 Ethiopia tried to consolidate her power and lay the foundation of a nation but Great Britain, France and Italy were ready to pounce upon her. In 1935, despite the League of Nations and promises by Great Britain and other countries, Italy entered Ethiopia and the British government recognized the Italian conquest. The speech of protest by the Emperor before the League of Nations on the Italian conquest was one of the most moving occasions which the League ever saw.

When finally Mussolini joining Germany declared war on Britain and France the Italians swept aside the British forces and added British Somaliland to the conquests. The Emperor Haile Selassie took refuge in England. Britain promised to help the liberation of Ethiopia and the restoration of her lost provinces. But after defeat Britain began to stall. She took back British Somaliland and her officials are now working every scheme to keep Eritrea. The projected meeting of four great powers to discuss Italian colonies is an attempt on the part of Great Britain to hold Eritrea and the port of Masawa and for a third time to break their plighted word to the Ethiopian people.

42-86-94

October 13, 1947

PAN AFRICA
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

East Africa and Rhodesia, the official periodical published by whites of East Africa, gives space to a comment upon the Pan-African Congress by a native Muganda. He says: "Some of us have heard for the first time about the 'Pan-African Congress,' and with mixed f feelings of pleasure and misgiving. With pleasure, because all Africans are gradually, although painfully, awakening to the need for solidarity. The African is becoming more and more aware of the inter-dependence of one country with another, and the present order of things which tends to isolate the interests of one African people from others, will not get us very far socially, economically and educationally... Therefore, anything that may help toward bringing about this solidarity, or oneness of feelings in our common interests, is at once a welcome venture. The Congress has given some of us misgivings because it has introduced itself to us with so much force that we are somewhat taken aback. It is reported to have demanded 'complete political independence' for countries in Eastern Africa. Those words sound very grandiose, but they contain so much dynamic force that they may be a bit dangerous for some of us. To 'work towards' those aims would, to my way of thinking, have been a better expression, and one which would have contained more truth."

This is interesting, first, because the Muganda received notice of the Pan-African Congress only through a newspaper owned and edited by Indians in East Africa. This reminds us how difficult it is for one section of the African people to get authentic news about other sections, because of censorship and deliberate legal prohibition. And secondly, it shows the intelligent interest which African natives have in the Pan-African Movement. Persistent effort has been made by England, France, and Belgium to hamper the Pan-African Movement: to represent it as revolutionary, as led by fanatics, and as not really African. Letters have been held from delivery and news suppressed. Nevertheless, slowly awareness of the movement grows and penetrates Africa.

42-88-66

October 25, 1947

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

An organization, called MEN OF GOOD WILL, in New York City has published a pamphlet on the problem of "Racial Minorities", written by Alice A. Baily. It has a curious and interesting reference to the Negro : "This problem is totally different to that of the Jews. In the first case you have an exceedingly ancient people who for thousands of years have played their part in the arena of world history"'

In the case of the Negro, we are considering a people who have begun to rise in the scale of human endeavor"! Two hundred years ago, they were what the European and American regarded as "raw savages," divided into countless tribes, living in a state of nature, primitive, warlike, totally uneducated from the modern point of view."

This is ethnologically and historically false. The civilization of Black African Negroes is even more ancient than that of Asiatic Jews,. It is untrue that two hundred years ago Africans were raw savages in a state of nature, totally uneducated and engaged in inter necine wars. Leo Africanus who visited Negro Africa, south of Sahara and north of the Gulf of Guinea in the 15th century, describes Timbuctoo as follows: "The rich king of Tombuto hath many plates an sceptres of gold, somewhereof weigh 1300 poundes: and he keeps a magnificent and well-furnished court. Here are great store of doctors, judges, priests, and other learned men, that are bountifully maintained at the kings cost and charges. And hither are brought dirers manuscripts or written books out of Berbarie, which are sold for more money than any other merchandize...."

The Mellestine fu ther to the west reaches its greatest power between 1307 and 1332. "The Negroes possess some admirable qualities. They are seldom unjust, and have a greater abhorrence of injustice than

PAN AFRICA
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

An organization, called MEN OF GOOD WILL, in New York Cir any other people. Their sultan shows no mercy to anyone who is guilty of the least act of it. There is complete security in t eir country. Neither traveler nor inhabitant in it has anything to fear, from robbers of men of violence. They do not confiscate the property of any white man who dies in their country, even if it be uncounted wealth. On the contrary, they give it into the charge of some trustworthy person among the whites, until the ri htful heir takes po possession of it."

42-86-68

What was it then that happened "two hundred years ago?" It was the filth and cruelty of Europe led by England which descended upon Africa and inaugurated for a century the African slave trade which tore the people of Africa from their country to become the foundation of the work and development of America. It is to be hoped that the persons who are publishing this estraordinary misinterpretation of the civilization of Africa will try to base their future publications upon the truth and not upon fairytale.

November 1, 1947

PAN AFRICA

By

W. E. B. Du Bois

42-86-69

A significant delegation from Africa to England has been received by the Government. This is unusual. For the most part, Africans in London, who try to represent their people and speak for their needs, are brushed impatiently aside by the official world. It is hinted or openly said that they are agitators, irresponsible, and without real backing. There was no reason to believe that an official reception would be accorded to Dr. Nnambi Azikiwe when he brought a delegation recently to London. Dr. Azikiwe has been a thorn in the flesh of the officials of West Africa. He has published radical papers and led and perfected organizations; from time to time his papers have been suppressed and he has even been threatened with assasination. Nevertheless, his power is so great that when he recently came to London at the head of the Pan-Nigerian delegation, he was received; there was no question as to the representative character of this delegation. It was headed by chiefs, and princes, and conspicuous women leaders; it brought credentials from the National Council of Nigeria and the Cameroons, representing a hundred and eighty-three political groups, trade unions, youth leagues, farmer organizations, student unions, and other societies from all over Nigeria and the British Cameroons. Their aims include political freedom, economic progress, social equality, and religious freedom. They presented a memorandum to the Secretary of State for Colonies, setting out their grievances, and brought a draft constitution for Nigeria based on the principle of eventual self-government.

Their country, Nigeria, covers four hundred and seven square miles, which is three times the size of Great Britain; it has a population of over twenty-one million; and raises palm oil, palm kernels, cocoa, ground nuts, rubber, cotton, tobacco, rice, hide, mahogany, coffee, ginger, pepper, potatoes, yams, sugar, dates, pineapples, bananas, grapefruit, grapes, tangerines, oranges, and other fruits. Mineral resources include bauxite, bitumen, chromite, coal and lignite, iron, kaolin, columbite, diamonds, galena, gold, lead, limestone, magnetite, mica, platinum, salt, silver, tungsten, and zinc.

On the fifth of August, this delegation was received by the Right Honorable A. Creech-Jones, and had an opportunity on the 13th of August, openly and frankly, to discuss their demands with him. He promised to give their demands consideration.

Appeared Nov. 15, 1947

42-86-72

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Africa has moved into a more important position in the world because of the Second World War. The center of European imperialism is shifting to Africa, pushed out by the increasing power of the Arabs, the freeing of India, and the revolt of Indonesia. World War II has placed Africa in the position of being one of the greatest sources of supply for raw materials to Europe. The wealth and power of the Egyptians and other Arabs are pushing the British out of Egypt, while Syria and Lebanon are already independent. In China, Japan, and the islands in the Pacific, imperialism hangs on but it cannot last long. On the other hand, Africa is a source for food, gold, diamonds, uranium. Already, the British government is developing in East Africa eight and one-half million acres of land for scientific raising of food; some seventy-five per cent of the world's supply of urnaium for atomic fission comes from the Belgian Congo. There is a new diamond rush in South Africa, and already the South Africans are loaning the British gold to save them from increasing bankruptcy. From British West Africa, an area as large as Europe, comes cocoa, palm oil, gold, coal, and copper, and also here, comes the first determined and advancing demand of black Africans for autonomy and self-rule. Concessions are being made today both political life and social service,-not much in the aggregate, but still something. Also, in South Africa it is evident that Boer intransigence must yield to some extent before the demand of the natives for increased wage and some political power. It will be well, therefore, to watch the development in Africa during the next quarter century.

The fact is that the whole colonial situation as one of the results of the war is changing. Asia is slowly but surely moving into the position of being a set of independent countries who are going to have a fierce internal fight for existence. On the other hand the grip of colonialism and the whole imperial idea is going to be concentrated upon Africa. There is going to be a determined effort on the part of England, France, Belgium and Portugal to concentrate the colonial system and the exploitation of cheap labor and materials upon Africa. That puts an unusual responsibility upon Black Africa. Black Africa has got to gird its loins and begin a determined fight for autonomy. The Negroes of British West Africa for instance, must not confine their efforts to acheiving status within the British Empire: they must unite with their fellow Africans throughout the world by achieving autonomy. This does not preclude dominion status within the British or the French empires so long as that means really self-rule with the right at any time to assume absolute independence.

42-86-73

mailed Nov 15, 1947

November 15, 1947

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

42-86-78

Egypt again is coming to the world's attention today. The rule of black folk in ancient Egypt has been widely discussed. Less has been said of the history of black folk in Egypt since 1,000 years after Christ. A few notes will be of interest.

Black Kafur ruled Egypt for twenty-two years, from 946 to 968 A.D.; he was regent for nineteen years, but the two sons of Ikshid, who was nominally on the throne, were playboys without power. Kafur ruled three years alone, from 965 to 968. He conquered Damascus and Aleppo, and incorporated Syria into Egypt. However, he suffered at home earthquakes, bad Nile seasons, and a revolt in Nubia. Nevertheless, in general, good order was maintained. He died in 968 and was succeeded by a child, then by the Caliph Hoseyn, and finally by Moizz.

Moizz was helped by Killis, a Jew who had been Kafur's righthand man, and had a body guard of four thousand young men, white and black. By the help of Negro troops another revolt at Syria was quelled. Then came the reign of mad Hakin, and finally, Zahir.

Zahir ruled Egypt from 1021 to 1026 A.D. . His wife was a black Sudanese woman, and after the death of her husband, she largely influenced the rule of her son, who came to the throne in 1036 and ruled until 1094, the longest reign in the dynasty. This son, a mulatto, M'add, took the name of Mustansir, and is regarded as the best and ablest of the rulers of his time. He loved and encouraged learning, and had a library of a hundred and twenty thousand volumes. His mother, the "Black Dowager", who had great influence over him, sailed the Nile in her silver barge, and imported additional Negro troops from the south, until Mustansir had in his escort fifth thousand black soldiers and swordsmen, twenty thousand Berbers, ten thousand Turks, and thirty thousand white slaves. For years all Upper Egypt was held by black regiments.

From the eleventh to the fifteenth century was the day of the Crusades and most people do not realize how the Crusades centered in Egypt and involved the Negro race. Black soldiers fought with and against the Crusades; Europe sought the help of Africa in order to face Mohammedanism in Asia. In the valley of the Nile especially, the duel between Mohammedanism and Christianity was long drawn out, and at last settled by the Christian religion walling itself behind the ramparts of Ethiopia, and Mohammedanism sweeping the lower valley of the Nile.

42-86-71

Then there began cross-currents of culture, in which black folk had large part; the wisdom of Asia and of Africa, passed down and crossed the valley of the Nile into the black kingdoms of North Africa and up into Spain, and the Renaissance was not simply a rebirth of culture in Europe, but Africa deserves just as much credit for the result as Asia. It was the propaganda of American Slavery which was long determined to leave out the part which Africa played here and to emphasize the role of the Arabs.

PAN AFRICA

by

mailed November 17, 1947

W. E. B. Du Bois

Kenya is a land in East Africa, in the region of the tropics where the great highlands send lofty peaks with perpetual snow high into the heavens. At the foot of the peaks lie tropical forest and swampland; but on the stretch between the snow and the swamp is some of the most valuable agricultural land of Africa. This has been seized by whites at a nominal sum and held in vast estates, while every attempt has been made to compel the blacks thus deprived of land to become laborers at low wage on these estates.

The total area of Kenya is about 225,000 square miles, of which by liberal estimate 40,000 square miles are capable of cultivation. The government has given eleven thousand square miles of this land to Europeans, mostly in large blocks and atta nominal price. Lord Delamere, long the leading Denyan politican, acquired over 100,000 acres of the finest land at one penny per acre.

42-26-74

In 1931, there were in Kenya 16,500 white men, women and children of whom 2,100, including a large number of avsentees, owned 11,000 square miles of land. There are 30,000 Indians and three million Africans. The land reserved for the natives is pitifully inadequate. Many have as little as two acres a head, and where they have fifteen acres, much of the land cannot be cultivated. The average native farm has only eight acres, and there are probably 40,000 landless African families in Kenya.

But the black people of Kenya are moving. Recently, the Kenya African Union meeting in 1946 made the following demands on the government. This is of especial importance when we remember that Kenya is the center of the new imperialism which England is seeking to establish in East Africa to off-set her perspective loss of control in Egypt. The following resolutions was passed by the African Union.

That this conference strongly opposes any suggestion regarding the granting of self-government to Kenya, where only the whites now vote, until such time as the African shares full responsibility in the government; but there the African people of Kenya wish in the meantime to remain under the direction and control of His Majesty's Government of the United Kingdom. This conference most deeply deplores the continuation of the Kipande system (a system of work cards for laborers) which is an affront to the dignity and freedom of the loyal African people of Kenya, and request its immediate withdrawal. Racial harmony and understanding in East Africa entirely rests on the acceptance of the principle of equality between the races; and furthermore, we ask that one of the four unspecified seats also be occupied by an African nominated by the High Commissioner. This conference urges the Kenya Government to repeal the discrimination on liquor ordinances which have led to a tremendous illegal traffic in liquor, as is demonstrated by the flourishing black market now in existence.

42-86-25

" This conference welcomes the statement made by the Right Honourable Arthur Creech-Jones, the Secretary of State for the colonies, approving in principle the increased African representation in the Kenya legislative council, and urges the Kenya Government to make provision for at least six Africans to sit on the legislative council.

"This conference welcomes the government decision to include Africans in the municipality councils and boards, and recommends that the African members be elected. This conference deeply regrets the non-existence of the legal protection for the African women as afforded to the women of other races. In accordance with democratic principles, this conference condemns and repudiates any suggestion of censorship of the African press, and totally disapproves any restriction of freedom of speech and assembly."

Nr 24 mailed
nov 24, 1947

[NOV 14, 1947]

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

42-86-76

There has been performing in London an organization called the Ballets Negres Society. The object of this organization is to produce and encourage Negro Ballet, Negro theatrical art, music, and drama; to operate a school of ballet and drama, to give all possible facilities for holding Negro painting and sculpture, and to foster Negro literature.

The head of the organization is Berto Pasuka. Pasuka is 27 years old, was born in Jamaica, and has been called a genius by no less a critic than Sybil Thorndike, who is vice chairman of his organization. Pasuka has created several ballets. Four were performed in London last April, four new ones will be put on the stage early next year. The ballet has come into its own and has had enthusiastic praise from the press. With it has been playing a West African Band with drummers and musicians from the Gold Coast, the West Indies, and British Guiana.

The organization is now planning for a trip to the continent. Including visits to France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark and Sweden. There will also be a tour of Switzerland, November 5-20, and hopes for performances in Vienna and other cities.

The sponsors of the society feel, "that in Berto Pasuka there has been found a worthy interpreter, both as choreographer and dancer of the Negro's vivid sense of dance and rhythm. They consider that through him and his company of dancers and musicians, one aspect of Negro culture can be fittingly presented to the world." The organization cooperates on a non-profit making basis and in appealing for a donation to the inauguration fund of $8,000, Sir Hubert Young said, "We have full confidence in the Ballet Company to make a strong and lasting appeal to audiences not only to this country and on the continent, but in the West Indies and other parts of the Commonwealth where we hope to send it in due course."

77-98-24

This development throws an interesting sidelight upon the ferment which is now taking place and growing fast among the peoples of Negro descent in the world. Africa has played her part, and a great part in the past; it is destined, and very soon, to play a part in the future of the world.

There has recently come to hand a report of the condition of education in French Africa as of Janurary 1, 1945. French West Africa has 15,000,000 inhabitants. In January, 1945, it had 474 primary schools. Ten schools were provided for advanced primary students in the main cities. Three secondary schools prepared students for higher education and had 2,000 pupils. Higher learning is provided for in the African School of Medicine, the Vetinerary School and the Institute Francais d'Afrique-Noire which specializes in ethnography, archaeology, prehistory, and botany,.

In Paris, the Pasteur Institute has three branches in West Africa where laboratory research is made on local diseases. The professional schools give three-year courses and there are five preliminary practical centers in four cities. There is a commercial center at Dakar. In French Equatorial Africa, with 3,500,000 natives, primary education is given in 286 schools, with 33,500 pupils. There are secondary schools at various places and four agricultural schools. Education in French Africa, while by no means satisfactory or provided for all children, does have a good start, and does not limit the African student to the lower grades, as is true in the Belgian Congo and elsewhere.

Dec. 1, 1947 Dec. 1, 1947

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

The Fabian Colonial Bureau has issued a pamphlet called the KENYA CONTROVERSY. It contains four speeches, two by Europeans, one by an African, and one by an Indian. The Fabian Bureau makes no comment but simply says that the policy of the labor government in Kenya is now being put to the test.

The Govérnor of Kenya, a white Englishman, says, that the English by coming to Kenya have greatly complicated life for the African people. The African cannot go back and does not want to go back to the days before the English came. On the other hand, he is impatient to go on towards civilization; but says the governor, "there must remain for a long, long time, the great inner ignorant mass of peasaantry whom we are all so apt to overlook and for whom the pace must inevitably be so slow, however much we may achieve by education, and there are the stark economic facts of the land and its present diminishing fertility, the rains, the locust, the human skill and honest hard work of which we may be able to dispose. Basic economic facts upon which all else depends. For let me repeat, abject poverty and civilized living are incompatible."

It is, of course, astonishing that English politicians are so absolutely sure that the raising of the mass of African, or any other people must be slow. It is only slow when instead of trying to raise them, the governing classes are seeking to make profit out of their degradation. An African writing in this pamphlet takes another view. He says: "The African in Kenya, and in every other part of Africa for that matter, can rightly claim that he lived more peacefully before the advent of the white man than he does now." He says further, "The British should hesitate to claim that they have emancipated us from the slavery which they introduced into Africa. As it is the white man who has created for himself a privileged position in Kenya, which he maintains by force of arms, the humanitarism of the eighteenth and nineteenth century, as demonstrated by Wilberforce and others of his thinking, is no more."

42-98-24

The African admits that the British have introduced a new system of education and are applying medical science to the sick, but in no other directions does he see benefit. The General Secretary of the East Indian National Council says, "Are not the Africans in Kenya today, looking with eager eyes to India and the Indians? This is the work, this is the achievement on which the claim of India and her nationals rest but the right and claim of the Indian have been disputed and challenged." The Indian, he says, along with the Arab, had been conveniently forgotten and Great Britain has taken all the credit for everything good that has happened in Kenya.

A European member of the legislative council of Kenya writes the last article and says, "That the African has had our example before him but this selfish type of thought is something from which we hope we as Europeans are emerging, and few of us wish to see the African make the same mistakes and suffer the same penalties." Here are four points of view of the situation in the tremendously interesting and typical area of Kenya, East Africa. The world is going to hear from this area in the future, even more than it has in the past.

42-98-27

mailed Dec. 8, 1947

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

The Institute of Race Relations of South Africa has submitted a report to the Native Laws Commission of Enquiry concerning conditions in South Africa. From this report we take the following extracts:

42-86-80

"The Native Urban Area Act has, apart from a few exceptional cases, curtailed even more severely those rights which according to the great A.V. Dicey, are inherent in the expression, 'Rule of Law'--the rights to freedom of person, property, discussion and assembly. This is one major reason for our belief that the increasingly restrictive nature of our laws applying to Natives in urban areas is flying in the face of democracy and freedom.

"Our contention is that an examination of the relevant law will reveal that an urbanised Native has no 'right' freely to enter into a contract for the purchase of a house or other immovable property, or lease of premises, or contract for lodging within the urban area concerned; that broadly speaking, he has not 'right' to accommodation at all; that his residence in a particular place is a 'privilege' conferred on him by some official, a privilege subject to withdrawal. There is no one who will deny that today there is an alarming insufficiency of accommodation for Natives in urban areas."

After a survey of 78 Transvaal locations, each attached to a town with a European population of under 5,000, such towns being too poor according to the authoress to give adequate attention to Native housing, Miss Betty Spence, B. Arch. ("The Problem of the Location," S.A. ARCHITECTURAL RECORD, February, 1943) states that although the Native population according to the 1936 Census was 110,600, the Housing Board's Report of December 31, 1940, revealed only 890 municipal dwellings erected under economic and sub-economic schemes, which meant in effect leaving 90 per cent Native population to find its own housing.

One pound per month is spent on rent out of an average income of £5. 6. 8., or £5.16.1., and that in fact, the average expenditure on food was only £2.14.8., in 1940, yielding a diet described by Dr. F. W. Fox, of the South African Institute of Medical Research, as "grossly deficient...a disgraceful state of affairs." It shows that, in 1940, 86.8 per cent of the families analyzed were below the Poverty Datum line.

42-8-6-81

"On the peripheries of our large towns, like Johannesburg and Capetown, arise desolate settlements characterised as much by their poverty as are the adjacent great cities by their wealth and prosperity."[2]

The liberty is taken here of repeating a paragraph of the Institute's evidence to the Penal Reform Commission in January, 1946.

"It is a sad reflection on human progress that a large group of law abiding and humane people should have been vitiated little by little, and brought to lawlessness by a competitive economic system in an acquisitive society, by the indiscriminate conscription of industrial labor and the consequent detribalisation, and by a super-imposed system of complicated discriminatory laws, pass laws, municipal by-laws, service contract laws etc. We advocate a drastic simplification of the system of control of the African population...."

Normal democratic principles demand that as the Native advances along the path to Western civilization, he can look to an increasing share of political rights now enjoyed by the European. But the trusteeship of the black by the white does not appear to progress any reasonable distance towards the full rights of citizenship. This is not because the black is content with his present status.

Mailed December 15, 1947

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

42-86-82

If there is one thing of which the British Empire has boasted, it is the absolute impartiality of its administration of justice in the colonies. A recent case in West Africa, however, seriously contradicts this. In August of 1943, Sir Ofori Atta, paramount chief of the state of Akim Abuakwa in the Gold Coast, a well-known and progressive ruler, died. The funeral rites were postponed until February according to tribal customs. From February 21 to 28, 1944, the chiefs and crowds of subjects assembled at Kibi to complete the funeral rites. Among them was Mensah, a chief, of Apedwe who was participating in the ceremony.

He did not appear and after two months, some bones were found on a river bank and were accepted by the court as the remains of the body of Mensah. Seven men were arrested and charged with murder; one of them was the eldest son of the dead Sir Ofori Atta, and all of them were descended from paramount chiefs.

The accused were irregularly bought to court. Their appeal was refused by the local court and by the Privy Council of London. Various efforts to stay execution were made in vain. One of the men died in prison, two had their sentences reduced to imprisonment for life. A writ of habeas corpus to release the seven surviving men was dismissed, and while another application was being drafted, three of the remaining men were hanged and two others were on the scaffold when notice was received to suspend the execution.

Later the sentence of these ~~two~~ two men was reduced to life imprisonment.

After all this delay, as late as April 1947, the second appeal to the Privy Council had not been acted upon. The Anti-Slavery Reporter has this extraordinary remark: "The conduct of this case reflects little credit on the Crown's legal advisers in the Gold Coast. The Secretary of State for the Colonies has stated that a Commission will be appointed to investigate it. It should be. It is possible that the Commission may find that Criminal Law designed for advanced peoples in Europe is not wholly suitable for backward people in Africa."

It occurs to me to add that it is quite possible that such a Commission if it had ordinary common sense, would conclude that the processes of law among backward people were much too fair to be followed by the advanced people of Europe. Here is a case where no murder has ever been proven; where representatives of the highest class of a Native African State were arrested and charged illegaly, even according to British law. They were illegaly tried. They were executed before the courts had final chance to pass upon their status, and now after death or imprisonment, the British Government is hesitating as to just what ought to be done.

This is not the first time that British justice in Africa has gone wretchedly awry, and the whole story in this case has not been revealed. There can be no doubt but what British officials in West Africa were displeased with the efforts of the great African chief Sir Ofori Atta, who had been foremost in fighting the English cocoa-combine, in cooperating with the Congress of West Africa, and in demanding for his people treatment as modern human beings. It is perhaps for this reason that on his death, his whole family and the chiefs of W and the chiefs of West Africa have been made victims of either studied neglect, or of determined persecution. This is another black mark on British imperialism in West Africa.

42-86-83

Mailed December 22, 1947

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

There are in the British colonies of Kenya, Tanganyika, and Uganda 14,000,000 Africans, 130,000 Indians, and 43,000 Europeans. Last year the British Labor government laid down a plan for a central Assembly for these colonies with legislative powers restricted to certain subjects of common interests.

In this assembly Indians, Africans, and Europeans, as groups, were to have representatives who would sit with the colonial government officials; and both the government and the colonial officials decided that the representation of each of the three racial groups should be equal. This was a great step toward justice, because even equality of representation between these three groups was a great advance upon previous policies, where only the whites had been represented. If, of course, there had been real democratic representation, the Negroes should have had 300 and the Indians 3, and the whites one representive.

But even this equality of representation was too much for the white colonists who form the social élite of Kenya and have powerful friends and relatives among the British upper classes. They resented any representation at all for Africans or Indians. The result was that a new colonial paper was issued by the Labor Government in England, which changed the representation so as to give a majority to the Europeans.

The faith of both Africans and Indians in the Labor Government was rudely shaken. In April, a mass meeting of over three thousand Africans was held in Nairobi and passed resolutions of protest. The Indian National Council of East Africa met also and declared, "In the event of failure of the Imperial Government to implement the principle of equal non-official racial representation, the Congress instructs its executives to take effective steps in the matter and to seek the cooperation of Africans and other non-Europeans.

"In furthering of such steps as may be necessary to bring home to the British public the grave injustice in a refusal to accord near equality to non-official racial representation of the Indian and African communities when these communities far outnumber the European communities."

42-86-85

Interracial unity of Indians and Africans has therefore taken a step forward by this action of the British Labor Government, and the Kenya Weekly News, organ of the whites, says that this is a "strong argument against any increase of Indian influence in the affairs of Kenya."

There is bound to follow labor unrest and anti-government movements of one kind or another among the non-whites of Africa, which may be taken as proof that backward people are unfit for self-rule. As a matter of fact, by changing its mind under the pressure of a reactionary minority, the Labor Government has shown that while it stands for African interest in words, in deeds it gives way to white investment and prestige.

We have quoted in the above statement an article by Dina Stock, executive editor of PAN AFRICA, a monthly journal of African life, history and thought currently published in London. This periodical is well worth reading, and American Negroes ought to subscribe for it in large numbers.

As a matter of fact, in Kenya particularly, the theft and monopoly of the best land by whites, and the attempt to reduce the mass of labor to semi-slavery is one of the worst results of British penetration. It is a history characterized by oppression and deliberate hypocrisy, with only a few highlights like Makerere College.

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

We quote from the News Letter, published by the League of Colored Peoples in London, a resume of an unusual address made before a recent meeting of the Synod of the Anglican Church of the Province of South Africa, by the Rt. Rev. S. W. Lavis, Coadjutor Bishop of Cape Town. He said:

"Thoughtful men and womes were puzzled and distressed at the painful contrast between repeated claims of responsible statesmen and other leaders that there must be full freedom for all peoples without discrimination on racial grounds, and the prevailing position of racial prejudice and colour bar in South Africa. President Roosevelt's 'four freedoms' did not ring true in that land, because in it there were deeply-rooted tyrannies which denied human freedom. The truth was that in South Africa they had fallen under the curse of a dual conscience. They had two standards of judging men, two modes of conduct in dealing with human beings, and they discriminated between men and man. What mattered was not man's worth, ability, integrity, or ambition, but the colour of his skin. Often enough the trusteeship which we exercise is not the conception brilliantly set out by General Smuts, but a blasphemous parody of trusteeship built upon the notion of a basic unalterable inferiority of the ward, and the reservation that the ward must never be allowed to come of age...The dual conscience reaches its final shame in the cruelty of the economic colour bar. It deprives those who are its victims of the opportunity of making full use of their capabilities and causes frustration and despair...When these personal beliefs are mobilised to influence the political machinery of the country and result in an economic colour bar, they constitute a challenge to decency, which must be taken up fearlessly and without mincing words...in no other country in the world is it possible for a group to have its own prejudices legalised and turned into a powerful weapon for serving its own...It may well be that the struggle to win a social order in which human values and not colour-bars are supreme will be a sterner fight than the bloodiest onslaught of tank and bomb."

42-26-93

****

42-86-94

Recently Benedetto Croce, the Italian historian and philosopher, was interviewed by a correspondant for West Africa concerning colonies. He said that self-government was the right of all people, and that it was wrong for a small number of European powers to have exclusive charge of bringing colonial peoples to the stage where they were fit for government. He quoted an article by Mahatama Gandhi, in which it was said that the exclusive control of Africa by a small number of European powers contained the most probable germs of a future world war. Croce wanted Italy to have a chance to help in bringing civilizing influences to Africa. He maintained that it was difficult for the Italian, with no dominions to which he could emmigrate from an overpopulated country, and for that reason he wanted to hang on to the few colonies which Italy had been able to get in the face of the earlier raids of France, Britain, Holland, Belgium, Portugal and Spain. However, he pointed out that the rule of Ethiopia in Africa is of more than passing importance. It is from Ethiopia that certain Africans expect will emerge the new Pan-Africanism.

mailed June 7, 1948

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Tanganyika territory in East Africa has about 373,000 square miles or approximately the size of Egypt or 5 times the size of New England. It is inhabited by over five million natives, twenty thousand European whites, and fifty thousand Asiatics.

This part of East Africa has an old and interesting cultural history. The natives of Bantu stock probably moved into the country from the north.

The Arab writer, Macoudi, in the tenth century, visited the East African coast. The Bantu, or as he calls them, Zenji, "inhabited the country as far sough as Sofala, where they bordered upon the Bushmen. These Bantus were under a ruler with the synastic title of Waklimi. He was paramount over all the other tribes of the north and could put three hundred thousand men in the field. They used oxen as beasts of burden and the country produced gold in abundance, while panther skins were largely used for clothing. Ivory was sold to Asia and the Bantu used iron for personal adornment instead of gold or silver. They rode on their oxen, which ran with great speed, and they ate millet and honey and the flesh of animals."

In 1330 Ibn Batuta visited Kilwa. He found an abundance of ivory and some gold and heard that the inhabitants of Kilwa had gained victories over the Zenji, or Bantu. Kilwa had at that time three hundred mosques and was "built of handsome houses of stone and lime and very lofty, with their windows like those of the Christians; in the same way it has streets, and these houses have terraces, and the wood worked in with the masonry, with 38-5-51

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Tanganyika territory in East Africa has about 373,000 square miles or approximately the size of Egypt or 5 times the size of New England. It is inhabited by over five million natives, between eight and ten thousand European whites, and plenty of gardens, in which there are many fruit trees and much water."

In the 19th century, Tanganyika became a part of the territory which the English and the Germans sought to annex to their empires. Three German agents landed in 1884, and 1886 and 1890 the English and Germans by treaty divided up East Africa, the English getting Kenya in addition to Pemba and Zanzibar; and the Germans getting what is now Tanganyika. The Germans curtailing the power of the local chiefs, divided the territory into 17 Akidas and proceeded to exploit the territory. During the First World War, Tanganyika was conquered by the British, using black troops, and it became a mandate of the League of Nations under the British.

38-5-52

Under the British mandate, the Governor, Sir Donald Cameron, tried to carry our a policy for the natives; only two million acres of land had been alienated to whites in 1930. since then there has arisen in Tanganyika a cold war between whites who want to exploit and control the territory, and the native population.

Recently a most interesting petition has been presented in behalf of the native population by Marius Fortie, a white man born in Italy and a naturalized American. He has been in East Africa since 1901 up until 1945. He says: "Owing to natural difficulties and cultural limitations, Great Britain governs Tanganyika in the interest of the Governed without consulting them. In Tanganyika nobody votes but, although votesless, the 20,000 Europeans and the 50,000 Asians settled there are by no means voiceless. They speak so loudly, and even imperiously, in Tanganyika itself, from Britain, from India, from Arabia, from South Africa, that in practice Tanganyika is administered largely in the interest of those few thousand loud-voiced foreigners, under color that their interests are identical with the interests of the 5,300,000 Natives who are voiceless."

38-5-53

Mailed Jan 12, 1948 Jan 12, 1948

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

From Marius Fortie's petition to the United Nations in behalf of Tanganyika we quote these passages:

"There is to be noticed an ominous change in wording and stress in that, while under the League of Nations, the Welfare and development of the native peoples were the primary aims of the Mandate system, under the Trusteeship system the emphasis is on the inhabitants of the Trust Territories. This change of emphasis may be construed as approving and legalizing the administration of Tanganyika which is conducted mainly and primarily for the interests of about seventy thousand settlers, under the convenient assumption that those interests are identical with the interests of the 5,300,000 Natives.

"That assumption is fallacious and false; it causes grave and continuous violations of the letter and spirit of the Trusteeship, grave and continuous injustices and discriminations against the Natives.

"While traveling and residing in Tanganyika from 1932 to 1935, and from 1939 to 1945, mingling with the inhabitants all over the land, contacting them in my official capacity as Crop and Market Supervisor, I found the bulk of the Natives utterly uninformed on Mandate matters, and never noticed any official efforts to spread information and keep it steadily before the Natives.

"The Tanganyika Native can do nothing now to help himself and safeguard his present and long-range interests because, being uneducated and uninformed he does not know those interests and can take no real share in the administrationof his country. That administration is conducted by aliens for aliens and on alien principles in no way related to the Native's mentality, background or culture, not even related to his present immediate needs.

"The Tanganyika Native cannot foresee the handicaps and the griefs which the present administration piles up for his future. He is still easily hushed and amused with our Western sops and toys, with tinsel and trash; but in the towns he can already be goaded to strikes and to riots by the economic insecurity, the bad housing, the diseases, the vices, the temptations which are some of our bad gifts to those we call savage, backward, primitive, uncivilized. In the towns, the Native is already acutely aware and resentful of the discriminations inflicted on him by aliens in his own land, the only land he has, because we do not allow him to leave it.

38-540

"I will give an example to support my contention that the administration of Tanganyika is extravagantly costly, and utterly aside and beyond native needs. The Government makes much of the fact that droughts and locusts occasionally bring famine to native tribes which might be wiped out or forced to migrate if the white man's Government were not there to supply relief. In 1938, an average pre war year, the total revenue of Tanganyika was about seven million dollars, of which more than two and a half millions was paid by the Natives in poll and hut taxes. That year the Government spent a little over $50,000 in famine relief; it gave $1200 to destitute Natives and $16,000 to support native primary village schools--a total of $67,200. Salaries, passages, house allowances, pensions and gratuities to non-Africans amounted that year to $3,52[illegible],000."

19

Mailed - Jan. 13, 1948

PAN AFRICA
by

W. E. B. Du Bois

The National Council of Nigeria and the Cameroons is a federation of 183 political parties, trade unions, professional and business associations, farmers' and peasants' organizations, tribal unions, youth leagues, students' and other cultural organizations scattered all over Nigeria and the British Cameroons.

The NCNC Delegation has been authorized and commissioned by the various communities ~~referred to in Appendix~~ to make certain representations to the Colonial Office in order to promote better relations, thereby cementing ties of friendship to the mutual advantage of the peoples of Great Britain and Nigeria and the Cameroons. Our people feel that there is no need for making the future relations of Great Britain and Nigeria a subject of conflict. Rather, it is a question of adjustment of the political and administrative organization.

28-5-57

Contrary to opinions generally expressed in official and other circles, neither the communities of our country nor the officers and members of the NCNC are victims of chauvinism or xenophobia. However, we are convinced that after many years of Anglo-Nigerian relations, we have had no opportunity in the effective management of the government of our country because the Crown Colony system is despotic and obsolete; being opposed to democracy, it should be abrogated.

It is the desire of our people that we should be granted more political responsibility because the country is ready and prepared for it. The administration of Nigeria and the Cameroons under a Crown Colony system is static, unprogressive, and not in accordance with the democratic ideals for which our country contributed her share in man-power, money, and materials in World War II. By granting this request, Great Britain has the privilege and honour of helping our people to make a contribution to the larger life of mankind.

The representations which we have been authorised to make are based on the following categories:

(1) Richards' Constitution. To object to the principle involved in the new Constitution which subverts the democratic condition of the Colony and Protectorate of Nigeria and the Cameroons and derogates the status of the Paramount Rulers of the country.

(2) Four Legislations. To demand the repeal of certain sections of (a) Public Lands Acquisition Ordinance and Amendment (1945), (b) Crown Lands Ordinance and Amendment (1945), (c) Minerals Ordinance (1945), (d) Appointment and Deposition of Chiefs Ordinance and Amendment (1945).

38-5-58

(3) Basic Human Rights. To request the repeal of certain laws or sections of laws which deny the people of Nigeria and the Cameroons basic human rights.

(4) Acts of Maladministration. To spotlight certain acts of maladministration with a view to their immediate amelioration.

(5) Protectorate Status. To protest against the present official policy of governing Nigeria and the Cameroons (which, in parts, are a Crown Colony, a Protectorate, and Trust Territory) as if they are an exclusive colonial possession of Great Britain; and to ask for a clarification of Anglo-Nigerian relations (a) in the light of treaty obligations, and (b) in accordance with Protectorate status.

(6) Self-Government. To demand that immediate steps be taken now towards self-government for Nigeria and the Cameroons.

38-5-59

Mailed January 26, 1948

Pub. 2-14

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

I sat last night with two persons from Africa. One was a tall, ill-dressed man, but very straight-forward, simple and earnest. He was Michael Scott, from South Africa. He was a Christian in the sense that Jesus Christ was a Christian. He had come to talk to America about the racial injustice in South Africa, with the British Empire trying to keep his mouth shut and trying to keep him from traveling overseas. His story of the squalor and the poverty among the natives of South Africa in the vicinity of Johannesburg was almost unbelieveable.

38-S-60

Then there was a young, delicately-made, and beautiful white woman, also from the region about Johannesburg, and one story which she told in a low voice gave me extraordinary illumination.

Some ten miles from Johannesburg is a native location called Alexander. The Negro workers who work in the industries of Johannesburg live in large number in Alexander. A street car carries them to work and back, and used to charge ten cents carfare. This amounted to a dollar a week for each worker who earned only twenty dollars a month. But the white company who had the monopoly of the tramline was not satisfied. Consequently they raised the fare to twelve cents, or twenty-four cents for the round trip. The natives, unlettered people, poor, and recently come to town from the country districts, where they were under tribal conditions, struck.

Ten thousand of them each day marched in close array from Alexander to Johannesburg, did their days work and marched back. The company was unable to stand this, and therefore, after three days they surrendered. But they were not without resources; they induced the government of the city to make an ordinance that persons could not march along the highways in a closed group. Now of course the comradship and the esprit de corps of this march was part of the thing that held the group together. Nevertheless, the group struck again, they walked along the highway, not in close array but singly and in couples, the women of the tribal units undertook policing of the group so that the children would not go astray, or the men get in fights with the white. And then again, for three long weeks, every day ten thousand black folk walked to Johannesburg and walked back, and finally the company surrendered again.

38-5-61

This extraordinary story of the way in which these untrained Africans could stand together and discipline themselves for one great object made me know without question, that in time Black Africa is going to triumph in its own home. It has the intelligence, it has the courage. Meantime Michael Scott wants money to train young Africans here in America. He can get the young folk who are willing to study; despite difficulty he can get permission for them to come here; but funds to pay for their education are lacking. There was a time when the African Methodist Church brought in a considerable number of Africans, students like the Dubes, who became leaders; Charlotte Manye, who became perhaps the greatest woman leader of modern Africa, and many others. Why have we stopped this great service to Africa?

Pub. 2-14 Mailed February 9, 1948

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

Michael Scott has returned to Africa. Not much was said of him while he stayed here. The white press was persistently silent. The colored press knew little about him. Yet he is the sort of Englishman who puts merican Negroes to shame. There have been many of them, not enough, perhaps, we have a right to say; but men like Wilberforce and Bishop Colenso and including Michael Scott, whom we cannot forget. He is a young, clearheaded individual with a career before him. If he conformed to the British line of imperial thought, he might become a well-paid rector, or even a Bishop; but he has deliberately and unselfishly thrown himself into the fray, to represent the disinherited classes of South Africa. He has done it without vain glory, without self advertisement, and with a touching lack of any realization that he is doing something all too rare in our day.

His very attitude disarmed the British. They did not want to let him come to America to represent the blacks of South West Africa. They practically had to permit him for they could not withstand the public opinion of the world and prevent this man, who had voluntarily shared the poverty and dirt of a South African location, from coming to tell the truth about the oppression which the Union of South Africa is visiting upon the Natives.

He was allowed to stay only a short time. He was watched and spied upon. He could not travel, except within a certain district from the United Nations. He was not allowed to give public lectures or anything of that sort. He was treated in something of the same way in which we treat criminals and counterfeiters, and with short notice was ordered home.

38-5-62

It is to be trusted that we will not forget him; or perhaps he would say, if we are going to forget him, we ought certainly to remember the messages which he brought from the black peoples of South Africa. Mr. Scott wrote to the Trusteeship Council of the United Nations:

"It will not be necessary to remind those who have the responsibility of dealing with the peoples who are still a sacred trust of our civilization that the decimation of the Herero people by the Germans in South West Africa remains as the darkest chapter in the whole history of Africa's colonial development.

38-5-63

"The Hereros were deprived of their lands and herds, they were deprived of them by the most shameful methods of deceit and trickery, and, finally, by the most cowardly war of extermination in which, while disarmed, they were reduced from eighty thousand men, women, and children to fifteen thousand.

"These lands were not returned to them in accordance with the promise made by Lord Buxton during the First World War when they fought for the Allies against the Germans; on the contrary, they alleged further tracts of many hundreds of square miles of land, were, after the war, taken away from them by the Union Government, using the Mandatory Power of the League of Nations, and given to white settlers. The Hereros say that they were driven from these lands at Orumbo and elsewhere by the Mandatory Power, that their houses were burned and their windmills rendered useless and that these productive lands in the central part of the territory, comprising many of the more fertile valleys, were given to the white settlers from South Africa and from Portuguese Angola.

"Confined, as they are now, in the reserves on the borders of the Kalahari Desert and heavily taxed with respect to all the cattle they possess, they are being forced more and more into the European towns and farming areas and are being obliged to work at a wage which the Administrative Power has been unable to stabilise at even the low levels ranging from nine shillings (two and a half dollars) per month laid down in the Minimum Wage Proclamation.

"Great fortunes have be n made by the Karakul farmers who have come in from South Africa to occuoy the Herero lands while their shepherds, brought from their families in the Reserves hundreds of miles away, have remained amongst the most cruelly treated and exploited labourers in Africa; even to the extent of being flogged they say, and sometimes shot and buried on these lands. Meanwhile income tax for Europeans in South West Africa is the lowest for any European community in the world and yet expenditure on education and social services is inordinately high for the European community, while that for the poorest, viz the non-European sections, is inordinately low.

"While there are fifty-three Government schools for the European community, numbering 37,000, there are not more than five Government schools for the Africans, numbering three hundred thousand. The understaffed, and poorly equipped Mission Schools are only very inadequately subsided by the Government."

38-5-64

Pub. 2-21 Mailed February 2, 1948

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

We present the record of a meeting with Frederick Mahareru, Paramount Chief, and other representatives of the Herero people at present in exile in Bechuanaland. The meeting took place at Mafeking on July 14th, 1947.

38-S-54

The Chief said: "I made a request to Chief Tshekedi to be given an opportunity of meeting you. I asked this in order to express my views on the question of appealing for the return of our lands in South West Africa.

"It is the conviction of the whole Herero people that we should have our lands returned to us. And it is the wish of the Herero people living in the Bechuanaland Protectorate that we should return to South West Africa."

Question: Why would you not like your government to be brought under the Union Government?

F.M. I should not like my country to be handed over to the Union Government because that Government adopts the same oppressive policy towards the Native people as the Germans.

The Union Government has no respect for the Native inhabitants of their country as human beings. The Union Government does not want the Native people to progress economically so that they may become economically independent. They restrict them regarding the cattle they may own and regarding other means of livelihood.

Question: Do you not think the Union Government would provide other means of livelihood besides cattle farming for your people?

F.M. There is nothing which the Union Government gives to the Native people which takes the place of their cattle.

F.M. It is the restrictions and barriers which are placed in the way of the Native people so that they become their servants and dependent upon them which has driven the Herero people who lived in tne Transvaal to cross into the country of the Mamangwato.

The Union Government does not encourage education among the Natives because they want the Natives always to remain their servants.

38-5-55

Leonard Ngubauba I am the Uncle of Chief Nicodemus Selatiela of the Banderu in the Beteti District, and I have come here in place of the Chief at his request.

Firstly, I am glad of the opportunity to come here to express our views regarding our Land in South West Africa. That land as it is now is not good for us because it has been spoiled by the Union Government. I was in South West Africa only t[redacted] years ago, and when I was there I found that the land which we had previously occupied has been taken away from our people who have now been sent away from the valleys to sandy soil where food cannot very well be grown-that is to say it can only be grown with great difficulty and not in sufficient quantity.

We had fought aga nst the Germans in our own war with the Germans (The Herero War) because amongst other reasons they had wanted to drive us away from these valleys where there was water and where food could be grown.

We shall only be satisfied if this land which we had occupied namely the river valleys is returned to us. If the Government, with God's help would return this land to us we should be happy. This is our prayer to God that this land be returned to us and that we should go back to reoccupy it. These are the views I came all this way to express."

Question: It is said that the Herero are losing their leadership in South West Africa because they do not want to depart from the old ways but are looking back to the past, that they only want to remain a cattle rearing people rather than to make progress in other walks of life.

38-5-52

Chief The Germans fought against us and took away our land. That is why they do not want to see any good in us. They converted us to Christianity but did not want to give us any education or to help us to advance. They only preached to us. The Hereros did not learn anything from them except the word "God." The Germans were afraid of the Herero people. They did not want them to learn and to become civilised as we want to day. I was taken to Germany with three others to be shown to the Kaiser because he did not know his black subjects, and also to be taught. There was also an Herero Minister and his wife, and there were four Namas two men and two women in Germany at the same time.

Question: How long were you there and what did you learn?

Chief: We were there one year. We were not taught anything. Only we rode about on horses and dressed and drilled as soldiers.

Pub. ~~2-14~~ 2-28 Mailed February 16, 1948

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

We American Negroes know comparatively little of the great leaders of Africa, even in our day. In May 1946, Herbert Macaulay, C.E. F. R. G. S. founder of the Nigerian National Democratic Party and President of the National Council of Nigeria and the Cameroons, died on the 7th of May, 1846, at the grand old age of 81 years. He was the grandson of Bishop Adjai Crowther, first African Bishop; and seventh son of Rev. Thomas B. Macaulay, founder and first principal of the C.M.S. Grammar School, Lagos. His death has robbed West Africa in general Nigeria in particular of a great patriot and matured politician.

In spite of his advanced age, the late Mr. Macaulay insisted on accompanying the delegation of the National Council of Nigeria and the Cameroons in its country-wide tour to explain its aims and objects, and to obtain the mandate of the people before the delegation left for London to place the grievances of the people before the Imperial Government and the British public.

38-5-65

He was rushed back to Lagos from Kano only to die the next day. The Bishop of Lagos in his address on the life of the deceased, referred to his life of many facets--political leader, journalist, musician and historian,--he said he was a great fighter and thinker, and one "who did not spare himself, even in his last hours, in the service of others."

A mamoth crowd from Lagos and environs, estimated at over 100,00 turned out en masse to pay their last respects to the "Doyen of Nigerian Politics," and "Defender of Native Rights and Liberties". As the "West African Pilot" graphically put it: "Never, in the history of Lagos, has there been so great an honor done to the memory of only one individual by so large a crowd."

"As we lay this feeble and mortal frame in the bosom of Mother Earth", said Mr. Nnamdi Azikwe, Secretary of the N.C.N.C., in his stirring funeral oration, "let us realize that this place has now become a hallowed spot in our national history....When he lived, he generated ideas which have inspired millions to look forward to a new life, conceived in the idealogy that man that is born of a woman is not destined to be in servitude for ever.

".....Let us erect a monument on this hallowed spot, as a fitting climax to his glorious life, so that this chapter in our national history, which has now closed, will open a new page in our onward march towards the crystalization of the NEW AFRICA."

38-5-66

Pub. 3-6 Mailed February 20, 1948

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

One of the complaints which Negroes in West Africa have against the British government is the discrimination against them based on color, in the case of appointees to the Civil Service. This is illustrated in the matter of physicians. Between 1859 and 1902 there was no such discrimination in British West Africa. Two natives of Sierra Leone were commissioned in the Army Medical Department to serve with the troops in 1859. In 1862, a Negro medical officer was appointed by the Colonial Government; and Negroes served without a break from then on , two becomming heads of the medical department of colonies. There was equality in pay and promotion between African and European medical officers.

38-5-67

Then came a long period from 1902 to 1932, The West African Medical Staff was formed, drawing the color line and admitting only white men, even though their Native competitiors had had the same training in England and the same degrees. Coloured physicians now were only employed locally and not in the regular staff service.

The last period from 1934 to 1946 saw the West African Medical Staff absorbed into the Colonial Medical Service. No Negroes were for years appointed to this service; but recently a small beginning has been made by promoting some African physicians to higher posts. Dr. M.C.F. Easmon, recently listed 21 points of discrimination in conditions of service between African and Europeans in West Africa. Several colonial secretaries of State in London have declared that there was no discrimination or color line, but African medical officers show by specific points that this is untrue; and in the memorial presented to the Secretary of State in 1934, they especially complained about the status of Negro physicians. Even in the State Papers, Negro physians are referred to repeatedly as "subordinate medical officers."

As a result of this, young Africans have been discouraged, especially in Sierra Leone from entering the medical profession. Most of them prefer to stay and practice in England where they have a chance to be received upon their merit. When theformer Secretary of State, Colonel Stanley asked for as many African doctors as possible he was told that he could get them if discrimination was stopped.

38-5-98

13 September 1947

Pan Africa

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Kenya was settled by immigrants from the Union of South Africa. Three or four hundred Dutch farmers came in 1903 and were joined after the first world war by ex-service officers and privates and English industralists. The total area of Kenya is about 225,000 square miles of which only about 40,000 square miles are capable of cultivation. Of these 40,000 square miles the government gave over 11,000 square miles to Europeans. One of them, Lord Delamere, acquired over one hundred thousand acres of the finest land at one penny per acre. The result was that in 1935 the natives forming 80 per cent of the population had but 20 per cent of the land area and this the least fertile, being swamp and desert, and infested by the tetse fly.

Up until recently the natives had no representation in the legislature council. They now have one, and soon may have two members. But a significent change has come; it was forcast in 1923 when the whites of Kenya got frightened at the influx of East Indians and the preponderence of natives, and sent out a manisfesto called "The Thermopylae of Africa, Kenya Colony". In this, they proposed that the British Empire should give up its attempt to dominate Asia and concentrate on Africa. It is of interest to find that today under the Labor Government this is exactly what is happening. The British Empire unable to hold India, and also being on the verge of relaxing its hold upon Egypt, is going to concentrate its military and naval power in East Africa as a stronghold of a new British-African imperialism. For this purpose it is fighting for the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. It will be interesting to watch further developments of this idea.

42-86-52

Mailed March 1, 1948

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

The cocoa situation in West Africa still constitutes a scandal in the British Empire. It was discussed in Parliament last June. E. P. Smith, member from Ashford said among other things: "From the outbreak of war until October, 1946, the price was fixed at 8.9 cents per pound, that is, approximately £45 12s. 6d. per ton c.i.f. United Kingdom ports. It is interesting to n te that while the price was approximately £45 12s. 6d. a ton c.i.f. United Kingdom ports, the native cocoa grower was only getting something in the neighborhood of L-15 per ton. In October, 1946, the price was raised to 14.5 cents per pound, or approximately £76 is 3d. per ton c.i.f. United Kingdom ports. Again very much less than that price went to the producer.

28-5-48

"The Ministry of Food buys its cocoa through the West African Produce Control Board, which is under the Colonial Office. Let us examine what the grower is now receiving. Now the price has reached the equivalent of 119s per cwt. c.i.f. United Kingdom ports, According to the Ministry of Food, the grower is receiving 60s. per cwt., which is just half the market price. Where is the difference going? It is going to the West African Produce Control Board, who have accummulated a fund--it would be fair to call it a profit--in the neighborhood of £22,000,000. I want to know what they are going to do with it.

"They must do their best, they say, for the growers. That is an admirable and, indeed, a pious expression which I cannot sufficiently praise, but does doing one's best for the grower include the retention of a fabulous sum of money which by right belongs to him? Is this £22,000,000 to be got throught to the growers? If so, how is it to be got through to the growers and when? I have an uncomfortable feeling that the Colonial Office, through the West African Produce Control Board, will retain this huge sum and enjoy it in some way other than by directly paying the people who grow the cocoa and to whom it clearly belongs. They were the primary producers.

"If that is so, I consider it would be a scandal of the first magnitude, into which there ought to be some sort of inquiry. Because the grower was starved of a fair price from 1939 to October, 1946, and since then has received less than half the price which his goods have fetched in the world's markets, I want to know if this has been done because the producers are in the main natives?"

38-5-49

Meantime, Consumers Corporations and Producers Corporations are increasing in the United States, although no one would suspect it by reading the newspapers. Over a hundred million people in the world are enrolled in cooperatives in 41 countries and the movement has been growing for over a hundred years.

In the United States, corporatives are carrying on an annual business of $750,000,000 and colored people are joining the corporatives in cities like Chicago and Richmond, and especially in Philadelphia. The history of corporatives among colored people in the Philadelphia is worth revealing. It began in January 1945, with group study and planning and instructors were organized and study clubs covering the entire Philadelphia area with an enrollment of 1,304 representing all races and religions.

The corporative leagues of the United States and the East helped and encouraged the movement. A corporative education service was established. A few corporative stores were established; one in South Philadelphia, one in West Philadelphia, and recently a corporative town at 1126 Jefferson Street, Philadelphia. This organization consists of between 300 and 400 members. Benefits of membership are: the member becomes part owner of the business, he gets a refund on what is bought, and joint privileges of control of rent and prices, and the group decides who works and who will manage the business.

There is no program for the economic development of America that does as much work as that of the corporative. But we must, of course, remember that all enterprises called corporative are not true Rochdale corporatives. A great many of them are merely investments, and a few are frauds. Whenever a corporative enterprise is started, it ought to be done with careful advice and education. The true corporative is one of the greatest possible steps toward democracy.

38-5-50

People's Voice, NYC

Mailed 3-8-48

PAN AFRICA
by
W.E.B. Du Bois

Africa is forging forward in the news these days. There are two novels, one CRY A BELOVED COUNTRY, by Alan Taton, a white man, "beautifully wrought, this story of the triumph of a sincere and simple faith over adversity and despair, has a compelling spiritual power." His hero is a colored South African. There is also a new novel by Peter Abrahams, who is a colored South African, living in London. THE NEW YORK TIMES, says that Mr. Abrahams can "create character at a stroke;" and the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, says: "He has something important to say, and he says it dramatically."

I met young Abrahams and his wife when I was in London for the Pan African Congress. He is a fine fellow and he has recently reminded us of the activities, with regard to Africa, that have taken place recently in London. He writes: "In 1944, there was held in London, a Subject Peoples' Conference. Representatives from Asia and Africa, and other territories, where colored people are to be found, attended. As a result of that Conference a Co-ordination Committee for the Struggle of Subject Peoples was set up.

38-5-69

In 1945, a world Pan-African Congress was held in Manchester. Accredited delegates from all over the Negro world came. They were representatives of labour, political, co-operative, social, and cultural bodies.

In 1946, Professor N. G. Ranga, leader of the All Indian Kisan (Peasant) Congress, published his book "The Colonial and Coloured Peoples--A Programme for their Freedom and Progress." In it he advocates the creation of the "Colonial and Coloured Peoples' Freedom Front" with a distinctive programme.

Ranga had an interview with Gandhi in October 1944, and this is what they said to each other:

Ranga: Do you recognize the need for all the colonial peoples to try to come nearer to each other, learn from each other's experiences in their fight for freedom, and help each other?

GANDHI: Yes. But "Colonial Peoples" is a badly chosen expression. " Oppressed races of the earth" expresses the idea better.

RANGA: Are we right in thinking that your stand against world imperialism is intended to benefit as much the Africans, Chinese, Red Indians, and other non-white masses as the 400 Millions of Indians?

GANDHI: My correspondence with Government (published in May, 1944) while under detention (1942-44) shows that most clearly.

38-5-70

RANGA: The greatest social problem of the modern world is the exploitation of the vast masses of agricultural peoples, by the industrial peoples and countries through the e unequal exchanges imposed upon the former by the latter through their control over the world markets and finance and imperialist machinery. Are we right in thinking that you stand for the abolition of this process of exploitation of the producers of primary commodities and of the agricultural masses of the world?

GANDHI: Root and branch.

RANGA: Are we right in thinking that ours is only a part of the general struggle of colonial peoples against world Capitalism and imperialism, and that India is the vanguard in the world movement of colonial and agricultural masses for freedom, economic and political?

GANDHI: I hope so.

[mailed March 15, 1948]

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E.B.DUBOIS

We Negroes are beginning to understand as news filters through how tremendous an impression was made upon England by the Nigerian delegation, headed by Azikiwe last September. Here are a series of advertisements of the African good will mission to Britain, first, inviting to a meeting in Trafalgar Square, September 14, to join a domonstration by Nigerians in support of a demand for a more democratic constitution in Nigeria.

42-86-86

A meeting September 9, in Houldsworth Etams Gate. A meeting in Cardiff, Friday September 19; a meeting in Birmingham, September 20, a meeting in Liverpoos, September 21. In addition to that, there was a good will mission to Ireland. THE IRISH TIMES, said on September 11, "A seven-strong 'friendship' delegation of West Africans is visiting Ireland. The delegates are here under the auspices of the National Council of Nigeria and the Cameroons, and their object isto strengthen the ties of friendship established between Ireland and Nigeria, through the activities of Irish Christian Missionaries and Irish Universities and colleges which have become intellectual centers for African students."

THE EVENING HERALD, said the same day: "Immediate steps should be taken to train us for self-government, which would solve most of our problems, said Dr. A. Jadj Abu Bakr Ibiyinka Olorum-Nimbe, Vice President of the Nigerian National Democratic Party and one of the leaders of a Pan-Nigerian good will mission to Dublin, when the delegation met journalists in the Four Provinces House, Harcourt Street, today.

"The Mission has been in Britain pressing its claims for self-government with the British Colonial Office, and putting before the public certain [redacted] facts about the present administration of Nigeria and the Cameroons."

THE DUBLIN EVENING MAIL, said: "Members of the Press, who were received by the delegation today, were told that the principal purpose of the delegation was to place before the people of Ireland the claims of the people of Nigeria for a greater voice in the management of their own affairs."

78-98-24

THE IRISH PRESS, said on September 12th, : "A demand for self-government for Nigeria and the Cameroons and the repeal of existing laws in relation to the franchise, land and minerals was voiced by the Pan-Nigerian delegation which is on a friendship mission to Ireland, in an interview at the Four Provinces House, Dublin Yesterday.

In welcoming the delegation, the Mayor of Dublin said: "The Irish people were always on the side of all peoples struggling for national independence regardless of race, colour or creed." He reminded the African visitors that his country, too, was under the yoke of English imperialism for over 600 years, and that without continued struggle from generation to generation Ireland could never have won her independence.

"Freedom is the birthright of all peoples regardless of their race or colour" asserted the Lord Mayor. "Therefore, the claim of the Africans for self-government from British Imperialism is a legitimate and just demand, which will receive the fullest moral endorsement and support of the people of Dublin."

Mch 22, 1948

1948

PAN AFRICA

by

W. E. B. Du Bois

Mary Attlee, sister of the Prime Minister of Great Britain, has worked in the Union of South Africa for 37 years and lived among Colored people. In a lecture delivered before The Royal Empire Society, April 30, 1947, Miss Attlee spoke in part as follows: "There are large suburbs of South African cities with prosperous European households entirely dependent for domestic help on the women and girls of the Coloured population. It is in one of these suburbs of Cape Town--Claremont---that I have lived since 1929, and I have been trying to see life from their angle. This has been a great privilege. I have tried to listen and see with the ears and eyes of the Coloured community.

42-88-98-24

"The origin of the Coloured people is briefly this; The Dutch settlers could not induce the wild Bushmen and Hottentots to work for them, and so they got imported slaves. In the nineteenth century the slave population was greater than the white, and there were a number of ex-slaves freed by the kindness of their masters and moving about more freely than their brothers still in slavery. The slaves and freed slaves intermarried. Some married with Hottentots and Bushmen. Cohabitation between white masters and slaves was not infrequent, and there was intermarriage between shipwrecked sailors and soldiers and coloured women. It is the descendents of these people who are scattered throughout South Africa today, and there are as many grades in education, culture, intelligence, and general respectability within the Coloured community as within the European. That is what makes it so misleading and cruel to speak of them in a general way as if they were all exactly the same. 'Niggers' is a very common way of speaking of them. Numbers of them are very respectable citizens, Godfearing Christian people, with good home life, loyal, law-abiding. Some of them have gone overseas for advanced education and returned to South Africa as doctors, teachers, clergymen, and lawyers, having appreciated the cultured life of England, and feel very deeply being cut off from European society on their return to South Africa.

"It is not realised here that all good theaters and concerts are barred to such people. If they do obtain admission it is only in the gallery. It is almost impossible for them to find a house or land in certain parts of the city. They have to live in what is called the 'Coloured district'. In travelling long distances they cannot go into a restaurant and are even refused refreshment service at a buffet, as they are in the teashops of Cape Town. There is hardly a place to which one can take a Coloured friend to tea. Benches on station platforms are labelled so as to discriminate between Europeans and non-Europeans. Is it any wonder that these people grow up with an inferiority complex?"

J2-86-89

3-29

PAN AFRICA
by
W. E. B. Du Bois

42-86-90

Today without doubt is the most critical time for Africa since the beginning of the Slave Trade in the 18th century. The power of colonial imperialism has been broken, severely broken. The whole continent of Asia containing the majority of the peoples of the world, is breaking away. It has not wholly succeeded yet, not by a long shot, but it has started on the path which is going to lead to self government, to freedom from exploitation at the hands of Europeans and Americans, and to a new era of autonomy and self-expression, which will mean the re-birth of civilization in the world.

Now, just because of this and as a vast counter movement, there is determination on the part of the United States, France, Belgium and especially Great Britain, to concentrate the power of colonial imperialism on the continent of Africa. The resources of Africa are just being realized. They are already of immense value and have been for many centuries. It would be almost impossible for modern civilization to maintain its present structure without the gold and diamonds of Africa, the vegetable oils, the coffee and cocoa, the valuable minerals and even more valuable fibers and vegetables, and a host of other things; which because, they are priced low as raw material, make vast profits for the processing investors in Europe and America. But everyone who is familiar with Africa knows this is simply the beginning; that with more intense cultivation and industrialization, this black continent will be one of the richest in the world.

Europe is beginning to concentrate on it. The Belgians do not need European recovery aid. They made magnificent profits during the World War, in their sale of all sorts of material which the world needed, not forgetting the material for atomic fission. The colonies themselves, in West Africa and East Africa, and more especially in South Africa, made large profit which it is calling for a good deal of ingenuity to channel out of Africa and into Europe and America. But all this is preliminary for a tremendous future, for a restored Western Europe, which building upon the products and cheap labor of West Africa can restore would enterprise so as to face and keep back any organization or civilization which may arise in Asia.

The public may be fooled into thinking that the object of European effort and American effort is Russia. The real problem is Asia; how to keep the majority of the people of the world from taking their rightful place in the world and Africa is going to be used as the center of West European and American effort. It is for that reason that we are trying desperately to put down, or at least temporarily appease, the uprising in West Africa seeking autonomy. It is for that reason that we are refusing to give any attention to the efforts of South Africa to spearhead the white rule in Africa by keeping eight million natives in the Union of South Africa in their places and by adding to them the black peoples of South West Africa and of Portuguese Africa. It is for this reason that France is walking softly but carrying a big stick by trying to keep peace in North Africa both black and yellow. And in East Africa, England is beginning to concentrate its military and naval might and make alliance with the Middle East.

All this is one of the greatest of Greek tragedies of modern days--and we use the word "Greek" advisedly. It will be a drama which the world will follow with baited breath and with tremendous self-interest.

42-86-91

[Feb 8, 1936]

Ethiopia

Two matters concerning Ethiopian history have not been emphasized as they should in the current controversy. First, the relation of Ethiopia to ancient Ethiopia, and secondly, the relation of present Ethiopia to the Mahdi.

Modern Ethiopia represents the third step of black human culture. North East Africa backward--or shall we say forward--from the Mediterranean to the Great Lakes, paralleling perhaps a pre-historic movement northward; and every step has shaken the world. Physically these steps have been almost equal--500 miles from the Nile delta to the First Cataract. Then 500 miles fro, Napata to Meroe; and at least 500 miles from the capital of the Candaces and their shield-like island formed by the Atbara and Blue Nile to Axum and Adowa where the retreat--or advance--of black Africa ended until 1935.

All this vast movement and development was stretched over more than 5,000 years and it affected essentially similar, though not identical groups of African people; beginning with the mulattoes of Egypt, more and more drowned in the black blood from the South, which ever threatened them and yet gave them sanctuary. This southern land, called from the beginning "Ethiopia", Land of Burned Faces, had its surging boundaries finally fastened at the First Cataract, until these gates became an opening and refuge whither Egypt retreated before Persia; and Ethiopia, eventually, became a new and conquering Egypt which ruled the Nile Valley from Napata and was the greatest power in the western world from 750 to 600 B. C.

But Asia and the Desert pressed forward again until at Meroe, 500 further miles South and 500 years later, Ethiopia developed a new capital and new dynasties which resisted the power of Greece, Rome and Arabia. Then the land of the Blacks crumpled a third time before black foes sweeping in from the forests of the west, before the new Mohammedanism pressing relentlessly down from the north, before the ever encroaching desert.

Ethiopia retreating finally took her stand with her back against the last great ramparts of the east--the Hills of Abyssinia. Here the black hordes of the region of the Great Lakes had been infiltrated with Semitic blood from the shores of the Red Sea, where Asiatic upheavals drove Jews and Arabs before them and hurled remnants on the African shores. The trading station at Axum, near modern Adowa, was a gateway for merchants and brought Ethiopia and Abyssinia in contact.

34-1-58

This kingdom took its name, "Abyssinia", from a Semitic tribe, "Habesh"; but the people of Habesh were neither contented nor safe in being simply Abyssinians. Trade and defense forced them toward ancient Ethiopia, and they disputed with the Arabs and Nubians over the domination of the island of Meroe. Here they claimed sovereignty as early as 350 A.D., and actually destroyed the capital a century later. Greek and Roman influence filtered into Abyssinia from the East, and trade made Axum flourish. Myths of its obscure origin began to arise: the Jewish myth of descent of its royal house from Solomon; the Negro myth of its descent from Aethiopis, whose tomb was pointed out at Axum.

Now let us bring back the memory of the relation of Ethiopia to the Mahdi.

The story is part of that of the modern European conquest of Egypt. Egypt was groaning under the debt which had been deliberately encouraged by France and England. Her rulers, who had squandered the proceeds, sought to keep up the interest by ruinous and exhaustive taxation. In desperation, the natives rebelled. Ahmed Arabi, a mulatto colonel, led a successful revolt, but the English turned their guns upon Alexandria and defeated Arabi. This left the Egyptian rulers still in nominal control of the whole of Egypt but in actual control only of the Sudan.

Rebellion in the Sudan naturally continued. In 1878, the mulatto Rabah had swept through the Bahr-El-Ghazel and the regions south of Lake Chad. Then there arose a greater leader and a vaster motif. Mohammed Ahmed, son of a priest in Dongola, had established headquarters 150 miles above Khartum. He was a tall, broad-shouldered, majestic black man, with great eyes. He had visions. Disciples gathered around him and eventually he proclaimed himself the Mahdi, the Messiah of the Mohammedan revelation.

34-1-52

The country, groaning under misrule, went into the throes of a religious crusade against Egypt. A holy war was proclaimed and a strong army organised. The Mahdi put down blasphemy, feasting, drinking, smoking and swearing. The Egyptians in 1883 sent an army of 10,000 under the Englishman, Hicks Pasha. They were annihilated. Kordofan, Dahur and the Bahr-El-Ghazel surrendered. Only a German, Emin Pasha, with his black wife and mulatto daughter, still upheld Egyptian power as a pledge to Germany down in the Equatorial provinces next to Uganda. By the end of 1883, the Mahdi was master of a territory equal to Spain, France and Germany, and his army was closing in on Khartum, the capital of the Sudan. Ancient Ethiopia lived again.

England hesitated. She still had the liberal tradition and Liberals were in power. Gladstone went even so far as to say that the Sudanese were "rightly struggling to be free." But his "little Englanders" were fighting a growing and expanding imperialism and as Chamberlain put it--"Empire is Commerce." Eventually the imperialists forced Gladstone to make Chinese Gordon Governor of the Sudan, and Gordon, a tippling fanatic with fits of courage and murder, sought by every subterfuge to force Gladstone to conquer the Sudan. The bluff failed, Gordon died and Gladstone was reviled as a murderer and traitor.

Khartoum fell. For thirteen years, the Mahdi and his successor, the Khalifa, ruled. The Egyptian garrisons on the northern border of Abyssinia were finally withdrawn in 1886 and French, British and Italian possessions on the coast were in danger of being overwhelmed by the Mahdi.

The resultant English diplomacy is well-known. On the one hand, they made alliance with Abyssinia to check the Mahdi; on the other, they encouraged the Italians to make aggression upon Abyssinia and hold her in check. Italy did so and by alliance with Menelik, the pretender to the Ethiopian throne, claimed as the reward of his eventual victory, the annexation of Ethiopia as an Italian colony.

We know how this project failed, but we do not realize the world situation March 1, 1896, when Ethiopia annihilated Italy's army of 20,000 at Adowa.

34-1-58

Suddenly, the headwaters of the Nile, the Nile Valley, Egypt, the domination of the Red Sea, the path from Cape-to-Cairo,--all these were in the hands of black men,--the black dervishes of the Sudan, and Menelik II, King of the Kings of Ethiopia and Emperor of Abyssinia. An English officer wrote: "If I were the Mahdi, I would make Egypt pay for every quart of water that runs down the Nile."

This battle of Adowa, one of the decisive battles of the world, very nearly resulted in European world war. Within a week after the battle, England, having waited 13 years, suddenly discovered that Gordon was a Christian martyr and started to recapture the Sudan while the French started eastward across North Africa. This was in March, 1896, and in September of the same month, the armies of England and France stood at Fashoda, on the headwaters of the Nile, ready to precipitate international conflict.

Copy (February 22, 1936.)

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER
By W. E. B. Du Bois

When the next war comes, where will Negroes fight and why? Last time we fought to end war and didn't. Time before last, we fought to be free, and aren't. Next time, we might try not fighting at all. We could hardly lose.

•••

Remember at bottom, it is all a matter of work and income. With work worth doing and suited to a man's ability and strength, and with income sufficient for health and home and a minimum of reasonable happiness, we could let all that would be left of problems of color, race, sex, youth, government and war go hang, and settle themselves next year, next century or never.

•••

This year of the presidential election must engage the black man's attention and set him looking forward or backward. Forward there is not much to look at. Al Smith is happy and comfortable. Raskob is secure for his old age. Here is a fine nuculeus for the formation of parties. Those who are happy, secure and comfortable will join the Liberty League; those who are not and see no apparent way to be, will join the Socialists. It will not make any difference for those who are in doubt whether they vote the Republican or Democratic ticket.

•••

The key man of modern me is the consumer. His purchase is his vote, his most powerful vote, his most decisive vote, and in nine cases out of ten today, his only vote. He is not altogether free in this voting, but he still retains a vast and impressive area of freedom. If he lets advertising and ballyhoo, windowdressing and cheap sales determine and direct his buying, he is worse than disfranchised; he is a fool. If he cannot see that the cheapest goods are the dearest, when they involve unemployment of Negroes, sweat shop wages, child labor and disease, then nothing can save such a consumer, not even wealth. Indeed, perhaps wealth least of all.

•••

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

The Registrar of Voters in Atlanta, Georgia is unhappy. The population of Atlanta in 1930 was 270,366, yet the Registrar says:

> "Our registration lists carry only some 40,000 voters. But that is not the worst thing about it. Of the 40,000 registered voters only some 25,000 actually go to the poll on election day and vote. Indeed, in a very important election a few years ago less than 12,000 votes were cast, and one candidate who was elected at that time received less than 5,000 votes."

32-11-83

And this is from the land which asked the disfranchisement of the Negro voter in order to make the white voter free.

• • •

Looking backward for strength and intelligence to vote in the year 1936, let us call to mind facts like this: the Negro voted before the Constitution in every colony, North and South, a free Negro with requisite qualifications had the legal right to vote at some time before 1787. Probably few actually voted, but we know that some did. The English conquest of the Assiento for slave-trading poured so many Negroes into the new world that it led in self-defense to the disfranchisement of free Negroes in most of the colonies between 1715 and 1776.

• • •

The Revolution restored the ballot widely to black soldiers and black freemen of property; but as the Cotton Kingdom began to arise and slavery became commercialized, the Negro gradually lost the ballot a ain between the years 1814-1838. In western territory where his right to vote was guaranteed by the Northwest Ordinance, states disfranchised him on admission, for fear of slave and free Negro competition.

After Emancipation, the Negro asked at most only limited suffrage. The great Negro conventions in North Carolina and South Carolina, in Georgia, in Alabama and Louisiana, asked at first legal protection and the right to work at a decent wage. They went in their demands straight down to the Marxian foundation of a modern state. But the Negro had universal suffrage forced on h im by the needs of Northern business which not only needed a loyal voting population in the South, but feared attack of the restored South on the tariff, the currency, the national debt and the expanding corporations. Northern philanthropy which had hesitated at this extreme demand strove to make this ballot effective with an economic foundation and intelligence--that is, free lands and public schools; but this failed with the deliberately crippled Freedmen's Bureau.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

3-11-24

...

Nevertheless the Negro valiantly tried to vote himself schools and economic rights and to join hands with white labor in a new assertion of democracy; but white labor would have nothing of him. One has only to remember that great meeting of the National Labor Union in Chicago in 1867. The Committee on Negro Labor reported that having had the subject under consideration, and after having heard the suggestions and opinions of several members of this convention--pro and con--they had arrived at the following conclusions:

> "That, while we feel the importance of the subject, and realize the danger in the future of competition in mechanical Negro labor, yet we find the subject involved in so much mystery, and upon it so wide diversity of opinion amongst our members, we believe that it is inexpedient to take action on the subject in this National Labor Congress."

~~Whether~~ Senator Borah has strength ... and weakness. He is too intelligent a man to be a politician, and his inconsistencies and disappointments arise from the clash of brains and expediency. He is a man who sees clearly the shortcomings of the plutocracy which governs the United States. He wants to fight it with liberal democracy, but political expediency keeps him from daring to espouse democracy. He knows, for instance, that democracy does not function in the South. Yet he has opposed the 15th Amendment; and he'll do nothing to break down rotten boroughs, like Mississippi, where one voter exercises seven times as much power as a voter in Ohio. Borah hates war and violence, yet he dare not oppose the provincialism of the West which fears the League of Nations, or the lawlessness of the South which demands lynching. He knows that the League of Nations, in its attitude toward Italy, has taken the greatest step toward worldwide suppression of war that civilization has made in our day. Yet Borah will not raise a finger to help it. He knows that there is nothing so disgraceful in modern crime as lynching. Yet he finds himself approving Federal interference with the kidnapping of the rich and opposing Federal interference with the lynching of the poor and black.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

The paradox of Borah is evident. You cannot today be a free, brave, intelligent man and play politics. You cannot be a successful politician and take an unequivocable stand for justice and right in all cases. Therefore, your Borahs, like many other men, try to pick and choose their just and righteous causes; ignoring those which touch uninfluential minorities and defending with skill and eloquence those which bring large and powerful crowds. It isn't the worse policy; it is better than the policy of the demagogue who leads the crowd without reference to right and justice; but it is worse, far worse than the leadership which the present crisis in democratic government absolutely demands from its successful leaders.

32-11-85

...

Out of the West comes Landon, talking with the tongue of other years and other places. Spend within your income, decrease taxes, limit government, be sane and sensible. It is all true, all true. But all government must live within its income. The only question is whether that income shall be raised by present taxation or by taxing children and unborn grandchildren. Either of these methods may be right and sane and sensible under certain circumstances. The point is not whether money is spent, but what it is spent for. (if it is spent for you, you pay. If for grandchildren, let them pay.) Shall taxation be small or large? The real question is not a matter of size. It is a matter of necessity. If there is a great job for the government to do, it must be done, and there must be money to pay for it. To complain of the amount of money is simply to complain of the size of the job. Government must be limited. All men want that degree of freedom for thought and action which will make life really worth while. But freedom is curtailed by the absolute necessity of human co-operation for sacrificing human wants. Capital, machinery and regimentation ought to decrease the amount of co-operation and the curtailment of freedom which food, shelter and service demand. The government, therefore, should guard and guide these things. Today it does not, and because it does not, we have more government than we ought to have. But the government that we have is in the hands of the rich, of the corporations and of powers outside organized government. It must be restored to its rightful place. Of all this has Alfred Landon any conception? If so, do you feel he has partly concealed it?

But freedom is limited by the necessity of work for satisfying human wants. That work cannot be simply individual work. It must be regimentation with the aid of machinery, tools and material. Such modern production, transportation and distribution curtails human freedom without doubt, and back of that compulsion is the world wide demand for food, shelter and service. By thoughtful planning, economical effort and reasonable distribution of goods and services, this curtailment of human freedom which modern work calls for, can be reduced to a minimum. Who, then, should guide it? Who should own the capital? Who should control labor? Manifestly, the government and the government alone; and to curtail the function of government does not mean that human freedom is increased, it means simply that the real control of human freedom lies in hidden hands: the hands of the wealthy, the privileged, the monopolists; and not in the hands of a government in which the governed have voice. Of all this, it does not seem to us that Alfred Landon has any conception. If so, he has carefully concealed it.

32-11-86

...

No people in the world have the interest in the Jewish problem of Germany that the American Negroes have. It reorientates the whole attitude of the modern world toward race problems. We had, with excess of zeal and effort, tried to make the Negro problem in America a race problem based on biology. We had tried to bring scientific psychology to prove that Negroes were inferior and therefore had no right to protest against discrimination. But here comes an exhibition of race hatred in one of the leading countries of European civilization. This again based on the same biological and psychological foundation which scientists sought to use in blacklisting the Negro. It gives the same manifestations of sex jealousy, murder and theft, public insult, discrimination in education and social ostracism, with which we Negroes are so familiar in America, that they almost seem normal. If this thing could happen to Negroes, America could easily excuse and explain it; but if it can happen to German Jews, there is no reason in the world why under certain circumstances it should not happen to the Irish, to the Latins, to the Slavs, and indeed, to any group of human beings ~~against~~ over whom a temporary or imagined majority hold sway and power. No such affront to the human conscience and to ~~the~~ modern reason has happened in our day.

Feb. 29, 1936 (3)

The logical alignment of parties in the campaign of 1936 would be as follows: on one side, Al Smith, the millionaires and the Republicans in favor of no Federal interference with slavery, wages or prices or monopoly. On the other side, Roosevelt, Norman Thomas and Communists in favor of amending the Constitution so as to put the Federal Government in charge of the right to vote, the right to end unemployment, and the planning of industry for the abolition of private profit and the increase in public welfare. There isn't the slightest chance in the world of any American getting the opportunity to vote in such a clear-cut contest.

One does not know whether to weep or cry at the sight of Eugene Talmadge euloging Abraham Lincoln.

The Pacific and Atlantic oceans were wed through the Panama Canal, the Mediterranean and the Indian Oceans join through the Suez Canal; the Black and the Caspian Seas may make the canal that is about to mingle their waters as fateful for history as Suez and Panama.

Russia would welcome an autonomous Negro state within her boundaries. Are there no Negroes young or old who have the guts to leave America?

This matter of taxes touches everybody. As it is today, one must remember that neither Morgan, Mellon nor Rascob pay proportionately as heavy a tax as a $25 a week stenographer.

The snows of yesteryear have come out of the memories of the past and blanketed the United States from Maine to Georgia and the white sheet from Heaven was blackened the moment it touched the United States.

Ruyard Kipling was not responsible for the white man's burden. His guilt was far greater than that. He made white men think that it was a divine and patriotic duty to smash their heels in colored faces.

The legislators are again at work exterminating crime. Men are poor, discouraged, unemployed. The result is crime, just as sure as the result of gravitation is falling. They who proceed to cure crime by hanging people out of hand and sentencing them to ninety-nine years in jail. It gives them less chance to defend themselves or explain. It is an ancient game.

•••

What does the African native think of Italian aggression in Ethiopia? I have a letter from East Africa which is of interest.

"With regard to the Italio-Ethiopian quarrel, I must say here and now that the unshakable belief prevailing among the natives is that the international treaties are mere scraps of papers which one nation can violate without regard to the interests of the other. In addition to this there is a general strong feeling among the Africans of Uganda against the base aggressive act of the fascist leader of Italian imperialism, and consequently most of them are ready to enlist themselves as volunteers in the cause of Abyssinia. A mass meeting was held on Saturday October 12th with the object in view of collecting some money in aid of the Abyssinian Branchof Red Cross; and also a meeting with a similar object in view was recently held by the Africans of Kenya; and I am glad to have to inform you that no attempts were made in both cases to prevent the meetings from being held."

37-11-13

•••

The theory of colonial imperialism succeeded the African slave trade. The slave trade transported labor to rich land to raise raw material. That raw material was manufactured to the great profit of the leading commercial nations of the world. This trade and labor was so manipulated that the slaves themselves did not actually land in any but the areas where slavery was established. The goods to buy them, on the other hand, went out from Boston and Liverpool; and the raw materials which they raised went to New York and London. The slaves went to South America, the West Indies, and the Southern United States. But both the cruelty and the cost of this precedure aroused on the one hand the philanthropy of men like Wilberforce, and on the other, the attention of statesmen like Palmerston.

Very gradually during the nineteenth century a new policy came into being. Under this policy, colonies were no longer regarded as places where white men settled and lived, but rather as areas where colored men lived under the dominationof white men; and that domination was not primarily political, but economic. Instead of transporting labor, capital was transported. The raw material was raised not in new foreign lands, but in these old areas. This material was transported to the manufacturing and commercial countries and there transmuted into gold.

The result was a double saving: first in human sentiment and sympathy. There was no open and bloody slave trade. The serfs could be whipped and cowed and murdered at home; and secondly, the cost of transporting labor was saved and there was only the cost of transporting the raw material. Thus empire which had been political rule, became empire which was investment; and the philanthropic plan of carrying civilization to the natives became one and the same as the commercial plan of making native labor pay.

Elaborate propaganda showed the perfect fitness of this arrangement. Lazy and inferior races were made thrifty workers, increasing their own well-being and the income of the whites; and if the increase of well-being among the natives was not always clear and certain, what would you? Was it not better to die working for imperial industry than die sleeping in the shade? To understand the present enterprise of Italy, one must remember that this colonial theory of dominance of the colored races is the thing in the minds of Italians today.

The first breakdown of the theory of colonial enterprise came in the revelations of astonishing and terrible oppression and degradation under colonial rule. One remembers the indictment against the Belgian Congo.

•••

In 1930, out of every thousand Negro breadwinners, that is, persons ten years of age and over who are at work, and not including housewives, there were six working in forests and catching fish, seven were clerks of various sorts, nine were in the public service of cities, states and United States, fourteen were miners, twenty-five in the various professions, thirty-three were in business, as owners and helpers, seventy-two were in transportation of various sorts, one hundred and eighty-six were skilled and semi-skilled artisans, two hundred and eighty-seven were servants, and three hundred and sixty-one farmers. In all of these lines, Negroes occupy the lower ranks; that is, most of them are farm laborers rather than owners; laborers rather than skilled workers.

Historically great changes in Negro occupation have taken place which can be fairly well measured since 1890. The increase, for instance, of Negroes in manufacturing and mechanical industries, in trade and transportation, in public service and professional service, has followed and sometimes gone faster than the increase in Negro population. On the other hand, the proportion of Negroes in farming has declined. Those in forestry and fishing has varied. The proportion of miners increased rapidly up to 1920 and then more slowly. It is in domestic and personal service that we see the strain and change. The increase from 1890-1900; the decrease from 1900-1920; the great increase during the depression.

The plight of Negro artisans has varied. The number of blacksmiths has decreased, from over five to less than four percent, between 1890-1930. The masons increased rapidly to 1910 and then decreased until in 1930; they are but a little more in number and proportion now than in 1890. The plasterers andcement finishers have increased considerably in number and proportion. The cabinet makers are few. The carpenters have increased in number, but form about the same proportion of all carpenters. The electricians are few in number, but have increased in proportion. The machinists have increased in number and proportion. The painters have greatly increased. The photographers have increased a little. The plumbers and compositors have increased slowly. The tailors have increased, the cobblers a little, the paperhangers a good deal.

The chief losses among Negro artisans was the great decrease among seamstresses and dressmakers owing to the wholesale method of manufacture today. The non-locomotive firemen are decreasing. These are the facts that must be faced in any attempt to increase work and decent income among American Negroes.

We may get some idea of the status of the Negroes in these various pursuits by considering what the position of the Negro is in his industry. In 1930, for instance, of the 5,500,000 Negro breadwinners, a little less than 1,000,000 were in the position of proprietors, manufacturers and supervisors, while over 4,500,000 were hired laborers in various ~~trades~~ kind. There were, for instance, 875,329 farm owners and ~~manufacturers~~ managers. There were 987 in the upper ranks of the public service. There were 26,884 proprietors of laundries. Two thousand seven hundred and forty-seven were builders and contractors and 1,916 ran their own trucks and cabs. Then came the following owners; 185 automobile and ~~labor~~ repair shops, 119 blasting furnaces, 235 printers and publishers, 891 garages, 885 railway foremen and overseers, 270 bankers and brokers, 511 insurance officials, 470 automobile manufacturing foremen and officials, and 31,479 ~~shop men~~ proprietors of retail business.

These are the basic facts upon which any attempt to improve the position of the Negro in industry must start.

The attitude of American Negroes and other colored groups toward Japan is of lively interest. On the one hand, they are subjected to a barrage of propaganda emanating [redacted] from suspicious sources. There are good and plain reasons as to why white Europe and white America are disgusted with the attitude of Japan and with her pan-Asiatic program. The reasons are that Asia, as a field for exploitation, as a source of inordinate profit, and as a playground [redacted] for white people, is gradually but with deep determination being withdrawn. This is partly due to the continuing Chinese revolution, but for all practical purposes, it is due today to the power and hegemony of the Japanese empire. What Japan has done is to take the European imperialism and use it in Asia against Europe. This is of course contrary to all the rules of the game. Imperialism is great and benevolent only when it is conducted by Great Britain or France or the United States of America. In the hands of Japan, it becomes an awful and menancing thing and yet we can only believe in the sincerity of the white nations who criticize Japan when they themselves disgorge the colonial loot on which they are today continuing to fatten. If Great Britain does not like the advance of Japan into Manchuria and Mongolia, she might show her change of heart by giving up her grip on Nigeria and Kenya. If the virtual exclusion of European and American merchants from large areas of China does not please them, they might show their conversion by opening up empty Australia and New Zealand to colored emigration. Of course this failure of white imperialism to change its attitude does not at all excuse Japan for extending Colonial imperialism, if that is what she intends to do. Personally, I do not believe it. In the first place, the Chinese and the Japanese are cousins, and there cannot in all probability be between them anything of the bitter race hatred that exists between the black and white subjects of the British empire. There is in Japan today a leven of economic reform which must in time bankrupt and change the older imperialism learned from the West. In the meantime, the thing that must impress us as colored people is that the chances for economic reform under Japanese imperialism is infinitely greater than any chances which colored people would have under the most advanced white leaders of Western reform.

(4)

The American paradox is delightfully illiterate in the speed of automobiles. An automobile going fifty miles an hour is potential death. Manufacturers are making cars that are doing seventy miles an hour. Legislators are making laws to curb carelessness in driving these engines of death.

We have rediscovered the Leisure Class. Without the Leisure Class, we can have no civilization. Without the Leisure Class most human beings can have neither leisure, food, clothes nor shelter. Isn't civilization costing some of us a bit too much, dear Mr. Morgan?

The Knights of Labor was an industrial union. The I.W.W. was an industrial union. They were both killed by capitalism and monopoly called the American Federation of Labor. They are now looking toward a resurrection through the miners. May the miners dig deep.

The New Deal is not dead and can never die so long as ten million people are unemployed, so long as there are not sufficient houses for the mass of folk to live in, so long as the farmer is bankrupt and so long as the states cannot crush monopoly and the Supreme Court does not allow the Federal Government to attack it.

The voice of Marian Anderson has again through the power of art broken down the Color Line. Breaches in this wall are few and far between, but those which come show what is possible.

The whole effort of the British Empire was put forth to make the funeral of George the V. a symbol of national unity and power. It came at a time when England is threatened by failing national resources, by arming enemies and by colonial revolt. It had great success, but it was not successful.

One cannot wholly escape the artificiality of sanctions. The war between Italy and Ethiopia could be stopped in a day by closing the Suez Canal. It is not stopped because the League of Nations has other interests beyond the integrity of this last land of the blacks.

The manufacture and sale of machines for wholesale murder is the most awful industry on earth and centers in England, America, Germany and France. The men who control it know neither nation or loyalty; their one object is profit, and because of the power of.

that profit, their activities cannot be curbed, even if they overthrow the world.

The Supreme Court must have had a [redacted] with the TVA. States cannot control the manufacture and sale of electricity because the business is interstate. The Federal Government cannot control the manufacture and sale of electricity because it is interstate. This is the Chinese puzzle that upsets the greatest tribunal in the nation and yet the nation [redacted] it seriously.

The United States must not interfere with private business, says Private Business ponderously. Good, now down with the United States Post Office. This tool of the New Deal has no business to deprive express companies of the legitimate manufacture of millionaires.

I have for many years, since the little conference held in my office about 1914, been emphasizing and insisting upon consumers co-operation for Negroes. Many abortive movements and a few successful ones have come in these lines. But the main difficulty is a natural but fatal misunderstanding of the whole movement. Most people consider co-operation by consumers or producers as a new method of making money. They emphasize the profit that may be made by buying in large quantities and by saving in the expense of rent, advertising and salaries. There are circumstances where such savings can be made, but in the face of the new chain store competition, and the high pressured salesmenship of today, these [redacted] are small, unless they are preceded by widespread and intensive education. This education must lay down a basic proposition, and that is, that while the object of industry today for the most part is the private profit of those who invest capital and buy labor, the object of co-operation in the larger sense in which I conceive it, is the welfare of the consumer. Now the consumer is the key man for the reorganization of industry. If the political ballot has decreased in significance and power, and it certainly has, the consumer has increased in power and significance and the ballot of the consumer is his power of purchase. That power of purchase is partly taken away today, [redacted] by advertising ballyhoo in the newspapers, over the radio, in the magazines, on the billboards, in the shop windows. The ordinary person who buys, buys with neither intelligence nor knowledge. In addition to this, his choice for buying is sometimes deliberately limited. Vast numbers must buy the company store's goods at the quantity is bad, if not actually injurious and whose prices are abnormally and inexcuseably high. The average purchaser, however, has still a wide choice as to where he will buy, and if a movement was started to educate the Negro purchaser as to what he ought to buy and where he can find it, and where he can find it at the right price, Negro buyers could begin to revolutionize their industrial purchase. When I say the right price, I do not mean the cheapest price. It is possible today by sweatshop methods and starvation to put sewed and embroidered material into 5¢ and 10¢ stores whose manufacture involves disease and starvation and which never ought to be ought at any price by decent people. It would be impossible for any consumers production enterprise to duplicate these goods and sell them at the price they can be bought. Here, then, is a place where consumers must be taught that their purchase is a ballot and that their ballot can be cast not simply for cheapness, but for decency and justice. The colored people of the United States, or at least hundreds of thousands of their more intelligent groups, could organize themselves and pledge themselves to buy certain goods, manufactured by Negro labor and by Negro labor which was properly paid and worked under decent conditions. They could form in some lines of endeavor by such a process, a closed economic circle which would insure on the one hand decent goods at a reasonable price; on the other hand, the employment of Negroes.

To this, it is often objected that any such economic organization on the part of Negroes would bring reprisals from the whites, the dismissing of Negroes already employed; the intensification of race feeling and other matters in that line. On the other hand, it must be remembered that this retaliation has already taken place, that already you have people refused employment, not because they are unsuitable, but because they are black, and that counter-organization is not a gesture of [redacted] Offense, it is merely a belated gesture of defense. It would put in the hands of colored groups a weapon for economic bargaining, for bargaining with trade unions, for bargaining with manufacturers, and on the other hand, it would educate American Negroes in that new conception of industry which means the abolition of private profit and the price system and the substitution, therefore, of manufacture for use and income according to effort and not because of privilege and monopoly. However, any successful attempt to do this sort of thing involves careful economic planning, including education on a wide scale and guided by a Negro brain trust. Economic planning is the next step in this world. It has got to be taken. It is being taken by white folks, but our part in that planning can be done by no one but ourselves.

March 14, 1936

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

Mighty is civilization and invincible is man, until it rains. Then they are suddenly little, wet, crawling worms.

•••

Dr. Mary R. Beard is attacking writers and speakers for neglecting women in history. And we are attacking Dr. Mary Beard for neglecting the Negro in history. We paraphrase her word: "But Beard simply does not know the history of Negroes, or that Negroes have any history to be known."

•••

We suppose that Mitchell is better than no Congressman at all; but we hate to say it; and we pray the good Lord and the bad Chicago to make us less liars next fall.

•••

We seem to remember that in 1863 the race problem was to be settled by Emancipation; and in 1896 it was to be settled by skilled industry; and then in 1906 it was to be done to death by law and court. In 1925 it was to be exorcized by Art; and in 1930, it was to be mercifully knocked to hell by Communism. And yet today its lusty, lively remains are to be decently interred by Industrial Unionism; while tomorrow--but why worry? It lives and thrives and will live until it dies, not by law, ukase or incantation, but by cold human reason and will.

•••

Father Divine and John Davis have severally met in Congress assembled and yet all is quiet along the Potomac and the government at Washington still lives.

•••

"It can't happen here," writes Sinclair Lewis, and he tells of Jew and Negro, Abolitionist and Scottsboro, underground railway and race hate. Yet there are several black folk who have not yet read his book.

•••

The Supreme Court allows us under the sacred Constitution to tax the nation for the benefit of the Steel Trust, the plateglass blowers and the munition makers; the Aluminum Trust and about 100 other manufacturers; but it will allow no tax for farmers. Millions have trusts but not one cent for mortgages.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

•••

And the world was snow, fleecy blankets of soft white in Boston and Atlanta, in Peoria and Chattanooga. Beneath the snow lay ice, more marvelous by intricate plan and beauty than the maneating diamonds of Johannesburg. And all about the thin air, hovered cruel cold that bit and starved and killed.

33-11-38

Negro and Tarif

•••

The history of the Negro Republican since 1876 falls roughly into six phases:

1. The attempt to reassert the right of the Negro to vote in the South, 1876-1890.

2. The attempt to combat Populism by the industrial training of black labor whose right to work would compensate for legal disfranchisement and caste, 1885-1900.

3. The attempt to reduce the representation of disfranchised Negroes in the party conventions, 1876-1920.

4. The attempt to force white leadership on remaining Negro voters, 1876-1932.

5. The effort to escape the congressional over-representation of the South by enforcing the 14th amendment, 1900-1924.

6. The organization of the new power of the Northern Negro vote, 1918-1932.

In the early Republican conventions, ~~therefore~~, from 1876-1888, Negro leaders were prominent, aggressive and showed much ability. There were, to mention a few, Lynch and Bruce of Mississippi; Pinchback of Louisiana; Smalls, South Carolina and later Pledger in Georgia and Cuney in Texas. Lynch and Cuney were incorruptible and intelligent. Bruce and Pinchback were politicians ~~neither~~ better nor worse than the whites. Smalls had little education, while Pledger had force and courage, but few scruples. These men represented votes, present or prospective, and if the Negro's suppressed ballot were ever restored, as then seemed inevitable, it would not only be needed by the candidates for nomination to the presidency, but also to hold the Republican party in power.

The efforts of these Negro leaders went toward restoring the Negro vote by nominating candidates who would enforce the law. In 1880, they opposed Blaine who had partially emasculated the 14th Amendment by basing representation on population rather than voters. Grant and Sherman were favorite Negro candidates, but the dark horse Garfield was nominated.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

In the convention of 1884 which nominated Blaine, the best Negro leaders united with the opposition. The important movement was the rise of the younger men, Theodore Roosevelt and Henry Cabot Lodge, supported by the reformer, George William Curtis; and it was significant that these men united with the most conspicuous colored leader, John R. Lynch, to defeat Blaine. Lynch beat the carpetbagger, Clayton of Arkansas, for the temporary chairmanship of the Republican convention and thus in many respects the Negro reached his political highwater mark in national politics.

In this convention the movement to reduce the representation of the South in Republican conventions found voice, but Lynch was powerful enough to squelch it by reiterating the Negro demand for a free and fair vote as the only permanent remedy for the dwindling constituency of Negro delegates.

His contention was emphasized by the defeat of Blaine and the return of the Democrats to power for the first time since the Civil War, by a narrow majority. The Negroes were greatly alarmed and in the five years, 1884-1888, southern lawlessness in the form of lynching reached a high-water mark with 797 victims. Labor unrest and industrial expansion marked this era, with vast immigration of cheap foreign labor, expansion of the West and industrialization of the South. The political control of this tremendous economic empire hung in the balance to be settled by a few thousand votes. A restored Negro vote meant the triumph of the Republican party with an industrial imperialism sweeping the land North, South and West. The prize was worth supreme effort and a large campaign fund handled by Platt and Quay elected Harrison president in 1888 and insured a higher tariff and unhampered corporations. Immediately steps to restore the Negro vote were begun.

Harrison suggested in his inaugural a Federal election law in Congressional districts. A bill was reported in 1890 and defended by Henry Cabot Lodge. As Lodge said: "The bill was to protect the Negro in his rights as a citizen of the United States and it was a cowardly government if it did not do this." McKinley declared: "The people of the North will not continue to permit two votes in the South to count as much as five votes in the North." The bill passed 155-141, but the Senate held it up and gave precedence to the McKinley Tariff bill.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

This action was deeply significant. Senator Cameron of Pennsylvania explained:

"Northern capital has been flowing into the South in great quantities. Manufacturing establishments have been created and are now in full operation and a community of commercial interests is fast obliterating sectional lines." Quay had the bill postponed and the Federal election bill was sidetracked in favor of the McKinley Tariff.

32-11-90

The Bible Belt ...

A captain of firemen in the City of Atlanta loved another woman and his wife killed her and was duely acquitted by the jury. They then both went before the Board of the Fire Department and pled for Mayfield to retain his job. The Constitution reports his words: "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone," Mayfield shouted at the board. "I know and realize that I am facing a fight for my job. I hope this board will help me and help that woman (pointing to his wife) who has suffered so much, and help us help our son. I am sorry for this thing. I've given the best I had to the Atlanta fire department for the past 21 years.

"If you fire me for this, you might as well fire the whole department from the chief down, and you could include the police department and city heads.

"Friends, I thank you tonight for this opportunity to talk to you. I have prayed throughout long nights for forgiveness and I have been forgiven. I'm proud to say that I am going back into the ministry."

German Colonies ...

Two words of vital interest to the Negro race have lately been said in Europe. The one was the word of Dr. Joseph Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda, who demands the return of the German African colonies, divided between France and England after the World War. The former Governor of German East Africa is head of the German Colonial Society and has scheduled 541 lectures in universities and high schools in Germany and Austria on the subject. During the last year, forty-one doctor's theses in Germany have been written on the subject of colonies. Hitler, like Bismark, was once provincial and cared nothing for German colonial advancement. But now apparently he has changed and stands back of the demand for colonies. With him stands the powerful and farsighted Minister of Economics, Dr. Schacht and a special administrator has been appointed to push this movement.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

The second word is the evident rapprochement between Germany, Italy and Austria, with Hungary in the background, toward a new Triple Alliance which would put Germany back of Italy's determination to conquer Ethiopia and make Germany acquiesce, at least temporarily, in Austria's independence. All these things have enormous repercussions for American Negroes and Negroes the world over. They foreshadow a new alignment of European power, a new fight to dominate colored labor and monopolize raw materials and new wars. We will do well to watch with bated breath these developments in Europe.

[March 21, 1936]

THE FORUM OF FACT AND OPINION

PROLEGOMENA

The world's most careful thought today is being given to our economic situation. It is the time, therefore, when we must read books.

•••

There is a little book by James Peter Warbasse, "What Is Cooperation?" which was published by the Vanguard Press in December, 1927.

•••

In proportion to the population, the number of Negroes on relief and the number of those unemployed exceeds that of any group in the United States. We cannot explain this today by shiftlessness, carelessness or unwillingness to work. It indicates more than any other single fact, the breaking down in America of the old assumption that everybody who wants to work can, and everybody who wants to be rich may.

•••

No formula of social change is going to surplant the necessity of thought, study and planning as a way of economic salvation for us.

•••

Not by Might nor by Power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord. Not by Revolution, nor by Murder, but by Work, Thrift and Sacrifice, says the plain common sense of 1936 to black folk.

•••

THE SEARCH FOR EMPLOYMENT

A little town in Indiana is filled with industries. They make glass jars; they manipulate iron; they manufacture machinery and chemicals. In that town, numbers of Negroes have congregated, tempted by the chance of work and good wage. Some of them are getting work; a few are receiving good wages. There are exceptional cases of skilled laborers and foremen. There are other cases where the wages paid are very low. There are still further cases where the word of a white foreman or the attitude of a stockholder, or the custom of a corporation, denies Negroes all employment. The point of this whole matter is how far employment now depends on personal bias and how precarious the job is when once it's gotten. There can be no intelligent, independent vote among such employees. There can be no successful unions or strikes for higher wages and better conditions. There can be no organized agitation for manhood rights. The menace of losing the job is over every dark man and over many whites.

32-11-31

INDUSTRY IN THE SOUTH

Few people realize how fast the South has become industrialized. Most cotton goods are made today in the South and not in New England. Most of the machinery for cotton mills is in the South and not in the North. Alabama is destined to be the great export region for steel products. The Southern states are destined to become the most important section for the location of industries which use wood and other forest products. The Southern power province, comprising eight states, is the fastest growing center for the production of electric power in the United States, and four Southern states today produce a greater proportion of total power by water than any other states east of the Rocky Mountains. The chemical industries of the South produce one-fourth of the chemical products of the United States and are growing faster than elsewhere in the land. The story could be repeated for other industries and developments and the point of this matter is: that in these new and growing industries, Negroes either have no place at all as laborers or are working for the lowest wages with the most insecure tenure. One need not add agriculture to this. The New Deal has done nothing for the tenant-farmer and sharecropper. The Newest Deal plans less. Yet there are in the United States one million Negro farm laborers and probably one-half million tenants. What are we going to do about this? Suck our thumbs? Complain? Bring a civil rights case in the courts or save one, poor, black devil from lynching? The inadequacy of such a program is more than painful. It is ~~diabetic~~.

THE WAY OUT

The one way out for American Negroes is consumers' co-operation. A wise laboring man, William King of Brighton, said in England in 1799:

"You are poor because you work for others and not for yourselves. Though you have not capital with which to employ yourselves, you have purchasing power. Combine to purchase. Let the economies of combined buying accumulate as capital."

As a result of listening to this word, there were in England in 1934, seven million consumers' co-operatives doing $1,750,000,000 in annual trade on a billion dollar capital. They have ten thousand retail shops and they deal in soap, bread, coal, meat, gold, tea and other things. Is it possible or even probable that twelve million American Negroes cannot go and do likewise?

THE OBSTACLES

There are formidable obstacles: the competition of chain stores and huge aggregations of capital; our own lack of business training; our inherited doubt about our own abilities and fear to trust each other; the necessity of starting an enterprise like this on a wide scale with supporting education and propaganda; the necessity of quickly accumulating such reserves as will enable the consumers co-operative quickly to support itself with a corresponding producers' co-operative, as competition increases and as deliberate sabotage begins; the difficulties of expanding consumers and producers co-operation so as to include enough basic industry to make survival possible. All this shows the enormous obstacles. But what of that? There was once a pig that climbed a tree. It had to. We have got to. Our survival in America as workers, as citizens, as men, depend upon this economic segregation.

NEGRO ART

Maurice Delafosse says of the African small sculptures in stone, wood, ivory, or modeling in wax, clay or metals. "In these arts, often called minor ones, the Negroes have shown themselves and still show themselves to be ingenious workers, powerfully helped by a high inspiration, a sharp sense of detail and a very profound conception of the form to be given to their ideas. It is to be remarked that their productions in this domain are generally so much the more original and of surer taste the more we have to do with populations that have been little influenced by exterior forces, whether of Oriental or European origin. In this category, Negro art appears the more perfect in the measure that it is more purely Negro. Indeed it cannot be contested that the funeral statuettes, the sacred masks, the carved seats, the vases, the knick-knacks of bronze or copper, the gold and silver jewelry made in the northern region of the Sudan and in the Europeanized centers are very inferior to the productions of the same order of the tribes of Guinea, of Dahomey, of the Congo and of the Great Lakes.

"On the other hand, it is sufficient to examine a collection of the bronzes of Benin in order to be convinded that the inspiration of the artists was frankly Negro: in the manner of arranging the characters, in designing or modeling the contours and the proportions, as well as in the whole of the composition and the choice of the most ordinary motifs of decoration, one finds the same technique, the same conventional stylization, the same conceptions of the picture, the same ornamental processes as in the whole of the productions of Negro art of all times and all parts of tropical Africa. The metal coverings of the doors of the old city of Benin present to us, with more taste and finish, the same scenes as the coffin tops of the Ivory Coast and the Gold Coast and the high-reliefs on the walls of the royal palace of Abomey; the bronze statuettes and masks coming from early Benin are exactly in the same style, although of markedly superior execution, as the majority of wooden statuettes and masks of the Sudan, Guinea, the Congo, and especially the region of the Great Lakes. The four-petaled rose and the disk of turning flames, which ornaments the spaces having no figures in relief, on the door-plates and the metal vases in collections from Benin are found again in identical form in the objects made at different epochs in the various countries of Negro Africa. The ancient art of Benin is only an episode, to be sure the most remarkable, in the history of Negro art."

33-11-33

March 28, 1936

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

Sometimes one feels like sitting down and sighing: "Dear, dear old world. What can the matter be? Is it the mumps, or the measles, or our ancient friend Total Depravity?.

•••

We are having today government by histrionics, mouthing, strutting leaders filled with fustian and full of salutes. One has to admit it is damned good acting with carefully selected scenery and excellent footlights. Let the mimic stage look out for its laurels.

•••

Also, we have government by assassination; a very old and popular form of securing national agreement. In the case of Japan, however, we are left singularly in the dark. Who killed? Who died? Who won? And what is the new government that sits at the table of blood?

•••

And so twenty years after, Germany trots back into the ring, armed cap-a-pie, and says to Mr. France, England, smiling sweetly the while: "Say buddy, got a cigarette? And by the by, how about that purse you lifted of-a me sometime since?"

"Purse? What purse?"

"Yes they did," yelled Italy, turning about snapping its big jaw and kicking the negus in the pants. "They took it and they didn't divide with me."

And then the Purse speaks up. The Purse opens its wide, black mouth, full of bloody gold and oil, and rubber and spice; and the Purse says nothing; for Pan-Africa as yet has taught it no words. But the time will come; and then the white thieves; those that have and have not, will coming to listen.

CO-OPERATION

There has been published this year by the Yale University Press a book by Marquis W. Childs called "Sweden, the Middle Way". It is a book on consumers' co-operation and seeks to show what has been accomplished by one modern country through this means. I venture to quote the advertisement on the folder:

> "The economic events of the last years have led a good many people to the conclusion that the ultimate choice of our ways of living together in the modern world is a choice between two poles--collectivism and individualism. They have forgotten that for a long time the countries of the Scandinavian peninsula have been living under a compromise system that perhaps more than any other lets man indulge himself in life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Sweden, for example, has muzzled the rapacity of big business, has provided excellent cheap housing, decent living conditions for the working population, and first-rate products--chiefly by organizing the consumer. Utility rates there are the lowest in Europe, and utility services are provided for by a combination of government and private ownership that exploits no one. And all these obvious benefits are part of an intellectual renaissance. In this book Mr. Childs gives an excellent and complete picture of the adjustments that the Scandinavian countries have made to the machine age. He show how a people can solve their economic problems by an exercise of common sense and reason as well as by revolt and terror.

37-11-71

I still believe that the end of economic reform is socialism, or as some would call it, "collectivism"; but I also just as firmly believe that the next step toward this is consumers' co-operation and that for the American Negro it is the only step.

JOHN HOPE

The death of John Hope removed an unusual figure from American life. He was an American of Scotch descent, who had somewhere among his ancestors, a black man. From his physical appearance, no one would have ever suspected this. Biologically, he belonged distinctly to the typical white American race; but by education and social heritage, he was just as typically a Negro. There was no inner soul dissension about this. He was at once white and glad to be black.

He was born in Georgia. He came up among the well-to-do mulattoes and whites of Augusta. Thoroughly and completely, he identified himself with colored people and despite of soul-searing experiences, came through life unusually sweet of temper and unspoiled. This aspect of his character and his patent honesty of purpose, particularly impressed white folk.

Negroes liked him because they felt him so thoroughly a part of them; and yet he was shy and unselfish and with a fine sense of humor. No situation was so tragic and cruel, but what he easily saw its essential comedy. He accomplished an unusual work by any standard. Graduating from a New England private school and from Brown, becoming a teacher and a college president, and then the president of the first equipped graduate school of university grade that Negroes had had, he died attempting to fix this school in its difficult relations to scholarship and to the races in the South.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

His methods were enough to bring widespread acclaim. First of all, men recognised his fine simplicity, his unselfish motives, and his delicate, almost painful fear of injustice. He was always desperately afraid that he was not doing quite the right thing by somebody; it led to hesitations and retreats as well as firm advances in his life work. He often said that he ruled by conference, and perhaps conference was his strongest and most successful point. Even his speeches had the nature of personal conference rather than exortation or information. He was at his best when he could sit down about a table with three or six or twenty men of differing temperaments and different beliefs and divergent aims, and then out of this conference and further conferences, interspersed with little, casual, personal conversations, and perhaps a written note or so, and over all Time, Time, Time--while men waited and fretted--at last there came a wide basis of agreement. One seldom thought of giving John Hope credit for this agreement. Each one who agreed believed, and quite rightly, that the basic thought was his.

This method of government and advance and organization did not make for the strong, bold and spectacular, but it did make for accomplishment; it did make for slow, sure advance, and in a world so torn by hate and difference and misunderstanding as that in which John Hope lived, it was perhaps the only sure way. Thus in many respects, his work was more permanently successful than the work of Booker T. Washington; and certainly it outdistanced all the intransigence of Monroe Trotter.

In his premature dying, John Hope, above everything, left friends; not a great number, but a few persons who feel that with him, honest and unselfish devotion to duty has lost a beautiful exemplar; and that they have lost something inexpressably near and absolutely irreplaceable.

ABOUT CONGRESSES

It is practically impossible for any number of earnest and fairly intelligent people to come together in a meeting, large or small, without accomplishing some good. Especially is this true with a race such as ours largely scattered and divided and apt to become locally provincialised, unless through some effort they get personally acquainted in such meetings.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

The recent congress in Chicago is a case in point. The practically unanimous report is that the participants were in earnest and many of the speeches worth listening to. Doubtless in the recent meeting in New York under Father Divine, despite the incoherent and impossible resolutions, there must have been a great deal of inspiration and valuable contacts. Certainly in the older and huge congresses of Marcus Garvey, immense enthusiasm and wide acquaintanceship ensued.

Nevertheless, we must not forget that with us congresses are acting as a sort of soporific or narcotic. We are aroused by certain wrongs and oppressions or by the continuance of a series of these things and we feel that something must be done. And then, we are too apt to think that we have done something important and definitive when we hold a meeting.

A meeting can only be effective as it clarifies ideas or leads to action, either to individual action or to organisation. Meetings, then, for such clarification of ideas are always in order. Within reason, there can scarcely be too many of them. The only logical check is their cost and we Negroes are apt to minimise the cost of our traveling to and fro in this wide country. Action, on the other hand, calls for grave consideration. Individual action may be stimulated by meetings or by personal thought and study. Group action calls for long and serious effort and should not be undertaken lightly or by efforts which merely multiply our organisations without increasing their effectiveness or filling unoccupied fields.

There is, however, a sort of Congress which the American Negroes have practically never held; and that is a representative assembly which sends delegates empowered by their election, to speak authoritatively for the great mass of Negroes. The General Conference of the African Methodist Church perhaps comes nearest this, but its main business is pretty straitly limited to religious and church matters. The Baptist Conventions do not consist of regularly elected delegates, although they do represent a wide number of powerful local churches.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

When John Davis proposed a Congress to carry out the action of his committee in criticising and opposing the New Deal, he gave me the impression of having in mind such a representative assembly, and I opposed it because I did not think we were ready for the cost and trouble which it involved. Once in the United States, the colored people of the State of Louisiana held a real election and sent a delegate to Congress. It was a most important and fateful move and it started the astonishing career of Henry Clay Warmoth. To organize today a National Negro Congress with delegates distributed by states and counties according to the Negro population, and duly elected, to bring such delegates together and let them deliberate and take action, would be a tremendous undertaking, both in money and in effort. Sooner or later it must be done, and it ought to be done.

However, before such Congress takes place, a series of carefully thought out plans must be prepared so that the Congress will have before it a chance to decide on certain primary and simple matters and not be plunged into the midst of that whole conglomeration of puzzling facts, doubts and prejudices which we call the Negro problem. The planning, therefore, of such a congress should engage the best talent of the race for a long time.

There have been Negro meetings which had something of a representative character; the Syracuse Conventions of 1854 and of 1864, the earlier Philadelphia conventions, the later labor conventions at Baltimore, Washington and New Orleans, and nearer our day, some of the earlier meetings of the African American Council. Clear thinking, therefore, and thoughtful planning for future Negro congresses is necessary lest we lull ourselves to sleep simply by calling a meeting in a certain city and thinking we have held a congress of American Negroes. The usual result of such a meeting, outside of its value in personal relationships, is a coming together of local people, some from interest and some from curiosity, and some because they have nothing else to do, with a fringe of visitors from out of town. In this lopsided convention, little of lasting value can be decided or done.

April 4, 1936

FOR THE COURIER

Now in the Golgotha of Ethiopia is the time for Pan-Africa to begin the girding up of its loins and moving toward understanding and co-operation among colored folk of Negro descent. Liberia is still in dire danger, and we sit and scold.

•••

You can't fight the man who fences his backyard in defiance of necessity and beauty, but you can give Hitler a fine chance for fume and fury if you magnify the incident and get excited over the Rhineland. The real and only excitement due is the horror of universal rearming and world murder.

•••

The prospective Republican candidates so far are a sorry set. Borah has always kow-towed to the bourbon South and thinks of America as an island in an endless sea. Landon is Hearst and the ghost of Coolidge; Knox is capitalistic reaction, and he helped kick Negroes out of the Bull Moose.

•••

There is only one just method of taxation and that is the sharply graduated income tax with small demands on the poor, heavy demands on the well-to-do, and heaviest exactions from the very rich. All sales taxes, retail licenses, processing taxes and tariff imposts are in the end taxes on poverty.

•••

There is only one unionism in the United States today deserving respect, and that is industrial unionism. The object of craft unionism is and always has been a monopoly of skill, class and race, working hand in hand with the exploiters to grind down common labor. This the American Federation always was and always will be.

•••

If you would read or write the history of Spain, begin with the Inquisition and the ruthless murder and expulsion of the Jews. The depths of poverty, monopoly and superstition to which this plunged one of the noblest lands of the world is now history. Church, society and wealth are fighting still to keep down the poor, ignorant and unfortunate. The results will long be anarchy, unrest and murder. ~~Facilis, Descensus, Avernus~~ Facilis descensus Averno!,

FOR THE COURIER

•••

DUTCH INDIA

There is a vast colored nation of which most American Negroes are absolutely ignorant. Here lives a population of sixty million people. They are yellow, brown and black. Their country extends three thousand miles and is three times the size of Germany and in much of this land the density of the population reaches from one to two thousand persons for each square mile. The country raises rice, rubber, tea and coffee, and the whole land forms a rich, complex of races, religions, languages, customs, art and produce.

23-11-24

Of this Dutch India one may read with intense interest the little book by Edwin Embree, Margaret Simon and Bryant Mumford, published by the University of Chicago Press in 1934. The material for this book was gathered by a grant from the Rosenwald Fund and the resulting little volume has been beautifully printed and attractively illustrated.

Much of this great island kingdom which extends from Asia to Australia is known under the name of its various islands, Sumatra and Java, Borneo and New Guinea, the Spice Islands, and the Greater and Lesser Sundas. These sixty million brown people belong to white and European Holland, the Kingdom of the Netherlands, with a population of only seven and one-half million! It is an extraordinary case of that dominance of the white over a darker world which has gradually grown up in the last two centuries.

All Europe has from time to time fought for these islands. The influence of China, India and the Islam has penetrated them. Then came Portugal in 1521 and Spain, and finally, the Dutch and the Dutch East India Company. The Napoleonic wars transferred the islands to England, but they were returned to Holland in 1814 and since then, these islands have been administered by Dutch officials and vast profits from their exploitation have poured into Holland.

FOR THE COURIER

But Island India has been governed by canny care and forethought. It had to be. Holland had no armies and navies sufficient to govern by force alone. The government, therefore, has been liberalised to a considerable extent and its success has been great. First of all, the Color Line has been mimimized and drawn in between the Dutch officials and the people of mixed blood and of full blood; but on the other hand, between the people of full blood and those of mixed blood, together with the Dutch officials; or in other words, the mulattoes in Island India are counted as white. But this does not mean that the natives become entirely a subordinate caste. On the contrary, their opportunity, at least in theory, is as broad as that for anyone. A school system has been established and two million children in twenty-one thousand schools under five thousand white and forty-two thousand colored teachers. And this education is carried on at an annual cost to the Colonial government of $22,000,000 a year.

But after all, this does not spell perfection. There ought to be at least ten or fifteen million children in school. The health of the population is poor and exploitation for commercial profit is still a dominant idea. Amelioration may, however, come by the increasing incorporation of natives into the civil service and administration; by the development of native art and science; and above all, by the elevation of racial ideals as against worship of European culture. At all events, here is a colored nation which we must not forget. We do not know them. They do not know us. Yet we have common cause in asserting physical and spiritual independence against white domination.

MAUD CUNEY HARE

Maud Cuney was the bravest woman I have ever known. For those born in adversity, fighting fate becomes a habit, rather than a virtue, but when one is born to the purple and is first in mid-life overwhelmed by successive and relentless blows of every kind of cruelty and adversity, then to keep one's chin up, the eye unflinching, and the courage unfaltering, calls for the sort of soul men seldom see.

And Maud Cuney was a princess born; lithe, imperious and more than merely beautiful. Street cars in Galveston, Texas awaited the wave of her hand; her father was the most powerful politician in the state and the most honest man in the Republican convention of 1892, when not even Mark Hanna's millions could buy his apostacy. Maud's mother was one of the six Dowdie sisters, ravishing beauties, whose white Mississippi father brought them to Texas in 1864. Wealth, power and [illegible], clothed in frank honesty and real musical ability, sent Maud Cuney to the Massachusetts Conservatory of Music in 1890. She reigned in colored Boston, with me among the hosts of young men bowing before her throne. She fought discrimination in her school and conquered it, and when I left for Germany in 1892, Maud Cuney stood on the top rung of happiness and accomplishment, with music dripping from her fingers.

FOR THE COURIER

33-11-28

When years later, I had returned to America, trouble, misfortune and evil had beset her, and it seemed almost that never thereafter for forty long and cruel years did they let her really rest. Her beautiful mother died of tuberculosis; her brave father died a poor man, beaten by the Hanna Republican machine and the bourbon South. Her first husband, quite as old as her father, wanted as little as possible to be bracketed with the colored world, and she left him to his devices. Her one child died suddenly while away from her, and she learned of the death only by telegram. Her music could never be merely popular and made her fight commercialization, in her tight-lipped independence and high emprize.

Her inflexible refusal to compromise with cheapness and prejudice, were the target of sneers, envy and good will. She knew deprivation, insult and lack of understanding, yet she seldom flinched; she seldom faltered; she walked the continuing goddess through life, despising the Color Line; communing with the masters, teaching and believing the best; always planning good and fine enterprises, writing books and articles, lecturing, traveling. Above all, she has left us her books; The life of her beloved father; the Message of the Trees, her still unpublished study of the Creole folk song. She gained and held a few friends; those who came and did not have to be summoned; those who knew and did not have to be told. Fine and gentle friends, who seldom dared affront this suffering soul with offers of either help or sympathy. She was in her extremity of need and ecstasy of pain so magnificently self-sufficient, alert, determined, unafraid, always refusing to be hemmed in and condoned by the provincialism of race. She asked only what she earned and desired; no dole, no charity, no gift.

I am glad that at last she is beyond hurt and pain, simply and completely at rest. She has left only her magnificent courage as legacy to a world always afraid.

...

CO-OPERATIVES

Most co-operatives fail. The co-operative movement persists and increases in value and influence. These two statements are not contradictory, and neither is universally true. If a co-operative movement is once firmly established, the ____ failures are fewer. Sometimes a well-established, general co-operative movement declines, but this is usually due to force from without, as in Germany and Italy.

Why should a co-operative fail? Its theory is logical: a number of consumers come together to buy in concert and in large quantities and to save the middleman's profit. Obviously, they can save also the retailer's profit and much of his rent. The difficulty is, however, that such a co-operative meets internal hardships and external opposition. The internal difficulties lie in securing an honest and capable manager and in inducing the managers to live up to their promises and patronize the store. These difficulties, while considerable, can be surmounted.

FOR THE COURIER

The external difficulties are greater. Consider for a moment a successful consumers' co-operative, like the one in Gary, or in West Philadelphia. What must they foresee in the line of attack? One of the first things that will happen will be that when they try to buy certain goods of wholesale dealers, they will find that they cannot get as low prices as some of their competitors. Perhaps the wholesaler will sell to them only on condition that the price include a bonus to a local distributor who is the store's competitor; or perhaps he simply will not sell at all. What is the consumers' co-operative to do under such circumstances? It may be able to buy the goods somewhere else. It may be able to substitute another kind of goods; but in the latter case, the substituted goods must be just as good and the co-operative must be honest with its customers, and the customers must believe in that honesty.

37-11-80

Or in other words, the co-operative store must not simply buy and sell goods. It must educate its constituency in fidelity to the cause and confidence in the honesty of its conduct. In the event that the wholesaler is determined to put the consumers' co-operative out of business and either refuse to sell it goods, or sells its competitor goods at so low a price that the competitor can undersell the co-operative, there is only one final recourse; the co-operative must either give up selling these goods or it must go into manufacture. Such co-operative manufacture can only be successful if there are enough consumers to take the product. The chances are that one store could not do this. Therefore, a half-dozen co-operatives must come together to form a producers' co-operative for the preparation or manufacture of some particular kind of goods.

Now this second step in co-operation can only be taken if the original consumers' co-operative has not only sold goods and educated its patrons, but also accumulated a reserve. This accumulation of reserves; that is, of capital for possible future investment, is absolutely necessary and upon the rock of failing to do this, thousands of co-operatives have gone to pieces. If, for instance, five co-operatives can furnish from their reserves $5,000 of capital to manufacture soap or to bake bread, or to butcher meat, they cannot get reasonable prices for these goods from the wholesalers, then the local consumers' co-operatives begin their march toward economic independence.

FOR THE COURIER

The future way is not clear or easy. A consumers' co-operative dealing in large numbers of goods cannot for a long time accumulate sufficient reserves so as to make it possible in conjunction with other co-operatives to manufacture all these goods. The original co-operative, therefore, must go slowly. It must deal in goods which it is reasonably certain it can get regularly at a fair price. Some of these goods can in time be manufactured by producers' co-operatives, formed and capitalised by the consumers' co-operatives.

Other goods, particularly food in the form of vegetables and garden produce, can be bought directly from the farmers. Here is a chance for real and effective work to make the Negro farm pay. Such a farm must be assured of a regular paying demand for its produce through consumers' co-operatives, and on the other hand, it must raise good, palatable produce and that produce must be transported to the co-operatives. This transportation is easier today than ever before because of the increasing number of good roads and the cheapness of automobile trucks. One form of producers' co-operative might easily be the transportation of goods from farms to consumers. Any number of other ventures of this sort might bring producer and consumer together and make co-operatives increasingly stable and successful. But such work would have carefully to be planned and carried out with honesty, promptness and efficiency.

April 11, 1936

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER
By W. E. B. Du Bois

To starve or not to starve, especially before election, is just now the major problem of Washington and the unemployed.

•••

If someone will kindly tell the Democratic Jackass how to get money without taxation, both the Liberty League and the Smith Republicans will not withhold their generous mead of praise; for escaping taxation is the end-all and be-all of their deepest desire.

•••

Our control over nature and the elements is far more limited than science and religion would like to believe. If anyone doubts this, they might ask Pennsylvania and all its waters and the snows of yesteryear.

•••

The most peace-loving land on earth; the most isolated; the least threatened; the greatest in natural resources; and yet we stand about to spend the greatest peace-time budget ever for war. What do we really fear? Is it that we are afraid of ourselves and of what we might do to us in emergency?

•••

And the court which deems itself Supreme has yet graciously to allow this nation to keep its coal from waste and its miners from starvation; to curb Wall Street gambling with the goods and work of the nation; to decide whether lobbies should rule Congress, or Congress rule lobbies. And a brave and free people will submit to these decisions like gnats.

•••

Vast plans lurching in the right direction; good will toward men; fright that blanched even the tan of bankers; and money enough to pauperize Golconda; and yet we failed to make the Deal right and enduringly New, because our administrators were stupid, untrained, or plain dishonest. The moral is: no nation can rise above its knowledge and character.

...

OUR PLIGHT

We American Negroes are threatened today with lack of opportunity to work according to gifts and training and lack of income sufficient to support healthy families according to standards demanded by modern culture.

In industry, we are a labor reservoir, fitfully employed and paid a wage below subsistence; in agriculture, we are largely disfranchised peons; in public education, we tend to be disinherited illiterates; in higher education, we are the parasites of reluctant and hesitant philanthropy.

In the current reorganization of industry, there is no adequate effort to secure us a place in industry, or to open opportunity for Negro ability, or to give us security in age or unemployment.

Not by the development of upper classes anxious to exploit the workers, nor by the escape of individual genius into the white world, can we effect the salvation of our group in America. And the salvation of this group carries with it the emancipation not only of the darker races of men who make the vast majority of mankind, but of all men of all races.

...

CHARACTER

Back of successful producers' and consumers' co-operation must lie character and unselfish service, education, skill and ability. For many years now the American public in general and the Negro race in particular has been educated toward a theory of economic morals which in effect says, that universal selfishness, the universal will to individual wealth and success, means general and group prosperity, and that this is bound up and a necessary product of individual success; that if A. B. C. and D. strive by every effort to become individually wealthy, that A. B. C. and D. and all their friends will be wealthy. This does not follow. In fact, it may easily happen, that A. and B. become wealthy and successful at the expense of C. D. E. F. and dozens of others. What we have got to substitute, therefore, for private profit and individual success is the prosperity and success of the group.

It will be very easy to sneer at this, to say that any economic system which proposes to base itself upon altruism of this kind, is bound to fail because most folk are mean and selfish. It is true that the proportion of selfishness and greed in the world and in our race is large, both by natural bent and especially by long education, but it is going too far to assume that a wider ideal of universal service can not be substituted for much of this selfishness. Young men and young women may easily be trained to ideals of service which includes a decent material return for themselves and excludes exploitation of the poor and helpless. This is surely possible. If it is impossible, then the survival of the Negro race in America is by that same token impossible.

•••

REVOLT OF 1896

The radical revolt captured the Northern Democracy in 1896 and populism swept over the South. The Poor Whites of the South were not happy as the result of their alliance with capital to suppress Negro labor. Some of them, of course, had risen to wealth and power, but the mass of them were struggling desperately for a living. When the populist movement began to grow in the North it soon found sympathy in the South and by 1890 had swelled to a formidable agrarian movement aimed at the large landholder and the industrial capitalist. It began to triumph in local and even state elections and to sweep into power a new class of white radicals, uneducated and undisciplined. Some of them, like Tom Watson, reached out for open alliance with black labor. Others, like Ben Tillman, were more bitter against competing Negro labor than against exploiting white capital.

The Populist movement was the greatest challenge to the power of organized wealth since the enfranchisement of the Freedmen and it called for desperate measures. The result was that in 1896, government by bribery reached apogee in America. Mark Hanna, with an immense fund furnished by American industry, literally bought the presidency for William McKinley. Honest Negro leaders, like Cuney of Texas, who would not vote for McKinley, were forced out of state and national Republican conventions, while in the South where Democrats had a chance to break the hold of industry on elections, they were estopped by the new bargain between employers and white labor and did not dare appeal to a black labor vote.

•••

AFRICAN ART

Two art critics of standing write:

"At the side of religious art or art for art's sake, there is another domain in which the Negroes are past-masters: it is that of the industrial arts, represented by work in clay, wood, iron, copper, gold, leather, and textiles. Ornamented and glazed pottery of all forms and dimensions, finely carved spoons, gongs, staffs of command, low or high stools each one of which is a masterpiece of patience and elegant execution; harmoniously slender paddles, straight or curved knives having handles of wood incrusted with metal, lances with multiple blades of graceful contours, axes for war or parade, small objects in molded or hammered copper; golden jewelry of filigree or made in a mold, rings and bracelets with delicately wrought openwork, cushions, saddles, boots and sheaths in supple leather diversely colored; curious boxes of oryx skin, trays and mats of colored reeds, fabrics of cotton, wool or raffia that are veritable tapestries with motifs as sober as they are varied and of a very sure taste in coloring; silk or cotton embroideries of a singular richness and happy design."

"African sculptures, no longer considered as hideous idols, have taken their place with Assyrian, Roman and Indian Art, and competent critics have not hesitated to declare the finest examples so rich in artistic qualities as to make them worthy to be placed beside the capital achievements of the greatest schools. African influence on Modern Art has been far reaching and the recognition of its value has given an impetus to the work of distinguished contemporaries in Europe and America that is well-nigh incalculable."

•••

INDIANS AND NEGROES

The great difficulty of bringing about understanding, sympathy and co-operation between the Negroes of America and the peoples of India lies in the almost utter lack of knowledge which these two groups of people have of each other.

First of all, the Negroes, taught in American schools and reading books and articles by American writers, have almost no conception of the history of India.

37-11-37

It practically has no place in our curriculum and references to that great past which every Indian knows bring no intelligent comprehension on the part of the Negroes in America.

On the other hand, the knowledge which educated Indians have of the American Negro is chiefly confined to the conventional story spread by most white American and English writers: ignorant black savages were enslaved and made to do physical labour which was the only thing they could do. Theywere finally emancipated by a benevolent government and given every aid to rise and develop. Much of this aid was mistaken, as, for instance, the bestowing of the right to vote, and proved a hindrance rather than a help. To-day these Negroes are contented labourers occupying that lower sphere for which they are especially adapted.

37-11-38

This false knowledge and lack of knowledge in the two groups are now emphasized by the modern methods of gathering and distributing news. To the editors of the great news agencies, Indians and Negroes are not news. They distribute, therefore, and emphasize only such things as are bizarre and uncommon: lynchings and mobs in the Southern states of the United States, dialect and funny stories; and from India, stories of religious frenzy, fights between Hindus and Mohammedans, the deeds of masters of magic and the wealth of Indian princes.

To this is added deliberate and purposeful propaganda, so that from American newspapers Negroes get no idea of the great struggle for freedom and self-government which has been going on in India, or of that deep philosophy of the meaning and end of human life which characterises the Indian nation. They only hear of what England has done to develop India and to keep the peace.

On the other hand, few Indians know of Negroes able to do more than read and write, of the Negro literature that has been growing and expanding for seventy-five years, and of the leaders who have done their part, not only in the development of black men, but in the development of white America.

To all this must be added the almost insuperable bars of religious difference. Negroes have long been enmeshed in a veil of sectarian Christianity which regards all peoples as "Heathen" who are not Christian, and all Christians as suspect who are not Protestants, and no Protestant as a candidate for Heaven unless he believes in the Trinity and the "Plan of Salvation".

The Indian, also finds it difficult to conceive of intelligent men who have no real knowledge of either Buddha or Mohammed, and no religious philosophy that forms a part of their real life.

37-11-39

[April 18, 1936]

W E B Du Bois

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

If the Rhine River ran with blood, it could not more fittingly typify its history for a thousand years.

•••

Some changes come to us so gradually that we forget to note their significance. Twenty-five years ago, it would have been very unusual for an American Foundation to regard a Negro as scholar or artist. Lately, no list of Guggenheim Fellows has appeared without two or more black folk. This year it is Harris and Hurston. And both have won by excellence rather than favor.

•••

Most Americans do not connect Hauptman and Scottsboro. They are a piece of the same cloth. America is unable to measure, conceive or punish crime or discriminate rationally between gross delinquency and utter misfortune.

•••

The difficulty with the Townsend plan is its simplicity. Work and income are not simple. To support the old and the sick with adequate income needs must be done; but not by simple ballyhoo.

•••

Far off in outer Mongolia simmer the seeds of war nourished on roots of soil erosion and imperialism.

•••

At the bottom of possible human progress lies drastic economic change. There is not a single line of economic betterment that does not depend on taxation. The problem of America is not to reduce taxes; it is to increase them. But the increase must fall not on those who have nothing, but on those who have all and more.

•••

Mr. Mussolini of Italy has seized the major part of industry in order to conduct it for the interests of the state. But who is the state in Italy? It is certainly neither the poor laborer nor the man who dares to think.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

...

After the Senate gets through telling Hearst where he gets off, several nice kicks in the rear of his henchman, Arthur Brisbane, would be a great boon for humanity.

...

No longer does Britania rule the wave. She is sharing that bad eminence with the United States of America. And the freedom of the seas is as far off today as ever.

...

32-11-41

[April 18, 1936]

~~FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER~~

SAVANNAH

Mrs. John W. Daniel, State Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, has just unveiled a marker at Beaulieu near Savannah, honoring the landing of the French troops under D'Estaing, who came to fight with the Americans in the battle of Savannah. The French government sent the naval attaché of the Embassy in Washington to represent the Ambassador. We regret to say, however, that on this memorable occasion no notice was taken of the services of eight hundred blacks and mulattoes who joined D'Estaing and fought to save Savannah. Richard Rush, our Minister to Paris, placed an official record of this exploit, which he obtained in Paris, in the archives of the Pennsylvania Historical Society. This record says: "This legion saved the army at Savannah by bravely covering its retreat. Among the blacks who rendered signalled services at that time, were: André Beauvais, Rigaud, Villatte, Beauregard and Lambert, who latterly became generals under the convention, and also Henri Christophe, the future King of Haiti." All this took place in 1779 and Savannah has had 157 years to forget it.

•••

AFRICAN LANGUAGES

In the Foreword, "To the African Saga", by Blaise Cendrars, there is this word about the tongues of Africa:

> "Appleyard, Krapf and Steere are unanimous in praising the beauty and the plastic power of these languages, and Wilson observes in particular that 'they are soft, supple, flexible to an almost limitless degree; their grammatical principles are founded on a systematic and philosophic basis, and the number of their words can be augmented to infinity; they can express the most delicate shades of thought and sentiment, and there are perhaps no other languages in the world that have more definite character or greater precision in expression.'"

SOCIALIZED MEDICINE

The next step among American physicians and ~~lawyers~~ is the socialization of their functions. As it is now, their services are built along lines of strong

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

~~industrialism~~ individualism dating back for many centuries. The young intern, armed with his diploma, starts out as a general practitioner and builds up his practice. He may become a public benefac or, working for the cure of disease and the social uplift of his community and receiving hardly pay enough to meet his expenses. On the other hand, he may become a selfish exploiter, bent on collecting fees, specializing in the "chronic" diseases of those who can pay, and making a large income with very little return. In either of these extreme cases and in the thousands that lie between, he is forced to co-operate more or less with his fellows for efficiency. In spite of his ingrained distaste for specialists, he has to turn to them again and again in the complicated cases continually coming to him. And above all, he must have hospital facilities. No private office, no private sanitorium can take the place of a large modern hospital. On the other hand, and from the point of view of those who need medical attention, they are called to pay for it at the worst time; that is, when they are taken ill. In their days of health and strength, they make no provision for possible disease and ultimate breakdown.

The above facts are driving modern countries more and more to a conception of medicine as a group service to be paid for in regular fees by the group, whether they are sick or well. The physician, the specialist, the hospital and the community, both in governmental and voluntary organization, work together for the public health. This excludes the medicinal exploiter and ~~results in~~ as well as the underpaid practitioner. It makes it possible for good physicians to live in country districts where they are needed, instead of congregating only in metropolitan centers. Toward this kind of organized, socialized medicine Negroes ought to turn in larger and larger voluntary groups.

SOCIALIZED LAW

Not so much has been said by most modern communities as to the need of socialized law, but for the poor and for minority groups and the victims of racial and color prejudice, nothing is needed more today. We can get national movements to defend the Scottsboro boys and a few other flagrant cases of injustice which have caught public attention, but of the 14,613 Negroes known to be confined in prison in 1932, and of the thousands of others not reported in Mississippi, South Carolina, Georgia and other states, it is probable that a majority of these unfortunates are incarcerated and ~~being prepared~~ educated for a life of crime, not because of any real wrongdoing on their part, but for lack of legal defense. No group in the United States needs persistent, continual and ~~omniscient~~ present legal defense like the American Negro. ~~It~~ This need not involve, in most cases any great expenditure of money. It simply means that the poor vagrant or unfortunate or physically ill person who is arrested and thrown into jail by the police ~~shall~~ will have real legal defense. If churches and women's clubs, fraternities and schools would unite for this purposes, we could furnish a new career for American Negroes. To defend twelve million Negroes, we have in the United States today only one thousand two hundred Negro lawyers, and the chief reason that we do not have more is because under present conditions Negro lawyers cannot earn a living. The white lawyer who makes fabulous salaries is paid for by corporations. The great white criminal lawyers are paid for by rich malefactors or voluntary contributions. The Negro criminal lawyer has to eke out a living by methods which do not appeal to self-respecting men. If, now, the Negro group was so organized that it could offer young men just admitted to the bar a living wage to act a s defenders for colored folk who are arrested, and if beyond this a considerable number of other lawyers of ability could be retained for the more important cases, we could curb Negro crime in the United States ~~and~~ at its fountain head; namely, in the wretched jails and penitentiaries where innocent Negroes are today confined by the thousands.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

THE BOURGEOIS MIND

Many sincere reformers are afraid of what they call "pallatives"; that is, little efforts at betterment which do not go to the root of the social disease. On the other hand, the thing which modern experience shows, we ought to fear most, is the "All or None" type; that is, the tactics long pursued by the Socialists of Europe and to some extent by the Socialists of America, of refusing to take part in government or reform unless they could have a complete socialist state. The result too often has been that when they did get control of a town, a city or a nation, they could not for various reasons carry out the complete-

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

Socialist program. They would have been in much better position to realize their dreams in part if they had been working in part on a social program. In the United States, for instance, and in most nations, the thing that we have got to change is the bourgeois mind; that is, the largely unconscious conviction of most people that the only way in which you can secure the production of goods and the rendering of services, is through the lure of large, private profit. This assumption is not true in any state. It would not be true at all in a Socialist state. It is only partially true in the United States. But what we have got to do is to fight this assumption in our own group. We have got to have merchants whose idea is service and not private profit. We have got to have insurance men with the same social outlook, and the change and education of character by which we are going to get this sortof thing does not depend upon revolution or force or law. It depends upon education and enlightenment and persuasion and these are weapons which we can use in any state and at any time. Among American Negroes the proportion of bourgeoisi, that is, of persons who live by the profit which they make through hiring labor, is very small. But on the other hand, the number of those who think that this kind of thing is not only legitimate but inevitable and whose ambition it is to accumulate property in this way, is large, and what these people need is not blows or mockery, but information, carefully and understandingly given.

April 25, 1936

32-11-46

VISITORS TO TRANS-ETHIOPIA

Twenty-four foreign-born students, including white South Africans, English Colonials, two black men from West Africa and Uganda, and one Chinese student from Hawaii, have been making a unique educational trip. They are all students in the Graduate School at Yale, and under the guidance of Professor C. T. Loram. They have covered a half dozen of the best known Negro institutions in the South, coming in contact, also, with some white institutions. There were men and women in the party. They lived in the dormitories of the colored students and ate beside them in the dining rooms. They held all kinds of conferences, large and small, and private conversations with students and teachers. It was as fine a piece of human contact for information and training that I have seen in many days.

Professor Loram, a white man, was born in South Africa and rose high in the educational system. He was, however, so eager to know the natives and to champion their cause, that he lost favor with the prevailing powers and was not re-appointed to his position at the head of the schools of Natal. He did, however, receive an appointment at Yale, where he is now at work.

...

NEGRO WELCOME

The chief thing that I have thought of in connection with this trip concerns not these African visitors, (who included, by the way, a nephew of General Smuts,) but rather the reaction on Negroes. In at least one Negro university there was an extraordinary manifestation of dislike and misunderstanding for Africa. When in his enthusiasm Mr. Loram talked at length on African civilization, one of the students from the audience piped up and said: "Now tell us about the crocodiles."

This was smart and laughable. There were also professors who inquired rather sharply as to just what connection this group saw between Africa and American Negroes.

All this points to a condition of mind widely prevalent among educated Negroes. It arises from a certain something which we might call racial provincialism; that is, the idea that the race problem in America is a segregated case, standing by itself, and to be settled by itself. That it not only has no real connection with other race and color problems, but any fancied connection or possible connection must be vigorously fought against. This theory says: we have in the United States a simple problem of citizenship and justice. Here are Americans who are more or less of African descent, but in reality ~~born for many generations~~ in this country, long domiciled here, and more American than the majority of white American citizens. The simple problem concerning them is: how and when are they going to be admitted to their legal and essential rights?

32-11-42

***

THE HISTORY OF RACE PROVINCIALISM

This attitude is not new. It has a long history, going back to the beginning of the African invasion of America. It has appeared in many forms. The mulattoes of Haiti in the latter part of the eighteenth century protested, ~~but~~ that they were neither slaves nor Negroes. They were by right of law French citizens, and the only question was how far the Revolution was going to recognize rights which had hitherto been denied by the prejudice of the planters. They started a local revolution, and would have been overwhelmed and vanquished had it not been that at the critical moment, the great mass of black slaves arose in revolt and made the Haitian nation a reality, and the independence of Haiti recognized by the world.

So in the United States, the free Negroes of Louisiana for a long time ~~fought~~ agitated for their rights with no reference to the rights of black slaves in Louisiana or elsewhere. They claimed their freedom under French and Spanish citizenship and under the Treaty of Annexation with the United States. They were neither Negroes nor Africans. They were American citizens, and they asked and contended for their rights. For a while, they succeeded, ~~and~~ but then as slavery increased, they suffered more and more of degradation and discrimination, and it was not until the Civil War which emancipated all the slaves, that they received their emancipation and freedom.

In the Northern states, for many years, between 1830 and 1856, the Negroes based their attitude and contention upon their freedom, ~~upon~~ and citizenship, and repudiated all references to Negro blood and Africa. They sympathized with the slave, but their problem was a problem apart from the black slave because they were free and citizens and legally entitled to their rights. My grandfather, Alexander Du Bois, of New Haven, stood strongly and bitterly upon this point of view. "He was not a Negro. He had nothing to do with Africa."

...

PAN-AFRICA

When in 1918, I proposed a Pan-African Congress, I met the same opposition, both from Negroes and whites. Members of the Board of Directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People strongly objected to any mingling or attempt to mingle the problems of Africa with the problems of the United States. They said with great force and earnestness: "Haven't we got enough to do here in America with our problem of citizenship, segregation, discrimination and lynching, without wandering over the known world to annex other race problems of which we know nothing and ought to know less?"

I was not, therefore, ~~able~~ in the case of the great Races Congress in London in 1911, or in the Pan-African Congress, which I tried to hold later, able to secure any real and vital interest in the problems of Africa or of other colored peoples on the part of the thinking Negroes of the United States. And yet I think that I was perfectly right and that if I had any claim to the Spingarn Medal, it was as the late Bishop John Hurst insisted due to my small but earnest efforts toward Pan-Africa.

My basic reasons were these: I do not believe that it is possible to settle the Negro problem in America until the color problems of the world are well on the way toward settlement. I do not believe that the descendants of Africans are going to be received as American citizens so long as the peoples of Africa are kept by white civilization in semi-slavery, serfdom and economic exploitation. I may be wrong in this belief, but it is bolstered in my opinion by every fact and occurrence which has come forward in the last twenty-five years: the seizure of Haiti, the perilous present position of Liberia, the imminent conquest of Ethiopia, the pending disfranchisement of black South Africans, the continuation of lynching and segregation in America. All these are pieces of one cloth, evidences of one social pattern, and to it may be added the recrudescence of race prejudice in other lands and countries. I believe that the way to attack this is not by giving up local fights and local agitation, not by having Africans trying to settle problems of America, or Americans trying to settle problems of Africa, but that we are going to fight intelligently in Africa, America and the West Indies, only as we make common cause with each other, and as we come to mutual understanding.

As it is now, the tendency is not simply for colored groups not to understand each other, but to misunderstand and ridicule each other; to hold, more or less unconsciously, the same opinion of other colored groups as white propaganda has continually put in their minds. An American Negro, educated at Harvard, Yale or Michigan, reading American newspapers and magazines, listening to lectures on the radio, is almost bound, unless he makes special effort, to regard Africans as comic barbarians with whom he has no connection that need be acknowledged, and whose problems he ought not and cannot solve.

37-11-49

Not only is this true, but the finely educated Negroes of British West Africa, the splendid groups of trained colored men in the British and French West Indies, the growing number of educated Negroes in South Africa, the brown peoples of India and the yellow peoples of Asia, each are brought up and trained with the same kind of contempt for American Negroes. They learn from white telegraphic agencies, from white travelers and white writers, that the chief industry of American Negroes is to be lynched, or to play jazz music; that their chance for survival in America is very small, and that it would be simply a waste of time for any growing group of colored people to make common cause with them.

Of course this attitude on the part of foreign colored peoples is not as bad as it used to be. There have come filtering through intimations and reports that the American Negro is progressing; that his system of education is worth studying; that his social development is in many respects marvelous; and that therefore we have now and then excursions like this from Yale under Loram, visitors from Java, India, Africa and the West Indies. These people come to confirm vague intimations that there is a human development going on here worth studying.

•••

PRIDE OF BLOOD

And then what do they meet? They meet on the part of a surprising number of educated American colored people an astonishing ignorance and prejudice against other colored people, against African Negroes, against the history of civilization and art in Africa, and against the religions of India, against the marvelous developments of the Chinese, against all the inhabitants of the West Indies Islands, and this ignorance and lack of interest is boasted of and made a matter of jokes and smart remarks.

This strikes these visitors with astonishment. One of the young, black graduate students of Yale who was with the group is from Uganda. He is a part of a ruling race that has been acknowledged by all visitors to be among the picked specimens of manhood in the world with a development in government and social organization which is remarkable. They have never been slaves. He is himself a gentleman; the kind of well-mannered, trained human being that the African native so surprisingly presents under curiously diverse circumstances, but when he heard the sneers about Africa in one institution, he turned somewhat in surprise, and said:

"Are you ashamed of your African ancestry?"

He asked this seriously. He didn't think the thing to be possible; but it was possible. These students and these teachers were ashamed of their African ancestry. They proposed in their attempt to settle the Negro problem to mention Africa and think of Africa and study Africa just as little as possible. I regard this attitude as a great and fundamental mistake, and I wish my readers would think about it.

37-11-50

May 2, 1936

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER
By W. E. B. Du Bois

•••

In being defeated and annexed by Italy, Ethiopia will not disappear from the earth. There are still fourteen million yellow and black men who must be reckoned with in the future; and in the same way, the one hundred and fifty or more millions of the dark inhabitants of Africa, no matter who claims suzerainty over them, have got to organize and assert themselves, secure education, and eventually become free and autonomous human beings. No Golgotha of murder, destruction and cruelty can more than interrupt this inevitable program.

32-11-52

•••

Negroes must not be deceived by the vigorous propaganda being carried on by Democrats like Al Smith, and Republicans, like Vanderberg. Remember that what this nation needs is not less money to spend, but more. It must, to be sure, be spent more efficiently, but you increase efficient administration in vain if you cut off the funds which are to be administered. We need immense sums in the United States for education, for land rehabilitation, for public health and social security, and we must have it; and we must get it by taxing those who have and not those who have not.

•••

There is tremendous effort by those who are putting poor, old Townsend and his associates on the rack, to make old-age security seem ridiculous. It is not ridiculous. It is a terrible necessity. The mere fact that Townsend's plan may be unscientific and poorly thought-out, simply means that we must think out a scientific plan. The idea of a rich and prosperous country like the United States, with hundreds of thousands of old people in misery, poor health and starvation, is an indictment of civilization. We can and we should pension the old and the helpless.

•••

The fortification of the Dardenelles by Turkey is an historic event which must be watched. These narrow straits have for decades been kept open in order that Constantinople, the world city, should not be dominated by Turkey, but should be open to aggression by England, France or Russia. Today for the first time since England took Egypt from Turkey, Turkey feels strong enough to assert herself against the Western world. From now on she must be taken into account.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

...

TEXAS

32-11-53

Early in the nineteenth century, a slave market was established on Galveston Island and slaves stolen from the regular slave traders were brought here and smuggled into the United States. By 1818, this traffic became large and properous and slaves, which would cost $1,000 in the United States, could be bought for $140 in Texas. The grants made by the Spanish Government to American settlers between 1821 and 1830 increased the slave population to 5,000, as the emigrants could bring their slaves with them and others were purchased. These settlements centered around the Brazos, Colorado and other river bottoms, and cotton was naturally the chief crop. Slaves and Negroes were at the basis of the Texas Revolution of 1836 and that revolution sought to perpetuate slavery and the slave trade in Mexico.

In 1830, there were 20,000 whites and 5,000 Negroes, and in 1847, 100,000 whites and 40,000 Negroes, showing the great increase of the slave population. In 1850, there were 154,000 whites and 58,000 Negroes.

The increase in cotton kept pace with the increase in slaves. In 1850, 58,000 slaves raised 58,000 bales of cotton. In 1855, 105 ,000 slaves raised 105,000 bales; and in 1860, 182,000 slaves raised 182,000 bales.

The slave population, however, was segregated. Northeast Texas had 25,000 slaves in 1857, and East Texas, 25,000; Central Texas, because of its rich land, had in 1847, 56,000 slaves. The bulk of the Negro population still stays in these three sections and has not gone to any extent into the West. The chief change in the twentieth century has been the increase of the city Negro population at the expense of the farms.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

•••

AFRICAN LITERATURE

Delafosse says:

"It would not be rigorously exact to say that the Negroes possess only an oral literature and that this literature is necessarily of the so-called popular type. Without doubt it is the popular oral literature that has the dominating place in Negro Africa, but we also find there a learned oral literature and a written literature.

"I have spoken above of the intellectual flowering that distinguished Timbuktu in the sixteenth century, but this epoch and this city did not have the monopoly of such literature. Even in our days, the 'marabouts,' as the educated Mussulmans are commonly called in Africa, edit chronicles of local history that are often highly interesting, treatises on exegesis and learned works that constitute a veritable literature, some examples of which would not detract from Arabic literature as a whole.

"Finally, there is another category of written literature, most interesting perhaps from the point of view of the information it can furnish regarding the congenital aptitudes of the Negroes, because it is native in its expression. In certain regions of Africa, the signs of the Arabic alphabet, adapted sometimes, by means of added diacritical marks and new conventions, to the representation of vowel or consonant sounds that do not exist in Arabic, are employed for writing such and such an African Negro language.

"Far more widespread and representative of the native civilization is the unwritten learned literature. Perhaps the epithet of 'professional' would be a more suitable designation than 'learned.' It is, in fact, the appanage of the people belonging to one of the castes or corporations of intellectual workers that we generally include under the term of 'griots.' There are all categories of griots: some are musicians, singers, poets, story-tellers, mimes, dancers, mountebanks; others have the task of learning by memory the genealogies of noble families, the important facts relating to great personages, the annals of States or of tribes, political, juridical or social customs, religious beliefs, and their transmission to the next generation. This is the oral literature in its learned form." (Negroes of Africa, Maurice Delafosse, pp. 254, 255, 260, 261, 263, 265, 266, 267 and 268.)

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

•••

CREDIT UNIONS

One of the simplest forms of co-operation is the credit union. Henry Hunt of Fort Valley has for a year or more been connected with the Farm Credit Administration of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and has interested himself in the spread of the credit union among American Negroes. It is a simple thing, so simple that most people are apt to miss the point.

32-1-55

Regularly poor people and even people well-to-do, have to borrow money, a small sum for a short time. As matters are organized now in the United States, they will, if they are not careful, fall into the hands of loan sharks; of people who charge outrageous rates of interest, and follow this by threats and intimidation. One red cap at a great metropolitan railway station told Mr. Hunt that sharks would loan $10 to men at a $1 a day interest, and it is quite usual for people to pay from 10%-100% for the loan of a little money.

To correct this credit evil, credit unions have spread all over Europe and in various parts of America and are now beginning to be recognized and established by colored people in the United States. There are many credit unions which admit both colored and white people; as for instance, that of the postal clerks and the packers.

What is a credit union? It is simply a membership corporation which can be organized under the Federal Government and under Federal laws, by which people contribute small sums to a central chest and then loan these sums to their own members at small rates of interest. The whole success of the credit union depends upon the honesty and efficiency with which it is run: they know their own members; the loans are secured, and losses are almost nil. The postal clerks have in this way raised a capital of $50,000,000. There are unions among colored teachers, in Atlanta, Dallas, Jacksonville, and other places, which have available funds which run into the thousands. The credit union is the beginning of larger co-operation. It invests its funds in banks and other safe places, but if sound consumers' and producers' co-operatives could be built up along side it, it could easily furnish them capital. Those who wish to learn about credit unions and what they are doing and may do in the United States, should write to Henry A. Hunt, Farm Credit Administration, Washington, D. C.

37-11-56

May 9, 1936

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER
By W. E. B. Du Bois

•••

The movements on the European chessboard become increasingly clear. France beckons to Italy; Mussolini moves against British colonies; England moves against Italy; Italy reminds France; France hesitates and recoils toward England; Hitler moves against France; France moves nearer England; England hesitates; Italy seizes the headwaters of the Nile; France moves toward Italy; England moves toward Germany; Russia moves toward France; Japan moves toward Germany; Ethiopia falls while the League of Nations is helpless. For the League of Nations, after all, is England and France. The others hardly count.

•••

It is easy to assume that the relief of agriculture is the relief of the poor farmer. As a matter of fact, it is particularly and almost exclusively the relief of the rich farmer, if it is administered in the way that it has been in the United States; and in the same way, the tariff protection which we have piled on and then piled on again in the United States, does not result in high wages to the worker, but in high profits to the manufacturer.

•••

There is no reason for rejoicing in the triumph of Borah in Wisconsin or of Knox in Illinois, or of Landon anywhere. No one of these represents anything upon which the American Negro can depend for economic emancipation.

•••

The Supreme Court does not say that the public may be cheated by phoney issues of stocks and bonds. But it does say, firmly and eloquently, that if a thief withdraws an unsuccessful attempt to cheat, no gentleman and no free republic will presume to inquire into the facts.

•••

The great American housing movement for the poor has had unparallelled success in everything except housing for the poor.

•••

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

ABOUT LEADERSHIP

32-11-58

Once upon a time there was a man going North because the North star beckoned him and because there was opposition to his going which nettled him. After some marching, he found to his surprise that a number of people were walking with him and even following him, and that they called him "Leader". This, at first, greatly embarrassed him, but afterward, he took it philosophically. He knew that he was not a leader, but merely a pathfinder; and yet he argued: "What's in a name?"

After a while, he was part of a considerable and determined army and they were making progress against the assembled and sinister opposition which objected to Negroes moving toward the stars. But keeping careful watch, he suddenly discovered one day that another large and powerful opposition was gathering upon their right flank, and he said hurriedly to his followers:

"Look here, we'd better move toward the Right to save ourselves lest we be cut off from all possibilities of marching."

Some of his companions saw the point and agreed immediately, but others seemed vastly surprised.

"What!" they said, "Are you giving up? Are you turning around? Are you surrendering? Are you compromising? Are you going back?"

"Nonsense," said the man. "I'm making a right turn in order that eventually I can march forward again."

"But that's compromise; that's surrender," said some.

But the man insisted: "It's plain common sense. You cannot make progress forward if you are cut off in the middle. You cannot gain and maintain civil, political and social rights, if you have no jobs and nothing to eat."

"But that's exactly what was said forty years ago, and then you opposed it."

"It was not what was said forty years ago, because there was no such situation as fronts us now. There was no attacking army upon our right; it was all in front. But it doesn't make any difference whether it was said forty years ago or four hundred years ago. If it's true; it's true. The day when work and fairly remunerative work was open to all Negroes that wanted it is past and gone. The problem of today under the capitalistic regime is unemployment for masses of men, and there's more unemployment for Negroes than for any other class. We have got to fight this attack upon our very existence or we'll do no more fighting in any direction."

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

"So," sneered some, "you're giving up all idea of the North star."

"I'm doing nothing of the sort," said the man. "I still believe in the stars. I'm keeping my eye on them and moving as fast as possible toward them. But I'm not moving or trying to move faster than possible. I know well that many times in human affairs side movements and even retreats are necessary for permanent advance, and while we must keep our formation intact toward the heavens, and keep up our agitation and make our gestures, we have got to realize much of this is mere gesture until we settle the matter of work and income; until we successfully repel and disperse those who are increasing the current unemployment among Negroes by the use of race prejudice."

"But that's treason," yelled a few. "That's surrendering Heaven and going to Hell."

"All right," said the leader, "go to Hell."

***

CO-OPERATIVES

Nothing is more dangerous or more reasonably sure of failure and defeat than the isolated, single co-operative store. Everybody who has studied co-operation knows this; and yet when such a store is started, here, there and elsewhere, paeans of praise go up as though the deed was done. When as a matter of fact, the effort has barely begun. We have a few successful co-operative stores in the United States: at Gary and in Philadelphia, in Kansas City, Pittsburgh and New York, in Tuskegee and a few other places. Some of these have shown remarkable and praiseworthy success; but ultimate success can never be theirs until they unite themselves with similar co-operatives, colored and white, throughout the nation and then standing together offer a united consumers' power which is able either to make terms with wholesalers and manufacturers, or go into manufacturing themselves.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

When in any line and to any degree such union is accomplished, the co-operative begins to stand on its own feet, even then it does not see the end of the forests. Some people today, for instance, are fond of sneering at the Austrian collectives, weakened and partially overthrown by the continuous revolution through which Austria has gone since the World War. But it must be remembered that it is not simply co-operation which has failed in Austria, it is nearly every function of civilization. And the argument in favor of attempts at co-operation in countries where human organization is still effective is just as strong today as ever.

37-11-60

May 16, 1936

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER
By W. E. B. Du Bois

•••

Ethiopia has thrown new light on Pacifism. Once I promised never to fight in any war. Then I promised only to fight in holy wars. Then I hesitated, but prayed for peace. Today, I believe that France as usual has shown us the way: an international force to compel peace. There must be world policemen, just as we have city policemen; otherwise a criminal like Mussolini, is always free to stab a gentleman like Haile Selasse in the back and crow over it.

23-11-61

•••

The campaign is narrowing down to what it always does and what it always must so long as the rotten borough South is in the saddle. We are not going to vote about unemployment or old age security or the control of capital. We are going to vote for Franklin Roosevelt because with all his muddle and indecision, he is less reactionary than Hearst's Landon or the incomprehensible Borah or the impossible Republican Party led by the allied and associated Chambers of Commerce. There will be no Farmer-Labor Party.

•••

We are playing with fire and the sparks are represented by legislative halls seized in Colorado and New Jersey, strikes East and West, and twelve million unemployed. The only ready answer is the greatest peace-time expenditure for army and navy that the nation has seen.

•••

But there is no need for discouragement. In the midst of universal disaster, wrecking of ideals and divided councils; in the midst of force, Fascism and anarchy, the right can triumph if the Left has sense enough to sit down and plan and think and work and keep everlastingly at it.

•••

May, 1936

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER
BY W. E. B. DU BOIS

THE NEGRO AND THE CHURCH

Again the Negro is wrestling with a perennial problem, that of his attitude toward white Christianity. In the settlement of it, would it not be well to recall a little well-known history and note again the three ways, and the three very inclusive ways in which we have sought to settle our problem of religion.

37-11-62

~~Later, In~~ In 1787, ~~there came a different series of events and more scattered efforts at solution.~~ St. George's Church in Philadelphia at Fourth and Vine Streets was a great Methodist Church. The Methodists rather prided themselves that they had followed Jesus Christ rather more fully than the Episcopalians in dealing with slavery. The Church of England had met many difficulties in inducing masters to send their slaves to church. The Methodists had invited them in. St. George's had grown to be the most popular church in Philadelphia. But in 1787, there had begun to pour into the city a large number of freed slaves from Pennsylvania with some fugitive slaves from Delaware and Maryland. So that the number of black folk who worshipped God in St. George's brought difficulties. They were not cultivated; they were not always clean; their manners were not the best. They were, nevertheless, welcomed there until it seemed to the good people of St. George's that something had to be done about this influx of dark Christians.

One Sunday morning two black men were on their knees praying, when the verger tapped them on the shoulder and courteously asked them to continue their prayers in the gallery.

Immediately a problem was presented to these men. Richard Allen was a man of good repute, a leader in a colored group of honest, God-fearing men. He didn't like this sort of thing. He hesitated as to what he should do about it. He knew he had not been asked to go to the gallery simply by the man who tapped him on the shoulder. Undoubtedly it was the decision of the church. He asked to be allowed to finish his prayer and then promised that he would leave and would not come again.

Not all the Negroes agreed. Some said, "What of it?" They could worship

In the gallery just as well. Most of them had never been used to anything else. In fact, the gallery was closer to heaven. Others thought nothing about it. If they were told to go to the gallery, they went.

The little group with Richard Allen and Absolom Jones did not go to the gallery. They walked out of the church and then sat down and thought about where they were going to worship.

They formed a little organization with some insurance features and discussed the future after they had voluntarily segregated themselves from the white congregation. They differed in opinion. One part was invited to form a church under the Episcopalians. Their leader, Absolom Jones, was made rector of the church; but he was never allowed to meet with the white ministers. His group formed a church, but it was a church apart from the other churches. That church has grown; similar churches have grown, until you have 51,502 colored Episcopalians in 7,209 churches in the United States. But the segregation of these churches from white churches has never disappeared.

The men under Richard Allen were not satisfied with this. They said, "We are not going to accept segregated membership in any church. We are going to have our own church." They formed the African Methodist Episcopal Church. This church today has 545,814 members in 6,708 churches. It is a Negro organization, with Negro bishops, and owns 32 millions of dollars worth of property.

That, of course, is no final settlement of the race problem. This church is still a separate body. It lives to itself and it builds up the fences between itself and the other churches.

Nor does this solution end this peculiar case. Some Negroes stayed in St. George's Church, they and their descendants are still Methodists, and number 26,130 members. But they form separate congregations with black ministers and black bishops. There is no reason why the Methodist Church South and the Methodist Church should not unite, except one, and that is this: what is going to be the status of these Negroes in the reunited church? And so here we are again, right back where we started.

...

WHITE WRITERS

In the eyes of white writers, the conception of the Negro has varied. Going back to English literature: in the days of Shakespeare and Southerne, the black man of fiction was a man, a brave, fine, if withal overtrustful and impulsive, hero. In science, he was different but equal, cunning in unusual ways, but mighty with possibilities. Then with the slave trade, he suddenly became a clown and dropped from sight. He emerged slowly, beginning about 1830 as a dull, stupid, but contented slave, capable of doglike devotion, superstitious and incapable of education. Later, in the abolition controversy, he became a victim, a man of sorrows, a fugitive chased by bloodhounds, a beautiful raped octoroon, a crucified Uncle Tom; but a lay figure, objectively pitiable but seldom subjectively conceived. Suddenly a change came after Reconstruction. The black man was either a faithful old "Befoh de wah" darky worshiping lordly white folk, or a frolicking ape, or a villain, a sullen scoundrel, a violator of womanhood, a low thief and misbirthed monster. He was sub-normal and congenitally incapable. He was represented as an unfit survival of Darwinian natural selection. Philanthropy and religion stood powerless before his puny brain and undeveloped morals. In a "thousand years"? Perhaps. But at present, an upper beast. Out of this today he is slowly but tentatively, almost apologetically rising--a somewhat deserving, often poignant, but hopeless figure; a man whose only proper end is dramatic suicide, physically or morally. His trouble is natural and inborn inferiority, slight by scientific measurements, but sufficient to make absolute limits to his possibilities, save in exceptional cases. And here white literature stands today.

...

THE CONSUMER

Organized consumers power is the foundation rock of co-operation and of economic reorganization today. This must never be forgotten. The object of co-operation is not simply to buy things cheap. It is not simply to save. It is so to direct the power of consumption as to control production, to force producers to make goods for use and not for profit, to force producers to pay decent wages to workers, to force production to expend its capital and energies on goods that are needed, and not only not on goods useless to the mass of men; not even on goods that are simply beautiful, while mothers and children starve. For Beauty and Genius and all possibilities of culture die with children. I find, for instance, in the New Yorker, this striking advertisement: "Diamond bracelet, $3,750; diamond earings, $800; and the while 10 million men have no work to earn bread at 5 cents a loaf.

33-11-64

Organized consumers in the United States today, using their power for the good of men, and for truth and beauty, would make workers direct more attention to the production of food and overcoats, than to the production of diamond bracelets. This is not decrying great works of art and creations of literature, but contrary to what most people think, these things in themselves are not so costly. They gain an artificial price when competed for by private collectors. When made for and open to the use and view of the masses, they may be cheap in cost, no matter how rare in genius. Consumers organizations, democratically directed by intelligent men, can re-organize, re-arrange and revolutionize our present stupid methods of production.

37-11-65

May 23, 1936

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER
By W. E. B. Du Bois

Love is God and Labor is His Prophet.

•••

The harm that Benito Mussolini has done to humanity by his rape of Ethiopia is incalculable and unending. He has smashed the League of Nations--the noblest dream of a united humanity in a federation of the world since the Holy Roman Empire. He has killed pacifism and disarmament. He has impoverished and ruined Italy in heart and body, and he has killed the faith of all black folk in white men.

•••

Never forget that we the least threatened, most effectually protected land on earth, are spending a thousand million dollars next year in order to make war with Japan or England easier. And yet we're fighting taxes to keep 12 million unemployed from starving.

•••

It was a happy omen when the majority of Negro Methodists voted against unification by segregation, even though they knew that ~~incomplete and~~ the voluntary segregation of the A.M.E. Church was the logical end of their action.

•••

AFRICAN LITERATURE

In this anthology we have not only a record of the wit and wisdom of Africa, but the soul of a people, which may be judged by the criteria of pure letters. In this translation, which has attempted throughout to capture the spirit of Cendrars' book rather than to present an erudite rendition of original sources, English readers have their first opportunity to appriase Africa's contribution to the literature of the world. I venture to believe that they will find it not unworthy to stand beside American Negro Spirituals and African Sculpture. (Arthur Spingarn, Introduction to the African Saga, by Blaise Cendrars.)

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

DEFEATISM

We have within the Negro race today extraordinary defeatism. They have been brought up here to assume that everything White is Right; that the one goal they have to reach is what white people have done and not what ought to be done. We have got to get it out of us. We must realize that we belong to that great majority of mankind for which the better world has got to fight. We have got to have, for the good of the world, supervision by colored peoples and suppressed classes so as to make a world-wide culture worth having. We must see that colored people in the United States get the chance to make themselves as efficient as possible. When we think of the sort of experience through which we colored people have come and yet have kept their souls when everything around was calculated to make for despair, it is a matter of infinite hope for all oppressed men. Having come so far, we cannot be defeated now unless we defeat ourselves.

HUMANITY

Let us take the conception of Humanity; of human progress, increasing happiness, peace and good will toward all men. It is a magnificent conception and it calls for the rasing of every artificial barrier between human beings. It is a dream of "no segregation," full and sympathetic contact between human beings, knowledge of them and effort toward the greatest and widest human development. It recognises that hitherto in the world great men, transcendant ability, genius and character, prosperous groups and great families, have been almost accidental in their appearance because of lack of opportunity for developing ability in the masses of men. It believes that the vast majority of mankind are capable of broad education and culture; that they can achieve and create, and that where with the accidental opportunities of today we have ten great men in science, art and philanthropy, we might easily have ten thousand if all children, for instance, had the attention and care that the Dionne quintuplets are receiving; if we really had universal education of children in small classes with full equipment, under thoroughly educated and carefully selected and deeply devoted teachers; if we had family and social surroundings which would encourage the human soul to blossom and expand and express itself; if every individual and family had work reasonably suited to his ability, and an income which would support him in health and decency,

37-11-67

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

with leisure for recreation and further development.

The doctrine of humanity confines itself to no country, continent or race. It welcomes to human brotherhood black, white, yellow and brown; American, Englishmen, Frenchmen; Japanese, Chinese and Africans. It touches and emphasizes the history and contributions of all people; it exalts no man and no group and no race or nation at the expense of its fellows; and it utterly repudiates the barbarous idea that men must rise by enslaving or insulting, or robbing or murdering their fellows. It finds warrant for all this in the teachings of every great religion, every great Christ, every great Leader: in Christianity, in Buddhism among the followers of Mohammed, and even in the practical precepts of Fetich.

Moreover, no human dream has had more startling and encouraging results. A doctrine of broad humanity has abolished slavery and serfdom; has attempted universal education and has fought poverty and disease; is back of the missionary movement and the International Red Cross, and is the main spring of all philanthropy and social uplift. It has sponsored and is sponsoring today international and inter-racial movements in almost every realm of human activity: in government and law, in commerce and education, in postal and telegraph service, in radio broadcasting, in scientific experimentation, in public health, in trade unions, copyrights, trademarks, weights and measures and Olympic games. It has been emphasized in dozens of international expositions and international conventions. It has been attempted in the League of Nations, and the movement for world peace, and even in something like a Church Universal. It is the broadest and most splendid vision of mankind and it opposes and must logically oppose all artificial separation of human beings by barriers of race or color, of wealth or geography. It demands not a unity of identity and slavish regimentation, but finds the glory of civilization in the freedom and variety of mankind, in the development of genius and art along all lines, and not simply in accordance with ideals of a few. It especially recognizes that human culture is diffused and enriched by human contact. That social contact always was the key to civilization. I know that my own education has been broader and fuller because of the varieties of human beings with whom I have sat in classrooms and worked at scientific tasks and known and lived with. I have gone to school with white students and black students, yellow and brown. I have had friends in England, France, Germany, Spain and Italy. I have worked with Africans and West Indians, Chinese, Japanese and East Indians. I have in this had a priceless opportunity to understand mankind in most of its chief varieties and many of its most illuminating experiences. In the last month, I have talked and conferred and argued with South Africans, East Africans, Nigerians, West Indians, Englishmen, Dutchmen, Jews and Germans. The finest and broadest education can only be built up through such many sided contacts.

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

37-11-69

1936(?)
[August 22, 1936]

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER
By W. E. B. Du Bois

DISCUSSION

One of the disturbing things about Negroes is the lack of discussion. Dominating assertion and loud talk, we have in common with all ignorant people, but the habit of listening carefully, silently and intelligently to prepared and distinctly stated arguments on opposite sides of an opposite question, with questions and careful thought and follow-up reading; this, we lack, and without it there can be no real education, no learning, no effective democracy. We have been ruined by "eloquent" sermons and speeches; smart, funny, emotional appeals without facts and without careful preparation, and with no opportunity to ask questions or required explanations. We "enjoy" sermons and speeches. This is all sheer damnation. You should listen, question, ponder and remember if you are to be more than a phonograph or microphone.

37-11-22

•••

WHAT HAVE YOU READ?

I have bought this year in all twenty-five new books. This is rather more than my usual , but I am catching up with my professional reading and completing my library in certain directions. Moreover, I am trying to make good the resolution that I adopted several years ago to be quit of the public library habit. I am convinced that nothing has cheapened American intellectual life more than this habit. It has stopped the buying of books, which means that publishers can only afford to issue thrillers, unless they take long chances. The ordinary, serious reader does not pretend to buy books. He says to a author, as people have repeatedly said to me: "I'm going to buy a good book just as soon as I can get it from thelibrary." And the very moment, the person in question was wearing two costly octavo volumes on her head, which wasn't worth it. All the books that I have bought, I have not yet read, but they are standing in order with my eye upon them, and I have read "Middletown".

•••

MIDDLETOWN

"Middletown"is seven years old. I have been going to read it ever since it came out because it was recognized as an unusual social study. The world's social study

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

32-11-23

depended upon schedules and counting; the new social study uses figures, but it uses them sparingly and understandingly. It looks upon a group of human beings as a group of human beings to be thoroughly known by careful contact and thought and prolonged investigation. The Lynds and their fellow workers who did a mid-western city which I visited last year, made an unusually successful, thoughtful and thorough study, and I have read it with great interest. First of all, they found in Middletown so many of the problems among this predominantly white city which we think of as our problems. The difficulty of getting a living; fear of losing the job; the mistakes of marriage; the problems of school and school life; the puzzle of what to do with leisure; the declining influence of the church and yet its continued dominance; the fact that people won't vote; that they do not take care of disease; that they continually think that people out of work are someway to blame and that their newspapers do not give them the facts. It is interesting to see how far problems which we think of as primarily our own group problem, are after all problems of all Americans. And yet one thing the students of Middletown did as extraordinary as it was natural, they left entirely out of account the five percent of colored people in the city. There are not more than seven thousand colored people in Middletown, but I have visited some of them; I have talked to them; I know them. They are, as Mr. and Mrs. Lynd may not realize, human beings. There was no more reason for leaving them out of Middletown than of leaving five thousand white people out. It was simply following the prevalent American pattern. They wanted to study a city of homologous constituency, but they did not realize that one cannot exorcise the Negroes from the American city and have the whole of reality left. If the Negroes were five percent of theppopulation, they must have been ten per cent of the laboring population. Their competition for jobs makes a great difference with the securing of jobs in the city. Their competition for homes; their unwanted presence in the schools, and all that. It was a serious m stake to leave them out of the study of Middletown.

Pittsburgh Courier, February 5, 1937

PORT ARTHUR

Today I stood where in 1905, Japan blockaded the Russian fleet in yonder shining harbor of the Yellow Sea, and creeping the great harsh peeks of these wild mountains, made Europe surrender to Asia. It was historic ground. Manchuria is the natural mainland of the isles of Japan. She wrested it from China in the war of 1895, but Europe made her surrender it. Then the Russians calmly walked in and took it. They extended the Siberian railroad through it and seizing the harbor of Port Arthur, fortified it, and built the city of Dalny. Along came Germany and seized the Peninsula of Shantung, just south, and fortified that. Already England had seized Hong Kong, while France was in Indo-China. Japan was surrounded with guns pointed at her heart. Then came the Russian Japanese war and Japan secured the extreme point of the cape as a lease, but Russia was still behind her and Germany at her side. After the World War, the situation changed. Japan said to England, who held India, Hong Kong, half of Africa and all the continent of Australia; to France who had North Africa and Syria; to America who held half of Mexico, Puerto Rico, the Phillipines and the Canal Zone: I need Manchuria more than you need any of these territories. Manchuria today has no government, but is in the hands of roving bandits. Its land and materials are absolutely necessary to my development and expansion as a nation. Moreover there was one thing more which Japan did not say aloud, but which was even more true: Unless I take Manchuria now when you can't stop me, you will seize it at the very first moment you can. England, France and America, gorged with the loot of the world, suddenly became highly moral on the subject of annexing other people's land. No!, they said, and Japan walked out of the League of Nations and took Manchuria.

YOSUKE MATSUOKA

I talked today a half hour with the man who was the Japanese delegate at the time to the League of Nations, and who walked out when Japan's request was refused. He is a quiet man slow and low of speech, who as president of the state railways of Manchuria, ranks as a viceroy and premier, with the destinies of thirty millions in his hands. And moreover with the responsibility of proving to the world, that colonial enterprise by a colored nation, need not imply the caste, exploitation and subjection, which it has always implied in the case of white Europe. He took time to talk with me while automobiles with visitors and officials waited, not because I represented power, influence or publicity, but because I was a colored man interested in the development and independence of the colored peoples of the world. We talked of industry, capitalism and communism. He said that in some ways Japan was the most communistic of modern states. In Japan there had never been that strong sense of individual ownership of property that characterized so many peoples. There was a strong sense of common ownership of all wealth, of willingness to give to others and sacrifice for the common good. I ventured boldly to add: you Japanese by your marvellous national discipline, were able, without revolution, to transform Japan from Feudalism to Industrialism. May it not be possible, again without revolution, and with that same discipline and boundless sacrifice, for Japan to make that further inevitable change from private profit to public welfare?

JAPANESE COLONIALISM

I brush aside as immaterial the question as to whether Manchoukuo is an independent state or a colony of Japan. The main question for me is: What is Japan doing for the people of Manchuria and how is she doing it? Is she building up a caste of Superiors and Inferiors? Is she reducing the mass of the people to slavery and poverty? Is she stealing the land and monopolizing the natural resources? Are the people of Manchuria happier or more miserable for the presence of this foreign power on their soil? I have been in Manchuria only a week. But in that time I have seen its borders north, west and south; its capital and their chief cities and many towns; I have walked the streets night and day; I have talked with officials, visited industries and read reports. I came prepared to compare this colonial situation with colonies in Africa and the West Indies, under white European control. I have come to the firm conclusion that in no colony that I have seen or read of is there such clear evidence of

1. Absence of racial or color caste.
2. Impartial law and order.
3. Public control of private ca ital for the general welfare.
4. Services for health, education, city-planning, housing, consumers' cooperation and other social ends.

5. The incorporation of the natives into the administration of government and social readjustment.

There is undoubtedly much still to be done in all these lines, but the amount already accomplished in four years is nothing less than marvellous. The people appear happy and there is no unemployment. There is public peace and order. A lynching in Manchoukuo would be unthinkable. There are public services to improve crops, market them and increase their prices. Manchoukuans are in the police force and the schools and public services. I could see nothing that savored of caste: their separate schools for Manchoukuans and Japanese. But this is based largely if not wholly on the fact that one people speak Chinese and their is no separation in the higher schools. The Japanese hold no absolute monopoly of the offices of the state. The new housing and new cities take account of the Chinese as well as the Japanese. There has been private investment of capital on a considerable scale; but the railroads are partially owned by the state; electricity, water, gas, telegraph and telephone are public services. The largest open cut coal mine in the world is in Manchuria: these mines send out 23,000 thousand tons of semi-bituminous coal a day; they manufacture coke and sulphuric acid and 24,000 tons of gasoline; they employ 30,000 miners; they have schools, library, hospital, water, sewage and parks. Electricity for a large part of Manchuria is made here - a total of 130,000 kilowatts. Yet all this is not only half owned by the government but the private employee is under strict government control and regulation. This does not mean that the government of Manchoukuo is controlling capital for the benefit of the workers. But neither so far as that is concerned is Japan. There is however no apparent discrimination between motherland and colony in this respect. Nowhere else in the world to my knowledge is this true. And why? Because Japanese and Manchoukuans are so nearly related in race that there is nor can be no race prejudice. Ergo: no nation should rule a colony whose people they can not conceive as Equals.

16-11-32

Conference

Tomorrow I leave Manchoukuo after a stay marked by courtesy, sympathy and hospitality. today for four hours I have sat in conference with citizens, explaining by means of an interpreter the intricacies of the Negro problem. I was driven to Port Arthur and entertained at lunch and later invited to dinner. Graduates of several American Universities were present. To-night the American consul called.

(signed) W. E. B. Du Bois

16-11-33

COPY undated

THE FALL OF THE BAHA'I.

I remember Abdul Baha of Persia. He visited me personally in New York in 1912. He spoke to colored folk at Chicago that summer and since: "His Holiness, Baha'o'llah, has proclaimed to the world the Oneness of the world of humanity .... The various colors of human kind lend a harmony and beauty to the whole... Therefore all must associate with one another, even as flowers consort harmoniously together in a given garden."

It seemed even then too fine a vision to be true of any ethic with an American following; and it was. I have lived to see the Baha'i follow that dismal procession which began in America with Roman Catholicism. The early Catholic priests fought slavery and then gradually condoned it. The Episcopal Church of the 18th century tried to educate Negroes into freedom and ended by admonishing them to be good slaves. The early Methodists welcomed Negroes and the Baptists and Presbyterians followed them; and they all segregated the blacks in separate churches with inferior accomodations and ministry in order presumably to demonstrate the "Oneness of Christ." The Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. and even the Salvation Army drew the color line. In fact, in America color discrimination in religion is more complete than in education, civil or political life.

There have come lately certain ethical systems like Unity and Baha'ism. They profess to stress right conduct rather than dogma. Unity started out bravely. In a dozen centers it welcomed Negroes to its meetings and even made a few of them leaders. Then gradually it drew the color line. Only the Baha'i were left, and last year at their meetings in Nashville they succumbed. For the first time they held a public meeting in the Hermitage Hotel to which no Negroes, not even members, were invited; and they voted for color segregation at future meetings.

38-B-303

Not only this but they put the question to the present Guardian, Shoghi Effendi How the matter was presented to him is the secret of certain American leaders. But he answered

"Your Assembly's suggestion that Baha'i public meetings should henceforth be conducted separately for whites and colored and that study classes resulting from such meeting should likewise be conducted separately until individuals of both races are truly confirmed believers is splendid as it will undoubtedly help in removing the misunderstanding and obstacles that have thus far stood in the way of the expansion of the Faith in Southern States."

FOR THE PITTSBURGH COURIER

By W. E. B. Du Bois

The real problem of industry is how to make people who get low wages buy large quantities of goods at high prices. And here is the solution: pay high wages or make goods cheap.

•••

The thing for which men must weep bitter tears, is not the reports of battles in Ethiopia; it is the tale of death and destruction; of legless, armless, blind and deaf men crawling through life; of poverty and suffering in both Italy and Africa, and of the insanity that not only makes this possible, but impossible to halt.

•••

Those who have watched the Hauptman case ask: what is justice and how shall it be achieved? The murder of a helpless baby is not appeased with the murder of a tight-lipped liar. And the greater guilt lies on a nation which has gotten years of sadistic glee out of both these horrible deaths.

•••

It is easy to get sympathy and publicity for floods, fire and tornadoes; but little is done for those in the cold, grey aftermornings, who have lost home, furniture, clothes and jobs. They can only wail and wander.

•••

There are two new moves for Hitler: to abolish the Polish Corridor and to demand the return of German colonies; and these will yet come.

•••

One thing the depression has done. It has made it impossible for wise-acres to declare that all who will may work. It has made it impossible for the state to refrain from competition with private industry. This marks an era.

•••

Usually in Southern calamities, the death list if largely, if not entirely, black. In the recent floods and tornadoes, however, God has shown singular indifference to the Color Line. The Bible Belt should inquire into this.

•••

BOOK MANUSCRIPTS

(NON-FICTION)

AFRICA, ITS GEOGRAPHY, PEOPLE AND PRODUCTS.

By W. E. Burghardt Du Bois.

1.

The Geography of Africa.

Africa is an old and storied continent. It is probable that out of Africa came the first civilization of the world, and certainly, in that continent the tragedy of the history of mankind has played its greatest part. To the Grecian world, to the Roman Empire, as well as to the American and modern European world, Africa has been of supreme importance, and it is well worthwhile to know something of its peculiar situation, history and meaning. It is one of the oldest of the continents. Most of its surface is covered with the limestones and sandstones of the Palaeozoic Age, and with granite, gneiss and crystalline rocks. There are several striking things about its geography. First, there is the Sahara Desert, which cuts the main part of Africa off from the Mediterranean world and makes Mauritania, as we may call North Africa, a sort of island, surrounded on three sides by the sea, and on the fourth side, by the sands of the desert. At various times the ocean, in truth, occupied the desert, and in the Eocene Age or earlier, the sea reached as far as Lake Chad. During the Devonian Age, large parts of Africa now elevated, were under water, forming a vast inland sea with some connections with the ocean. Then, by volcanic and seismic action, the continent was raised, bringing the second great characteristic of Africa, namely; the high mountains and tableland running down from Abyssinia to the Cape of Good Hope.

48-46-46

In this region there came two great falls in the earth's surface, making rifts or deep fissures, where the waters, gathered in the series of Great Lakes, drain North through the Mediterranean to the Nile, and South through the Zambezi to the Indian Ocean. Along this highway of mountain, river and lake, the earliest history of Africa began and the latest is being played today.

There are two other regions of equal importance. The great valley of the Congo River; a basin of one and one-third million square miles; and the Sudan, the tableland mountain and coast, stretching from the Nile straight across Africa to the Atlantic.

Africa extends from Latitude 37 ° North to 34 ° South, and from Longitude 17 ° 20' West to 51 ° 15 ' East; its greatest width is 4,000 miles, and the greatest length, 5,000, and it contains an area of 11,508,793 square miles. Its contrasts, however, with the other continents, with Europe, Asia and America, are striking: Africa is three times the size of Europe, yet, while Europe has 20,000 miles of coast, Africa has a coast line of only 16,000 miles. Thus, Africa is noted for absence of good harbors, and a comparative paucity of islands.

Straight through the center of Africa, from the Gulf of Guinea to the Nile, runs a volcanic belt, which divides the continent in two. North of this line the continent rises to between 1,300 and 1,500 feet above the sea level. South of it, it goes still higher to 3,000 and 3,500 feet. Thus, all Africa is a vast plateau which has often been likened to an inverted plate, rising by a series of terraces from the sea level to the high interior. Each terrace is guarded by an outer rim, higher than the terrace itself. And through this rim the rivers cleave their way from the interior, dropping down a series of falls and rapids, until they reach the narrow coast and the ocean. Thus, Africa is walled against the outer world by rocks and trees, and even the size and variety of its rivers offers no such invitation to the foreign explorer, as one finds in Europe and in America.

48-16-47

We may distinguish nine main geographical divisions in Africa: (1) The Valley of the Nile, (2) The Sahara Desert, (3) The Atlas Mountains and the Northwest, (4) The Sudan, stretching South of the Sahara, from the Senegal to the Red Sea, (5) The West African Coast, (6) The Congo Basin, (7) The Abyssinian Mountains, (8) The East African Plateaus and Coast, (9) The South African Plateau.

Africa has no great amount of very high or very low land. The lands, 600 feet and less above the sea, are confined to a narrow strip along the Coast, often less than 50 miles wide and seldom as wide as 200 miles. The Uplands, between 600 and 1,500 feet, are extensive, especially North of the Equator, where they form the Sahara Desert and the valleys of the Niger and Nile. Further South, they form much of the Basin of the Congo. Highlands of 1,500 feet or more are extensive South of the Equator and cover nearly all the southern portion of the continent. Indeed, these elevated tablelands, with peaks and ridges, are characteristic of Africa, especially toward the East and South.

The Atlas Mountains are a series of ranges in North Africa, attaining their greatest height in Morocco. The Eastern and Southern plateaus are 2,000 or more feet in height and form the backbone of the African continent. They divide themselves into the Abyssinia highlands, and East African Plateau, and the South African Plateau.

The Abyssinian Highlands are a mountainous mass, built up by volcanic action, rising abruptly toward the East, and gradually toward the West. On the East, they leave a series of maritime plains next to the sea, forming a sort of natural boundary for the Abyssinians and the land claimed by various European powers. Then, comes a series of mountain ranges, parallel to the coast, undulating plateaus, with rivers, lakes and peaks, and finally, the mountainous region next to the Sudan with deep ravines.

48-16-4B

The high ground of the main axis of Africa spreads out to make the East African Plateau. From this plateau, the waters flow down to feed the Nile, the Congo and the Zambezi, and there are a series of immense lakes and numbers of smaller ones. The coast rises by stages toward the interior, broken by two large valleys, running North and South. Probably, there was formerly a great chain of mountains, from North of Lake Nyasa to the mountains of Abyssinia, and a second chain on the plateau between Lake Nyasa and Lake Tanganyika with a valley between. Then came a great subsiding of land, forming two lines of depression, which come together at Lake Nyasa. In the lowest part of these depressions are the Great Lakes. In the Western depression, are the four great lakes, While the Eastern depression runs North through Kenya to the Red Sea. North of the Victoria Nyanza rises the great granite mass called the Ruwenzori Range, and to the West are the Mufumbiro, a mass of volcanoes, active and extinct. Further South and toward the coast are isolated mountains, like Kilimanjaro and Kenya.

The South African Plateau begins between Lake Nyasa and Tanganyika and spreads over the vast areas of South Africa as far as Table Mountain. These South African mountains appear as flat-topped ramparts, with abrupt sides, pierced by steep ravines. In both South Central and South Africa there were formerly vast inland seas, but most of these have been filled up by the drainage from the higher land and by the action of volcanoes. Southern Africa consists ~~them~~ of a central tableland which culminates in the Drakensberg Mountains, ~~which~~ They extend in a great circle following the curve of the coast from Portuguese African to Cape Colony. From these mountains the South African table land slopes to the West, forming the Basin of the Orange River, and drops abruptly in the East to the sea.

48-16-49

In the region of Lake Nyasa, the mountains are highest toward the West, but fall abruptly in the direction of the Congo, making a magnificent vistas ~~for~~ of scenery. Out of this region, rivers flow to the lakes and to the sea. South of the Zambezi in Rhodesia, appear the high plateaus of Mashonaland and Matebeleland, rich in gold and minerals, and with confused mountaineous masses, overlooking the great Rhodesian plains.

~~Where~~ Southward begin the broken ranges of the Eastern Transvaal, the treasure house of the world, with the Witwatersrand and its fabulous gold fields. West, between the Transvaal and Southwest Africa, is the great Kalahari Desert, corresponding to the Sahara of the North. The Orange River Free State and the lower Transvaal form a great interior plateau, like an inverted saucer, with its edge rising in mountains to separate the interior from the Coast. South of the main ranges of the Drakensberg Mountains are a series of other ranges, parellel to the Coast, including the Great Karroo, and coming down by successive steps to the Southern Sea.

48-16-50

The North and West African plains, ~~indeed,~~ occupy more than half the continent, between the Nile and Cape Verde and the Sahara and the Congo. They are lower than the Southern half of the ~~Congo~~ Continent, with few mountains. In West Africa there is the low, swampy coastland with rivers, creeks and lagoons, and then a ~~belt~~ girdle of ~~thick~~ forests, and behind this high open country with low bush.

In this region, there are two mountain districts: the Futa-Jallon, a granite mass, which is the headwaters of the principal West African rivers; then, ~~there are~~ a series of mountains, like the Kong, and the highlands of Dahomey and Nigeria, down through the Adamawa, forming a mountain rampart on the West Coast, which continues to Cape Colony.

The deserts of Africa show the results of the mountain ramparts toward the Coast. The Mountains catch and percipitate the monsoon winds monster, so that the interior of Africa, both North and South, tends to dessication, a drying-up of seas and lakes, which has been going on for a long time. On the other hand, the rivers of Africa are large and notable. All the world has read about the Nile and Niger, the Congo, and the Zambezi. Long and large as they are, however, navigation is difficult for various reasons, except at stretches here and there. The rivers fall into four groups, according as they drain into the Mediterranean, the Atlantic and the Indian Ocean, or into the inland seas and deserts. Beside the rivers, we have for navigation, the lakes, and the coast lagoons.

The greatest of the African rivers in length and history is the Nile, and it has the longest stretch of navigable water. The Nile rises in the mountains of the East African Plateau, passes through the Great Lakes, and emerges from Lake Victoria as the White Nile. The Blue Nile comes down from the mountains of Abyssinia and joins the White Nile at Khartum, and further on the Atbara brings more water from the Abyssinian highlands. Then, from Berber to Alexandria, 1,800 miles, the Nile flows through the desert and is the sole source of water for an immense region. From the Lake Victoria to the sea, the river is 3,410 miles long. In West Africa for 900 miles, from Morocco to Senegal, there are no rivers. Then comes the great Senegal, navigable as far as Kayes, with tributaries that form lakes in the wet season. South of the Senegal, is the Gambia, about 1,000 miles long. The Niger River which next to the Nile is perhaps the most celebrated, is 2,600 miles long and rises in the Futa-Jallon highlands. It drains a basin of over a million square miles, and is rather singularly divided into three parts: the Upper Niger, rising in the mountains, carries the tropical rains, North and East to Timbuktu. The Middle Niger, beginning at Timbuktu, expands these waters into lakes and marshes, covering a wide plain. In the hot season, most of this water evaporates, but some of it flows on into the Lower river. the Lower Niger receives a number of tributaries and becomes the great highway, from the Sudan to the Gulf of Guinea. Its territory extends over 150 miles, and has an intricate system of waterways. Between the Gambia and the Niger, a number of small rivers come down from the highlands and drain into the lagoons and the ocean.

48-16-51

Back in the interior, Lake Chad is a center of drainage with no outlet to the sea; the water escaping by evaporation. In many other parts of Africa, there are similar interior drainage areas.

The next great river is the Congo, which drains a basin of 1,300,000 square miles, and flows through a great central plateau with an enormous numb r of tributary rivers. Originally, the Congo started North and East, and then probably by volcanic action was turned toward the West, and coming down to the Coast tore its way to the sea through a deep gorge, which is so narrow that no railway has been run through it. The gorge has been cut through a range of crystalline rocks of an average height of 2,500 feet.

48-16-52

Much of the present Congo Basin was once a sea, and many lakes and marshes mark the drying-up of the waters. In all, there are some 7,000 miles of navigable waters in the Congo system, but they are not all continuous and the depth of the water depends upon the rainy season. There are about 10 chief navigable tributaries to the Congo; the MAIN ONES being the Lualaba and the Luapula. Between the Congo and the Orange River, there are few streams of importance. The Orange River rises in the East of South Africa in the mountains of Basutoland and runs West a thousand miles into the Atlantic Ocean. It loses, however, most of its water by evaporation.

In South East Africa there are a number of smaller rivers, like the Limpopo, but the great river is the Zambezi. The Zambezi is 1,850 miles long and drains a half million square miles. It flows Southeast, and on the plateau is broad, shallow and slow, but when it pierces the hills it drops from the high ~~plateaus~~ land, and it becomes a raging torrent, and the Victoria Falls, it drops 357 feet, and finally it emerges in the Mozambique Channel. Formerly, the river probably ran down to South Africa, and then by volcanic action was forced to leap off the steep plateau.

From the Zambezi North, there are few rivers of special importance. The African lakes form as important a part of the economy of the continent as the Great Lakes of North America. They have been formed in the Great Valleys, and the chief ones are Lake Nyasa, 360 miles long and 1,600 feet above the sea; above that to the North, likes the great Lake Tanganyika, 2,550 feet above the sea, and one of the deepest lakes in the world; still further North, and 5,000 feet above the sea, is the small and beautiful Lake Kivu; then comes Lake Edward, 3,240 feet above the sea, and Lake Albert, 2,000 feet above the sea. West of the mountains, is the immense Victoria Nyanza, the largest lake in Africa, with an area of 27,000 square miles. This lake is 3,726 miles above the sea. North, are other lakes and swamps, until we come to Lake Rudolph, on the borders of Abyssinia, with 3,000 square miles, and Lake Tsana, in Northern Abyssinia, nearly 6,000 feet above the sea.

As compared with other continents, Africa is deficient in islands, giving the explorer and the intruder little chance for a base of operations. Consequently, the islands have had very little to do with the development of the mainland. The Azores are over a thousand miles from the coast. The Canary Island, called by the ancients, "The Fortunate Islands", are much nearer, but they face the blank wall of the desert. The Cape Verde Islands, a volcanic group, are about 350 miles from Senegal. The one little island of Goree, which is near the coast, was a celebrated center of the slave trade. Along the south Atlantic Coast are a few small islands, like Fernando Po and ~~Se-nthome~~ San Thomé. A few small islands are out in the Atlantic, like St. Helena, where Napoleon was imprisoned. The East Coast has also few islands near the mainland, but there is one immense isle, Madagascar, a thousand miles long and 225 miles wide, ~~with a population of 3,000,000,~~ which rises percipitiously on the East but slopes gently toward Africa and has an average height of 4,000 feet. Further North is Zanzibar, noted for spices and slaves.

48-16-53

The geographical conditions thus outlined have greatly affected the history and development of Africa. North Africa and the Valley of the Nile, became early a part of the great circle of the Mediterranean civilization. But Africa, South of the Sahara, and South of Abyssinia, was largely ~~brought~~ walled up from the world. Perhaps in early times this Southern part of the continent was connected directly by land with South America. On this possible fact is based the various legends and narratives of Atlantis, and the presence of Negro blood in ancient America gives some countenance to these theories. Civilization is never a matter of pure isolated races. It arises from a series of contacts between peoples, and the ~~completion~~ development of the strange and the unknown. Africa, cut off by sea and mountain and desert, has had to fight its battle with nature alone, with only ingress here and there by strictly guarded gateways. Another thing must not be overlooked when it comes to the question of African history, and that is climate and disease.

418-16-54

Africa is bisected by the equator, and is consequently, a land of high temperature. North Africa, above the Sahara, and South Africa, have the climate of the temperate zones modified by rainfall. In the hot zone South of the Sahara, the seasons are determined by the rain. On account of the belt of clouds, the heat equator is North of the real equator. It extends from Sierre Leona, past the great belt of the Niger River, and then to the Red Sea at Jibuti. At the borders of the North and South Temperate Zone; that is, in the Sahara and the Kalahari Deserts, there is least rain-fall. The region of rain lies between these limits, and divides itself into three areas. In one area, some distance from the equator, the wet season begins as soon as the sun is verticle, and lasts two or three months. In the second rain area, further inland toward the equator, there are two rainy seasons, and the rains lasts longer and are more intense; that is, from May to October, the rainy season stretches from Freetown across the continent to the highlands of Abyssinia and South almost to the equator. From November to April, the rainest season is in the basin of the Congo and around the Great Lakes, crossing Africa from the Cameroons to Lake Victoria and from the Cameroons to the Zambezi. At these times, the rain exceeds 40 inches, and sometimes much more. In other parts of Africa, the rainfall is distributed widely, especially on the plateaus and coast lines. In the Cape Provinces, the rain falls during the Southern winter, while in the rest of South Africa there is much variation in the amount of rainfall. The amount of rain is, of course, determined not simply by the heat, but by the winds. Great hot Africa heats the air; it rises, and the cool winds rush in. But these winds ~~from the origin~~, lose their moisture in the mountains. The West winds on from the Atlas Mountains; ~~and~~ the Northeast winds on the mountains of Abyssinia; and the South East winds on the mountains of East Africa.

48-12-53

The diseases of Africa, arising from its climate and other reasons, tell much of its history and condition. In the temperate zones persons suffer from smallpox, plague, typus, enteric and relapsing fever, diphteria and influenza. These, in historic times, have been the greatest destroyers of life in Europe. Their victims either die or recover completely. The only exceptions to this rule are tuberculosis and syphilis. The situation in the tropics is different. The infections are caused by creatures of a higher type, and these parasites are conveyed by insects, so that it is a complicated and difficult thing to protect them. The vegetation organism which bring diseases in the temperate zone can be attacked by bodies which they themselves give rise to, and these protective germs, not only counteract the attack, but usually give immunity from further attacks. Few such protections have been discovered for the scurges of the tropics, and thus, on the part of white people and black, there is a severe struggle for survival. The animal organisms which produced malaria and dysentery, make their victims ill for indefinite periods, and subject to repeated attacks. Between the Zambezi and the Sahara Desert not one child in five does not suffer from Malaria and more than 20% of them die from this cause. Yaws, leprosy, sleeping sickness, are causes of large numbers of deaths, and much disability, and besides this, there are many unrecognized and obscure diseases and drains upon health. Such facts explain, not simply the difficulty of African exploration, but the tremendous fight for civilization which the African native has long had.

48-16-56

Africa has many types of vegetation: (1) Mediterranean vegetation, which resembles that of Southern Europe. (2) The vegetation of the desert, where all growth must depend upon occasional showers or moisture underground. (3) Grass and scrub-lands in those districts of East and South Africa where the rainfall is scanty. (4) The grass and bushes which grow on the Savannahs, Northeast and South of the Congo Basin where agriculture is possible. (5) The forests.

~~The Forest.~~ The great forests of Africa extend throughout the whole of the coast regions and ~~from isles~~ for miles inland and then across Nigeria into the French and Belgian Congo. The trees are in great variety. In East Africa, the forest areas are less extensive. They are formed on mountains and along the coasts and on the borders of the rivers. In South Africa the more important forests are on the slopes of the Drakensberg Mountains. In North Africa, there is much wood in Abyssinia, and in some parts of the Egyptian Sudan.

Turning now from the vegetation to the animal kingdom, we must note again that the Sahara has divided Africa into two great parts. North of the Sahara, the animals are those of Europe and Northern Asia. South of it, we have the distinct African fauna. There have been, naturally, migrations of animals to different parts of the continent, but these have been slow. For the most part, this animal migration has been toward the valleys of the Great Lakes. There are certain periodical migrations which still take place.

The wild animals fall in two groups: those of the Grasslands and those of the tropical forests. In the Grasslands, are the antelopes, the zebra, the hippopotamus and the elephant. Of the flesh-eating animals, there are the lion, the leopard, the lynx, the hyena and the jackal. In the forests, are many species of monkies, apes and baboons. The gorilla and the chimpanzee stretch across the heart of the continent. There are many snakes. The crocodile and hippopotamus are in the marshes and rivers. The largest bird is the ostrich and there are many varieties of parrots and game birds. Most of these animals are in danger of extinction because of the hunters. Some of them have retreated to regions where they are safer. The remaining animal life is still large and varied.

418-16-37

The People

The People of Africa, like those of all continents, are very much mixed in origin and in blood. No pure race can be isolated in Africa, Europe or Asia by any known scientific measurement. In Africa, the strongest and most persistent element is the so-called Negro race. The Negro race is a product of climate, water supply and food, together with many other factors of physical and social environment. It is characterized, mainly, by dark brown skin and curly or frizzly hair. But the type varies greatly in different parts of Africa and at different times of historic development. The Negro can be traced widely in the history of the world. He is found in Southern Asia and in Oceanica. There are traces of him in China and Japan. He is clearly discernible in Arabia and in pre-historic times was on the shores of the Baltic and in many other parts of Europe. He is discernible among the aborigines of America. Possibly, mankind already darkened by the sun, came out of Southern Asia in two streams: the long-headed man passed into Africa and became still darker by the climate; the broad-headed man went into Eastern Asia, and a combination of the two might have formed the white inhabitants of Europe. Or perhaps mankind, originating somewhere about the shores of the Mediterranean Sea, might have passed down into Africa and become darker and more Negroid; or there may have been many starting points for the human species in Asia, in Europe, and perhaps in Africa, itself. In historic times, we find these Negroids occupy two-thirds of Africa and are strongly represented elsewhere. It is still a large factor in the population of Southern India and in the Malay Peninsula. It is dominant in the population of Melanesia and Northern Australia, and in Eastern India. In every age this Negro element has freely mingled with other elements of mankind, so that the so-called mixed races are as typical of Africa as the darker element. Even in Algeria today, a writer remarks: "There were all types of the various Algerian soldiers..... amidst the fair and ruddy complexion of the sons of European settlers, and the darker skins of Berbers and Jews, were to be seen the features and hair of the descendants of the African race." So in Morocco, there is much Negro blood, and throughout Egypt and Arabia, and in South Africa. In all Africa Black blood fades imperceptibly into white and no line can be drawn except in the case of the newer color conscious whites of South Africa.

48-16-58

It is easy in Africa in historic times to distinguish pretty clearly certain waves of migration. If we take the highway of the Great Lakes, we find in the extreme South the Bushman, small yellow crisp-haired and ~~small~~ Asiatic in type. Next, come the Hottentots and then the great mass of the Bantu Negroes, dominating the Southern half of the continent and extending North to the Sudan. Above them are the so-called Hamitic Negroes; tall, black men, allied more closely than the Bantu, with neighboring types of Asia. Finally, in Egypt and in North Africa, are the Semites, less Negroid than the others and yet distinctly African in color and type and indistinguishable from the main mass by any exact line. ¶ Stretching out from this North and South ~~thought~~ line of ~~invasion~~ migration, is the Western Sudan extending to the Atlantic. Here are many types of Negroes: The black tribes of the Gulf of Guinea, whom many have allied with the culture of some ancient Atlantis, the Bantu tribes of the Northern Congo Plateau; the Hamitic and Semitic Negroes of the Sudan South of the Sahara, and the tall, thin black men of that vast district between Lake Chad and the Nile. ¶ In the Valley of the Congo, the Bantu-speaking people, composed of many ethnic elements, were supreme, and extended down until they touched the Hottentots and Bushmen. In the South and Southwest are tribes of Hottentots and Bushmen with a strong modern intermingling of Dutch, English and Portuguese blood.

48-16-59

Here, then, is the panorama of the people of Africa. They would ~~not~~ present no unusual problem of origin and development had it not been for the slave trade. The slave trade for centuries put the civilized world upon the defensive. Religious leaders and scientists felt compelled to justify slavery. They, therefore, evolved the theory of the "Negro" race, marking it off with a distinctness and elaboration that led to singular results. They tried to describe this race minutely by its color, lips, hair, stature and head-form, and thus to set off a part of the black population in Africa as a "pure" race which had no civilization, and no mentality. They easily proved this by declaring that any Africans evincing culture were not "pure" Negroes. As Ratzel points out: "If with Waitz we assume that Gallas, Nubians, Hottentots, Kaffirs, the Congo races, and the Malagasies are none of them genuine Negroes, and if with Schweinfurth we further exclude Shillooks and Bongos, we find that the continent of Africa is peopled throughout almost its whole circuit by races other than the genuine Negro, while in its interior, from the southern extremity to far beyond the equator it contains only light-colored South Africans, and the Bantu or Kaffir peoples.

"Nothing then remains for the Negroes in the pure sense of the word save, as Waitz says, 'a tract of country extending over not more than 10 or 12 degrees of latitude, which may be traced from the mouth of the Senegal river to Timbuctoo, and thence extended to the regions about Sennaar.' Even in this the race reduced to these demensions is permeated by a number of people belonging to other stocks. According to Latham, indeed, the real Negro country extends only from the Senegal to the Niger. If we ask what justifies so narrow a limitation, we find that the hideous Negro type, which the fancy of observers once saw all over Africa, but which, as Livingstone says, is really to be seen only as a sign in front of tobacco-shops, has on closer inspection evaporated from almost all parts of Africa, to settle no one knows how in just this region. If we understand that an extreme case may have been taken for the genuine and pure form, even so we do not comprehend the grounds of its geographical limitation and location; for wherever dark woolly-haired men dwell, this ugly type also crops up. We are here in presence of a refinement of science which to an unprejudiced eye will hardly hold water."

48-16-60

It is, therefore, unscientific and untrue to regard the Negro race as a distinct and special creation with sub-human characteristics. The race, so far as it can be decribed and set apart varies tremendously in color, hair and stature. In parts of the continent where it has had to fight malaria, sleeping sickness and other scurges, it has degenerated into an ugly backward type. In other parts of the land where it has had better chance for physical development and has come in contact with other peoples, it has developed states and civilizations.

48-16-61

As Palgrave says: "The normal African type may best be seen "among the statues of the Egyptian rooms of the British Museum; the large gentle eye; the full, but not over-protruding lips; the rounded contour; and the good-natured easy sensous expression. This is the genuine African model." In the past, civilization and culture has been denied Africa by historians and scientists through the simple expedient of attributing every appearance of culture in the dark continent, solely to the influence of alien races. Thus, the great civilization of Egypt, probably the oldest in the world, is regarded ~~supreme of, incidently, as~~ by many Asiatic rather than African. The culture of Ethiopia is almost forgotten; and the development of Abyssinia is attributed solely to Asiatic influence. The State building of the Sudan is looked upon as Arab; the development of the West Coast and of the Congo Valley is attributed to the Portuguese, and the monuments of Zymbabwe in Rhodesia have been credited to almost everybody ~~except by a few~~ but seldom, to black men. This attitude is all the natural logic of slavery and of the slave trade. We know now that nothing African escapes the touch of the Negro. While, on the other hand, there was ~~no more~~ never a pure Negro culture ~~than there~~ no more than there was a pure Greek culture of a pure Nordic culture. Culture arises from ~~contact~~ the contact and mixture of groups of men.

48-16-62

In every branch of human endeavor Africa made advance. In agriculture and irrigation; in the domestication of animals; and particularly in the use of iron and mining of metals; in the manufacture of cloth and utensils; in the building of temples; in the organization of the family, clan, nation and empire; in military organization and genius, and in the great civilizations of the Nile and the Niger; and the lesser but notable cultures of the East and West Coasts and the Congo Valley. In all these ways and places the work was done by black people. Not, indeed, by any purely race of full-blooded blacks, for such a race never existed, but by that great mass of Negroes and Negroids who inhabit Africa today and have inhabited it during all historic ages.

When black Africa and yellow Asia met in the Valley of the Nile, the result was Egypt, with its thousands of years of world culture. The origin of Egypt is uncertain. Perhaps it had many origins. Some have regarded Egypt as an extension of Asiatic culture up the Nile, and at certain periods during Egyptian history this was certainly true. But the Egyptians themselves regarded their origin as African and as coming Northward along the Nile. Their earliest monuments were well up the Nile, and their language is African and not Asiatic. The mere matter of historic origin, however, is of little importance. The Valley of the Nile became a center of human culture because of its opportunity for the contact of various races of men. Black, yellow and white men ~~or~~ the pre-historic mulattoes which differentiated into these three types and produced an ancient civilization in the Valley of the Tigris-Euphrates, and in the same way, civilization developed in the Nile Valley. All this was part of the great Mediterranean Basin where modern European civilization arose. In the Cretan culture that foreshadowed it, black men from Africa and Asia had their part. Indeed, this gateway of the Nile was for a long time the only chance for black Africa to meet and mingle with the Mediterranean people and devolve by their contact a civilization. Egypt acted as a sort of channel by which the black folk of central Africa were continually drafted int o the service of Europe and Asia. Throughout the 5,000 years and more of history before Christ, the distinct black element surged forward from time to time. The most venerated figure in Egyptian history, as Petrie calls her, was Nefertari, who restored the glory of Egypt after it was overthrown by the Shepherd Kings. Great Egyptian monuments, like the Sphinx at Gizeh, were given typical Negro faces. The dynasty of the builder of the great temple at Luxor and the Colossi at Memnon had new black blood through the

4/8-16-63

Queen Mother, Mutemma. It is significant that when Asia overthrew Egypt Egyptian priests retired to Ethiopia and later the Ethiopian kings re-conquered and ruled Egypt. This Ethiopian center of culture, which was probably older than that of Egypt and survived it, became the center of the culture of the world for a century and more after 750 B.C. Under the influence of Rome and Greece and of the Christian leaders of the Mediterranean regions new Negro centers of culture arose south of Ethiopia, in the Abyssinian highlands, and west in the deserts and oases of the Sudan.

Meantime, small Negro kingdoms and culture were flourishing on the Atlantic Coast and trade between states like Nupe and the Byzantine Empire arose across the deserts. Negro kingdoms flourished in the Western Sudan, with gold mining and manufactures and work in metals.

Then came Islam, which rolled over Egypt but was held back by the ancient Christian kingdom in the highlands of Abyssinia, whence there filtered through the Middle Ages, legends of Prester John. Islam turned North and swept across North Africa into Europe to meet Charles Martell and the battle of Tours. Then, having settled in Spain and Morocco, a return stream flowed south toward the Land of the Blacks.

48-16-64

Islam never conquered the black Sudan, but it converted and transformed it. Arabic became the lingua-franca and a series of Negro kingdoms arose, organized and governed by black men, who professed the Mohammedan religion, and acknowledged the suzerainty of Mecca. Kingdom after kingdom arose, from little black Ghana in the West to Melle and the Empire of the Songhay, which was two-thirds of the size of the United States, and flourished in the 15th and 16th Centuries. Other kingdoms: the Haussa and Bornu, Kanem and Wadai arose toward the eastern Sudan and lasted down to the 19th Century. On the other hand, this Negro Mohammedan development never entirely conquered or overthrew the indigenous Pagan culture of the West Coast.

Here in ~~mountainous~~ isolation with apparently contact only at long intervals with Greece, Egypt, and possibly America, arose that culture which we have seen in modern days in Benin, Yoruba, Dahomey and other lands along the Guinea Coast. ~~Tribenuis~~ Frobenius, summing up Yoruban civilization, says:

"The technical summit of that civilization was reached in the terra-cotta industry, and that the most important achievements in art were not expressed in stone, but in fine clay baked in the furnace; that hollow casting was thoroughly known, too, and practiced by these people; that iron was mainly used for decoration; that, whatever their purpose, they kept their glass beads in stoneware urns within their own locality, and that they manufactured both earthen and glass ware; that the art of weaving was highly developed among them; that the stone monuments, it is true, show some dexterity in handling and are so far instructive, but in other respects evidence a cultural condition insufficiently matured to grasp the utility of stone monumental material; and, above all, that the then great and significant idea of the universe as imaged in the Templum was current in those days."

4/8-1/2-65

Frobenuis identifies this part of Africa with the fabled Atlantis. Here and elsewhere, particularly in the great Congo Valley, the use of iron characterized Africa. As Franz Boaz says:

"It seems likely that at a time when the European was still satisfied with rude stone tools, the African had invented or adopted the art of smelting iron. Consider for a moment what this invention has meant for the advance of the human race. As long as the hammer, knife, saw, drill, the spade, and the hoe had to be chipped out of stone, or had to be made of shell or hard wood, effective industrial work was not impossible, but difficult. A great progress was made when copper found in large nuggets was hammered out into tools and later on shaped by melting, and when bronze was introduced; but the true advancement of industrial life did not begin until the hard iron was discovered. It seems not unlikely that the people who made the marvelous discovery of reducing iron ores by smelting were the African Negroes. Neither ancient Europe, nor ancient western Asia, nor ancient China knew the iron, and everything points to its introduction from Africa. At the time of the great African discoveries toward the end of the past century, the trade of the blacksmith was found all over Africa, from north to south and from east to west. With his simple bellows and a charcoal fire he reduced the ore that is found in many parts of the continent and forged implements of great usefulness and beauty."

Perhaps the village culture of the West Coast, fighting the imperialism of the black Sudan, was the cause of that great mingling of nations on the Congo Basin which sent the Bantus as conquerers down to Lands End. They were not a united people, but a series of tribes, who by successive steps moved out of the region of the Lake Chad and passed down by the Great Lakes and to the Valley of the Congo. They probably mingled with the aborigines or drove out weaker peoples, like the dwarfs or the Bushmen; then they would settle down; develope agriculture and village industry. Then would come with a new migration of warriors sweeping over them. On the central Plateau there were no natural barriers, like the Alps, to defend the settlers against the marauding intruders. Thus, one can sense layer upon layer of culture; civilization, conquest, barbarism.

4/8-16-46

In the Southeast, there was the wide rule of the Monomotapa. Under Portuguese influence, there arose the Kingdom of the Congo; and probably long before that in Rhodesia, a series of influences and contacts from Bantu, East India, Arabia, and others produced the curious succession of cultures, and Zymbabive, with its mining and irrigation; its trading and building. All of this was swept away in modern days by the Zulu-Kaffirs, with their terrible military organization, and the counter-part of this came in blood-thirsty tyranny in the West Coast, together with the deadening of initiative in the Sudan. All these were children of the African slave trade which changed the whole face of African life and deprived black Africa of hundred millions of human beings.

The Languages.

There are usually distinguished five families of African languages: the Sudan Family; the Bantu Family; the Hamitic Family; the Semitic Family; and the Bushman group. All the families are divided into many languages. The Sudan Family, for instance has some two hundred languages, mostly monosyllabic, without declensions and using intonations or pitch for distinguishing words. The Bantu languages, on the other hand, are inflected chiefly by means of prefixes. There are over three hundred languages in this group. The Hamitic languages, which include those of Egypt and of the Hottentots, are inflected. Under the Semitic languages are included the Arabic and the ancient language of Abyssinia.

48-16-67

The Products.

In ancient times, Africa exported gold, ivories, ebonies, skins, wood and various works of handicraft. During the Middle Ages, gold, ivories, skins, Kola-nuts, gums, honey and wheat were exported, and manufactures of the cotton cloth. Then, from the end of the 15th Century, up until the Middle of the 19th Century, Africa's trade was chiefly the export of human beings, which was followed naturally by a period of decay and stagnation. In the 20th Century, the products of Africa are beginning to be of increasing importance. First, in importance, perhaps, comes the products of the oil palm, which is a native of the forest of the West Coast from Senegal to Angola. The cocoanut palm, which grows along the rivers all over the Northern part of Africa, is exported, along with its dried kernels, all copra; and the fiber which is used for mats, sacks and ropes. There are many other oil-producing plants, like the shea butter trees, sesame, and olives. Cotton is becomming a principal crop in Egypt, the Sudan, Uganda, and elsewhere. Sisal-hemp is grown in East and Southeast Africa, and various spices come from East and North Africa. Cocoa is one of the most important industries, and is largely cultivated on the Gold Coast and elsewhere in West Africa. The kola-nut is raised and exported, and in North Africa various European grains are grown. Tobacco is grown in South Africa and in Egypt. The coffee is native to Africa and tea has been introduced by the Indians. Rubber grows over all tropical Africa; in the Congo, on the East Coast, and on the West Coast. Fruits, including oranges and grapes and date palms come fron North Africa; bananas and mangoes from the tropics. Cattle-raising and sheep farming are industries of East and South Africa.

48-16-68

Africa is rich in minerals and the mining industry has greatly affected the modern tropical labor. The principal mining regions are in Algeria; on the West Coast; in the Congo Free State; in Rhodesia and South Africa, and in Madagascar. Other parts are rich in minerals but have not yet been developed. Gold has always been widely distributed and worked. There are ancient gold workings in the Nubian desert; in West Africa and in South Africa. The great modern output of gold came from the elevated ridge between the Vaal and Limpopo Rivers. This deep mass of hard rock is known as the Witwatersrand and it stretches for 50 miles East and West of Johannesburg and yields one-third of the total output of the world's gold. From these mines and others in the Transvaal $200,000,000 worth of gold is gathered annually. About $40,000,000 worth of diamonds come from Cape Province of South Africa, the Orange Free State and the Transvaal. Iron and coal are found in Africa. Iron, having been worked from the earliest days.

Manganese is found on the West Coast; ~~rubber in the Belgian Congo;~~ copper in Rhodesia, and in the Transvaal. Lead, graphite and zinc are widely distributed in the Southern part of Africa. Phosphates are found in the North, and mineral oil in Egypt, Nigeria and East Africa. Soda and salt come from many of the lakes. These are some of the principal products, but beside them are numbers of fibers and vegetables which the civilized world is beginning to use and which eventually will form important ~~rock~~ raw material for the manufacturers and the consumption of the world.

Political Divisions of Africa.

At the end of the Napoleonic Wars, only about 500,000 square miles of Africa ~~was~~ were claimed by Europeans, of which 120,000 square miles was in Cape Colony, South Africa. France, Great Britain, Portugal, had small and more or less shadowy claims. By 1880, these claims had been doubled, especially in South Africa. Elsewhere claims were still undefined. By 1890, the modern division of Africa among European nations had begun to take form: North Africa had been seized; the West Coast partially; the Congo Free State had been formed; Germany had carved out her empire; the Portuguese possessions had been partially yielded, to others and partially consolidated; and Italy and Spain had claims. All this territory amounted to about 1,000,000 square miles with 10,000,000 inhabitants in effective occupation. In 1890, this had increased to nearly 6,000,000 square miles and 75,000,000 inhabitants, while in 1914, the beginning of the World War, the partition of Africa stood as follows:

10-16-07

THE PARTITION OF AFRICA IN 1914.

France	4,283,200	square miles
Britain	3,495,544
Germany	1,061,000
Italy	1,091,000
Belgium	800,000
Portugal	780,000
Spain	75,000
Total	11,555,744	" "

In detail the distribution of this territory was as follows:

(Table adapted from Leonard Woolf's "Empire and Commerce in Africa".

48-16-70

Territory Acquired	Estimated Population	Estimated Extent Square Miles	Acquired by	Date of Acquisition
Northern Coast—
Egypt	11,300,000	400,000	Britain	1882
Soudan	2,000,000	1,000,000	Britain	1898
Tripoli	1,000,000	900,000	Italy	1912
Tunis	1,800,000	46,300	France	1881
Algeria	5,600,000	1,100,000	France	1830
Morocco	7,000,000	190,000	France	1904-1912
Total, Northern Coast	28,700,000	3,636,000
West Coast—
Cape Bogador to Cape Blanco	200,000	75,000	Spain	1885
Senegal	1,250,000	74,000	France	1783,1880-1889
Upper Senegal and Niger	5,000,000	837,000	France	1893-1898
Gambia	146,000	4,000	Britain	Begun before 1880
Portuguese Guinea	400,000	14,000	Portugal	Begun before 1880
French Guinea	1,737,000	92,600	France	1880-1889
Sierra Leone	1,000,000	34,000	Britain	Begun before 1880

18-16-71

Territory Acquired	Estimated Population.	Estimated Extent Square Miles	Acquired By	Date of Acquisition
Ivory Coast . . .	1,216,000	120,000	France	1880-1889
Gold Coast and Ashanti, etc.	1,503,000	80,000	Britain	Begun before 1880. Completed 1901.
Togoland	1,000,000	33,000	Germany	1884
Dahomey	878,000	38,000	France	1892
Sahara	450,000	1,000,000	France	1890-1899
Southern Nigeria	8,000,000	77,880	Britain	Completed 1899
Northern Nigeria	9,000,000	256,000	Britain	Completed 1899
Cameroon	3,500,000	295,000	Germany	1884
French Congo	9,000,000	513,000	France	1885-1912
Belgian Congo	15,000,000	900,000	Belgium	1884-1885
Angola	5,000,000	480,000	Portugal	Begun before 1880
German South-West Africa	120,000	322,000	Germany	1884
Total, West Coast	64,400,000	5,147,480

48-16-72

Territory Acquired	Estimated Population	Estimated Extent Square Miles	Acquired By	Date of Acquisition
South Africa—
Cape of Good Hope (including Bechuanaland)	2,560,000	276,000	Britain	Before 1800
Natal	1,190,000	35,290	Britain	Before 1800
Basutoland	350,000	10,300	Britain	Before 1800
Transvaal	1,686,000	110,426	Britain	1902
Orange Free State	528,000	50,389	Britain	1902
Bechuanaland Protectorate	126,000	275,000	Britain	1885-1891
Rhodesia	1,750,000	450,000	Britain	1889-1900
Total, South Africa	8,190,000	1,207,405

(Woolf. Page 66)

East Coast—

Portuguese East Africa	3,200,000	300,000	Portugal	Before 1880
Madagascar	3,153,000	226,000	France	1890-1896
German East Africa	7,645,000	384,000	Germany	1885
British East Africa	4,000,000	245,822	Britain	1888
Uganda	2,500,000	121,437	Britain	1894-1896
Italian Somaliland	300,000	131,000	Italy	1889
British Somaliland	300,000	68,000	Britain	1884
French Somaliland	208,000	46,300	France	1880-1885
Eritrea	280,000	60,000	Italy	1888
Total, East Coast	21,586,000	1,583,559

4/8-16-73

1. POPULATIONS, AREAS AND POPULATION DENSITIES IN AFRICAN TERRITORIES

Territory	Total Population	Census Date	Miles	No. of Persons per Sq. Mile
Nigeria	18,660,717	1921	365,602	51.0
French West Africa	12,283,216	1921	1,443,706	8.5
Belgian Congo	10,500,000	1923	907,335	11.6
Union of South Africa	[illegible]293,927	1924	473,089	15.4
Ruanda-Urundi	5,008,025	1921	20,120	249.1
Tanganyika	4,123,493	1924	373,494	11.1
Angola	4,119,000		484,800	8.4
Mozambique	3,800,000	1923	426,712	8.2
Uganda	3,145,449	1924	110,300	28.6
French Equatorial Africa	2,845,936	1921	870,000	3.3
French Cameroons	2,771,873	1924	168,500	16.4
Kenya	2,606,509	1924	245,060	10.6
Gold Coast	2,298,433	1921	91,690	25.3
Sierra Leone	1,541,311	1921	27,250	56.5
Liberia	1,500,000	1926	42,000	35.8
Nyasaland	1,207,983	1925	39,964	29.5
Northern Rhodesia	1,004,182	1924	291,000	3.5
Southern Rhodesia	899,573	1921	150,333	6.0
French Togo	747,437	1924	22,050	33.8
Basutoland	543,078	1921	11,716	46.0
South West Africa	225,855	1921	322,393	0.7
Zanzibar	221,925	1924	1,020	217.5
Bechuanaland	158,152	1921	275,000	0.6
Swaziland	113,772	1921	6,578	16.9

48-16-74

The reason back of the ~~participation~~ partition of Africa was ~~merely~~ mainly economic. It is difficult to show this by figures, but a few facts are significant. Leaving out Egypt and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and the Union of South Africa, but including Liberia, the revenue yielded by the African Colonies amounted to about $285,000,000 a year. Africa imports $710,000,000 worth of goods annually, and exports about $800,000,000 worth. This does not, of course, tell the whole history. These exports are chiefly of raw material, the value of which is greatly enhanced by a more or less extensive manufacturing process. As the raw material is often in the nature of monopoly, the price which can be charged for the manufactured article, is limited only by the wealth of consumers, and the ability of European organized labor to demand its share in wages. The resultant margin of profit is very high and explains the equal rush for African raw material in modern times. We may now turn to the separate parts of Africa.

418-16-75

Independent Africa

Abyssinia occupies about 350,000 square miles in Northeastern Africa and has an estimated population of 10,000,000. It is an ancient country, going back to the 10th Century before Christ. It has had a severe struggle for existence; against the Arabs of the neighboring coast whom it conquered and ruled for a while; against the Romans who called in the Nubians to help them; and against the Mohammedans. England meant to annex Abyssinia but when the Mahdi drove her out of the Sudan she allowed the Italians to undertake the job. They were disastrously overthrown in 1896 at the Battle of Adua with the loss of 6,000. This led immediately to the recognition of the independence of Abyssinia, and Great Britain, France and Italy formed a cordon about her, seizing the coasts and carefully ~~surviving~~ dividing her trade. But they ~~had~~ have not since dared to interfere in the internal administration of the kingdom. ~~Recently,~~ Abyssinia ~~has become~~ became a member of the League of Nations in 1923. The present titular ruler of Abyssinia is the Empress Zauditu, a daughter of the great Menelik who died in 1903. The real ruler is Ras Taffari, who is the Acting Regent with the rank of King.

The political institions of Abyssinia are feudal, with a modified cabinet government. Domestic slavery is recognized but slave trading is forbidden. The Abyssinians became Christians in the 4th Century, and are connected with the Church at Alexandria. Nearly a quarter of the adult male population consists of priests, monks or deacons. One-third of the land belongs to the ~~King.~~ church The priests have complete control of ~~the mineral facilities and~~ education. There are a few mission schools. Foreigners are subject to the jurisdiction of a special court and sometimes are tried in their own consular courts. The chief industries are the raising of domestics, animals and agriculture. Coffee ~~and cotton~~ culture increasing. There are no manufacturers and very little mining. Hides and skins, coffee, zinc and ivory are exported to the amount of about $12,000,000 a year. ~~They are~~ There is one railway line built ~~the railroad belt and owned~~ by the French, ~~of which there are~~ 488 miles long, leading down to French Somaliland. The Italians are seeking to get part of this trade now by establishing a free port in Italian Somaliland. The present ruler of Abyssinia is making great effort to modernize the country, but he is handicapped on the one hand by the reactionary elements in his own country, and on the other hand, by the determination of European countries to seize Abyssinia whenever they see a chance. Italy is particularly to be feared, but the jealousy between Italy, Great Britain and France may ~~neutralize~~ neutralize the efforts of all of them. Meantime, the Abyssinian mountains are difficult of access and easy to defend, ~~in~~ Even the absence of sea coasts, while the economic handicap, is a political protection.

48-16-76

~~Liberia~~

Liberia was established at the beginning of the industrial revolution and just after the Napoleonic wars. It represented an attempt to transfer to Africa such of the American Negro problems as interfered with the growth of the cotton kingdom. The development of Liberia was co-incident with the spread of the new world commerce ~~of the~~ during the 19th Century and the economic imperialism of Europe in Africa.

The country was settled in 1822. In 1847, the Republic was established and the independence of Liberia was acknowledged by Great Britain in 1848; by France in 1852; and by the United States in 1862. The Republic is governed by a President, a Cabinet of 7 Ministers, and ~~the~~ a Legislature of 2 Houses. Voters must be Negroes and land owners. The total area of Liberia is 43,000 square miles, with an estimated population of 2,000,000. About 20,000 of these are direct descendants of the American Negro settlers. Education is carried on by 22 Government schools, with 700 pupils, and 67 mission schools with 2,300 pupils. Liberia College is the State college and there are 2 mission colleges. The economic situation of Liberia has been precarious because of the political aggression of Europe and the industrial imperialism of modern capital. Liberia needs technical knowledge, machinery, and manufactured goods to develop her large natural resources, and increase her valuable raw material. Efforts to borrow this capital in Europe by the issuing of bonds resulted in her being outrageously ~~beaten~~ cheated. Other efforts in the raising of raw material of wide demand and ready market suffered from commercial manipulation and change in methods of marketing, as in the case of the sugar crop, the coffee crop, and palm-oil. Frustrated in her attempt at economic independence, Liberia, nevertheless, has always been a country of law and order, and by careful diplomacy has kept from being annexed by European countries, although her claims to a hinterland were ignored by the Congress of Berlin, and she has lost large areas of territory to both England and France.

48-16-74

The growing predomination of German trade in Liberia led to an effort on the part of England to annex Liberia in 1908. This was warded off by an appeal to the United States. Through this appeal her debt was funded until it now stands as an international loan of $1,700,000. For the payment of the interest on this, the revenues are pledged, which now amount to $962,570 a year. This places the country on a solvent basis but still leaves the problem of economic development. The Firestone Rubber Company of the United States has recently come in to raise rubber. This venture succeeds the Liberian Develppment Company, an English concern, which was financed in 1906 on capital promoted on the credit of the Liberian government. The Company failed with its debt saddled on Liberia and its only asset a small rubber plantation. This rubber plantation was bought by the Firestone people, and there are now 6 plantations of 10,000 acres each, which are rapidly becoming the major economic asset of the country. Cocoa, cotton, coffee, palm-oil, Piassava and rice are grown. The total exports amounted to $1,911,000. A little less than half of the trade is with Germany, while Great Britain and the United States each import about $300,000 of Liberian goods, and Holland, about $200,000. There are no railroads in Liberia, but there has been a recent development of good roads and motor trucks. Liberia is a member of the League of Nations.

Raymond Buell says:

"The very fact that the inhabitants of Liberia have been called upon to carry the full burden of government has developed in them qualities which have not yet appeared among natives elsewhere. Moreover, one does not find in Liberia the bitterness between the Creole and the aboriginal native which exists in Sierra Leone, nor the intense feeling which embitters the relations of the Creoles and British officials. The Liberian carries himself as a free man. His feeling was expressed by an American Negro born in Vermont who, during a visit to the United States, said, "I have never been happy until I made Liberia my home."

4-8-19-28

Partially Independent Africa

There are certain parts of Africa which are ~~normally of~~ legally independent, but which in fact are more or less domimted by Great Britain, and are usually regarded as part of the British Empire, although this is not strictly true.

68-16-79

EGYPT

Egypt has passed through curious vicissitudes since the day when it was the greatest empire of the world. It fell beneath Cambyses and then beneath triumphant Ethiopia. It was overthrown by Greece and by Rome, and finally, by Islam. Eventually, it became a part of the new Turkish Empire; then England and France interfered, ostensibly to protect their debts and to safeguard the Suez Canal. France withdrew and Egypt became a province of the British Empire. In 1914, it was separated from the Turkish Empire ~~and declared a British Empire~~ and declared a British Protectorate and its ruler ~~received the Indian~~ was called Sultan of Egypt. The Protectorate terminated in 1922, and the Sultan was proclaimed the King. Nominally, Egypt was an independent country, but in fact, it was still dependent upon England because of the British Army of Occupation and the continued interference of the British with internal affairs. Egypt has a Senate and Chamber of Deputies, Mohammedanism is the state religion, and Arabic the official language. The total area of Egypt, including the Liberian Desert, is 386,000 square miles, of which only 13,600 square miles are cultivated and settled. The population in 1927, 14,168,756 persons. They are of mixed Arab, Berber and Semetic blood, with a large infiltration of Negro blood. There are 2,752 Muhammedan schools, with 5,220 teachers, and 202,795 pupils. One Hundred Thousand of these pupils are under the direct management of the Minister of Education. There is a state university and colleges and technical schools. Egypt owes $450,000,000, upon which there is an annual interest charge of $17,500,000. The revenue amounts to $187,500,000. The exports, 1927, amounted to nearly $250,000,000, and consisted of minerals, skins, cotton and cattle. There are 2,272 miles of railway owned by the state, beside 850 miles of ~~unli~~ light railway.

48-16-80

The Union of South Africa

The Union of South Africa is a free dominion of the British Empire. It was constituted by the South African Act of British Parliament in 1909. This made the self-governing colonies of the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, the Transvaal, the Orange River Free State, into a legislative union under one government, with the name of the Union of South Africa. There is a Governor General and an Executive Council. The legislative power is invested in Parliament, with a Senate and a House of Assembly. The Senate consists of forty members, of whom 8 are nominated by the Governor General and thirty-two elected, eight from each Province. Of the eight nominated, four are selected mainly for their "acquaintance with the reasonable wants and wishes of the non-European races." Senators must be of European descent. The House of Assembly consists of 135 members; 51 from the Cape of Good Hope, 17 from Natal, 50 from the Transvaal, and 17 from the Orange Free State. Every electoral district returns one member who must be of European descent, but each colony decides on the qualifications of its voters.

The total area of the Union is 472,347 square miles. The Cape of Good Hope has 276,966 square miles; Natal, 35,284 square miles; the Transvaal, 110,450; the Orange Free State, 49,647. The population in 1921 consisted of 1,519,488 Europeans; 4,697,813 Bantu; 165,731 Asiatic; 545,548 colored.

In 1925, there were 4,679 state and state aided schools for whites, and 3,275 state and state aided schools for colored races.

The total income of the Union, 1926-27, was $140,000,000. The output of minerals was about $300,000,000 annually, 1926, and the exports in 1926 amounted to about $400,000,000. They consisted primarily of gold, diamonds, wool, hides and skins, coal, bark, corn, meats, and Angora hair.

48-16-81

Taking the separate colonies of the Union, we have, first, the Cape of Good Hope, with 650,000 Europeans and 2,131,215 non-European inhabitants. In this colony, colored people who meet the conditions are allowed to vote, but they cannot be elected to the Union Parliament on account of the National Constitution.

Natal has 158,916 white and 1,292,560 colored inhabitants. Natal raises sugar, tea, and bark used in tanning. There is much mineral wealth, especially coal.

The Transvaal was colonized from Cape Colony in 1836-37. It was recognized as independent in 1852, but annexed by Great Britain in 1877. The Boers rebelled in 1880, and became partially independent. War finally arose, 1900-02, which resulted in the annexation of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State to Great Britain. There are in the Transvaal 607,000 Europeans and 1,540,000 natives and colored people. The Transvaal is mainly a stock-raising country, producing corn and tobacco and livestock. There are iron and brass factories, and the gold output amounts to $200,000,000 a year.

The Orange River Free State was settled by Europeans in the middle of the 18th Century. It was proclaimed a British possession in 1848, but recognized as independent in 1854. Native wars ensued, especially with the Basutus, and the British Government stepped in at the invitation of the Basutu King, Moseah, incorporating a part of Basutuland with the Free State and leaving the other part directly under the British Government, as at present. The Free State was annexed with the Transvaal to Great Britain in 1900. There are 200,000 Europeans and 440,000 natives and colored people in the state. The Colony is devoted chiefly to grazing, agriculture and stock-farming.

The Union of South Africa holds as a mandate under the League of Nations the country which was formerly German Southwest Africa. This country was annexed by Germany in 1884, but surrendered to the troops of the Union of South Africa in 1915.

418-16-82

The country is divided into 17 districts controlled by magistrates and a resident Governor. An Administrator, appointed by the Governor-General, has authority to legislate. The total area of the country is 311,820 square miles. The population is estimated at 234,790 natives and 24,115 Europeans. For the natives, there are 48 government aided mission schools, with 3,945 pupils. Two training schools for native teachers have been opened. The revenue, 1926-27, amounted to $4,500,000. This is a stock-raising country, with little water. The staple export is diamonds, found along the coasts. Besides these, there are copra, vanadium, and tin. The exports in 1926 amount d to over $15,000,000. There are over 1,300 miles of railway.

British Africa

The Empire of Great Britain in Africa began during the slave trade. After the Napoleonic wars, Great Britain held Gambia, Sierra Leone and the Gold Coast in West Africa, and Cape Colony in South Africa. By 1890, she had added to this a claim to Nigeria, some 280,000 square miles in South Africa, 246,000 miles in East Africa, and the Somaliland Protectorate, not to mention Egypt and the Sudan. Between 1890 ~~Just before~~ the outbreak of the war, the Gold Coast and Ashanti were added, the rest of Nigeria, the Transvaal, the Orange River Free State, and Rhodesia and Uganda, making in all, 3,495,544 square miles. By the Treaty of Versailles, this African Colonial Empire of Great Britain was further increased by the addition of German East Africa and a part of Togoland and the Cameroons. Thus, today, British Africa reaches in an unbroken line from the Red Sea, up the Nile, passed the Great Lakes, down to South Africa, together with a strip on the Gulf of Aden, and 4 Colonies on the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Guinea. Let us consider these in detail.

4/8-16-83

The Anglo-Egyptian Sudan

Just as Egypt and Ethiopia ~~of course~~ formed culturally, economically and geographically one land, so Egypt and the Egyptian Sudan have always been united, except in the case of a few unusual interruptions. For instance, in 1882, a rebellion broke out in the Sudan, and from 1885-1898, the black Mohammedan Mahdi and his successor, the Khalifa, held the Sudan against the British armies. His successor was finally subdued in 1899, and a Treaty between Great Britain and Egypt provided for the administration of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, by a Governor-General appointed by Egypt with the consent of Great Britain. British and Egyptian flags were to be used together and the laws were made by proclamation.

TP Recently, the assassination of the British Sidar has led to the virtual exclusion of the Egyptians in the affairs of the Sudan. Instead, the Governor-General and a Council which he appoints makes all laws for the Sudan. The territory consists of 1,014,400 square miles, with a population, 1926, of 7,596,600. The revenue amounted in 1927 to $28,000,000 annually. TP The Sudan is the chief source of gum-arabic and ivory. Beside these, the products are cotton, sesame, senna leaves, ground nuts, hides, skins, gold, millet, cattle and poultry. The exports in 1926 amounted to $25,000,000. There were 1,728 miles of railway. There are eighteen elementary schools, with 8,200 pupils; 11 primary schools, with 1,200 pupils. Gordon College is attended by 370 pupils, who are trained in engineering, surveying, and as teachers and translators. There is also a college attended by 16 students, where Kadis are trained for districtscourts. There are three industrial workshops and a training college for girls of 25 students. There are other girls schools, attended by 555 girls. In addition to that, the Government aids 400 native schools, with 1,500 boys.

48-16-84

Kenya Colony and Protectorate

The process of seizing East Africa was begun by England in 1885: it started at Zanzibar, where for a long time the slave trade, both to Asia and to America, was concentrated. When Great Britain became the ~~protectorate~~ protagonist for the ~~revolution~~ abolition of the slave trade, she concentrated much of her effort at Zanzibar, and gradually her efforts became transformed into an industrial imperialism which brought the British East African Association and certain German Commercial organizations into severe rivalry for the ownership of the land. The result was a partition of East Africa between German and English interests in 1886, which practically meant the seizure of all the lands formerly belonging to the Sultan of Zanzibar. In 1888, the British East African Association became the Imperial British East African Company, with a royal charter claiming some 200,000 square miles of territory and a population of 4,000,000 Africans. In seeking to occupy this territory, they met violent opposition on the part of the natives. Under the pretense of supressing the slave trade, the English under Colonel Lugard, now Lord Lugard, made war against the natives and without legal warrant seized East Africa and Uganda. Finally, in 1894, the British Government annexed British East Africa and Uganda as Protectorates. After the war, the territory was divided. Kenya Colony and Protectorate became a Crown colony in 1920. It is ruled by the white minority, consisting of about 1% of the population. The Governor is appointed by the Colonial Office, and he names a majority of the members of his council. In addition to that, the Europeans elect 11 members; the Indians, 5 members; the Arabs 1 member; while 1 persons, hitherto always a white man, has been nominated "to represent ~~national~~ native interests".

Kenya has an area of 225,100 square miles, and a population of 736,517 in 1926; including 12,529 Europeans, (many of them officials and not permanent residents), 30,583 Indians, and 10,557 Arabs.

48-16-86

The annual revenue is about $13,000,000. Most of the direct taxation falls upon the African natives who are without political voice. Every effort has been made to deprive them of the land. The process of taking the land from the natives began in 1900, and by 1920, practically all the land in Kenya, capable of cultivation, has passed into the hands of Europeans, either as Freehold or on leases for 99 or 999 years. About 10,000 square miles has thus been alienated, and that which is left is of little value. Only about 5,000 square miles of navigable land is left in the native reserves. The great bulk of the land was given away at a rental of a little over 2¢ an acre. In the lease holds can be easily turned into freeholds for small payments. This has been followed by two efforts. First, the effort to concentrate the political power into the hands of less than 10,000 European inhabitants, and secondly, to compel the natives to work on the private farms of the whites. The political movement has taken the form of 3 Imperial Commissions. The latest, of which is the Hilton-Young Commission. Each one of these Commissions has declared that the interests of the natives are too important to be put entirely at the mercy of the handful of white inhabitants. The Report of each Commission has been fiercely repudiated by the white inhabitants.

418-16-86

They argue that Europe must eventually withdraw from Asia and should concentrate on the control of Africa for its labor and raw materials.

Kenya Colony at present raises in the lowlands rice, kola-nuts, cotton, cassava and sugarcane; in the highlands, coffee, corn, wheat and sisal are raised, with diary products and wool. There are ample forests, especially of cedar, rubber and ebony. The undeveloped mineral resources are large. The exports in 1926 amounted to about $40,000,000. There is a railway of 589 miles, from Lake Victoria to Mombasa and steamer service on the Lakes. 42-44

Uganda Protectorate

Uganda was seized by the Imperial British East African Company under Sir Frederick Lugard in 1890. Darcy, a French author says: (Page 288-A. Empire and Commerce in Africa)

"At the head of a considerable military force, Captain Lugard, of the British East Africa Company (Ibea), penetrated as far as Mengo, the residence of King Mwanga, and forced upon him a treaty of protectorate; then turning against the Catholics, he attacked them on some futile pretext, and drove them into a big island on Lake Victoria. There around the king and the French missionaries there had gathered for refuge a considerable multitude of men, women, and children. Against this harmless and defenceless population Captain Lugard turned his guns and Maxims. He exterminated a large number, and then, continuing his work of destruction, he gave full rein to his troops and adherents, who burnt all the villages and stations of the White Fathers, their churches, and their crops."

78-91-87

Uganda was made a Protectorate in 1894 and has a total area of 94,204 square miles, of which 15,000 square miles are lakes. It is divided into four Provinces, and is under direct administration, although the native Kings are allowed to conduct the government of their own subjects. One Province, Buganda, is recognized as a native kingdom under a Kakaka, b with a title of "His Highness." He has three native ministers and a native assembly. Native needs are dealt with by native courts in all the provinces, but there is an appeal to an English Court and Europeans and foreigners are dealt with by the English courts. Great Britain is represented by a Governor, and a legislative and executive council. The total population of Uganda, 1926, was 3,136,946 persons, including 11,613 Indians and 1,752 Europeans. Of the natives, about 790,000 belonged to the civilized Baganda, who are Christians. Schools have been carried on by missionary societies, but the Government is now taking over education. There were 110,000 boys and 71,000 girls in the mission schools in 1926. Cotton is the principal product and is grown by the natives. There were 583,000 acres under cultivation in 1926. Other products are coffee, rubber, and cocoa, and there are valuable forests. There are steamers on the lakes, and railways running to Kenya. There is a net-work of motor roads.

48-16-88

Nyasaland Protectorate

The Protectorate of British Nyasaland was constituted in 1891 and lies along the Southern and Western shores of Lake Nyasaland. It has a Governor with Executive and Legislative councils, whose members he nominates. The area is 37,890 square miles, and the population consists of 1,290,885 natives, and 1,656 Europeans. In 1926, The chief exports were coffee, tobacco and cotton, tea, cattle and livestock. The total revenue, 1926-27, was $1,750,000. There are 350 miles of railroad, which will complete the line to South Africa when a bridge is built across the Zambezi. There are no government schools, but there were in 1926, 2,702 mission schools, with 179,053 pupils. The government has spent but $20,000 a year in helping these schools.

Zanzibar

Zanzibar is an island 53 by 24 miles on the African Coast. It has long been a center of intrigue between Asia and Africa and th domination of Negroid Arabians here built up an old and interesting civilization. It became a center of Asiatic and American slave trade, and it was here that Great Britain and Germany began to intrigue for their African Empire. The supremacy of British interests was declared in 1890, and Zanzibar was made a Protectorate. The Sultan is nominal head of the state, but his decrees must be signed by the British Resident. The Sultan presides over the Executive Council and the British Resident over the Legislative Council. The population of Zanzibar and the neighboring island of Pembra, 1924, was 216,790. The chief industry is raising cloves. Most of the world's supply of cloves comes from Zanzibar, and the average output is 18,000,000 pounds a year. The large plantations are owned by Arabs and mulattoes, but there are also many small native plantations. Pottery, soap and jewelery are manufactured.

48-16-89

The Somaliland Protectorate

The Somalialand Protectorate may be mentioned here as part of the ~~Egyptian~~ East African British Empire. It forms a sort of Coast Guard of Abyssinia, together with the Italian and French zones. It was laid out in 1894, and consists of 68,000 square miles, with a population of 344,700. The exports and skins, hides, gum, cattle and sheep amountedto $1,225,000 in 1926.

British Protectorates in South Africa

We may consider the South African colonies of Great Britain as a mass of territory of which a part, the Union of South Africa, has become an independent dominion, and the rest is in a state of unstaple equilibrium. The Union of South Africa ~~consists then~~ regards Rhodesia, Basutoland, Swaziland, and Bechuanaland, are simply territories belonging naturally to the Union which the British Government is rather arbitrarily withholding. They expect that eventually all these territories are going to become part of the Union. On the other hand, the British Government holds these territories by grace of distinct promises to the natives and to liberal England. As long as the Union of South Africa is openly and definantly refusing to give the native recognized political and economic rights, the home government will have some difficulty in giving up its protectorates. On the other hand, the home constituency is not doing to turn out a government because of any native South African question and continued pressure forces the home government, continually to surrender a little here and there to the pressure from the Union of South Africa.

48-16-90

Basutoland

Basutoland illustrates the situation indicated. Basutoland is an elevated plateau east of the Cape of Good Hope. It has an area of 11,716 square miles, and is the best grain-producing country in South Africa. The country is divided into seven districts, presided over by the hereditary chiefs belonging to the Moshesh family. There are today 495,937 natives, 1,069 colored people, 172 East Indians, and 1,603 Europeans. The Basuto is one of the youngest of the South African Bantu native tribes, and were swept into prominence by that great black King, Moshesh, in the Switzerland of South Africa, as Basutoland is called. The Basutos fought with the Boers and defended themselves successfully. Then the British attacked them and Moshesh severely defeated Sir George Cathcart in 1852. The wise Moshesh immediately proceeded to make peace with the British. When the British acknowledged the independence of the Boers, war between the Boers and the Basutos broke out again. The Boers succeeded in seizing some land and Moshesh again appealed to the British.

Finally, the British interfered, making Basutoland a protectorate in 1868, annexing it to Cape Colony in 1871, and finally transferring it to direct imperial administration in 1883. Today, it is governed by a Resident Governor under the High Commissioner for South Africa. Laws are made by proclamation, but there is a native assembly which debates and advises. The expenditure for education, 1927, was $200,000. There are some 531 native elementary schools, with 44,252 pupils. There are also a few normal and industrial schools. The total revenue, 1926-27, was $1,370,000. The chief exports are wool, wheat, mohair, and corn. There is some working of iron, copper and coal.

Bechuanaland

The great territory lying between the Molopo and the Zambezi rivers has 275,000 square miles, and a population, 1921, of 152,982. It contains large stretches of desert, with 5 important tribes ruled by hereditary chiefs. There is a resident British Commissioner under the South African High Commissioner. The government spent $20,000 in 1926-27 on the schools, which were under the missionary bodies. The revenue, 1926-27, amounted to $600,000, and the chief industry is the raising of cattle; and there is some mining of gold and silver.

48-16-91

Rhodesia

North of Bechuanaland and between the Portuguese Africas, lies the vast territory named after Cecil Rhodes. The part South of the Zambezi is called Southern Rhodesia, and the rest Northern Rhodesia. Until 1923, the Rhodesias was administered by the British South African Company. In that year, Southern Rhodesia received a form of government, with a Governor, Executive Council and Legislature. It contains 149,000 square miles, and has a native population, 1926, of 834,473, with 3,500 colored people and East Indians. The government is practically entirely in the hands of the European population, which amounts to less than 40,000. For the natives, there are 1,297 schools, with 87,305 pupils. Most of the money spent for education goes to the schools for white children. The total revenue, 1925, was about $8,000,000. Most of the land has been taken by the whites, but some land has been set apart as reserves for the natives. The great temptation for the whites in Southern Rhodesia is its mineral wealth. There is gold, silver, coal, copper and asbestos. Twenty-one million dollars worth of minerals were taken out in 1927. There are 2,468 miles of railway.

Northern Rhodesia is a larger, less developed country. It has a Governor and Executive Council, and provision for a Legislative Council. The area is 287,950 square miles, and it is mostly high plateau with thin forests suitable for farming. There is a native population of 1,140,642, and a European population of 4,624. There is one government school and a large number of mission schools. The revenue, 1926-27, was $2,000,000. Minerals, including lead, copper and coal, and grain and tobacco were exported to the amount of $$,500,000. The Rhodesian railroad system runs through Northern Rhodesia from Linvingston to the Congo.

48-16-91a

Swaziland

In the Southeast corner of the Transvaal next to Portuguese East Africa, there is a little area of 6,704 square miles known as Swaziland. It has a population of 112,838, and includes 2,235 Europeans. Swaziland is practically covered by concessions granted in the past by the chiefs to Europeans through bribes of various kinds. Of its area of 4½ million acres, 1,600,000 acres has been set aside for the natives, and they have purchased 77,000 acres in addition to this. The relation of Swaziland to the Union of South Africa and to the British government is complicated by treaties and disputes of all sorts. Practically, it is a protectorate of the British Government, and has been under the High Commissioner for South ~~West~~ Africa since 1906. Native schools have an attendance of 4,215 pupils. There are a few ~~small~~ schools for ~~colored~~ children. The revenue amounts to about $500,000 a year. The products are cotton, tobacco, corn and livestock. There are minerals, but only tin and gold have been worked to ~~a small~~ any extent. The public debt amounts to $275,000.

British West Africa

Sierra Leone was the beginning of the British Empire in West Africa. It originated in 1788, through a "sale" by a native King, and it was designed as a home for Africans ~~natives~~ who had become ~~were~~ waifs in London. ~~They~~ Afterward, it was used as a settlement for Africans rescued from slave ships. It became a little Republic with Freetown as its capital. The area was 4,000 square miles, and the population, 1921, 85,163, of whom 1,161 were Europeans. There were in 1926, 58 primary schools assisted by public funds, and 4 state primary schools. The average attendance was 5,397 pupils. There were 7 assisted secondary schools, with an attendance of 582. The total government expenditure for schools is about $25,000 a year. There are, also, two or three industrial schools. Fourah Bey College is a missionary school and affiliated with the University of Durham in England. The exports of the Colony in 1926 were kolanuts, palm kernels, palm oil, and peassava. They amounted to about $9,000,000. Connected with the Sierra Leone is the Protectorate. If the voters of Sierra Leone had not been Negroes, this protectorate would have been placed under the control of the Colony. It was proclaimed in 1896, and extended inland 180 miles. It has an area of 27,000 miles, and a population, 1921, of 1,456,148. About five thousand of these are whites. The territory is divided into three provinces, each under a white commissioner. The Governor of Sierra Leone is Governor of the protectorate and the Legislative Council, consisting of the Governor, ~~nine~~ five official members, three elected members, and seven nominated members, make the laws. Of the nominated members, three must be paramount chiefs. There are 134 mission schools of which 69 receive assistance from the government. The average attendance is 2,993. There are three assisted secondary schools, and industrial schools, and a government school for the sons of chiefs. The government spends about $15,000 a year on the schools.

418-16-92

British Gambia

British Gambia was discovered by the Portuguese and was made a British Crown Colony in 1843. It is administered by a Governor with a nominated legislative council with a few elected members. The colony proper has four square miles and the protectorate 4,130 square miles. The total population is about 210,000. In 1926, there were 7 elementary schools aided by the government and a number of mission schools. The government spends about $8,000 a year on education. The exports of kola nuts, hides, skins and palm kernels, amounted to about £4,500,000 in 1926. There was a public debt of £500,000. The Gold Coast was discovered by the Portuguese in the 14th Century, and Dutch and English slave traders frequented the Coast in the 17th Century. In 1871, the Gold Coast was transferred to the English by the Dutch and Ashanti was added in 1896, and the Northern territories in 1901, through war and intrigue. The total area of all these colonies is about 80,000 square miles, with 2,078,000 inhabitants, including 2,165 Europeans. The chief products are cocoa, palm oil, cocoanuts, palm kernels, lumber, rubber, manganese, gold, diamonds, livestock and dried fish. The Gold Coast is the greatest cocoa-raising area in the world at present. In 1926, the exports amounted to $60,000,000, of which $45,000,000, represented the value of the Congo. There is a public debt of nearly $60,000,000. There are 22 government schools and 221 assisted schools, with 29,332 pupils. The government expenditure for education is $530,000 a year.

The Gold Coast

48-16-93

British Nigeria

British Nigeria, a vast territory of 335,700 square miles, has a population of 18,765,690, of whom 5,200 are Europeans. This Colony has been built up in various ways. Lagos was "bought" in 1861, and set up as a colony in 1886. Private charter companies purchased British interests in the Niger Valley and obtained a charter in 1886 under the name of the Royal Niger Company. This charter was surrendered to the Crown in 1899, and its territories formedinto two protectorates, Northern and Southern Nigeria. In 1906 to 1914, all of the colonies were consolidated into the Colony and Protectorate of Nigeria.

There is a legislative council consisting of the Governor, members of the Executive Council, and other official members, amounting to 27. Beside these, there are three elective members, six members representing a Chamber of Commerce and banking and shipping interests, and eight members, representing African interests, ~~where there are~~ which have no elected members. Indirect rule through chiefs is ~~protested~~ practiced, and there are native courts with appeal to the English courts. In the Northern Province there are 53 government schools, and 124 unassisted schools. Beside these, there are some 29,000 Mohammedan schools. In the Southern Province, there is a boarding school at Bonny, a secondary school at Lagos, and a high school at Kalibar. There are forty-nine government schools, with 9,074 pupils, 205 assisted schools, with 37,000 pupils, and 3,200 unassisted schools, with about 134,000 pupils. The revenue of the colony amounted to about $40,000,000 a year and a public debt of $115,000,000. In many of the native states and provinces, there are native treasuries, ~~where they own~~ which make local expenditures.

The chief products are palm oil and kernels, cotton, cocoa, mahogany and skins. The natives work in iron, lead and tin, and there are undeveloped deposits of coal, silver, maganese and other metals.

The exports amounted to $85,000,000 in 1926. There were 1,359 miles of railway.

48-16-94

Mandated Territories

Under the Treaty of Versailles, Great Britain received a mandate over German East Africa and a part of Togoland and the Cameroons. Germany East Africa is now known as Tanganyika. It has a Governor, a nominated Executive Council, and a Legislative Council with 13 officials and not more than 10 non-official members. The total area is 373,500 square miles, with a population, 1926, 4,319,000 natives, 15,000 Asiatics, and 4,330 Europeans. There were 84 government schools, and 2,345 Roman Catholic schools, and 1,254 Protestant schools. The total enrollment was 167,383 pupils. Upon these the government spent, 1926-27, $295,000. There are 4,000 square miles in forests, and extensive plantations of sisal, coffee and cotton. Groundnuts, kolanuts, corn, tobacco and tea, are raised. There are 4½ million head of cattle and 4½ million head of sheep and goats in the territory. Coal, iron, gold, lead and copper are present, but not developed. The total exports, 1926, amounted to over $15,500,000. There are 1,206 miles of railway. Great Britain received 12,600 square miles of German Togoland. This territory is attached to the Gold Coast colony and has a population of 188,265, of whom only 15 are Europeans. There are 107 state and mission schools, with nearly 2,000 pupils. Of the German Cameroons, the British received 31,000 square miles, with a population of 660,000 people. The exports are palmoil, palm-kernels, cocoa and coffee, amounting to $1,100,000 in 1926. This territory is attached to Nigeria for administrative purposes.

418-16-95

Belgian Africa. The Congo Valley, with its world of forests, rivers and plateaus, has had an interesting and only partially known history. For a time it was the refuge of weaker people. Into them the tribes retired to escape the empire-building of Egypt and Ethiopia. Later, the native peoples who were resisting the Mohammedanized Negroes of the Sudan, went into the Congo forests; and into the forests eventually the West Coast civilization of Benin and Yoruba extended. Out of these and other elements, and especially out of migration from the region South and East of Lake Chad, there developed great ~~numbers~~ mass movements. First, from East to West, then back again Eastward, skirting the forests and passing down the Great Lakes. Then the stream divided, and a part of it went Northward, and a part of it Southward, and another part West, along the river. Interesting centers of industry and civilization were built up. Agriculturist, miners and workers in metals appeared. Large towns were built, and widespread kingdoms developed. Then came the slave trade, with its disintegration and war raids. Finally, came Henry M. Stanley, working for the Belgians, who proposed to establish in the Valley of the Congo, an independent free state, as a center of Christianity and civilization. The state was founded by Leopold, II, of Belgium in 1885, by international treaty. It became practically Leopold's private property, and the exploitation and cruelty when revealed, aroused the civilized world.

"Europe was staggered at the Leopoldian atrocities, and they were terrible indeed; but what we, who were behind the scenes, felt most keenly was the fact that the real catastrophe in the Congo was desolation and murder in the larger sense. The invasion of family life, the ruthless destruction of every social barrier, the shattering of every tribal law, the introduction of criminal practices which struck the chiefs of the people dumb with horror—in a word, a veritable avalanche of filth and immorality overwhelmed the Congo tribes."

4-8-16-26

Finally, in an effort to reform the situation, the colony was annexed to Belgium in 1927, with a Governor-General and Colonial Council, ~~and Vice Governor~~. The area of the Belgian Congo is 918,000 square miles, with a native population, which has been reduced in a generation to 8,500,000 from a number nearly twice as large. The white population is 18,169. The chief products are palm-nuts and palm-oil, white copra, rubber, cocoa, ivory, coffee, rice and cotton. The minerals are gold, diamonds, copper and tin. The total exports amounted to 729,000,000 francs in 1926, and the debt was 1,893,000,000 francs. There are about ~~5,000~~ 300,000 children receiving elementary education in mission schools. The total expenditure of the state for education in 1927 was 11,200,000 francs. The Congo and its branches furnish 1,784 miles of navigable water, and there are 1,623 miles of railway.

French Africa

French Africa consists of Algeria, with 847,000 square miles: Tunis, with 48,300 square miles; Morocco, 300,000 square miles: French Equatorial Africa, 975,635 square miles; French West Africa and the Sahara, 1,247,191 square miles; Madagascar, 241,094 square miles, and smaller colonies of Reunion, Somaliland, together with the mandated territories. Up until 1830, the Northern Coast of Africa was nominally a part of the Turkish Empire. The French, then, started to interfere in Algeria, ostensibly on account of pirates. Economic imperialism began to work through debts and questions of national honor until Algeria was annexed to France. ~~in 1830.~~ From 1830 to 1847, the conquest went on. Then, a policy was inaugurated of settling French peoples from the South of France in Algeria and a process of amalgamation between the natives and the French proceeded. The result is that gradually Algeria is becoming French, with considerable political ~~slavery~~ autonomy. Its people are Berbers, Arabs, and French with some Negroes, and inter-mixtures of all these races. Algeria has an area of 847,000 square miles, with 6,064,865 inhabitants, of whom 872,439 are Europeans. The value of the exports in 1927 amounted to 3,520,000,000 francs. The chief exports were sheep, prosphates, eggs, wheat, figs, tobacco and wines. There is a University and 17 establishments for secondary education, with nearly 10,000 pupils. British, French and Italian foreigners in Tunis stirred up economic and social trouble, which gave Europe a chance to intervene. At the Berlin Congress of 1878, it seemed probable that Bismark suggested the seizing of Tunis by France, to the great disgust of Italy which regarded Tunis as naturally Italian. At any rate, Great Britain and Germany did not interfere, and in 1881, the French made military intervention and undertook what was called a temporary occupation of Tunis. In 1883, the government of Tunis was placed completely under French control, and with 1898, Tunis became an integral part of the French Empire. Tunis has an area of 48,300 square miles, with 1,986,427 natives, and 173,281 Europeans. The exports, 1925, amounted to 1,270,000,000 francs. They consisted chiefly of grain, marble, metals, cane, fruits, hides and live animals. Morocco was the last ~~of the survivors~~ acquisition of North African territory made by the French. It had been conquered by the Mohammedans between the 7th and 11th Centuries. During the 18th Century, Morroco was more or less in disorder, and France proposed to occupy it. At the Conference at Madrid in 1880, Bismark gave France free hand. A Treaty was signed in 1901 for policing the frontier and training the Moorish army. By recognizing the claims of Italy to Tripoli, France obtained a freer hand and then turned to Spain and Great Britain. Peaceful penetration of Morroco by the French began, but some opposition appeared in Germany among the Pan-Germans. In 1904, the Kaiser visited Tangier in his yacht and declared for a free and independent Morocco. The division of Morroco between France and Spain had been practically ~~decided~~ upon, but now a Conference was called at Algeciras ~~adopted~~ attended by 12 European countries. The resulted in a duel between France and Germany, with Russia, Great Britain and Spain on the side of France. In fact, the Conference foreshadowed the World War. The result of the Conference ~~was~~ was conclusive, although Germany maintained her right to be consulted, and France obtained charge of the police in Morocco. Matters simmered on until 1909, when the Morocco Pact was signed, in which Germany recognized the special political interests of France in Morocco and France promised to maintain "the integrity and independence of the country". Unrest in Morroco spread, and in July, 1911, a ~~British~~ German warship was sent to Adagir. This brought matters to a crisis and very nearly resulted in ~~much excitement~~ war. As a result, France gave Germany a slice of territory in the French Congo, and in March, 1912, made Morocco a French Protectorate. At present, there is a small Spanish zone which Spain dominates, while in Tangier the power is ruled by an International Agency. ~~Nearly the whole~~ All the rest of Morroco is dominated by the French, and contains 200,000 square miles. The population consists of 4,229,146, of whom 104,000 are foreigners. The native population consists of Berbers, Arabs, and Jews, most of them with a large intermixture of Negro blood. There are 90 French schools, with high schools for boys and girls. The Morocco debt consists of French loans to the amount of 705,000,000 francs. Agriculture is the most important industry. There are forests and cereals and vegetables are raised. There are mines of prosphates, lead and magganase. The exports amounted to 710,000,000 francs in 1926.

48-16-97

4-8-16-98

~~French Equatorial Africa.~~ There is a story that French seaman found the Gold Coast in the 14th Century. It was not, however, until the 17th Century that the French founded a settlement at the mouth of the Senegal and began to compete with the Dutch in the slave trade. The French lost their Senegal settlements to the British several times, but finally received them permanently after the Napoleonic wars. Under General Faidherbe, who became Governor-General of Senegal in 1854, they began to exploit and annex the Hinterland. This was continued after the Franco-German War. Gradually, they extended their conquests to the Negro kingdoms on the Niger. In 1884, they had occupied the land extending from the Niger to the Gold Coast and parts of the Ivory Coasts, and Dahomey was conquered in 1893 by the mulatto General Dodds. Timbuctoo was captured in 1894. Gradually, the French African empire was pushed toward the East until it came in contact with the

48-16-99

with the British claims, and in 1899, because of the appearance of Major Marchand at Fashoda, war was imminent between Great Britain and France over that part of the Nile Valley. Mutual concessions were made; Marchand withdrew, and the French Empire was consolidated.

French West Africa and the Sahara has an area of 1,247,191 square miles, with 13,541,611 inhabitants, of whom 15,000 are white. This territory is divided into 9 colonies, of which the more important are Senegal, Guinea, the Ivory Coast, the Sudan, the Niger and ~~Dehar~~ Dakar. Over the whole of French West Africa there is a Governor-General and Council, and each of the colonies has a Lieutenant Governor. The general and local budgets amount annually to 749,000,000 francs. There were in 1927, 292 village schools, with 24,700 pupils; 77 urban schools, with 4,700 pupils, and 81 high schools, with 558 pupils. Beside this, there are evening schools and orphan schools and 3 excellent higher technical schools with 250 pupils. The expenditure for education is nearly 12,000,000 francs. The exports of French West Africa for 1926 amounted to 1,412,000,000 francs. They consisted of kola-nuts, hides, skins, rubber, gum, metal, gold, palm-oil and mahogany. Agriculture and cattle-raising are followed, and there are many native industries in weaving, pottery, leather-making, brick-making and jewelery.

48-16-100

French Equatorial Africa started with the French claim on the Gabun River in 1841. In 1911, France ceded part of it to Germany in return for recognizing her protectorate in Morocco. This was restored by the Treaty of Versailles. There are 4 colonies in this division, Gabun, Middle Congo, Ubangi-Shari, and the Chad Colonies. The area is about 975,635 square miles, with a population of 3,127,707, of which 2,505 are Europeans. This territory is much less developed than the colonies about Senegal, and has been a center of exploitation and cruelty. It is not well explored, and the climate is difficult. There is a Governor-General with a Lieutenant-Governor over the separate colonies, and administrative councils. The general budget amounted to 46,550,000 francs, and there are local budgets of 50,000,000 francs. In 1927, there were 50 public schools, with 3,553 pupils. There is one higher elementary school. The resources of the colony are undeveloped, and consist of great tropical forests with wild rubber and palm-oil. Coffee, cocoa and cotton are cultivated, and livestock is raised and ivory exported. The total exports amounted to 94,249,135 francs in 1926. The French seized Madagascar in 1885, and after some fighting, declared at a French colony in 1896. The colony is not represented in the French Parliament, but has a delegation, which consists of 24 Frenchmen and 24 natives. There is the native participation to some extent in local government. The area of the island is 241,094 square miles, and the population, 3,621,342, of whom 29,000 are whites. There is compulsory education from eight to fourteen years of age, and in 1925, there were 999 schools with 90,833 pupils. The chief crops are rice, sugar, coffee, cotton, cloves and rubber. There is cattle-breeding and graphite, gold and mica and phosphates are mined. The exports in 1926 amounted to 535,856,000 francs. There are 430 miles of railway.

48-16-101

Reunion is a small island with 186,000 inhabitants mostly mulattoes. They have a good educational system, and are represented in the French Parliament. They export 165,000,000 francs worth of sugar, rum and coffee each year.

French Somaliland has 56,000 inhabitants, and a territory of 5,790 square miles. Much of the trade from Abyssinia comes by railway through this territory. The railroad to the capital of Abyssinia is 485 miles long. The French have two mandates in Africa: a part of former German Togoland, with 21,893 square miles, and a population of 762,208, of whom 245 are white. The country is hilly inland, with strips of forests. Oil-palms, rubber and dyewood grow in the forests. Corn, yams, groundnuts, cocoa and cotton are raised. There is some native mining in iron. The exports were valued 70,344,000 francs in 1896. There were 204 miles of railroad.

Of the German Cameroons, the French hold as a mandate 166,489 square miles, with a population of 1,878,683, of whom 1,570 are white. There are 73 government schools, a high school, together with village schools and 7 professional schools. The total attendance is 10,549 and there are also 36 private schools. The expenditure for education are 938,000 francs a year. There are 369 miles of railway.

Portuguese Africa. Portugal, under the lead of Henry, the Navigator, was the discoverer of ~~Northern~~ modern Africa, South of the Sahara. She began the slave trade on the West Coast; explored the West Coast down as far as the Cape of Good Hope and up the East Coast to the Gulf of Aden. A native kingdom was set up under Portuguese protection in the Congo in the 15th Century, and a native Bishop ordained. Out of this arosed the Portuguese empire in Africa. From its greatest extent in the 15th and 16th Centuries, it has been cut down by the aggression of the English, and the establishment of the Congo Free State, until today it consists of 2 large and 2 small colonies. ~~West~~ all of the Portuguese Colony ~~is~~ do have partial ~~autonomy~~ autonomy, and the right to ~~establish~~ pass laws ~~their own laws~~. However, the ~~In fact, these~~ theoretical rights do not amount to much.

Angola, or Portuguese West Africa, has a coast line of 1,300 miles, and about 5,000,000 inhabitants, inhabitating an area of 510,000 square miles. There are 52 government schools and a few others, with 2,410 pupils. The chief products are coffee, rubber, wax, sugar, oils, cocoanuts, ivory, oxen and fish. Petrolem, asphalt, malachite, copper, iron and salt are mined. Some gold and diamonds are found. There are 818 miles of railroad, and the exports, 1926, amounted to 188,459,000 escudos.

49-16-102

Mosambique or Portuguese East Africa has an area of 428,132 square miles, and is divided into 3 provinces: the larger one, administered by the state, and two smaller ones, administered by private companies. In the state province, there is a governing council, composed of officials and representatives elected by the commercial, industrial and agricultural classes. There are about 450 miles of railroad, which when the bridge is built over the Zambezi, will connect with South Africa. Sugar, corn and cotton and mining products are produced, and the exports amounted in 1922 to about $5,000,000. Other Portuguese territory in West Africa consists of the Cape Verde Islands, with 134,000 inhabitants; Portuguese Guinea, with 770,000 inhabitants, and the islands of Santhome and Principe. On the islands, Cocoa, coffee, rubber and cinchona are raised.

Spanish Africa contains altogether 128,696 square miles, with 748,341 inhabitants. It consists of a part of Morocco, and Spanish Guinea, and other small colonies.

~~Italian Africa~~. Italian Africa is in four parts: Tripolitania, with about 900,000 square miles; 550,000 natives, and 20,716 Europeans. Negroes form about one-third of the population. The chief products are fruits, cereals, ostrich feathers and fish.

Cyrenaica has a total area of 336,980 square miles. The population is 185,000, of whom 10,000 are Europeans. Barley, sponges and fish are the chief products.

~~Eritrea.~~ Eritrea has an area of 45,754 square miles, and a population of 409,793 natives, and 4,254 Europeans. There is cattle-raising, palm, pearl fishing, palm nuts and a few gold mines. The exports in 1926 amounted to 94,000,000 lire.

Italian Somaliland has 190,000 square miles, with a population of 900,000, including 1,000 Italians. Cattle-raising and agriculture are the chief industries. The exports consist of sesame, oil, gum, hides, butter, cotton and ivory.

98-16-103

Such is Africa today: an old land peculiar in its physiography and its climate which has seen every tragedy. Europe strong in a new technique of invention and discovery seized upon Africa as a storehouse of labor and raw material to be developed for the benefit of the white world. Africa yielded retrogressed and then began to stir with new life. It is still being held in subjection by the economic power of Europe. This is a temporary situation which education and increasing contact with the world must eventually change. Africa during the 20th Century is bound to be the scene of interesting and fateful human development.

Books for Further Reading

R. L. Buell: The Native Problem in Africa. 2 Volumes. Macmillan, 1898.

A. Werner: The Language Families of Africa. London, 1915.

W. E. B. Du Bois: The Negro, Home University Library. No. 91, Holt, 1915.

Statesman's Year Book, 1928.

J. S. Keltie: The Partition of Africa. London, 1895.

H. H. Johnston: Colonization of Africa. Cambridge University Press, 1905.

E. Lewin: Africa. Clarendon Press. 1924.

J. Thomas: Africa and Australia. London, 1923.

F. Starr: Liberia. Chicago, 1913.

B. Cendrars: The African Saga, New York, 1927.

G. W. Ellis: Negro Culture in West Africa, New York. 1914.

L. Frobenius: The Voice of Africa. (Tr. by Pory). 1896.

48-16-104

KENYA

UGANDA

NYASALAND

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

NATAL

TRANSVAAL

NIGERIA

GOLD COAST

SIERRE LEONE

ANGLO-EGYPTIAN SUDAN

TANGANYIKA

SOUTHWEST AFRICA

BRITISH GUIANA

BARBADOS

JAMAICA

ABYSSINIA

BELGIUM CONGO

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA

FRENCH WEST AFRICA

GUADELOUPE

HAITI

LIBERIA

ANGOLA

MOZAMBIQUE

47-4-56

KENYA

Pagan, Mohammendan, Roman Catholic, Protestant.

10 Government schools, 900 mission schools.

Revenue, 1927, £2,580,955.

Imports, 1925, £8,061,448.

Exports, £9,576,153.

Main exports:

Cotton (from Uganda)
Coffee
Fibers
Corn
Hides and skins
Ivory
Seeds
Carbonate of Soda
Rubber
Wool

UGANDA

Catholic, Protestant, Pagan.

Mission schools, 1925, 106,000 boys and 68,000 girls.

Revenue, 1925, £1,479,284.

Exports, 1925, £5,096,717.

Chief exports:

Cotton, 4,685,992, $17,300 acres.
Coffee
Rubber
Cocoa

NYASALAND

Mission schools, 2,663; 1925. 197 European teachers, 163,804 pupils, 111,509 average attendance, 2,000 Government aids.

Revenue, 1925, £322,160.

Imports, 1925, £591,654.

Exports, £564,926

Chief exports:

Coffee
Tobacco
Cotton
Tea

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

Non-Europeans in Dutch Churches 276,486. Anglican, 420,059. Protestants, 115,897. Congregationalist 145,723. Wesleyans, 730,022. Other Christians 57,186. Lutherans, 241,807. Catholics, 82,008. Hindus, 109,260. Buddhists, etc. 14,127. Mohammedans, 49,936. Pagans, 2,402,652. unspecialized, 763,928. total, 5,409,021. 1924. 3,259 schools for non-Europeans with 262,763 scholars; 21,005 teachers. Those of primary and secondary schools. 372 private schools with 16,892 colored pupils.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

174,295 non-European pupils, primary and secondary schools; 4725 teachers.

NATAL

492 native schools, 52 Asiatic, 22 colored schools, all primary and secondary. Colored children in school, 1924, 40,112.

Expense, £99,373, 1924-5. Corresponding expense for whites £538,284.

TRANSVAAL

3 training schools for colored teachers with 257 students. 386 primary and secondary schools for colored native and Indian students with 44,629 pupils.

NIGERIA

Northern Provinces.

Mohammedans, Protestants and Catholics.

53 Government schools with 2,125 pupils. 124 unassisted private schools. 38,702 Mohammedan schools with 335,208 pupils. Training college for Mohammedan native teachers at Katsina.

Southern Provinces.

1925, 49 Government schools with 9,074 scholars. Average attendance,

47-4-58

NIGERIA (continued)

7,751. 205 Assisted schools, 37,077 pupils, 29,718 average attendance. 3,200 unassisted schools, 133,900 pupils, 87,876 average attendance. 1,000 Protestant and Catholic churches.

Revenue, 1925-6, £[illegible]268,928.

Public debt, £9,309,210.

Each native state in the Northern Provinces has a treasury for expending a part of the local revenue. There are a few such treasuries in the Southern Provinces.

Exports, 1925, £17,370,161.

Products:

Palm oil and kernels
rubber gold nuts
ivory hides
live stock
Ostrich feathers cotton
cocoa coffee mahogany tin

GOLD COAST

22 Government schools, 212 assisted mission schools, average attendance 29,753. Enrolled 33,127.

Government expenditure for education, 1925, £147,023. School for secondary education opened at Achimota, 1927.

Revenue, 1925, £5,871,556.

Exports, £10,890,223. Chief exports:

cocoa palm oil
nuts palm kernels lumber
rubber manganese
gold and diamonds

47-4-58 a

GOLD COAST (Continued)

in 1925, 218,151 tons of cocoa were exported worth £8,223,263.

There is an Agricultural and Forestry Training Center in Ashanti with 28 students. Trade school at Yandi in the Northern Territory, 120 boys.

SIERRE LEONE

121 primary mission schools assisted, 14 government primary schools, average attendance 8,418. Government grant, 7,508. 8 assisted secondary schools, 502 pupils, 5 industrial schools, 210 pupils. Tourah Bay College. Government model school of 201 pupils. New Government secondary school, 99 pupils.

Revenue, 1925, £945,581.

Exports, £1,820,635.

In the Protectorate there are 100 mission schools, 55 assisted. Government schools for sons of native chiefs at Bo, 154 pupils. Agricultural training school at N'jala, 110 pupils.

47-4-59

ANGLO-EGYPTIAN SUDAN

99 elementary schools, 7,900 pupils. 10 primary schools, 1200 pupils. Gordon College, 300 pupils for engineering, surveying, teaching and translating. Training college for Kadis in District Courts, 10 pupils. 3 industrial work shops, 350 boys apprentices. Training college for girls, 20 students, 7 girls schools, 475 students, 250 native schools, 10,000 boy pupils.

Revenue, 1923, £5,210,000.

Exports

gum arabic ivory
cotton senna leaves
gold nuts dates
hides

Exports, 1925, £3,801,348.

TANGANYIKA

78 government schools, 1,703 Catholic schools, 865 Protestant schools, 160,814 pupils.

Expense £32,000

SOUTHWEST AFRICA

48 government aided mission schools with 3,945 pupils. 12 other mission schools. 8 training schools for native teachers, 41 students.

Stock raising diamonds

Exports, 1922, £2,690,021.

BRITISH GUIANA

265 schools costing £65,944, 43,453 pupils. Attendance, 28,057. Teachers, 1,329.

BARBADOS

136 primary schools, 22,180 pupils. 14,220 average attendance. 6 secondary schools, 395 pupils. Codrington College, 15 pupils. Government expense for education, £43,479.

JAMAICA

Church of England, 249 churches, Protestant, 91, Catholics, 80, Methodists, 168, Baptists, 204, Morabian, 32, Christian, 24, Congregationalists, 32, Salvation Army, 40, others 83. 679 public elementary schools, 117,874 enrolled. 73,705 attending. Government grants, £117,461. 3 training colleges for women, 1 for men. 2 secondary schools. Endowed secondary and high schools and industrial schools.

Total expense for education, £155,271.

Revenue, £2,021,046.

Exports, £3,935,059. Chief exports:

JAMAICA (Continued)

cocoanuts
log wood sugar
coffee rum
cocoa ginger cigars permento oranges
bananas

Abyssinia

Coptic Church, 100,000 Priests. One-fourth of the attendance -- are priests, monks or deacons. One-third of the land belongs to the church. Clergy are only teachers. Schools in 2 cities. Attendance small. A few foreign missions with educational work.

BELGIUM CONGO

247 mission stations, 88 Catholic and 518 Protestant missionaries. 200,000 enrolled. 10 training schools. Government grant to missions for education, 2,417,000 francs. Total expenditure in education, 4,265,700 francs. Every expenditure for buildings and schools venture 1,916,071 francs.

Revenue, 1,555,000 francs. Total expenditure for revenue and education, 7,527,800 francs. For the army, 26,053,300 francs.

Chief products:

rubber
palm oil palm nuts white copal
cacao ivory
coffee
rice
cotton tobacco
gold diamonds copper
tin

Exports, 1925, 628,573,946 francs. This included 91,000,000 kilograms of copper, 74,000,000 kilograms of palm nuts.

47-4-61

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

1920, 972 public schools, 105,000 pupils, 15,044 teachers.

Revenue, $11,968,000.

Exports, $20,770,611. Chief exports:

sugar
cacao
coffee
tobacco

FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA

25 public schools, 2,800 pupils, 19 European teachers. 2 higher schools.

FRENCH WEST AFRICA

Revenue, 621,000,000 francs.

275 village schools, 23,163 boys, 1,205 girls. 71 Urban schools with 4,580 pupils. 7 high schools, 664 pupils for general instruction and 294 manual instruction. 142 evening schools for adults with 5,614 pupils. 6 orphant schools with 253 pupils. 2 Mohammedan schools with 89 pupils. 3 higher technical schools, 239 pupils. 1 Lycee, 181 pupils. Expenditure for education, 9,440,000 francs.

Exports, 1925, 899,063,623 francs.

At Dakar are superior technical schools for all the colony. Normal schools for teachers, professional school, commercial and administrative school, school of medicine. At St. Louis are professional schools for interpreters. Kaids for chief s ns. A large hospital at Dakar.

GUADELOUPE

1 Lycee, 360 pupils, Secondary school for girls, 27 pupils, 103 public and private elementary schools. Public elementary school, 139 teachers, 15,635 pupils; private elementary school, 872,33 teachers.

Exports

4-4-23

GUADELOUPE (Continued)

sugar
coffee
rum vanilla
bananas

HAITI

Roman Catholic, Arts Churches and 4 Suffragan Churches. 944 schools, 74,496 pupils. Normal school and University of Haiti.

Annual expense, $1,000,000.

Revenue, $8,111,504. Debt, $21,772,682.

Products:

coffee
cocoa cotton tobacco
sugar

LIBERIA

Protestant.

22 government schools, 700 pupils.

67 mission schools, 3,200 pupils. Government college, 132 students. 3 mission colleges.

Total debt, $2,150,000.

New negotiated, $5,000,000.

Products:

rubber
coffee
cocoa
cotton
Piassava
Palm oil

Exports, 1925, $1,715,060.

ANGOLA

52 government schools, 9 private schools. Total of 2,410 pupils.

Exports, 275,914,979 Escudos.

47-4-63

MOZAMBIZUE

Revenue 64,410,533 Escudos.

Exports

sugar
cotton gum ores
ivory

97-41-64

Revenue & Exports £

	Revenue	Exports
Kenya	£12,900,000	£47,880,000	Coffee, hides, corn, hides & ivory, seeds
Uganda	7,365,000	25,480,000	Cotton, coffee, rubber, cocoa
Aden	1,610,000	2,820,000	Coffee, Tobacco, Cotton, Tea
Nigeria	41,340,000	86,850,000	Palm oil & kernels, Rubber, gold, nuts, ivory, hides, cotton, cocoa, coffee, manganese
Gold C.	29,355,000	54,450,000	Cocoa, Palm oil & kernels, nuts, timber, rubber, manganese, gold.
S Leone	4,725,000	9,100,000
Sudan	£26,050,000	16,005,000	gum arabic, ivory, cotton, senna, gold, nuts, dates, hides
Tanganyika	£7,790,000	£16,000,000	sisal, cotton, hides, copra, coffee, nuts.
Southwest Africa	£3,530,000	13,450,000	diamonds, copper

4-7-65

	Revenue	Exports
British Guiana	$5,500,000	$5,500,000	sugar, rice, Coconuts, coffee, gold, molasses
Barbados	$2,100,000	$1,105,000	sugar, cotton, rum, cotton
Jamaica	$10,000,000	$9,675,000	bananas, cocoa, logwoods, sugar, coffee, rum, cocoa, ginger, pimento
Abyssinia	———	$10,100,000	hides, coffee, wax, ivory, civet, hides,
Belgium Congo	$7,327,100	$31,400,000	rubber, palm oil & nuts, copal, cocoa, ivory, coffee, copper, diamonds
Dominican Republic	$11,968,100	$20,770,000	sugar, cocoa, coffee, tobacco
French Equatorial Africa	$1,100,000	$3,350,000	ivory, coffee, cocoa,
French West African	$31,000,000	$45,000,000

47-4-66

Guadeloupe	1 50 000	7, 750, 000	Sugar coffee rum Cacao Vanilla bananas
Haiti	8, 111, 504	20, 184, 000	Coffee, Cocoa Cotton Tobacco Sugar
Liberia	943, 208	1, 715, 060	Rubber, Coffee Cocoa, Cotton Piassava Palm oil
Nigeria	6, 762, 900	13, 795, 700	~~Corn, Sugar, Gold Live stock~~ Coffee Corn oil seeds, fish
Mozambique	3 200 000	13, 150 000	Sugar, Cotton Corn oils Ivory

47-4-67

COFFEE

FIBERS

CORN

HIDES

IVORY

SEEDS

COTTON

RUBBER

COCOA

TOBACCO

TEA

PALM OIL and PALM KERNELS

GOLD

NUTS

MAHOGANY

LUMBER

MANGANESE

GUM ARIBIC

SENNA

DATES

SASISAL

COPRA

DIAMONDS

SUGGAR

RICE

COCOANUTS

MOLASSES

RUM

BANANAS

LOGWOOD

GINGER

PIMENTO

WAX

CIVET

BUTTER

COPAL

VANILLA

PIASSAVA

FISH

ORES

89-4-68

38-4-58

Kenya Colony and Protectorate. Area 200,000 square miles. Population 1921 - 9,651 Europeans, 22,822 Indians, 10,102 Arabs, total population 2,376,000. The Negro population consists of Swahlies, Bantus, Masai, Somalai and Gallas. Government: belongs to Great Britain, legislative council consists of eleven elective representatives of the Europeans, 3 nominated members, 2 representatives of the Indians and one of the Araba and a sufficient number of official members to give a majority in the council. Legislation is by the government with the advice and counsel of the council. The colony is divided into white settled areas under resident commissioners and native reserves under district commissioners. There are seven government schools including three European with 733 pupils spending 294,000 rupees a year. There are many Christian missionaries. The revenue in 1921 was 2,978,786 pounds. This was raised by customs 239,000 pounds, licenses and internal revenue 657,000 pounds, posts and telegraphs 93,000 pounds, rents 29,000 pounds, fees 82,000 pounds miscellaneous 133,000 pounds. Productions are rice, cocoanuts, cotton, sugar cane, bannas, wheat, barley, corn, flax, coffee, live stock, lumber and minerals.

****

The Uganda Protectorate. Area 110,300 square miles. Ruled by a governor. In each of the five provinces there is some native rule. The Kabaka or king of Uganda is his Highness Daudi Chwa grandson of the celebrated Mutsa. He is assisted by three native ministers and a native Assembly. In three of the other provinces there are native kings and assemblies who deal with native matters but in serious cases there is an appeal to the English courts. There is an armed constabulary under a British commissioner. The population is as follows: natives 3,059,583, Asiatics 5,464, Europeans 1,280. The Bagandas number 640,000, are intelligent and civilized. In the mission schools in 1921 there were 93,900 boys and 58,500 girls. The Bantus number 1,700,000 and the other natives are Masia, Mylatic and Sudanese. Cotton is the chief product together with coffee, ruber, cocoa and oil seeds. There are valuable forests. The revenue in 1921 was 803,183 pounds. In 1921 the pole tax amounted to 382,000 pounds and the customs 157,000 pounds.

28-4-59

******** ************

Zanzubar and Penda - 640 and 380 square miles. Under Great Britain. Ruled by a Sultan, a high commissioner and a British Resident. Legislation consists of decfees of the Sultan countersigned by the British resident. There is an advisory council ~~of~~ over which the Sultan presides with the British resident as vice president, with three official and four non-official residents. Population 197,000. According to the 1921 census there were 14,125 non-native inhabitants including 270 Europeans, 12,900 Britisn Indians. There are government schools mainly for Moslems, Mission Schools and Indian schools. There is British and Sultans court. The revenue in 1921 was 455,773 pounds. The chief industry is cloves yielding the bulk of the world's supply. Next comes cocoanuts, pottery, soap, oil, etc.

****

Nyasaland Protectorate. Under the British Administration but Governor and Commander-in-Chief as executive and legislative councils both consisting of nominated members. Area 39,573 square miles divided into 20 districts each administered by a resident. Population 1921 1,486 Europeans, 563 Asiatics, 1,199,934 natives. No government schools but eleven Christian Missions. In 1920 there were 2,191 Mission schools with 123,928 pupils, 73,236 in average attendance. The

32-4-35

	GOVERNMENT
KENYA	One nominated member of the legislative council "to represent African interests".
UGANDA	Direct white administration. Local government under chiefs.
PROVINCE OF BUGANDA	Native kingdom under the Kabaka, His Highness Daudi Chwa. Three native ministers and a native assembly. Appeal lies to British courts.
NYASALAND	Nominated white council.
BASUTOLAND & BECHUANALAND.	Resident Commissioner under the High Commissioner for South Africa. Legislation by proclamation. Local government under chiefs.
SOUTHERN RHODESIA	Governor and legislature of whites. Local native councils "may be established".
NORTHERN RHODESIA	Governor and councils by whites.
UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA	Legislators "must be of European descent". Senators: thirty-two are elected, eight nominated. Four of these are selected for their acquaintanceship "with the reasonable wants and wishes of non-European races". House of Assembly has 135 members: Cape of Good Hope, 51; Transvaal, 50; Natal and Orange Free State, 17 each. In the Cape of Good Hope colored citizens can vote with certain property restrictions.
NIGERIA	Governor and legislative council. Official members of council 27; elected members, 4; 6 members selected by commercial interests; 8 appointed members to represent native African interests.
GOLD COAST	Governor and councils with 14 nominated unofficial members.
SIERRA LEONE	Governor and councils: 11 official members; 3 elected members; 3 paramount chiefs; and 4 nominated members. Franchise confined to men.
ANGLO EGYPTIAN SUDAN	British governor general and 15 British district commissioners. Laws by Governor General in council. Some natives employed in administration.

38-4-54

TANGANYIKA (Mandate)	Governor and councils. Legislative council with 13 official and 10 non official members. Native affairs department.
SOUTHWEST AFRICA (Mandate)	17 districts controlled by magistrates. One native commissioner in charge of "native affairs". Chief administrator appointed by Union of South Africa.
BERMUDA	Governor and Executive Council with 4 official and 3 appointed members. Legislative Council with 3 official and 6 appointed members. Elected House of Assembly of 36 members. 1436 voters.
BRITISH GUIANA	Governor and council with 5 official and 7 appointed members.
BAHAMAS	Governor and councils. Representative assembly of 29 members elected. Voters have property qualification.
BARBADOS	Governor, appointed councils, assembly with 24 members elected. 3385 voters.
JAMAICA	Governor and councils with 5 official, 10 nominated and 14 elected members. Men and women vote.
TRINIDAD	Governor and council. Legislative council with 12 official, 6 nominated and 7 elected members. Women over 30 vote.
ABYSSINIA	Empress Waizeru Zaudita and Regent Ras Taffari. Feudal government modified by a cabinet.
BELGIAN CONGO	Minister for the Colonies is president of the Colonial Council. Council consists of 15 members: 8 appointed by the king; 3 chosen by the Senate and 3 by the House of Representatives. Council appoints Governor General. Four provinces, each with a Governor. Twenty-one districts with commissioners. 188 territories.

38-4-57

BRAZIL	Republic
CUBA & DOMINICAN REPUBLICS	Universal suffrage.
EGYPT	Kingdom with republican institutions. British military control.
FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA	Three colonies. Governor and three lieutenant Governors. Councils.
FRENCH WEST AFRICA	8 colonies. Governor General and council. Lieutenant Governors for the colonies. In Senegal: the natives of 4 cities and their descendants are French citizens. Lieutenant Governor with council of 40 members; 20 elected by the citizens and 20 by representatives of native chiefs.
MARTINIQUE	Governor and council. Elected municipal councils. Senator and 2 deputies in France.
GUADALOUPE	Governor and elected council. Senator and 2 deputies in France.
GUIANA	Governor and council elected by French citizens in Guiana. One deputy in France.
HAITI	Republic. Dominated by the United States.
LIBERIA	Republic
SURINAM	Governor and nominated council. Legislative body of 13 members, elected.
PORTUGUESE AFRICA	Partial autonomy
ANGOLA	Has High Commissioner
MOZAMBIQUE	Government council of official and elected members and representatives selected by commercial and industrial classes.

	NEGRO POPULATION
GREAT BRITAIN	50,197,709
FRANCE	25,279,819
UNITED STATES	10,850,244
ABYSSINIA	10,000,000
BRAZIL	9,000,000
BELGIAN CONGO	8,500,000
PORTUGUESE AFRICA	7,736,600
EGYPT	4,000,000
LIBERIA	2,500,000
HAITI	2,028,000
DOMINICAN REPUBLIC	897,405
CUBA	829,201
ITALY	652,793
PANAMA	400,000
SPANISH AFRICA	184,341
HOLLAND	146,994
HONDURAS	100,000
NICARAGUA	100,000
VENEZUELA	60,000
COLOMBIA	30,000
GUATEMALA	25,000
SALVADOR	25,000
COSTA RICA	24,000
BOLIVIA	10,000

11-4-87

	Hospitals	Schools		Teachers	Students	govt Contrib £
		government	mission &c
Kenya		10	900
Uganda					174,000
Nyasaland			2663	197(W)	163804	£10,000
S. South Africa		3259	372	21,005	279,855
C. good Hope				4725	174295
Natal		514			40112	476,868 (white £2,691,009)
Transvaal	3	386			44629
Free State					21000
Nigeria		102	3329
			(28702 Mohammedan)		182,186
Gold Coast	1	22	212		33127	£735,000
						£37,540+
Sierra Leone	1	14	235
A-E. Sudan	1	109	250		19915
Mauritius		78	2568		160,814	£150,000
S.W. Africa		1	48		3945
S. Guiana		265		1329	43,453	£25,000
Barbados	1	142			22,575	£35,000
Jamaica		681			117,874	£85,000
B Congo		247	247		200000	£12,500
Dominican Republic		972		15044	105000
French Equatorial Africa	2	25			2800
~~W. Indies~~	5

91-4-16

	G	M	T	S	E
Fulton W. Akins	501			36,902	472,000
Guadalcanal			172	16,997
Hart	944			74,496	№ 1,000,000
Lockwood	22	67		3,900
Angola	52	9		2,410
Mozambique

48-4-10

48-4-12

ECONOMICS OF AFRICA

48-4-224

	Revenue ~~REVENUE and EXPORTS~~	Exports
KENYA	$12,900,000	$47,880,000	Coffee, fibres, corn, hides, ivory, seeds.
UGANDA	7,365,000	25,480,000	Cotton, coffee, rubber, cocoa.
NYASALAND	1,610,000	2,820,000	Coffee, tobacco, cotton, tea.
NIGERIA	41,340,000	86,850,000	Palm oil and kernels, rubber, gold, nuts, ivory, hides, cotton, cocoa, coffee, mahogany.
GOLD COAST	29,355,000	54,450,000	Cocoa, Palm oil and kernels, nuts, lumber, rubber, manganese, gold.
SIERRE LEONE	4,725,000	9,100,000
ANGLO-EGYPTIAN SUDAN	26,050,000	16,005,000	Gum arabic, ivory, cotton, senna, gold, nuts, dates, hides.
TANGANYIKA	7,790,000	15,000,000	Sisal, cotton, hides, copra, coffee, nuts.
SOUTHWEST AFRICA	3,530,000	13,450,000	Diamonds, copra.
BRITISH GUIANA	5,500,000	5,500,000	Sugar, rice, cocoanuts, coffee, gold.
BARBADOS	2,000,000	7,105,000	Sugar, molasses, rum, cotton.
JAMACIA	10,000,000	19,675,000	Bananas, cocoanuts, logwoods, sugar, coffee, rum, cocoa, ginger, perment.
ABYSSINIA		10,000,000	Hides, coffee, wax, ivory, civet, butter.
BELGIUM CONGO	7,327,000	31,400,000	rubber, palm oil, nuts, copal, cocoa, ivory, coffee, copper, diamonds.

48-4-223

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC	$11,968,000	[illegible]	Sugar, cocoa, coffee, tobacco.
FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA	1,000,000	[illegible]	Ivory, coffee, Cocoa.
FRENCH WEST AFRICA	31,000,000	45,000,000
GUADELOUPE	1,500,000	7,750,000	Sugar, coffee, rum, cocaio, vanilla, bananas.
HAITI	8,111,504	20,184,000	Coffee, cocoa, cotton, tobacco, sugar.
LIBERIA	943,208	1,715,060	Rubber, coffee, cocoa, cotton, piassava Palm Oil.
ANGOLA	6,762,900	13,795,700	Coffee, corn, oil seeds, fish.
MOZAMBIZUE	3,200,000	13,150,000	Sugar, cotton, corn, ores, ivory.

GOVERNMENT

KENYA	One nominated member of the legislative council "to represent African interests".
UGANDA	Direct white administration. Local government under chiefs.
PROVINCE OF BUGANDA	Native kingdom under the Kabaka, His Highness Daudi Chwa. Three native ministers and a native assembly. Appeal lies to British courts.
NYASALAND	Nominated white council.
BASUTOLAND & BECHUANALAND.	Resident Commissioner under the High Commissioner for South Africa. Legislation by proclamation. Local government under chief
SOUTHERN RHODESIA	Governor and legislature of whites. Local native councils "may be established".
NORTHERN RHODESIA	Governor and councils by whites.
UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA	Legislators "must be of European descent". Senators: thirty-two are elected, eight nominated. Four of these are selected for their acquaintanceship "with the reasonable wants and wishes of non-European races". House of Assembly has 135 members: Cape of Good Hope, 51; Transvaal, 50; Natal and Orange Free State, 17 each. In the Cape of Good Hope colored citizens can vote with certain property restrictions.
NIGERIA	Governor and legislative council. Official members of council 27; elected members, 4; 6 members selected by commercial interests; 8 appointed members to represent native African interests.
GOLD COAST	Governor and councils with 14 nominated unofficial members.
SIERRA LEONE	Governor and councils: 11 official members; 3 elected members; 3 paramount chiefs; and 4 nominated members. Franchise confined to men.
ANGLO EGYPTIAN SUDAN	British governor general and 15 British district commissioners. Laws by Governor General in council. Some natives employed in administration.

40|86|12

TANGANYIKA (Mandate)	Governor and councils. Legislative council with 13 official and 10 non official members. Native affairs department.
SOUTHWEST AFRICA (Mandate)	17 districts controlled by magistrates. One native commissioner in charge of "native affairs". Chief administrator appointed by Union of South Africa.
BERMUDA	Governor and Executive Council with 4 official and 3 appointed members. Legislative Council with 3 official and 6 appointed members. Elected House of Assembly of 36 members. 1436 voters.
BRITISH GUIANA	Governor and council with 5 official and 7 appointed members.
BAHAMAS	Governor and councils. Representative assembly of 29 members elected. Voters have property qualification.
BARBADOS	Governor, appointed councils, assembly with 24 members elected. 3385 voters.
JAMAICA	Governor and councils with 5 official, 10 nominated and 14 elected members. Men and women vote.
TRINIDAD	Governor and council. Legislative council with 12 official, 6 nominated and 7 elected members. Women over 30 vote.
ABYSSINIA	Empress Waizeru Zaudita and Regent Ras Taffari. Feudal government modified by a cabinet.
BELGIAN CONGO	Minister for the Colonies is president of the Colonial Council. Council consists of 15 members: 8 appointed by the king; 3 chosen by the Senate and 3 by the House of Representatives. Council appoints Governor General. Four provinces, each with a Governor. Twenty-one districts with commissioners 188 territories.
BRAZIL	Republic
CUBA & DOMINICAN REPUBLICS	Universal suffrage.
EGYPT	Kingdom with republican institutions. British military control.

40/8/b/13

FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA	Three colonies. Governor and three lieutenant Governors. Councils.
FRENCH WEST AFRICA	8 colonies. Governor General and council. Lieutenant Governors for the colonies. In Senegal: the natives of 4 cities and their descendants are French citizens. Lieutenant Governor with council of 40 members; 20 elected by the citizens and 20 by representatives of native chiefs.
MARTINIQUE	Governor and council. Elected municipal councils. Senator and 2 deputies in France.
GUADALOUPE	Governor and elected council. Senator and 2 deputies in France.
GUIANA	Governor and council elected by French citizens in Guiana. One deputy in France.
HAITI	Republic. Dominated by the United States.
LIBERIA	Republic
SURINAM	Governor and nominated council. Legislative body of 13 members, elected.
PORTUGUESE AFRICA	Partial autonomy
ANGOLA	Has High Commissioner
MOZAMBIQUE	Government council of official and elected members and representatives selected by commercial and industrial classes.

40/82/14

Map of Africa

Maps of Africa from "Negro"

African railways

African populations

" Cities

Black World.

African groups (& scale maps populations & cities

" Government

Negro populations in U.S.A.

" Industries

" Exports & imports

Wealth & Taxes

40-8-6/10

KENYA

Pagan, Mohammendan, Roman Catholic, Protestant.

10 Government schools, 900 mission schools.

Revenue, 1927, £ 2,580,955.

Imports, 1925, £ 8,061,448.

Exports, £ 9,576,153.

Main exports:

Cotton (from Uganda)
Coffee
Fibers
Corn
Hides and skins
Ivory
Seeds
Carbonate of Soda
Rubber
Wool

UGANDA

Catholic, Protestant, Pagan.

Mission schools, 1925, 106,000 boys and 68,000 girls.

Revenue, 1925, £ 1,479,284.

Exports, 1925, £ 5,096,717.

Chief exports:

Cotton, 4,685,992, 617,300 acres.
Coffee
Rubber
Cocoa

NYASALAND

Mission schools, 2,663; 1925. 197 European teachers, 163,804 pupils, 111,509 average attendance, 2,000 Government aids.

Revenue, 1925, £ 322,160.

Imports, 1925, £ 591,654.

Exports, £ 564,926

Chief exports:

Coffee
Tobacco
Cotton
Tea

48-4-10

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

Non-Europeans in Dutch Churches 276,486. Anglican, 420,059. Protestants, 115,897, Congregationalist 145,723, Wesleyans, 730,022. Other Christians 57,186, Lutherans, 241,807, Catholics, 82,008, Hindus, 109,260, Buddhists, etc. 14,127, Mohammedans, 49,936, Pagans, 2,402,652, unspecialized, 763,928, total, 5,409,021. 1924, 3,259 schools for non-Europeans with 262,763 scholars; 21,005 teachers, those of primary and secondary schools. 372 private schools with 16,892 colored pupils.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

174,295 non-European pupils, primary and secondary schools; 4725 teachers.

NATAL

492 native schools, 52 Asiatic, 22 colored schools, all primary and secondary. Colored children in school, 1924, 40,112.

Expense, £99,373, 1924-5. Corresponding expense for whites £538,284.

TRANSVAAL

3 training schools for colored teachers with 257 students. 386 primary and secondary schools for colored native and Indian students with 44,629 pupils.

NIGERIA

Northern Provinces.

Mohammedans, Protestants and Catholics.

53 Government schools with 2,125 pupils. 124 unassisted private schools. 28,702 Mohammedan schools with 335,208 pupils. Training college for Mohammedan native teachers at Katsina.

Southern Provinces.

1925, 49 Government schools with 9,074 scholars. Average attendance,

NIGERIA (continued)

7,751. 205 Assisted schools, 37,077 pupils, 29,718 average attendance.

3,200 unassisted schools, 133,900 pupils, 87,876 average attendance.

1,000 Protestant and Catholic churches.

Revenue, 1925-6, £8,268,928.

Public debt, £9,309,210.

Each native state in the Northern Provinces has a treasury for expending a part of the local revenue. There are a few such treasuries in the Southern Provinces.

Exports, 1925, £17,370,161.

Products:

palm oil and kernels
rubber
gold nuts
ivory
hides
live stock
Ostrich feathers cotton
cocoa coffee mahogany tin

4/8-4-13

GOLD COAST

22 Government schools, 212 assisted mission schools, average attendance 29,753. Enrolled 33,127.

Government expenditure for education, 1925, £147,023. School for secondary education opened at Achimota, 1927.

Revenue, 1925, £5,871,556.

Exports, £10,890,223. Chief exports:

cocoa
palm oil
nuts palm kernels lumber
rubber manganese
gold and diamonds

GOLD COAST (Continued)

in 1925, 218,151 tons of cocoa were exported worth £8,223,263.

There is an Agricultural and Forestry Training Center in Ashanti with 28 students. Trade school at Yandi in the Northern Territory, 120 boys.

SIERRE LEONE

121 primary mission schools assisted, 14 government primary schools, average attendance 8,418. Government grant, 7,508. 8 assisted secondary schools, 502 pupils, 5 industrial schools, 210 pupils. Fourah Bay College. Government model school of 201 pupils. New Government secondary school, 99 pupils.

Revenue, 1925, £945,581.

Exports, £1,820,635.

In the Protectorate there are 100 mission schools, 55 assisted. Government schools for sons of native chiefs at Bo, 154 pupils. Agricultural training school at N'jala, 110 pupils.

ANGLO-EGYPTIAN SUDAN

99 elementary schools, 7,900 pupils. 10 primary schools, 1,200 pupils. Gordon College, 300 pupils for engineering, surveying, teaching and translating. Training college for Kadis in District Courts, 10 pupils. 3 industrial work shops, 350 boys apprentices. Training college for girls, 20 students, 7 girls schools, 475 students, 250 native schools, 10,000 boy pupils.

Revenue, 1923, £5,210,000.

Exports

gum arabic ivory
cotton senna leaves
gold nuts dates
hides

Exports, 1925, £3,801,348.

TANGANYIKA

78 government schools, 1,703 Catholic schools, 865 Protestant schools, 160,814 pupils.

Expense £32,000

SOUTHWEST AFRICA

48 government aided mission schools with 3,945 pupils. 12 other mission schools. 2 training schools for native teachers, 41 students.

Stock raising
diamonds

Exports, 1922, £2,690,021.

BRITISH GUIANA

265 schools costing £65,944, 43,453 pupils. Attendance, 28,057. Teachers, 1,329.

BARBADOS

136 primary schools, 22,180 pupils. 14,220 average attendance.

6 secondary schools, 395 pupils. Codrington College, 15 pupils.

Government expense for education, £43,479.

JAMAICA

Church of England, 249 churches, Protestant, 91, Catholics, 80, Methodists, 168, Baptists, 204, Morabian, 32, Christian, 24, Congregationalists, 32, Salvation Army, 40, others 83. 679 public elementary schools, 117,874 enrolled. 73,705 attending. Government grants, 117,461. 3 training colleges for women, 1 for men.

2 secondary schools. Endowed secondary and high schools and industrial schools.

Total expense for education, £155,271.

Revenue, £2,021,046.

Exports, £3,935,059. Chief exports:

91-4-87

JAMAICA (Continued)

cocoanuts
log wood sugarr
coffee
rum
cocoa ginger cigars permento oranges
bananas

Abyssinia

Coptic Church, 100,000 Priests. One-fourth of the attendance -- are priests, monks or deacons. One-third of the land belongs to the church. Clergy are only teachers. Schools in 2 cities. Attendance small. A few foreign missions with educational work.

BELGIUM CONGO

247 mission stations, 88 Catholic and 518 Protestant missionaries. 200,000 enrolled. 10 training schools. Government grant to missions for education, 2,417,000 francs. Total expenditure in education, 4,265,700 francs. Every expenditure for buildings and schools venture 1,916,071 francs.

Revenue, 1,555,000 francs. Total expenditure for revenue and education, 7,527,800 francs. For the army, 26,053,300 francs.

Chief products:

rubber
palm oil palm nuts
white copal
cacao ivory
coffee rice
cotton tobacco
gold diamonds copper
tin

Exports, 1925, 628,573,946 francs. This included 91,000,000 kilograms of copper, 74,000,000 kilograms of palm nuts.

61-4-84

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

1920, 972 public schools, 105,000 pupils, 15,044 teachers.

Revenue, $11,968,000.

Exports, $20,770,611. Chief exports:

sugar
cacao
coffee
tobacco

FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA

25 public schools, 2,800 pupils, 19 European teachers. 2 higher schools.

FRENCH WEST AFRICA

Revenue, 621,000,000 francs.

275 village schools, 23,163 boys, 1,205 girls. 71 Urban schools with 4,580 pupils. 7 high schools, 664 pupils for general instruction and 294 manual instruction. 142 evening schools for adults with 5,614 pupils. 6 orphan schools with 253 pupils. 2 Mohammedan schools with 89 pupils. 3 higher technical schools, 239 pupils. 1 Lycee, 181 pupils. Expenditure for education, 9,440,000 francs.

Exports, 1925, 899,063,623 francs.

At Dakar are superior technical schools for all the colony. Normal schools for teachers, professional school, commercial and administrative school, school of medicine. At St. Louis are professional schools for interpreters, Kaids for chief sons. A large hospital at Dakar.

GUADELOUPE

1 Lycee, 360 pupils, Secondary school for girls, 27 pupils, 103 public and private elementary schools. Public elementary school, 139 teachers, 15,635 pupils; private elementary school, 872,33 teachers.

Exports

61-4-18

GUADELOUPE (Continued)

sugar
coffee
rum vanilla
bananas

HAITI

Roman Catholic, Arts Churches and 4 Suffragan Churches. 944 schools, 74,496 pupils. Normal school and University of Haiti.

Annual expense, $1,000,000.

Revenue, $8,111,504. Debt, $21,772,682.

Products:

coffee
cocoa cotton tobacco
sugar

LIBERIA

Protestant.

22 government schools, 700 pupils.

67 mission schools, 3,200 pupils. Government college, 132 students. 3 mission colleges.

Total debt, $2,150,000.

New negotiated, $5,000,000.

Products:

rubber
coffee
cocoa
cotton Piassava
palm oil

Exports, 1925, $1,715,060.

ANGOLA

52 government schools, 9 private schools. Total of 2,410 pupils.

Exports, 275,914,979 Escudos.

42-4-20

MOZAMBIQUE

Revenue 64,410,533 Escudos.

Exports

sugar
cotton gum ores ivory

48-4-21

TEA
COFFEE
SUGAR
COCOA CHOCOLATE
SPICES
DATES
COCOANUTS
COTTON
COPPER & MINERALS
GOLD
DIAMONDS & JEWELS
TIN
VEGETABLE OIL
PETROLEUM
TOBACCO
RUBBER
LUMBER

QUININE
HIDES
MEAT
FRUIT
WHEAT FIBRES FLOWERS
BIRDS SILK
WOOL HORNS
FUR BRISTLES

42/8F/2

AFRICA

Its Place in Modern History

By W. E. Burghardt Du Bois

'Semper novi quid ex Africa,' cried the Roman proconsul; and he voiced the verdict of forty centuries. Yet there are those who would write world-history and leave out this most marvelous of continents. Particularly today most men assume that Africa lies far afield from the centres of our burning social problems, and especially from our [redacted] problem of World War.

Yet in a very real sense Africa was one of the prime causes of that terrible overturning of civilization which we saw in 1914-18; and these words seek to show what place the Dark Continent has occupied in Modern history.

Always Africa is giving us something new or some metempsychosis of a world-old thing. On its black bosom arose one of the earliest, if not the earliest, of self-protecting civilizations, and grew so mightily that it still furnishes superlatives to thinking and speaking men. Out of its darker and more remote forest fastnesses, came, if we may credit many recent scientists, the first welding of iron, and we know that agriculture and trade flourished there when Europe was a wilderness.

Nearly every human empire that has arisen in the world, material and spiritual, has found some of its greatest crises on this continent of Africa, from Greece to Great Britain. As Mommsen says, "It was through Africa that Christianity became the religion of the world." In Africa the last flood of Germanic invasions spent itself within hearing of the last gasp of Byzantium; and it was again through Africa that Islam came to play its great role of conqueror and civilizer.

4/8-16-105

With the Rennaissance and the widened world of modern thought, Africa came no less suddenly with her new old gift. Shakespeare's Ancient Pistol cries,—

'A foutre for the world, and worldlings base!
I speak of Africa, and golden joys.'

He echoes a legend of gold from the days of Punt and Ophir to those of Ghana, the Gold Coast, and the Rand. This thought had sent the world's greed scurrying down the hot, mysterious coasts of Africa to the Good Hope of gain, until for the first time a real world-commerce was born, albeit it started as a commerce mainly in the bodies and souls of men.

So much for the past; and now, today: the Berlin Conference to apportion the rising riches of Africa among the white peoples met on the fifteenth day of November, 1884. Eleven days earlier, three Germans left Zanzibar 'whither they had gone secretly disguised as mechanics), and before the Berlin Conference had finished its deliberations they had annexed to Germany an area over half as large again as the whole Germany Empire in Europe. Only in its dramatic suddenness was this undisguised robbery of the land of seven million natives different from the methods by which Great Britain and France got four million square miles each, Portugal three quarters of a million, and Italy and Spain smaller but substantial areas.

48-16-106

The methods by which this continent has been stolen have been contemptible and dishonest beyond expression. Lying treaties, rivers of rum, murder, assassination, mutilation, rape, and torture have marked the progress of Englishman, German, Frenchman, and Belgian on the dark continent. The only way in which the world has been able to endure the horrible tale is by deliberately stopping its ears and changing the subject of conversation while the deviltry went on.

It all began, singularly enough, with Belgium. Many of us remember Stanley's great solution of the puzzle of Central Africa when he traced the mighty Congo sixteen hundred miles from Nyangwe to the sea. Suddenly the world knew that here lay the key to the riches of Central Africa. It stirred uneasily, but Leopold of Belgium was first to his feet, and the result was the Congo Free State—God save the mark! But the Congo Free State, with all its magniloquent heralding of Peace, Christianity, and Commerce, degenerating into murder, mutilation and downright robbery, differed only in degree and concentration from the tale of all Africa in this rape of a continent already furiously mangled by the slave trade.

It will always be a matter of endless curiosity for men to seek to explain how it happened that on the very day of the culminating power of the organized Christian church and when there had taken place in Europe a renaissance of learning and there had begun a reformation of religion, that at the same time there also began a trade in the bodies and souls of men that lasted four hundred years and the results of which are still puzzling to the modern world. The fact of the matter is, that the whole slave trade was not a matter of religion or education but a set of economic phenomena.

4-8-16-107

The world, ancient and medieval, was familiar with slavery. At best the masses of working men were held to the soil and labored for the owners of the soil just as Russian peasants did before the Revolution. But when in the 15th Century there was discovered overseas endless tracts of rich and unappropriated land, the basis of European slavery was singularly changed and instead of laborers being held to work on limited plots of land, there was endless land and a great demand for labor. Land for the first time in modern history became free, laborers were eagerly sought for. White laborers came from Europe. Some came voluntarily, some were stolen and kidnapped in the slums of London, in Germany and elsewhere.

Religious and political strife in Africa [redacted] gave unusual opportunity for stealing and kidnapping men there. The empire building Negroes of the Sudan had driven the village artisans down to the west coast, and Mohammedanism and the ancient African religion of fetish came into strong combat.

Some Negroes were brought to Europe by the Spaniards in the fourteenth century, and the small trade was continued by the Portuguese in the early fifteenth century. Later, the Portuguese began to sail down the west coast in quest of trade. They reached the River of Gold in 1441, and their leader seized certain free Moors which the next year were exchanged for ten black slaves, hides, ostrich eggs, and gold dust. The trade was justified on the ground that the Moors were Mohamedans and could not be converted to Christianity, while heathen Negroes would be subjects for conversion and stronger laborers.

48-16-108

In the next few years a few Negroes continued to be imported into Spain and Portugal as servants. We find, for instance, in 1474, that Negro slaves were common in Seville. There is a letter from Ferdinand and Isabella in the year 1474 to a Negro, Juan de Valladolid, nominating him to the office of "mayoral of the Negroes" in Seville. The slaves were allowed to keep their own dances and festivals, and to have their own chief, who represented them in the courts, as against their own masters, and to settle their private quarrels.

Columbus suggested Negroes for America, but Ferdinand and Isabella refused. Nevertheless, by 1501, we have the first mention of Negroes going to America in a declaration that Negro slaves "born in the power of Christians were to be allowed to pass to the Indies, and the officers of the royal revenue were to receive the money to be paid for their permits."

About 1501 Ovando, Governor of Spanish America, was objecting to Negro slaves and asking "that no Negro slaves should be sent to Hispaniola, for they fled amongst the Indians and taught them bad customs, and never could be captured." On the other hand, a letter from the king to Ovando, September 15, 1505, says, "I will send more Negro slaves as you request: I think there may be a hundred. At each time a trustworthy person will go with them who may have some share in the gold they may collect and may promise them ease if they work well."

After this time frequent notices show that Negroes were common in the new world. When Pizarro was slain in Peru, his body was dragged to the cathedral by two Negroes. After the battle of Anaquito the head of the viceroy was cut off by a Negro, and during the great earthquake in Guatemala, a gigantic Negro seen in various parts of the city. Nunez had thirty Negroes with him on the top of the Sierras, and there was rumor of an aboriginal tribe of Negroes in South America. One of the last acts of King Ferdinand was to urge that no more Negroes be sent to the West Indies, but under Charles V., Bishop Las Casas drew up a plan of assisted migration to America and asked in 1517 the right for immigrants to import twelve Negro slaves, in return for which the Indians were to be freed.

Las Casas, writing in his old age, owns his error: "This advice that license should be given to bring Negro slaves to these lands, the Clerigo Casas first gave, not considering the injustice with which the Portuguese take them and make them slaves; which advice, after he had apprehended the nature of the thing, he would not have given for all he had in the world. For he always held that they had been made slaves unjustly and tyrannically; for the same reason holds good of them as of the Indians."

As soon as the plan was broached a Savoyard obtained a monopoly of this proposed trade and shrewdly sold it to the Genoese for twenty-five thousand ducats. Other monopolies were granted in 1523, 1527, and 1528. Thus the American trade became established and gradually grew, passing successively into the hands of the Portuguese, the Dutch, the French, and the English.

418-16-109

At first the trade was of the same kind and volume as that already passing northward over the desert routes of Africa. Soon, however, the American trade developed. A strong demand for brute labor in the West Indies and on the continent of America grew in the eighteenth century, when Negro slaves were crossing the Atlantic at the rate of fifty to one hundred thousand a year. This called for slave raiding on a scale that drew upon every part of Africa—the west coast, the western and Egyptian Sudan, the Valley of the Congo, Abyssinia, the lake regions, the east coast, and Madagascar. Not simply the degraded and weaker types of Negroes were seized, but the strong Bantu, the Mandingo and Songhay, the Nubian and Nile Negroes, the Fula, and even the Asiatic Malay, were represented in the raids.

Thus began in modern days a new slavery and slave trade. It was different from that of the past, because it came to be founded on racial caste, and this caste was made the foundation of a new industrial system. For four hundred years, from 1450 to 1850, European civilization carried on a systematic trade in human beings of such tremendous proportions that the physical, economic, and moral effects are still plainly to be seen in the world. To this must be added the large slave trade of Mohammedans, which began with the seventh century and raged until the end of the nineteenth century.

These were not days of decadence; they gave the world Shakespeare, Martin Luther, and Raphael, Haroun-al-Raschid and Abraham Lincoln. They were days of the greatest expansion of two of the world's most pretentious religions and of the beginnings of the modern organization of industry. In the midst of this advance this slave trade and slavery spread more human misery, inculcated more disrespect for and neglect of humanity, a greater callousness to suffering, and more petty, cruel, human hatred than can be calculated. We may excuse and explain it, and try to forget it; but it remains the most despicable blot on modern human history.

48-16-110

The Portuguese built the first slave-trading fort at Elmina, Gold Coast, in 1482, and extended their trade down the west coast and up the east coast. Under them the traffic grew larger and larger, until it became far the most important in money value of all the commerce of the Zambezi basin. There could be no extension of agriculture, no mining, no progress of any kind where it was extensively carried on.

The Dutch launched the oversea slave trade as a regular institution. They began their fight for freedom from Spain in 1579; in 1595, as a war measure against Spain, who at that time was dominating Portugal, they made their first voyage to Africa. By 1621 they had captured Portugal's various slave forts on the west coast and they opened sixteen forts along the coast of the Gulf of Guinea. Ships sailed from Holland to Africa, got slaves in exchange for their goods, carried the slaves to the West Indies or Brazil, and returned home laden with sugar. In 1621 the private companies trading were all merged into the Dutch West India Company, which sent in four years fifteen thousand four hundred and thirty Negroes to Brazil, carried on war with Spain, supplied even the English plantations, and gradually became the great slave carrier of the day.

48-16-111

The commercial supremacy of the Dutch excited the envy of the English. The Navigation Ordiance of 1651 was aimed at them, and two wars were necessary to wrest the slave trade from them and place it in the hands of the English. The final terms of peace, among other things, surrendered New Netherlands to England and opened the way for England to become henceforth the World's greatest slave trader.

The English trade began with Sir John Hawkins' voyages in 1562. Desultory trade was kept up until the middle of the seventeenth century, when English chartered slave-trading companies were formed. In 1662 the "Royal Adventurers", including the King, the queen dowager, and the Duke of York, invested in the trade, and finally the Royal African Company, the world's chief slave trader, was formed in 1672 and traded for a quarter of a century. Jamaica was captured and held by Oliver Cromwell in 1655 as a West Indian base for the slave trade.

The chief contract for trade in Negroes was the celebrated "Asiento" or permission of the King of Spain to import slaves into Spanish colonies. The ~~Spain's~~ Pope's Bull of Demarkation, 1493, debarred Spain from Africa and compelled her to contract with other nations for slaves. This contract was held by the Portuguese in 1600; in 1640 the Dutch received it, and in 1701 the French. The War of the Spanish Succession brought the monopoly to England.

48-16-112

This Asiento of 1713 was an agreement between England and Spain for a monpoloy of the Spanish colonial slave trade for thirty years, and England engaged to supply the colonies with at least one hundred and forty-four thousand slaves a year. The English regarded this contract as the greatest result of the Treaty of Utrecht (1713), which ended the mighty struggle against the power of Louis XIV. They held the monopoly until the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle (1748), although they had to fight for it in 1739.

From this agreement, slave traders reaped a harvest. The trade centered at Liverpool, and that city's commercial greatness was built on slavery. In 1709 it sent out one slaver of thirty tons' burden; encouraged by Parliamentary subsidies the trade amounted to fifty-three ships in 1751; eighty-six in 1765, and at the beginning of the nineteenth century, one hundred and eighty-five, which carried forty-nine thousand two hundred and thirteen slaves in one year.

The slave trade thus carried on by the Portuguese, Dutch and English centered on the west coast near the seat of one of the oldest cultures of Africa. The culture of Yoruba, Benin, Mossiland, and Nupe had exhausted itself in a desperate attempt to stem the flood of Mohammedan culture. It had maintained its small, loosely federated city-states suited to trade, industry, and art. It had developed strong resistance toward the Sudan state builders toward the north, but behind this warlike resistance lay the peaceful city life which gave industrial ideas to Byzantium and shared something of Ethiopian and Mediterranean culture.

The first advent of the slave traders increased and encouraged native industry but soon this was pushed into the background, for it was not bronze metal but bronze flesh that Europe wanted. A new tyranny built on war, forced itself forward in the Niger delta. The powerful state of Dahomey arose early in the eighteenth century. Ashanti began its conquests in 1719 and grew with the slave trade. Thus state building in West Africa began to replace the city economy, but it was a state built on war supported and encouraged largely for the sake of trade in human flesh. The native industries were changed and disorganized. Family ties and government were weakened. Far into the heart of Africa this disintegration coupled with rum and Mohammedan raiding, penetrated. The face of Africa was turned south on these slave traders instead of northward toward the Mediterranean, where for two thousand years and more Europe and Africa had met in legitimate trade and mutual respect. Hereafter Africa for centuries was to appear before the world, not as the land of gold and ivory, of Mansa Musa and Meroe, but as a bound and captive slave, dumb and degraded.

48-16-13

The natural desire to avoid a painful subject has led historians to gloss over the details of the slave trade and leave the impression that it was a local West Coast phenomenon and confined to a few years. It was, on the contrary, continent wide and centuries long and an economic, social, and political catastrophe probably unparalleled in human history.

The exact proportions of the slave trade can be estimated only approximately. From 1680 to 1688 we know that the English African Company alone sent 249 ships to Africa, shipped there 60,783 Negro slaves, and after losing 14,387 on the middle passage, delivered 46,396 in America.

It seems probable that 25,000 Negroes a year arrived in America between 1698 and 1707. After the Asiento of 1713 this number rose to 30,000 annually, and before the Revolutionary War it had reached at least 40,000 and perhaps 100,000 slaves a year.

48-16-114

The total number of slaves imported is not known. Dunbar estimated that nearly 900,000 came to America in the sixteenth century, 2,750,000 in the seventeenth, 7,000,000 in the eighteenth and over 4,000,000 in the nineteenth, perhaps 15,000,000 in all. Certainly it seems that at least 10,000,000 Negroes were expatriated. Probably every slave imported represented on the average of five corpses in Africa or on the high seas. The American slave trade, therefore, meant the elimination of at least 60,000,000 Negroes from their fatherland. The Mohammedan slave trade meant the expatriation of forcible migration in Africa of nearly as many more. It would be conservative, then to say that the slave trade cost Negro Africa 100,000,000 souls. And yet people ask today the cause of the stagnation of African culture since 1600!

Such a large number of slaves could be supplied only by organized slave raiding in every corner of Africa. The African continent gradually became revolutionized. Whole regions were depopulated, whole tribes disappeared; villages were built in caves and on hills or in forest fastnesses; the character of peoples like those of Benin developed their worst excesses of cruelty instead of the already flouishing arts of peace. The dark, irresistible grasp of fetish took firmer hold on men's minds.

Further advances toward civilization became impossible. Not only was there the immense demand for slaves which had its outlet on the west coast, but the slave caravans were streaming up through the desert to the Mediterransan coast and down the valley of the Nile to the centers of Mohammedanism. It was a rape of a continent to an extent never paralleled in ancient or modern times.

In the American trade there was not only the horrors of the slave raid, which lined the winding paths of the African jungles with bleached bones, but there was also the horrors of what was called the "middle passage", that is, the voyage across the Atlantic. As Sir William Dolben said, "The Negroes were chained to each other hand and foot, and stowed so close that they were not allowed above a foot and a half for each in breadth. Thus crammed together like herrings in a barrel, they contracted putrid and fatal disorders; so that they who came to inspect them in a morning had occasionally to pick dead slaves out of their rows, and to unchain their carcases from the bodies of their wretched fellow-sufferers to whom they had been fastened."

It was estimated that out of every one hundred lot shipped from Africa only about fifty lived to be effective laborers across the sea, and among the whites more seamen died in that trade in one year than in the whole remaining trade of England in two. The full realization of the horrors of the slave trade was slow in reaching the ears and conscience of the modern world, just as today the treatment of dark natives in European colonies is brought to publicity with the greatest difficulty. The first move against the slave trade in England came in Parliament in 1776, but it was not until thirty-one years later, in 1807, that the trade was banned through the arduous labors of Clarkson, Wilberforce, Sharpe, and others.

48-16-115

Denmark had already abolished the trade, and the United States attempted to do so the following year. Portugal and Spain were induced to abolish the trade between 1815 and 1830. Notwithstanding these laws, the contraband trade went on until the beginning of the Civil War in America. The reasons for this were the enormous profit of the trade and the continued demand of the American slave barons, who had no sympathy with the efforts to stop their source of cheap labor supply.

48-16-116

However, philanthropy was not working alone to overthrow Negro slavery and the slave trade. It was seen, first in England and later in other countries, that slavery as an industrial system could not be made to work satisfactorily in modern times. Its cost was too great, and one of the causes of this cost was the slave insurrections from the very beginning, when the slaves rose on the plantation of Diego Columbus down to the Civil War in America. In North America revolt finally took the form of organized running away to the North, and this, with the growing scarcity of suitable land and the moral revolt, led to the Civil War and the disappearance of the American slave trade.

There was still, however, the Mohammedan slave trade to deal with, and this has been the work of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. In the last quarter of the nineteenth century ten thousand slaves annually were being distributed on the southern and eastern coast of the Mediterranean and at the great slave market in Bornu.

On the east coast of Africa in 1862 nineteen thousand slaves were passed into Zanzibar and thence into Arabia and Persia. As late as 1880, three thousand annually were being thus transplanted, but now the trade is about stopped.

"Such is the story of the Rape of Ethiopia—a sordid, pitiful, cruel tale. Raphael painted, Luther preached, Corneille wrote, and Milton sung; and through it all, for four hundred years, the dark captives wound to the sea amid the bleaching bones of the dead; for four hundred years the sharks followed the scurrying ships; for four hundred years America was strewn with the living and dying millions of a transplanted race; for four hundred years Ethiopia stretched forth her hands unto God."

Then the world changed. Instead of taking laborers to the land quicker transportation and imperial expansion made possible the use of native labor on its own land and exportation of the raw material. Thus the world began to invest in color prejudice. The 'Color Line' began to pay dividends. For indeed, while the exploration of the Valley of the Congo was the occasion of a new scramble for Africa, the cause lay deeper. The Franco-Prussian War turned the eyes of those who sought power and dominion away from Europe. Already England was in Africa, cleaning away the debris of the slave trade and half-consciously groping toward the new Imperialism. France, humiliated and impoverished, looked toward a new northern African empire sweeping from the Atlantic to the Red Sea. More slowly Germany began to see the dawning of a new day, and, shut out from America by the Monroe Doctrine, looked to Asia and Africa for colonies. Portugal sought anew to make good her claim to her ancient African realm; and thus a continent where Europe claimed but a tenth of the land in 1875, was in twenty-five more years practically absorbed.

46-16-117

Why was this? What was the new call for dominion? It must have been strong, for consider a moment the desperate flames of war that have shot up in Africa in the last quarter of a century: France and England at Fashoda; Italy at Adua; Italy and Turkey in Tripoli; England and Portugal at Delagoa Bay; England, Germany, and the Dutch in South Africa; France and Spain in Morocco; Germany and France in Agadir; and the world at Algeciras.

The answer to this riddle we shall find in the economic changes in Europe. Remember what the nineteenth and twentieth centuries have meant to organized industry in European civilization. Slowly the Divine right of the Rich to determine economic income and distribute the goods and services of the world has been questioned and curtailed. We called the process Revolution in the eighteenth century, Democracy in the nineteenth, and Socialism in the twentieth. But whatever we call it, the movement is the same: the dipping of more and grimier hands into the wealth-bag of the nation, until today only the ultra stubborn fail to see that democracy in determining income is the next inevitable step to Democracy in political power.

With the waning of the possibility of the Big Fortune, gathered by starvation wages and boundless exploitation of one's weaker and poorer fellows at home, arose more magnificently the dream of exploitation abroad. Always, of course, the individual merchant had at his own risk and in his own way tapped the riches of foreign lands. Later, special trading monopolies had entered the field and founded empires overseas. Soon, however, the mass of merchants at home demanded a share in this golden stream; and finally, in the twentieth century, the laborer at home is demanding and beginning to receive a part of his share.

48-16-118

The theory of this new democratic despotism has not been clearly formulated. Most philosophers see the ship of state launched on the broad, irresistible tide of democracy, with only delaying eddies here and there; others, looking closer, are more disturbed. Are we, they ask, reverting to aristocracy and despotism—the rule of might? They cry out and then rub their eyes, for surely they cannot fail to see strengthening democracy all about them?

It is this paradox which has confounded philanthropists, curiously betrayed at times even the Socialists, and reconciled the Imperialists and captains of industry to any amount of "Democracy". It is this paradox which allows in America the most rapid advance of democracy to go hand in hand in its very centres with increased aristocracy and hatred toward darker races, and which excuses and defends an inhumanity that does not shrink from the public burning of human beings.

Yet the paradox is easily explained: the white workingman has been asked to share the spoil of exploiting 'chinks and niggers'. It is no longer simply the merchant prince, or the aristocratic monopoly, or even the employing class, that is exploiting the world: it is the nation; a new democratic nation composed of united capital and labor. The laborers are not yet getting, to be sure, as large a share as they want or will get, and there are still at the bottom large and restless excluded classes. But the laborer's equity is recognized, and his just share is a matter of time, intelligence, and skillful negotiation.

Such nations it is that rule the modern world. Their national bond is no mere sentimental patriotism, loyalty, or ancestor-worship. It is increased wealth, power, and luxury for all classes on a scale the world never saw before. Never before was the average citizen of England, France, and Germany so rich, with such splendid prospects of greater riches.

418-16-119

Whence comes this new wealth and on what does its accumulation depend? It comes primarily from the darker nations of the world— Asia and Africa, South and Central America, the West Indies and the islands of the South Seas. There are still, we may well believe, many parts of white countries in America, not to mention Europe itself, where the older exploitation still holds. But the knell has sounded faint and far, even there. In the lands of darker folk, however, no knell has sounded. Chinese, East Indians, Negroes, and South American Indians are by common consent for governance by white folk and economic subjection to them. To the furtherance of this highly profitable economic dictum has been brought every available resource of science and religion. Thus arises the astonishing doctrine of the natural inferiority of most men to the few, and the interpretation of 'Christian brotherhood' as meaning anything that one of the 'brothers' may at any time want it to mean.

Like all world-schemes, however, this one is not quite complete. First of all, yellow Japan has apparently escaped the cordon of this color bar. Then, too, the Chinese have recently shown unexpected signs of independence and autonomy and India is in turmoil.

One thing, however, is certain: Africa is prostrate. There, at least to most folk, few signs of self-consciousness, other than that need to be heeded. To be sure, Abyssinia must be wheedled, and in America and the West Indies, Negroes have attempted futile steps toward freedom; but such steps have been pretty effectually stopped (save through the breech of 'miscegenation'), although the ten million Negroes in the United States need, to many men's minds, careful watching and ruthless repression.

Thus the white European mind has worked and worked the more feverishly because Africa is the Land of the Twentieth Century. The world knows something of the gold and diamonds of South Africa, the cocoa of Angola and Nigeria, the rubber and ivory of the Congo, and the palm oil of the West Coast. But does the ordinary citizen realize the extraordinary economic advances of Africa, and too, of black Africa, in recent years? The export of palm oil from West Africa has grown from 283 tons in 1800, to 118,000 tons in 1926, which is worth today $120,000,000 annually. Native Gold Coast labor, unsupervised, produces half the cocoa of the world, exporting 231,000 tons in 1926, worth nearly 50 millions of dollars annually. The cotton crop of Uganda has risen from 23,000 hundred weight in 1909 to a half million in 1924 worth 33 million dollars. France and Belgium are no more remarkable in the cultivation of their land than the Negro province of Kano. The trade of Abyssinia amounts to only $10,000,000 a year, but it is its infinite possibility of growth that is making the nations crowd to Adis Abeba. All these things are but beginnings; nevertheless, tropical Africa and its peoples are being brought more irrevocably each year into the vortex of the economic influences that sway the western world.'

48-16-120

4/8-16-121

The economic resources are vast: First, there is the agriculture, which may be divided into two parts, native agriculture for the needs of the natives, and agriculture by native laborers for crops demanded by the world. The transition from one to the other has varied. Of the world crops, there is cotton, grown in the Nile Valley and the Sudan and in West Africa. Egypt exports $135,000,000 worth of cotton a year and the cotton areas being increased by irrigation and dams. There are large cotton areas, like that about Lake Chad, still to be developed. Sisal, hemp and flax are considerably grown in Tanganyika, Kenya and Mozambizue. Other fiber plants grow in many parts of Africa. There is an enormous demand for vegetable oil and this is supplied largely by West Africa. The oil is used for soap, artificial butter, lubricants, etc.

First, comes the palm oil of West Africa, made from the palm kernels which are themselves exported. The oil palm grows from Senegal to Angola. Ground nuts and cocoa nuts are favorable producers of oil. In Nigeria, between 1908 and 1917, the export of ground nuts increased from four tons to 41,000 tons. Copra, which is the dried kernel of the cocoanut, is largely exported. The shea butter tree is used for oil, and also sesame, caster-oil bean and other products. Cocoa has become one of the great industries of West Africa. It centers in the Gold Coast, but it is raised in other West African colonies. It began to be exported from the Gold Coast in 1891, and is now one of the main exports. The kola nut is raised and used by the natives. European grains are grown in North Africa and corn in many parts of Africa. Barley, oats and millet are grown to some extent and also rice. Tobacco is a prize crop of South Africa and sugar is grown in Egypt. Tea is raised in Natal and coffee is indigenous to Africa. It is extensively grown in Uganda, Kenya, Abyssinia and Liberia. Rubber grows all over tropical Africa. Spices are raised in Northeast Africa, cloves, particularly in Zanzibar. Alfalfa grass is raised, for b[illegible]ring. Fruits are exported from every part of Africa, and dates especially flourish in the deserts.

Cattle and sheep are largely raised in Africa, except where flies and disease attack them. The mineral development of Africa is large, and the problem of native labor has involved in the past slavery, and serfdom in the present. The chief mining regions are in Algeria, the Gold Coast, the Congo, the Gaboon colony and Natal, Southern Rhodesia and the Transvaal, and Madagascar. Other countries, like Abyssinia, Angola, the Belgian Congo, are rich in minerals, but at present undeveloped. The chief minerals are gold, all over Africa, and in modern times, especially the Transvaal; diamonds, whose value in 1917 was nearly $40,000,000; coal, in South Africa; iron in many parts of Africa and from earliest times; Manganese in West Africa; copper in Katanga in the Northern Transvaal; and in other parts of South Africa. Lead, graphite, zinc are found. Phosphates are in North Africa, Mineral oil has been found, and soda and salt are largely exported.

There can be no doubt of the economic possibilities of Africa in the near future. There are not only the well-known and traditional products, but boundless chances in a hundred different directions, and above all, there is a throng of human beings who, could they once be reduced to the docility and steadiness of Chinese coolies or of seventeenth and eighteenth century European laborers, would furnish to their masters a spoil exceeding the gold-haunted dreams of the most modern of Imperialists; or on the other hand, if according to the vision of Phillip Snowden the purchasing power of the native should be raised by higher wages to something approaching European standards a vast new market for goods would open to the world.

4/8-16-123

This, then, is the real secret of that desperate struggle for Africa which began in 1877 and is now culminating. Economic dominion outside Africa has, of course, played its part, and we were on the verge of the partition of Asia when Asiatic shrewdness warded it off. America was saved from direct political dominion by the Monroe Doctrine. Thus, more and more, the Imperialists have concentrated on Africa.

The greater the concentration, the more deadly the rivalry. From Fashoda to Agadir, repeatedly the spark has been applied to the European magazine and a general conflagration narrowly averted. We speak of the Balkans as the storm-centre of Europe and cause of war, but this is mere habit. The Balkans are convenient for occasions, but the ownership of materials and men in the darker world is the real prize that is setting the nations of Europe at each other's throats today.

The world war was then the result of jealousies engendered by the recent rise of armed national associations of labor and capital whose aim is the exploitation of the wealth of the world mainly ourside the European circle of nations. These associations, grown jealous and suspicious at the division of the spoils of trade-empire, are fighting to enlarge their respective shares; they look for expansion, not in Europe but in Asia, and particularly in Africa. 'We want no inch of French territory,' said Germany to England, but Germany was 'unable to give' similar assurances as to France in Africa.

Let us now trace the steps in the partition of Africa. They were preceded by a long and romantic period of exploration which greatly interested the world in this dark and unknown continent.

4/8-16-124

The Phoenicious were sent around Africa by the Egyptian Pharaoh Necho, 600 B. C. Cambyses, the Persian King, lost his life in endeavoring to find the source of the Nile. In 525 B. C., Hanno, the Cartharginian, made an expedition around the West Coast of Africa as far as Liberia. Herodotus, journeyed in Egypt 450 B.C. and other Greeks explored down into 140 B. C. In the second century of the Christian era, Ptolemy compiled much of our geographical knowledge. Exploration declined when the Romans conquered Africa, but revived under the Mohammendans in the 10th Century. Ibn Batuta, in the 14th Century, and Leo Africanus in the 16th Century, visited the Niger and Lake Ch ad. The Portuguese sent many explorers in the 15th, 16th and 17th Century, the exploration of the Niger began.

In 1795, Mungo Park, a Scotchman, started his celebrated journey. The Portuguese Lacerda made a journey up the Zambezi in 1798, and two colored men, Baptista and José, crossed Africa early in the 20th Century. Dr. Henry Barth began his celebrated explorations in the Sudan in 1850. Livingston settled in South Africa in 1841 and began his journeys.

~~began his journeys.~~ In 1851, he reached the Zambezi. Sending his family back to England, he explored that part of Africa, returning to London in 1856.

Meantime, Burton and Speke discovered the Great Lakes already reported by German missionaries. Speke, Grant and Baker travelled from the Great Lakes down the Nile to Egypt. Livingston was sent back to the Zambezi and continued explorations from 1856 to 1864, discovering Lake Nyasa. In 1866, he explored East Central Africa, discovering lakes and rivers. Stanley was sent to his relief and found him, and Livingston finally died in 1873.

48-16-125

Cameron crossed Africa in 1875 and earlier Rohlfs began to explore Morocco. Matteucci and other Italians explored the Sudan. Dr. Nachtigal made very important journeys in North Africa, and Paul du Chaillu travelled in the Gaboon district in 1850 to 1860. Schweinfurth, a botanist, explored the Nile Valley, starting in 1868, and Joseph Thomson continued the exploration of the Great Lakes. Stanley's search for Emin Pasha, who had retreated after the British's loss of the Sudan, and had appealed for help, was made late in the 19th Century.

Along with the explorers went the missionaries.

Portuguese Catholic Priests and Jesuits went with most of the early explorers to Africa. Congo natives were brought to Portugal in 1485 and were baptised into the Catholic faith. In 1491, the King and Queen of the Congo were baptised and a native Congolese, who had been educated in Portugal, was made Bishop of the Congo area in the 16th Century. In Portuguese East Africa, Christianity was introduced but the Mohammendans eventually got most of the converts. Portuguese priests traveled in Abyssinia toward the end of the 15th Century.

Protestant missions did not begin until the end of the 18th Century when the Huguenots and the Moravians worked in South Africa. Methodist missionary work began in Sierra Leone. By the end of the 18th Century, the London Missionary Society and two Scottist Societies were sending out missionaries to West Africa. The Church Missionary Society sent German missionaries to East Africa and educated the first Protestant Negro bishop, Samuel Crowther, on the Niger. The Westleyan Methodists worked in South Africa.

Roman Catholic missions entered North Africa after Algeria was annexed, and in 1846, the Roman Catholics moved toward the Sudan through Egypt. In 1878, Cardinal Lavigerie started the mission of the White Fathers. This worked in the Sudan and on the Congo and eventually clashed with the British Protestants in Uganda. The Jesuits, late in the 19th Century, began again to work on the Zambezi, and both Catholics and protestants priests worked in Madagascar.

Stirred by Stanley, the English Church Missionary Society went into Uganda and in Tanganyika. Swiss Protestants worked on the Gold Coast and German Protestants followed. French Protestants began in 1829 in Basutoland and South Africa. The Scotch Church founded educational establishments at Lovedale and on the Zambezi, and American missions began to work in the 19th Century. Finally, American Negro churches sent missionaries to South and West Africa.

First, discovering and the slave trade; then missions; then the Imperialists. The whole imperial movement is too intricate to follow in this little book but we may best understand it by tracing the policies of Portugal, Holland, England, Italy and France.

Portugal was the first Imperialists in Africa and from exploration and discovery had a claim to the whole of central, east and west Africa in the 16th Century. The Portuguese recognized Negro kingdoms like this of the Monomotapa and of Muato Yanvo; established the Kingdom of Congo; got in touch with Abyssinia and began the slave trade. Then came the Dutch.

48-16-126

The Dutch began to trade with the Guinea Coast soon after their emancipation from Spain. They secured various trading places on the West Coast, gradually supplanting the Portuguese.

With the abolition of the slave trade, Dutch commerce decreased and in 1872, the last of the Dutch possessions were transferred to Great Britain. Meantime, the Dutch East India Company made settlements in South Africa, taking possession of Table Bay in 1652. They fought with the Hottentots and Bushmen and secured a small strip of coast where they stayed for one hundred years.

In 1685, French Protestants, driven out by Louis XIV, received free passage and grants of land in Dutch South Africa. Early in the eighteenth century the Dutch settlers began to cross the mountains and reached the Orange River in 1760. There were altogether, 10,000 inhabitants in Cape Colony in 1770. They were attacked by the British during the war between Great Britain and Holland in 1780. At the same time the Dutch began to clash with the Bantu who had been gradually invading South Africa for a thousand years and more.

4/8-16-147

The first Kaffir war took place in 1781, and others at frequent intervals therefore. In 1795, the Prince of Orange gave the British the right to occupy Cape Colony which they did after some resistance. The Kaffirs began to raid again and although the English abandoned the colony in 1803, they took it again in 1806. In 1814, Cape Colony was formally ceded to Great Britain for a cash payment of $30,000,000.

Some of the Boers refused to submit to the British and passed into the wilderness beyond the Orange River where again they came into contact with the Kaffirs and Zulus. The British moved after the Boers but the Boers maintained, finally, their complete independence in the Orange River Free State and in the Transvaal.

In 1877, the Transvaal was suddenly annexed to Great Britain but fought and maintained its independence in 1881, subject to vague British supremacy. This situation was ratified by treaty in 1884. Then, gold was discovered on the Witwatersrand, and a mass of British subjects poured into the Transvaal. A lawless force under Dr. Jameson, backed by Cecil Rhodes, invaded the Transvaal in 1895, and were captured and handed over to the British Government. Dutch Africa now merges with British Africa.

Trade, first in spices, then in gold, and finally in slaves attracted English seamen in the sixteenth century. When Portugal was absorbed by Spain, and Spain was at war with England, Queen Elizabeth chartered English traders to Africa. They made settlements on the West Coast, including the settlement of Sierra Leone, which, after the abolition of the slave trade, became a refuge for re-captured slaves. After the abolition of the slave trade, the English acquired the Dutch settlements and became involved in war with the Ashanti, with whom they fought in 1824 and 1872, and finally conquered in 1895.

Lagos was conquered by a naval expedition in 1851, and became a British colony in 1861. To this was added gradually, the territory now known as Nigeria, which England gained by trading her claims in the Valley of the [redacted] the Congo, at the Conference of Berlin. In Nigeria were included four great Negro peoples, the Songhai, the Hausa, the people of Bornu, and of Nupe.

But the policy of the British in West Africa is epitomized by the history of Sierra Leone. The slave trade declined and this coast became a refuge for recaptured slaves. Black and poor prowlers from England, Maroons from Jamaica and Nova Scotia, load after load of slaves recaptured on the high seas, not to mention a cargo of white prostitutes from England, were dumped on these shores to stew and strive and live and die. All of these pieces of peoples, ~~interwingled groups of individuals from the West Indies, from all parts of the African interior, from the United States and from Nova Scotia,~~ began to settle down and develop along certain lines. By the middle of the nineteenth century the English mission schools were turning out some fairly well educated young people. The older people were grasping at a more or less stable economic foothold; buying from England, selling some raw products. As time went one some of them sent their sons and daughters to England. Some sent their wives, too, and established their families there for purposes of education.

4/8-16-128

Very slowly, but certainly, there arose in British West Africa a group of Negroes with educated leadership, a few with the best modern university training. England was rather negligently proud of them. They were curiosities when they appeared in London. Queen Victoria's government promised them eventual autonomy and the chance to set up for themselves, presumably as an independent country. On March 3, 1865, a select committee of the House of Commons resolved "that the object of our policy should be to encourage in the natives the exercise of those qualities which may render it possible for us more and more to transfer to them the administration of all the Governments with a view to our ultimate withdrawal." Pursuing this policy and with the energetic pushing forward of the Negroes the colony was virtually in the hands of black folk by 1890. Sir Samuel Lewis, a colored man, had been Chief Justic. McCarthy was Queen's Consul and the people were voting and electing their own officials.

48-12-129

Meantime, matters changed. Africa became a great open land for new raw material. Instead of giving up African colonies, the European nations after the middle of the nineteenth century began to scramble for all the territory they could get there and by 1885 had it definitely divided up. English business began to move out to Africa, and when it moved to West Africa it met the educated Negro leader. What happened?

~~Manifestly,~~ Here in Africa and in a country with a small but evident black leadership, there ~~was~~ are social and residential segregation by race; there was a degree of disfranchisement that left the Negroes almost without political power; there was a peonage of the great mass of natives that kept them at work at low wages with little profit, and there was very little popular education.

Sierra Leone proper, with Freetown and some 450 square miles about it, is a settlement dominated by civilized Negroes of all types. When the partition of Africa added 31,000 square miles of hinterland to this, there arose a dilemma. Legally, Freetown would rule the hinterland and if Freetown had been white there would have been no questions raised; it would have been "home rule" by divine right. But Freetown was black and agressively black, and true to its great principle of "Divide and Conquer", England proceeded to drive a wedge between native and civilized blacks and to back this movement with propaganda; the black West African was all right in a way and capable of some training; rather good as a clerk and small merchant, but he would never do as a ruler. White men must rule.

At a time, then, when blacks were rising in the Government and civil service of Sierra Leone, the professions and trade, and were on the way to dominate colony and protectorate, there came a new dispensation. The power of the blacks was strictly confined to the 450 square miles of Freetown and vicinity, and here their political power was narrowed and curtailed. Around the little Negro republic which centred at Freetown, there was built up a great protectorate. This super-government surrounded and choked and overshadowed the original black republic. The republic still has its feebls forms of government operating within the confines of Freetown. It has a City Council. It elects the Mayor and some other local officers.. But its funds and powers of execution and expenditure are strictly curtailed. Practically direct taxation on land and houses is its only form of revenue. Police, sanitation, the harbor, business and commerce in general and all matters to do with the natives and educating are all under the protectorate Government. And not only are the courts under the white protectorate, but as jurors must be black, the white court can at its will in criminal cases abolish trial by jury; and in all cases the white Judges sitting as a Court of Appeal pass on their own judgments!

418-16-/30

Thus, the Government of the Protectorate is white, and is overshadowing, and all-powerful. At the head of this Government is the autocratic Governor who is practically a king by divine right. He is in reality responsible only to the Colonial Office and the Colonial Office in London is responsible to no one. The policy of the white government is to curtail the functions of what remains of the Negro government; to keep the educated and voting Negroes as far as possible from all contact with the natives and the natives from all such leadership. The territory where the natives live is divided into districts, and over each is a white District Commissioner responsible to the Governor and with practically unlimited power over the natives.

The civil service in its upper branches is largely confined to white men who receive high salaries with many and valuable perquisites. In a country where the income of the mass of people is very small, and where the average pay of colored civil servants is $350 a year, the Governor gets $20,000 a year, a mansion and Summer bungalow; the Secretary, Treasurer, Controller of Customs, three Commissioners and medical officials get from $5,000 to $6,000 a year each and homes. The Chief Justice and Attorney General get $10,000 and $6,000 and homes; and other white men receive from $4,000 to $5,000. In all, 203 Europeans receive nearly $550,000 a year in salaries. In addition to this are numerous pensions, paid in England from the local revenue, ranging from $50. to $2,500 a year. A man who could scarcely earn $2,000 in England comes out to Sierra Leone at a salary of $5,000 with all the witchery of authority over "niggers".

The native tribes are ruled by the Governor and his Commissioners through their chiefs; that is, chiefs who accept white rule and behave and send down palm oil, kernels, rice and other articles, receive money and favors from the Government and its Commissioners and are held in power. Those who do not soon lose their influence and are driven from power. In return, the Government builds roads, makes crop experiments and furnishes a little education for the chiefs' sons through elementary schools superintended by white men. The Governor and his appointees raise by indirect taxation a revenue of about $4,000,000 a year. Nearly all the white people in the colony are officials and merchants. The officials have a special status made for them because they are officials. The most beautiful and salubrious residential district in the colony is officially assigned to these persons for residence. The Government makes their roads, builds their houses, lays out their tennis courts and golf links. The officials ride on a special car on the trains, thus practically inaugurating a "Jim Crow" car system. The sanitary and medical systems are announced as inaugurated "to make Sierra Leone habitable by white folk."

48-16-131

48-16-132

The white merchants are united in a Chamber of Commerce, which has representation upon the Governor's Council, and consequently the right to present its views. Moreover, since its represents the chief source of revenue upon which the Government is based, and since through its English commercial connections it exerts strong influence in the Colonial Office in London, its views must be received with attention. There is no evident color line to the membership in this Chamber of Commerce and there are a few colored members; but the membership fee is high—$25 a year—and there is no restriction upon the number of memberships which any commercial organization may take. The great Elder-Demster shipping monopoly and similar companies may easily take out a dozen or more memberships should that be necessary in order to dominate the chamber. On the other hand, most small black merchants ~~would~~ do not join at all. Why should they waste ~~[illegible]~~ $25,'

Education hitherto has been almost entirely missionary. Sometimes the missionaries have done good work, as in the case of Fourah Bay Colley, the only effective institution of higher learning today in all West Africa. In other cases the work has been fragmentary and of littl account. Recently the government has begun to assist education. The system is incomplete and the appropriations amount to only $125,000 a year.

The whole administration of the natives in the interior has to have for its paramount object revenue - revenue to the State, profit to the trader and cheap raw materials for the English manufacturers.

Here, then, is the problem: One is astonished at the ingenuity of its solution. One wonders how much might not have been accomplished if half the ingenuity used here had been used really to build up and develop the African in Africa. As it is, there is inevitably race conflict in West Africa. On the one hand, one hears of impudent and half-educated Negro leaders in silk hats and long coats who want to rule and exploit the natives for their own aggrandizement; and, on the other hand, one hears of English officials living in luxury at high salaries, pensioned for life at the expense of the black taxpayers after a comparatively few years' service, responsible to nobody for their actions, and desiring only self-aggrandizement and profit for English merchants and investors.

Out of this situation has grown agitation. This agitation has naturally thrown the black community into warring conflicts. There are colored people who gain by the present arrangement. Always the Government has something in its gift for colored men. There are few but possible imperial "honors" to be distributed. Then there is a large class that says: "What's the use? What can we do against the might of England? After all England does do things well. She brings out English experts who can give us better sanitation than Africans can.

48-6-33

She brings out trained administrators with whom we cannot compete. She administers our finances. Why not bear it and hope for adjustment in the future?" Then there are the radicals with wild criticism, with personal grievance, with personal failures. Despite all this there were always strong Negroes in Sierra Leone who declared that West Africa belongs to West Africans and demanded the abolition of color discrimination in the civil service and color discrimination in residence. Such men were marked, naturally, for governmental disapprobation, and against them were pushed forward puppets, "white folks' niggers", who pretended that all was well when one considered the shortcomings of the black folk.

The first reaction of black West Africa was to win the battle by individual ability: to push their young men forward; to give them the best university training, particularly in the professions, and thus gradually to work colored men into the civil service and into power. This path of advance was pretty effectually stopped by governmental action. Whereas in 1892 a black man, Sir Samuel Lewis, was acting Chief Justice of Sierra Leone, and Maxwell, Chief Magistrate of Gambia and Frank Smith Acting Chief Justice of the Gold Coast, lately no black man has been appointed Judge or held any permanent judicial office under the Government. For a while it was impossible for competent black men with first-class university degrees in medicine to secure appointment in the African Medical Service, and when finally, by continued agitation, some were appointed, they were put in a special African department at lower salaries than the white men who had pursued exactly the same courses and passed the same examination. The black people began to see that their fight for individual advancement was not only systematically blocked by the white Governors and their appointees, but that they were losing in their battle the support and sympathy of the natives.

Now the natives of Sierra Leone and its hinterland are a man with a mighty history back of them, a history of organization, education, state building, literature and art. They are a part of that great development of human culture in Western African which lately has been brought to the attention of the civilized world. They come within the history of the coast reaching from the mouth of the Gambia to the mouth of the Niger, 3,000 miles, where a marvelous drama of world history has been enacted. Here, as Frobenius thinks, was the fabled Atlantis; here came Phoenicians and Carthaginians; and from the interior came the Yoruba-Benin-Dahomey peoples. Behind them came the Mossi, and upon the high plateau toward the Central Sudan arose, in the past, the great empires of the Mellistine and the Songhay. War, conquest and the slave trade have swept over these peoples and left them disintegrated and bewildered, but they have still the material of great nations. Gradually, then, the new and Europeanized blacks, [redacted] leading Sierra Leone, began to get in touch with the chiefs and thinkers of the remaining groups of these native states. This was easier as time went on because some of the sons of the chiefs and of the great families had been among the young men educated in the missionary schools and sent to Europe.

48-16-134

48-16-135

Finally, this whole agitation and fight came to a head in a National Congress of British West Africa, which first met at Accra on the Gold Coast in 1920. There were present representatives from Gambia, Sierra Leone, the Gold Coast and Nigeria. The meeting had been projected in 1915 and pushed further in 1915, but came to a head finally only in 1920.

The Conference sat for a week, debated the situation thoroughly, drew up a splendid set of documents and sent a deputation to England. Official England refused to receive the deputation. English newspapers were dumb. The door of the Colonial Office was closed in their faces. But all this was in vain. The Congress became a permanent body.

It met again in Bathurst in January, 1922, and ~~is preparing for a third meeting.~~ regularly thereafter. A permanent office under a General Secretary is maintained at Secondee, Gold Coast.

Despite the official attitude which the British Government at first assumed, it was compelled to give way. In 1922, Nigeria was granted a Legislative Council with a minority of elected members in the majority still ~~main~~ appointed by the autocratic Governor. In 1923, the Gold Coast was given a similar grant, and in 1924, and after Sierra Leone ~~leaving~~ and Gambia. ~~for subsequent action.~~ To gauge the meaning of this we must remember that in Sierra Leone the former Legislative Council consisted of twelve persons, eight white colonial officials and four "unofficial" members (three black and one white). All these were appointed by the Governor. The new system has twenty-one members of Council, eleven official and ten unofficial. Of the unofficial members three are elected by the people, two nominated by commercial interests and five appointed by the Governor. Of these five, three are to be native chiefs and two others colored men. It is a muddled and indefinite step, but it is a little step toward democracy in West Africa. PP Naturally, the Africans are not placated with this sop and they are protesting and pushing. Concessions in the civil service are being made. In the West African Medical Service, established "for the health of the whites", seven of the twenty physicians are now Negroes. Certain "African" assistants in the Treasury and Colonial offices are being appointed, junior to the white Secretaries and with less pay. This slow and grudging and illiberal yielding is in vain. Black British West Africa is out for self rule and in our day it is going to get it.

4/8-16 - 136

We have already seen how the British ousted the Dutch in South Africa; this brought the British in contact with the Kaffirs. The first British-Kaffir war took place in 1809, and this stopped the Kaffirs at the Great Fish River. In 1819, came another Kaffir war, which resulted in the establishment of neutral land between the blacks and whites near the Great Fish River. This truce was broken by the British granting land in the territory to white settlers.

The slave trade was abolished in 1807, but numbers of free Negroes and rescued slaves came in so that there were 60,000 slaves in South Africa in 1824. Slavery was abolished in 1833, to become final in 1838 and some compensation was given owners, who were chiefly Dutchmen. They did not, however, consider that they had enough.

In 1834, 12,000 armed Kaffirs attacked the Europeans. For a time, they swept all before them; but the British checked them in 1835. Ten years of intermittent war followed, and the Dutch withdrew to form their two independent states. In 1846, another Kaffir war broke out and in 1850, still another. In 1853, the strongholds of the Kaffirs in the mountains were captured and the Kaffirs driven back. In 1877 and 1878, the last Kaffir war took place. Cetewayo lead the Zulus, a tribe of the Kaffirs, into the war of 1877. At first, they cut to pieces 800 British troups and killed the Prince Imperial of France. Eventually, however, they were overcome and the King taken prisoner. At last, by machine guns against assegais, the British Empire subdued a Negro tribe and took their land and natural wealth.

Diamonds and gold were discovered in 1867 and later in the Dutch States; and Indian coolies were introduced in 1860 into Natal. Following up Livingston's explorations on the Zambezi, a trading company was established and eventually Nyasaland became another British Colony and Cecil Rhodes plotted and arranged for further African exploration and annexation of territory.

418-16-137

The Boer War of 1899 to 1902 overthrew the Dutch republics. The Negroes largely helped the English hoping for freedom and citizenship. The Union of South Africa was established in 1906.

Today, the Union of South Africa in the hands of the Dutch and British is a free dominion of the British Empire with less than 2 million whites and 5½ million natives, is seeking to monopolize all the best land, prohibit Negroes from voting or pursuing skilled trades and reduce them to a contented peasantry of agricultural workers and servants with limited education. The natives are protesting to the world increasing education and using their present voting power which is limited and exercised only in one province to regain their land, increase their education and gain the right to work.

4/8-16-138

France began her adventure in North Africa in 1830. The expedition was entirely the work of Charles X., and the coterie around him. The Algerian question at that time was the problem of suppressing piracy. For years the subjects of the Dey of Algeria had preyed upon the commerce in the Mediterranean. During the first quarter of the 19th Century this was a grave problem for Europeans and Americans. The English bombarded the Algerians in 1816, but no one power wanted to take the initiative, lest the "balance of power" of Europe be upset. It was indeed charged that while England wanted to stop the Negro slave trade, they encouraged the Algerian pirates and sold them vessels.

About 1827, there arosed an acute dispute between France and the Dey of Algiers. This was partly the matter of piracy and was partly because of monies loaned by Algerian bankers to Europeans during the Napoleonic wars. Especially, the French government had borrowed to pay for the supplies of the army in Africa. By 1815, the French debt to the Algerian banker was 13,000,000 francs. The Dey pressed for payment, and when payment was delayed, slapped the face of the French Consul. This gave France two excuses for intervention. England was much upset to hear of the French design to attack Algeria and the threat of war was in the air. But the government of Charles X. was already about to fall and they grasped this Algerian expedition to restore their prestige. Before the successful expedition had returned from Algiers, Charles X. was driven from his throne by the July Revolution of 1830 and Louis Philippe had succeeded.

Meantime, France had overthrown the government of Algiers and had acquired her first African possession. Having landed her army to avenge an insult, France stayed in Algiers to suppress piracy. For several years the French struggled to complete their conquest and absorption of Algiers. The Revolution of 1848 took place with a new emphasis upon liberty and equality. Traders began to move across from French Algeria to the neighboring independent state of Tunis. Pressure was brought to bear upon the Bey of Tunis because of his harsh treatment of some of these merchants, and as a result of a new treaty in 1857, the French received certain economic advantages: a monopoly of the telegraphic service; the concession for supplying Tunis with water.

48-1-139

Meantime, however, the English were not idle and they proceeded to get concessions for a railway, and thus the battle for economic absorption of Tunis was on. Soon, the administration was entirely in the hands of European speculators and money-lenders. The Bey borrowed money at high interest in return for new concessions, territory and mines. Companies were floated in Europe on the basis of these concessions. Taxation increased in Tunis and insurrections arose. In 1863, the Bey owed 28,000,000 francs. This debt was funded into a debt of 35,000,000 francs, and soon the Bey found that he was owing through the process of conversion 60,000,000 francs. Still the Bey was compelled to borrow more to put down rising rebellion due to taxation.

Meantime, France, England and Italy watched Tunis and watched each other. The European creditors agreed upon joint intervention to protect their financial interests in 1869. Then came the Franco-Prussa War and the Italians began to increase their influence in Tunis. This did not suit the English, who soon used their economic power against the Italians. In 1878, at the Congress of Berlin, Bismark and Lord Salisbury agreed upon turing over Tunis to France. Probably Bismark looked upon this as a sort of compensation to France for the seizure of Alsace-Lorraine. Fortunately, for the conspirators a rebellion took place on the Algerian and Tunis frontier. The French sent an army and entered Tunis. A treaty was signed immediately in which the Bey "agreed" that his kingdom should become a protectorate of France in 1881.

48-16-140

Immediately, there ensued a duel between France and Italy with regard to a third North African country, Tripoli. France was determined that under the doctrine of the Hinterland, the Italians, even if they seized Tripoli, should ~~not~~ no have claims that would lead them to Lake Chad. The French, therefore, sent expedition, and gradually cut into the territory behind and South of Tripoli.

The Treaty of 1890 between France and Great Britain brought recognition of Great Britain's claims in Zanzibar; of the French Protectorate of Madagascar and of a French sphere of influence in Central Africa South of her Mediterranean possessions and around Lake Chad.

French exploration, therefore, went on methodically. Young military men were sent from Algeria, Dahomey and the Congo across Africa in all directions, ~~and thus~~ consolidating an immense French empire in Africa. Thus, the whole of the valuable Hinterland which Italy wished to claim when she annexed Tripoli was cut off. When, therefore, political understanding between France and Italy came in 1900-1902, France was willing to give Italy free hand in what was left of Tripoli and Cyrenaica, while France received a free hand in Morocco. Italy declared war upon the Turkish Empire in 1911, and seized Tripoli by a series of events that led directly to the World War of 1914.

4/8-1/9-141

Two of the great rivers that formed the Nile, ~~mainly~~ namely the Blue Nile and the Atbara, rise in Abyssinia. This makes Abyssinia a strategic point for anyone ruling in Egypt. When the Suez Canal was constructed, Egypt became economically and stragically necessary to England, and consequently, the coasts of the Red Sea and the mountains of Abyssinia became important. The Suez Canal was opened in November, 1869. In 1875, when the Khedive Ismail was near bankruptcy, England bought for $20,000,000 the Egyptian ruler's shares in the Suez Canal Company. In 1876, the Dual Control of France and England over Egyptian finance was instituted, and in 1877, the man who was later known as Lord Cromer, went out from England to rule Egypt. The Khedive was deposed by England, Germany and France in 1879. In 1881, there came the Egyptian revolt under Arabi Pasha, and in 1882 the riot at Alexandria. A British army was landed in Egypt "to restore order" and has been there ever since. South of Egypt lay the Sudan and Abyssinia controlling the headwaters of the Nile.

Abyssinia had been converted to Christianity by Bishop Frumentius in 400 B. C. Its population consists of Negroes with an infiltration of Semitic blood. It has an old civilization and its climate and temperature is such that Europeans could easily live there. For centuries, it has been ruled by an Emperor and its various districts by hereditary chiefs. There has always been strife between the district chiefs and the Emperors. In 1850, under the Emperor Johannes, the central Government was weak and the chiefs almost independent. Out of this situation arose the man who became the Emperor Theodore. He was local chief, but by 1855, had conquered the other chiefs and became Emperor of Abyssinia.

4/8-16-1412

Between 1855 and 1865, various foreigners came to Abyssinia. He was interested in them and well disposed, but he was proud and conscious of his dignity and did not tolerate insult. He was especially suspicious of missionaries and said so.

He had treated the British very well and once sent a letter by the British Consul to Queen Victoria. The Colonial Office neglected to answer. When the Consul returned without an answer, Theodore seized him and several other consuls and threw him in jail. The British Government sent General Napier against him in 1867 with an army equipped with modern firearms. The Abyssinians were armed with old guns and were massacred. The Emperor committed suicide. This was long before British policy in Africa had been defined. The army, therefore, withdrew without attempting to hold Abyssinia and anarchy followed until Johannes VI gained the crown.

~~the various chiefs fighting with each other between 1868 and 1872.~~ ~~when Johannes, VI., proclaimed himself Emperor.~~ Meantime, the new European imperialism made the annexation of Abyssinia increasingly desirable. In 1881, France seized territory on the Red Sea under some old claim of purchase. About the same time, the Italians made similar claims to territory which afterward became Eritrea. Meantime, the British fleet had bombarded Alexandria, and the occupation of Egypt was began. The English declared that the occupation was temporary and at the same time they wanted to extend their claims so as to include Abyssinia, since Abyssinia controlled a large part of the waters of the Nile. They were also afraid of the advance of the French from the West which might threaten their hold upon the White Nile: the main tributary of the river from the Great Lakes. In 1884, Great Britain took her first forward step toward Abyssinia and seized Somaliland.

48-16-143

Thus, the three powers, France, Italy and Great Britain, found themselves on the coast surrounding Abyssinia. They began immediately to struggle for the Abyssinia market. The rivalry between the French and the British actually led to bloodshed in 1885, but the whole face of affairs changed between 1881-1885 because of the British occupation of Egypt and the rise in the Sudan of the power of the black Mahdi. The Mahdi and his Dervishes captured Kordufan and Dafur by 1883 and defeated the Anglo-Egyptian army. Next year they advanced to the Nile, and in 1885, captured Khartum, and killed the English General, Gordon, who had disregarded his orders.

The English, therefore, had to withdraw from the Sudan and give up their attempts to annex territory in Abyssinia. ~~The~~ Her next step was ~~that England determined~~ to ally herself with Italy, rather than with France, in encouraging agressions upon Abyssinia. With her approval, therefore, Italy seized the Port of Massowah, and ~~Italy~~ was told that Great Britain would be glad to see her in possession of Abyssinia.

Italy warded off the approach of the Dervishes from the North and sought to make Abyssinia an Italian sphere of influence. Meantime, the Emperor of Abyssinia, Johannes VI., had made an alliance with the British against the Madhi and helped the British evacuate the garrisons in the Sudan. The permission to Italy to occupy Massowah was in affect a permission under this treaty of Great Britain with Johannes. The Abyssinian emperor was unpleasantly surprised, therefore, when the Italians began to advance inland, and an Italian army was surrounded and defeated at Godali in 1887. But the position of the Emperor was difficult. The Madhi was threatening Abyssinia from the West, while in the South, one of the Abyssinian chiefs, Menelik, had entered into an alliance with the Italians and was receiving arms from Massowa. At a favorable opportunity, he intended to seize the Imperial Crown. In the East, the tribes were being stirred up by the Italians and at the North the Italians were waiting for more troops in order to plan an advance. Johannes' only ally was Great Britain.

The British public did not know about this, but, on the other hand, they were regaled by various stories of the cutting off the noses of people in Abyssinia who took snuff, because the Emperor was opposed to the use of tobacco. Johannes, in order to extricate himself, attacked at Dervishes in 1888 and defeated them. He made preparation for a decisive campaign against them the next year. In 1889, the Italians and Menelik signed the treaty of Uccialli. The Emperor marched against Dervishes again and totally defeated them but was also himself killed.

Menelik succeeded to the throne. Immediately the Italians occupied certain provinces which had been promised them by Menelik as a condition of their support. The French and British on the Coast now found themselves confronted by a powerful rival to the trade of Abyssinia. Meantime, the interpretation of the treaty of Uccialli came up.

48-16-144

The 17th Clause dealing with the foreign relations of Ethiopia was written in Amharic, so as to say that the Emperor of Ethiopia "shall have the liberty to avail himself of the Italian Government for any negotiations which he may enter into with other powers." In the Italian version, this was changed and read: "Shall be obliged to avail himself, etc."

In 1889, the Italian Government sent a circular letter to the great powers notifying them that Abyssinia was an Italian Protectorate. As soon as Menelik heard of this, he refused to ratify the treaty and later denounced it. He sent also a circular letter to the great powers declaring that he had never consented to become an Italian Protectorate. Nevertheless, two treaties were signed between Italy and England in 1891, and 1894. These practically recognized the annexation of Abyssinia to Italy, and, with the exception of French and British Somaliland, gave the Italians the Northeastern part of Africa, while reserving for the British the Valley of the Nile. A map of this arrangement was actually published with the consent of the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

4/8-1/6-46

This brought vigorous protest from the French. Meantime, Menelik, the Emperor of Abyssinia, denounced the Treaty with Italy and the following year he placed himself at the head of his armies and declared to the world: "Ethiopia has need of ~~no one~~ nothing. She stretches out her hand to no one but to God." At the same time, Menelik made overtures to France and through the Djibuti received easily the munitions and modern arms which he needed and without which he could not cope with the Italians.

In 1895, began the attempt of the Italians to take Abyssinia by force. The Commander Baratieri, attacked against his best judgment, and the result was a battle at Adua, March 1st, 1896. Five thousand Italians were killed and 2,000 taken prisoners. The Italian hopes of conquering Abyssinia were destroyed.

The defeat at Adua overthrew Italian imperialism for a while and a treaty of peace was signed in 1896, recognizing the independence of Abyssinia. ~~Meantime,~~ However there remained the struggle between France and England for the Nile Valley. In 1894, England was established in Egypt and the Nile Valley was still in the hands of the Mahdi. Meantime, in South Africa, Cecil Rhodes had begun his "Cape to Cairo" dream. This was a proposal to carry British territory straight from Cape Colony to the Nile Valley. This was the pivot of British imperialistic policy from 1890 to our own day. Rhodesia was acquired; the Hinterland of Portuguese Africa was seized, by subsidizing the African Lakes Company, which was operating in Nyasaland, and then compelling the Portuguese Government to withdraw claim to this land. This brought British territory up to Lake Tanyanika, where German and Belgian territories cut if off until the World War. The problem then from 1894-1914 was to secure the Sudan and Uganda and in some way to get a strip of territory between Lake Tanganyika and Uganda. French policy was distinctly opposed to this, and involved the annexation to France of a block of territory running from the West Coast to the East Coast of Africa.

418-16-146

The French had already acquired the French Congo, but on the West the boundary was still undefined. Before 1894, the French had reached Lake Chad, so that the French Congo was joined up with the French Sahara, and French territory was moving Westward toward the Nile. Clearly French imperialism aimed to cut across the Cape to Cairo scheme and the French wished to penetrate the Nile Valley and Abyssinia.

Here were two opposing schemes of empire, and 1894 was a crucial year. In that year, Great Britain signed a treaty with Italy which reserved to her the Nile Valley and gave Abyssinia to Italy. The same year, the British Government signed an agreement with Leopold, II., the Sovereign of the Belgian Congo. By this treaty, Leopold got a block of territory in the Nile Valley, while Great Britain got a lease of land between Lakes Albert, Edward and Tanganyika. This was followed by the proclamation of a Protectorate of Uganda, and this a solid British block of territory ran from Alexandria to Capetown between the Cape-to-Cairo railroad.

The French, however, refused to admit this. The two treaties caused great excitement, and [redacted] a decisive threat of war for the control of the Upper Nile. As a result of this, on June 22, 1894, the agreement between the Congo state and Great Britain was given up, and the strip of territory returned to the Congo state, while the part of the Nile Valley that had been granted the Congo state, was surrendered.

One month later, the French Colonial Minister sent a Commissioner to the French Congo and told him to extend his exploration as far as the Nile. Two other officers were sent to approach the Nile from the side of Abyssinia. The understanding between Abyssinia and the French had led to a concession to the French to build a railroad from French Somaliland into Abyssinia, and the training of the Abyssinian army was intrusted to French officers. It looked as though the French policy was going through. In the House of Commons, 1895, Sir Edward Gray, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs notified France that Great Britain claimed the whole of the Nile Valley and would consider any attempt to dispute this claim as unfriendly. This warning made the French hesitate. And through this hesitation they lost. The time for realizing French ambitions was between 1894-1896, while the English were kept out of the Nile Valley by the Madhi. The Italians were defeated in 1896 on March 1st. The news reached Europe March 5th. On March 12th, the British Government moved its army toward the Sudan. It was represented in England to be very necessary to avenge the death of General Gordon which took place ten years before. As a matter of fact, the eastern side of the Nile Valley suddenly became valuable since the defeat of the Italians, and Great Britain determined to move in.

418-16-147

Kitchener began his march in March, 1896. Captain C. Marchand was sent to the French Congo in April with orders to march ~~West~~ east to the White Nile. Other orders were sent to the Governor of French Somaliland to March West, while a third expedition was to pass through Abyssinia. When Marchand reached the Nile, he was to find there permanent fortifications with the Abyssinian and French flags. Thus the claim to a French foothold on the Nile was to be made perfect. The plan was not carried through. When Marchand reached Fashoda, he found neither the French nor the Abyssinians there, while after the battle of Omdurman in September, 1898, Kitchener proceeded to Fashoda.

Both England and France ~~were~~ were deeply stirred and for a moment war was in the balance. Both claimed their rights, but as a matter of fact, neither had any rights in Egypt, the Sudan or on the Nile. France backed down and recalled Marchand because the British had a victorious army of many thousands, while Marchand had only a handful of men; and the French fleet was inferior to the British fleet and the British fleet already had been mobilized on the North Coast of Africa.

4/8-16-148

March 21, 1899, a joint declaration was issued by the English and French. By this the frontier between British and French Africa gave ~~to~~ the Nile Valley and Darfur to the British. Abyssinia was now left in a curious position. She had ~~continually~~ always claimed that her territory extended to the banks of the White Nile, and it was this claim that the French were trying to substantiate and co-operate with. After the agreement between France and England, both ~~the British and the French~~ sent emissaries to Abyssinia. The English succeeded in settling the Eastern boundary between the Abyssinia and Somaliland, but could get no satisfaction as to the Western boundary. The French signed a treaty of commerce and boundaries which probably recognized the Abyssinia's claim to the right bank of the Nile. Also, the French began enegertically the construction of the railroad which they had arranged for in 1894.

But Italy did not give up her dreams and in 1915 Russia, England and France promised her in the Treaty of London that if she would declare war against Germany and if German colonies went to France and England they would allow Italy to extend her African possessions "in Eritrea, Somaliland and Lybya", which of course meant Abyssinia.

In 1885, no European nation had any hold on the African East coast. In 1914, it was in the possession of Italy, England and Germany, and African sovereignity and independence was completely overthrown.

Zanzibar and the Coast of East Africa had been under the rulership of Muscat from the middle of the 18th Century, and in 1856, one of the Sultan's established himself in Zanzibar and developed the East African trade. Eventually, the Zanzibar sovereigns became separated from the sovereigns of Muscat. Great Britain came into the picture because of the slave trade.

48-16-149

The Congress of Vienna took a stand against the slave trade and England became the leading power to put it down. Zanzibar was the center of the slave trade, both to America and to Asia, and Frenchmen, Portuguese, Americans and Arabs were in the trade. During the five years from 1862-67, probably 32,000 slaves a year were exported from Kilwa. In 1871, Great Britain made a treaty with Zanzibar to stop the trade, and, at the same time, she was able to place English men in stragic positions in the government of Zanzibar. By 1880, England had certain shady claims of sovereignty, although the Sultans were still ruling.

Meantime, Germany comes into the picture. German firms had begun trading as early as 1840. On this trade the Germans had set up certain claims. In 1884, Karl Peters, and other German colonailists founded the German Colohial Society. They determined to make an actual Colony, and in great secrecy sent out four men in disguise under Peters. Peters tells the story: They would invite a chief to dinner; get him drunk, and ask him to sign a document of "friendship". Then Peters would run up the German flag and fire a salute. All these treaties gave to Peters and his company for eternity all rights of sovereignty and land, houses, roads, mines, forests, rivers, etc. Peters arrived in Berlin in February, 1885, and immediately the Imperial Government granted a charter and notified the nations. Thus ~~Then~~ the German Company had acquired territories and sovereign rights in African West of the Kingdom of Zanzibar. The Sultan's of Zanzibar protested, but Germany paid no attention to it. The English when notified suggested a conference for delimitating territory. The German Government accepted Lord Salisbury's proposal, and in 1885 Great Britain and Germany recognized the sovereignty of the Sultan over the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, and over territory ten miles deep on the mainland. The rest of the territory was divided into two spheres of influence, the Southern of which became German East Africa, and the Northern British East Africa. The Sultan, of course, was forced to agree, and the two groups of Capitalists seized these immense countries in 1887 and 1888. They also took possession of the ten-mile strip on a lease for fifty years.

48-16-150

British East Africa at this time consisted of about 200,000 square miles of territory with 4,000,000 inhabitants. Germany was not yet satisfied. By taking sides in a dispute at Witu, North of Zanzibar, she developed a claim to territory much further North than Great Britain was willing for her to have. At the same time, 1890, the Emin Pasha Expedition took place and Karl Peters appeared North of the Victoria Nyanza in Uganda. This meant that Germany was trying to get hold of Uganda.

The British immediately got busy. In 1889, the East African Company negiotiated with soldier adventurer, F. D. Lugard, to lead an expedition into Uganda. Uganda was an independent country. Neither Great Britain nor Germany had a shadow of a right there. As early as 1876, the Church Missionary Society of Great Britain had sent missionaries there. The French Roman Catholics and the Mohammedans also sent missionaries. These three religions fought for mastery in Uganda, rousing natural suspicion on the part of the kings. In 1884, the British sent Bishop Hannington, who was killed by King Mwanga. He was immediately pictured as a blood-thirsty tyrant. The Christians and Mohammedans tried to drive out Mwanga in 1888. They were defeated and Mwanga restored. There grew up, then, two parties; the French-Roman Catholic Party, and the English Protestant Party struggling for control. It was at this time that Lugard started inland without any legal power, but with an army. He formented civil war.

Mwanga was compelled to sign a treaty by which his whole sovereignty passed to the control of the British East African Company. Meantime, in England public opinion was not supporting the matter and Lugard was ordered home. He did not obey the orders at first, but in 1892, he returned to England and talked before missionary societies. The Church Missionary Society raised nearly $60,000; the Arch bishop of Canterbury asked prayer for the cause, and finally, in 1893, a Government Mission was sent out. They roundly denounced the activities of the British East African Company, and consequently in 1894, Uganda became a British Protectorate. The Church Missionary Society's report said that "this must be regarded as an answer to the Churches prayer."

48-16-151

This story might be indefinitely prolonged and expanded but enough has been said to indicate the place of Africa in modern history. What is the resultant situation?

INSERT: AFRICA, ITS PLACE IN MODERN HISTORY

By W. E. B. Du Bois

Finally, ~~First~~, let us consider briefly events during and since the World War. Africa, although held by Europe, is held mainly by black troops. During the World War, therefore, Negroes not only fought and worked in Europe and in Asia, but Negro troops were the main means of conquering the German Colonies. These troops came from Africa itself, West and South, and from the West Indies.

After the war, the German Colonies were divided between England and France, the former getting the lion's share under the Mandate System. So far, the Mandates of the League of Nations have been little more than "scraps of paper", and the German Colonies are virtually integral parts of the English and French Colonial System, save that Southwest Africa is directly under the Union of South Africa.

The result has been a beginning of mental and moral upheaval among African natives. They are protesting in Kenya where a handful of white people want absolute control of the whole colony and want to have former German Africa annexed. They are protesting in South Africa and in Rhodesia. They have protested to the League of Nations in Southwest Africa, and I have outlined something of the protest in West Africa. Liberia is in economic development with American capital, and part of French Africa has been in revolt. Here, then, is the situation of African imperialism today.

418-16-152

The difficulties of this imperial movement are internal as well as external. Successful agression an economic expansion calls for a close union between capital and labor at home. Now the rising demands of the white laborer, not simply for wages but for conditions of work and a voice in the conduct of industry, make industrial peace difficult. Democracy in economic organization, while an acknowledged ideal, is today working itself out by admitting to a share in the spoils of capital only the aristocracy of labor—the more intelligent and shrewder and cannier workingmen. The ignorant, unskilled, and restless still form a large threatening, and, to an extent, revolutionary group in advanced countries.

The resultant jealousies and bitter hatreds tend continually to fester along the color line. We must fight the Chinese, the laborer argues, or the Chinese will take our bread and butter. We must keep Negroes in their places, or Negroes will take our jobs. All over the world there leaps to articulate speech and ready action that singular assumption that if white men do not throttle colored men, then China, India, and Africa will do to Europe what Europe has done and still seeks to do to them.

48-16-153

On the other hand, in the minds of yellow, brown, and black men the brutal truth is clearing: a white man is privileged to go to any land where economic advantage beckons and behave as he pleases; the black or colored man is being more and more confined to those parts of the world where life for climatic, historical, economic, and political reasons is most difficult to live and most easily dominated by Europe for Europe's gain.

What, then, are we to do, who desire peace and the civilization of all men? Hitherto the peace movement has confined itself chiefly to figures about the cost of war and platitudes on humanity. What do nations care about the cost of war, if by spending a few hundred millions in steel and gunpowder they can gain or thousands millions in diamonds and cocoa? How can love of humanity appeal as a motive to nations whose love of luxury is built on the inhuman exploitation of human beings, and who, especially in recent years, have been taught to regard these human beings as inhuman?

We, then, who want peace, must remove the real causes of war. We have extended gradually our conception of democracy beyond our social class to all social classes in our nation; we have gone further and extended our democratic ideals not simply to all classes of our own nation, but to those of other nations of our blood and lineage—to what we call 'European' civilization. If we want real peace and lasting culture, however, we must go further. We must extend the democratic ideal to the yellow, brown, and black peoples.

To say this, is to evoke on the faces of modern men a look of blank hopelessness. Impossible! we are told, and for so many reasons, —scientific, social, and what not,—that argument is useless. But let us not conclude too quickly. Suppose we have to choose between this unspeakably inhuman outrage on decency and intelligence and religion which we call the World War and the attempt to treat black men as human, sentient, responsible beings? We have sold them as cattle. We are working them as beasts of burden. We shall not drive war from this world until we treat them as free and equal citizens in a world-democracy of all races and nations. Impossible? Democracy is a method of doing the impossible. It is the only method yet discovered of making the education and development of all men a matter of all men's desperate desire. It is putting firearms in the hands of a child with the object of compelling the child's neighbors to teach him, not only the real and legitimate uses of a dangerous tool but the uses of himself in all things. Are there other and less costly ways of accomplishing this? There may be in some better world. But for a world just emerging from the rough chains of an almost universal poverty, and faced by the temptation of luxury and indulgence through the enslaving of defenseless men, there is but one adequate method of salvation—the giving of democratic weapons of self-defense to the defenseless.

48-16-154

Nor need we quibble over those ideas,—wealth, education, and political power,—soil which we have so forested with claims and counter-claim that we see nothing for the woods.

What the primitive peoples of Africa and the world need and must have if war is to be abolished is perfectly clear:—

First: land. Today Africa is being enslaved by the theft of her land and natural resources. A century ago black men owned all but a morsel of South Africa. The Dutch and English came, and today 1,250,000 whites own 264,000,000 acres, leaving only 21,000,000 acres for 4,500,000 natives. Finally, to make assurance doubly sure, the Union of South Africa has refused natives even the right to buy land. This is a deliberate attempt to force the Negroes to work on farms and in mines and kitchens for low wages. All over Africa has gone this shameless monopolizing of land and natural resources to force poverty on the masses and reduce them to the 'dumb-driven-cattle' stage of labor activity.

Secondly: we must train native races in modern civilization. This can be done. Modern methods of educating children, honestly and effectively applied, would make modern, civilized nations out of the vast majority of human beings on earth today. This we have seldom tried. For the most part Europe is straining every nerve to make over yellow, brown, and black men into docile beasts of burden, and only an irrespressible few are allowed to escape and seek (usually abroad) the education of modern men.

Lastly, the principle of home rule must extend to groups, nations, and races. The ruling of one people for another people's whim or gain must stop. This kind of despotism has been in latter days more and more skillfully disguised. But the brute fact remains: the white man is ruling black Africa for the white man's gain, and just as far as possible he is doing the same to colored races elsewhere. Can such a situation bring peace? Will any amount of European concord or disarmament settle this injustice?

48-16-155

Political power today is but the weapon to force economic power. Tomorrow, it may give us spiritual vision and artistic sensibility. Today, it gives us or tries to give us bread and butter, and those classes or nations or races who are without it starve, and starvation is the weapon of the white world to reduce them to slavery.

We are calling for European concord today; but at the utmost European concord will mean satisfaction with, or acquiescence in, a given division of the spoils of world-dominion. After all, European disarmament cannot go below the necessity of defending the aggressions of the whites against the blacks and browns and yellows. From this will arise three perpetual dangers of war. First, renewed jealousy at any division of colonies or spheres of influence agree upon, if at any future time the present division comes to seem unfair. Who cared for Africa in the early nineteenth century? Let England have the scraps left from the golden feast of the slave trade. But in the twentieth century? The end was war. These scraps looked too tempting to Germany. Secondly: war will come from the revolutionary revolt of the lowest workers. The greater the international jealousies, the greater the corresponding costs of armament and the more difficult to fulfill the promises of industrial democracy in advanced countries. Finally, the colored peoples will not always submit passively to foreign domination. To some this is a lightly tossed truism. When a people deserve liberty they fight for it and get it, say such philosophers; thus making war a regular, necessary step to liberty. Colored people are familiar with this complacent judgment. They endure the contemptuous treatment meted out by whites to those not 'strong' enough to be free. These nations and races, composing as they do a vast majority of humanity, are going to endure this treatment just as long as they must and not a moment longer. Then they are going to fight and the War of the Color Line will outdo in savage inhumanity any war this world has yet seen. For colored folk have much to remember and they will not forget.

418-19-152

But is this inevitable? Must we sit helpless before this awful prospect? While we are planning, as a result of the past holocaust, the disarmament of Europe and a European international world-police, must the rest of the world be left naked to the inevitable horror of war, especially when we know that it is directly in this outer circle of races, and not in the inner European household, that the real causes of present European fighting are to be found?

Our duty is clear. Racial slander must go. Racial prejudice will follow. Steadfast faith in humanity must come. The domination of one people by another without the other's consent, be the subject people black or white, must stop. The doctrine of forcible economic expansion over subject peoples must go. Religious hypocrisy must stop. 'Blood-thirsty' Mwanga of Uganda killed an English bishop because he feared that his coming meant English domination. It did mean English domination, and the world and the bishop knew it, and yet the world was 'horrified'! Such missionary hypocrisy must go. With clean hands and honest hearts we must front high Heaven and beg peace in our time.

In this great work who can help us? In the Orient, the awakened Japanese and the awakening leaders of New China; in India and Egypt, the young men trained in Europe and European ideals, who now form the stuff that Revolution is born of. But in Africa? Who better than the twenty-five million grandchildren of the European slave trade, spread through the Americas and now writhing desperately for freedom and a place in the world? And of these millions first of all the ten million black folk of the United States, now a problem, then a world-salvation.

4/8-16-57

Twenty centuries before the Christ a great cloud swept over sea and settled on Africa, darkening and well-nigh blotting out the culture of the land of Egypt. For half a thousand years it rested there until a black woman, Queen Hefertari, 'the most venerated figure in Egyptian history', rose to the throne of the Pharaohs and redeemed the world and her people. Twenty centuries after Christ, black Africa, prostrate, raped, and shamed, lies at the feet of the conquering Philistines of Europe. Beyond the awful sea a black woman is weeping and waiting with her sons on her breast. What shall the end be? The world-old and fearful things, War and Wealth, Murder and Luxury? Or shall it be a new thing—a new peace and new democracy of all races: a great humanity of equal men? "Semper novi quid ex Africa!"

418-16-158

France began her adventure in North Africa in 1830. The expedition was entirely the work of Charles X., and the coterie around him. The Algerian question at that time was the problem of suppressing piracy. For years the subjects of the Dey of Algeria had preyed upon the commerce in the Mediterranean. During the first quarter of the 19th Century this was a grave problem for Europeans and Americans. The English bombarded the Algerians in 1816, but no one power wanted to take the initiative, less the balance of power of Europe be upset. It was indeed charged that England wanted to stop the Negro slave trade; that they outwardly encouraged the Algerian pirates and sold them vessels. About 1827, there arosed an acute dispute between France and the Dey of Algiers. This was partly the matter of piracy and was partly because of monies loaned by Algerian bankers to Europeans during the Napoleonic wars. Especially, the French government had borrowed to pay for the supplies of the army in Africa. By 1815, the French debt to the Algerian banker was 13,000,000 francs. The Dey pressed for payment, and when payment was delayed slapped the face of the French Consul. This gave France two excuses for intervention. England was much upset to hear of the French design to attack Algeria and the threat of war was in the air. But the government of Charles X. was already about to fall and they grasped this Algerian expedition to restore their prestige. Before the successful expedition had returned from Algiers, Charles X. was driven from his throne by the July Revolution of 1830 and Louis Philippe had succeeded. Meantime, France had overthrown the government of Algiers and had acquired her first African possession. Having landed her army to avenge an insult, France stays in Algiers to suppress piracy. For several years the French struggled to complete their conquest and absorption of Algiers. The Revolution of 1848 took place with a new emphasis upon liberty and equality. Traders began to move across from French Algeria to the neighboring independent state of Tunis. Pressure was brought to bear upon the Bey of Tunis because of his harsh treatment of some of these merchants, and as a result of a new treaty in 1857, the French received certain economic advantages: a monopoly of the telegraphic service; the concession for supplying Tunis with water. Meantime, however, the English were not idle and they proceeded to get concessions for a railway, and thus the battle for economic revolution of Tunis was on. Soon, the administration was entirely in the hands of European speculators and money-lenders. The Bey borrowed money at high interest in return for new concessions, territory and mines. Companies were floated in Europe on the basis of these concessions. In Paris, London and Rome taxation increased. Insurrections arosed. In 1863, the Bey owed 28,000,000 francs. This debt was funded for a debt of 35,000,000 francs, and soon the Bey found that he was owing through the process of conversion 60,000,000 francs. Still the Bey was compelled to borrow more to put down rising rebellion due to taxation. Meantime, France, England and Italy watched Tunis and watched each other. The European creditors agreed upon joint intervention to protect their financial interests in 1869. Then came the Franco-Prussa war and the Italians began to increase their influence in Tunis. This did not suit the English, who began to use their economic power against the Italians. Meantime, in 1878, at the Congress of Berlin, it is fairly certain that Bismark and Lord Salisbury agreed upon turing over Tunis to France. Probably Bismark looked upon this as a sort of compensation for the seizure of Alsace-Lorraine. Great Britain got Cyprus out of the deal, and at the same time, the Egyptian question came up, so that Great Britain received additional compensation there. At any rate, between 1878-1881, Great Britain withdrew her objections. There ensued a struggle for a railway concession between the British, French and Africa in all directions and thus consolidating an immense French empire in Africa. Thus, the whole of the variable Hinterland which Italy wished to claim when she annexed Tripoli was cut off. When, therefore, political _____ between France and Italy came in 1900-1902, France was probably willing to give Italy free hand in Trippli and Cyrenaica, while France received a free hand in Morocco. Italy declared war upon the Turkish Empire in 1911, and seized Tripoli by a series of events that led directly to the World War of 1914.

3-8-9-11

Two of the great rivers that formed the Nile, mainly the Blue Nile and the Atbara, rise in Abyssinia. This makes Abyssinia a stragic point for anyone ruling in Egypt. When the Suez Canal was constructed, Egypt became economically and stragically necessary to England, and consequently, the coasts of the Red Sea and the mountains of Abyssinia were becoming important. The Suez Canal was opened in November, 1869. In 1875, England bought for $20,000,000 the Egyptian rulers shares in the Suez Canal Company. In 1876, the dual control of France and England in Egypt was instituted, and in 1877, the man who was later known as Lord Cromer, went out fro m England to rule Egypt. The Kahedive was deposed by England, German and France in 1879. In 1881, there came the Egyptian ____, and in 1882, the British army was landed in Egypt. Between 1880 and 1890, Europe began to look narrowly at Abyssinia. Abyssinia was converted to Christianity by Chief Frumentius, 400 B.C. Its population consists of a mixture of Negroes of Semitic blood. It has an old civilization and an autonomous chief and its climate and temperature is such that Europeans could easily live there. For centuries, it has been ruled by an Emperor and its various districts by heretary chiefs called Ras. There has been a good deal of strife between the district chiefs and the Emperors. In 1850, under the Emperor Theodorus, the Central Government was weak and the chiefs were almost independent. Out of this

He had treated the British very well and sent a letter by the British Consul to Queen Victoria. The Colonial Office neglected to answer. When the Consul returned without an answer, Theodore seized him and several other consuls and threw him in jail. The British Government sent General Napier against him in 1867 with an army of men and armed with modern rifles. The Abyssinians were armed with old guns and were massacred. The Emperor capitulated and surrendered over the English prisoners and sent a gift of cattle and sheep. But Napier demanded the surrender of the Emperor himself. This was refused and the English attack with artillery; killing Theodore's troops, and the Emperor committed suicide. His body was brought before the English Commander, who let the corpes be mistreated until it was left nearly naked with clothes torn off. Napier was given a peerage, decorations and a function. He then left Abyssinia and withdrew. Anarchy followed the various chiefs with each other between 1868-1872. Then Johannes, the VI, proclaimed himself Emperor. Meantime, the English had attack Abyssinia and in 1875, although the English were helped by Europeans, they were defeated by the Abyssinians in 1875, and especially at Gura in 1875. Meantime, the new European imperialism made the abolition of Abyssinia increasingly desirable. In 1881, France seized territory on the Red Sea under some old claim of purchase. About the same time, the Italians made similar claims to territory which afterward became Eritrea. Meantime, the British fleet was bombarded. Alexandria and the occupation of Egypt began. They declared that the occupation was temporary and at the same time they wanted to prove their claims so as to include Abyssinia, since Abyssinia controlled a large part of the waters of the Nile. They were also afraid of the advance of the French from the West which might threaten their hold upon the White Nile; the main tributary of the river from the Great Lakes. In 1884, Great Britain took her first forward step toward Abyssinia and seized British Somaliland. Thus, the three powers, France, Italy and Great Britain, found themselves on the coast surrounding Abyssinia. They began immediately to struggle for the Abyssinia market, especially in the district of Harrar, which lay nearest them, and was the center of commerce. The rivalry between the French and the British actually led to bloodshed in 1886, but the whole face of affairs changed between 1881-1885 because of the rise in the Sudan of the power of the black Mahdi. The Mahdi and his Derovishes captured Kordufan and Dafur by 1883 and defeated the Anglo-Egyptian army. Last year they advanced to the Nile, and in 1885, captured Khartum, and killed the English General, Gordiri. The English, therefore, had to withdraw from the Sudan and give up their attempts to mobolize territory in Harrar. The next step was that England determined to ally herself with Italy, rather than with France, encouraging agressions upon Abyssinia. With her approval, therefore, Italy, seized the Port of Massowah. Italy was told that Great Britain would be glad to see her in possession of Abyssinia. Thus, Italy warded off the approach of the Dervishes from the North and made Abyssinia an Italian sphere of influence. Even Italy acquired Massowah. Crispi planned exploration into Abyssinia. The Italians attempted a semi-military expedition, but were repulsed. Meantime, the Emperor of Abyssinia, Johannes, VX, had made an alliance with the British against the Madahi. He helped the British evacuate the garrisons in the Sudan. The permission to ____ to occupy Massowah was in affect a permission of this treaty of Great Britain with Johannesburg. The Abyssinian emperor was unpleasantly surprised, especially as the Italians began to advance inland. Great Britian between Italy and Abyssinia, and an Italian army was surrounded and deleted at Godali, January 26, 1887. Re-inforcements from Italy were asked. Meantime, the position of the Emperor was difficult. The Madahi was threatening Abyssinia from the West and in the South, one of the chiefs, Menelik, had entered into an alliance with the Italians and was receiving armies from Massowali. At a favorable opportunity, he entered to seize the Imperial Crown. In the East, the tribes were being stirred up by the Italians and at the North the Italians were waiting for more troops in order to plan to advance. Johannesburg only ally was Great Britain. The British Vice Consul, at the time, A. B. Wylde (Copy 164 B.)

33-9-11

32-9-8

30-7-7

The British public did not know about this, but, on the other hand , they were regaled by various stories of the cutting off the the noses of people in Abyssinia who took snuff because the Emperor was opposed to the use of tobacco. Johannes, in order to extricate himself, attacked at Dervishes in 1888 and defeated them. He made preparation for a decicise campaign against them the next year. That same year, 1889, the Italians and Menelik signed the separate treaty of Uccialli. The Emperor marched against Dervishes and totally defeated them. He was also himself killed. Menelik succeeded to the throne. And immediately the Italians occupied certain provinces which had been promised them by Menelik as a condition of their pay. The French and British on the Coast now found themselves confronted by a powerful rival to the trade of Abyssinia. They entered into a secret agreement in 1888 that they would not either of them annex Harrar, and that they would not remove the rights of opposing attempts on the part of any other power to seize Harrar. Meantime, the interpretation of the treaty of Uccialli came up. The 17th Clause dealing with the foreign relations of Ethiopia was written in Amharic, so as to say that the Emperor of Ethiopia "shall have the liberty to avail himself of the Italian Government for any negiotiations which he may enter into with other powers." In the Italian debt, this was ordained and in all probability, tempor arily ordained to read: "Shall be obliged to to avail himself, etc."

In 1889, the Italian Government sent a circular letter to the great powers notifying them that Abyssinia was an Italian Protectorate. As soon as Menelik heard of this, he refused to rectify the treaty and later denounced it. He sent also a circular letter to the great powers declaring that he had never consented to become an Italian Protectorate. Nevertheless, two protectorates were signed between Italy and England in 1891, and in addition, agreement in 1894. These practically recognized and ordained the annexation of Abyssinia to Italy , and with the exception of French and British Somaliland, gave the Italians the Northeastern part of Africa, while receiving for the British the Valley of the Nile. This may was actually published with the consent of the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. This brought vigorous protest from the French, and a revelation of the secret treaty concerning Harrar. The English temporarized with the French and assured them that there was to be no change in Harrar, which was of course all right. Meantime, Africa, the Emperor of Abyssinia, actively entered upon the same. In 1893, he denounced the Treaty with Italy and the following year he placed himself at the head of his armies and declared to the world: "Ethiopia has need of no one. She stretches out her hand to no one but God." At the same time, Menelik made overtures to France and through the Gibuti received easily the m___ and northern armies which he needed and without which he could not cope with the Italians.

In 1895, began the attempt of the Italians to take Abyssinia by force. The campaign ____ on. Early in 1896, Crispi wrote to the Commander of the Italian troops: "This is m litary h___ and not a war." He required him to make new sacrifice to save the honor of the Monarchy. The Commander Baratieri, attacked against his best judgment, and the result was a ____ ____ between Abyssinia and Adua, March 1st, 1896. _____ wer killed and taken prisoners. The Italian hopes of conquering Abyssinia were distroyed. In addition to that, Menelik, she already had left Italian Somaliland. The fear was that the treaty was signed with Abyssinia at Crispi entered to make the whole of Abyssinia and Italian Protectorate. The Italian ____ at Zanzibar had discovered Italian claims to the

Both England and France were deeply stirred and for a moment war was in the balance. Both claimed their rights, but as a matter of fact, neither had any rights in Egypt, the Sudan or on the Nile. France backed down and recalled Marchand because the British had a victorious army of many thousands, while Marchand had only a handful of men and the French fleet was inferior to the British fleet and the British fleet already had been mobilized on the North Coast of Africa. March 21, 1899, a joint declaration was issued by the English and French. By this the frontier between British and French Africa gave up the Nile Valley and Darfur to the British. Abyssinia was now left in a curious position. She had continually claimed that her territory extended to the banks of the White Nile, and it was this claim that the French were trying to substantiate and co-operate in. After the agreement between France and England, both the British and the French sent emissaries to Abyssinia. The English succeeded in settling Eastward boundary between the Abyssinia and Somaliland, but could get no satisfaction as to the Western boundary. The French signed a treaty of commerce and boundaries which probably recognized the Abyssinia claim to the right bank of the Nile. Also, the French begameenegertically the construction of the railroad which they had arranged for in 1894. At the same time, the financial circles in London, led by officials who had taken part in the acquisition of the British East Africa, began to invest in the French enterprise and obtained a representative on the Board of Directors and a very large proportion of the stock. The railroad was already built through French territory and extended 90 kilometers into Abyssinian territory. The British then proposed that the end of the line should be not simply in French territory but a Branch should go to English Somaliland. This proposal the French resisted and made such a complaint that the government came forward to help them. They agreeded to an annual subvention on condition that eventually the railroad should belong to the French Government. This aroused the Emperor Manilik. The French agreement was signed February 6, 1902, and May 15, 1902 the Emperor made his treaty with Great Britain on the boundaries of Abyssinia and the Nile Valley and the right of the Cape to Cairo railroad to pass through a part of Abyssinia. In other ways, Abyssinia blocked the further building of the railroad. It was then proposed that the railroad be made an International road. The Emperor summoned the Minister in 1905 and supported this idea, and it is significant that the Italians were now represented. However, the dispute was brought to a quick conclusion because of the appearance of Germany on the Seine. A German Consulate was established at Addisabbaba and the struggle for Morocco had begun. The conference at Algeciras took place in January, 1906. On July 6, 1906, the governments of France, Great Britain and Italy, signed an agreement. The three states bound themselves to respect the i_____ of Abyssinia. Abyssinia promised not to interfere with the upper waters of the Nile, and Italy got the right to extend her railway and telegraphic system into Abyssinia, and France got the right to construct the Djibuti-Addis Abbaba railway. But, with the perception that the Board of Administration should include their Abyssinia for Englishmen and for Italians. Abyssinia agreed to adhere to this December 13th, and thus the economic struggle for imperialism was brought to a close. It is significent, however, that in the back of the minds of Europe is still the idea of the conquest of Abyssinia. At the secret treaty of London, signed by Great Britain, France, Russia and Italy, April, 1915, through which the entrance of Italy into the war on the side of the Allies, was secured. This Clause appears: Should France and Great Britain extend their colonial population in Africa at the expense of f____? They will admit in principle, Italy, regard to demand with con____ by way of an extending of her population in Eritrea, Somaliland and Libya. This could only mean, if it means anything, that Italy was to be given free hand to try again the abolition of Abyssinia.

30-1-126

30-1-127

Zanzibar and East Africa.

In 1885, no European nation had any hold on this coast. In 1914, it was in the possession of Italy, England and Germany, and African sovereignty and independence was completely overthrown. Zanzibar and the Coast of East Africa was under the rulership of Oman from the middle of the 18th Century, and in 1856, one of the Sultan's established himself in Zanzibar and developed the East African trade. Eventually, the Zanzibar sovereigns became separated from the sovereigns of Muscat. Great Britain came into the picture because of the slave trade. The slave trade early in the 19th Century was at its height and had produced a state of anarchy in Africa probably unparalled in the history of the human race. It was a state of uniformal war, and in order to carry it on, foreign slave raiders were needed and firearms which were supplied by Europe. Meantime, the current of emotionalism which had swept over Europe, showed itself in Europe in a time to stop the slave trade. The conquest of Vienna took a stand against the slave trade and England became the leading power to put it down. Zanzibar was the center of the slave trade, both to America and to Asia, and Frenchmen, Portuguese, Americans and Arabs were in the trade. During the five years from 1862-67, probably 32,000 slaves a year were supported from Kilwa. In 1871, Great Britain maddea treaty with Zanzibar to stop the trade, and, at the same time, shw was able to place English men in stragic positions in the governments of Zanzibar. By 1880, England had certain shady claims of sovereignty, although the Sultans were still ruling. Meantime, Germany comes into the picture. Germany firms had begun trading as early as 1840. On this trade the Germans had set up certain claims. In 1884, Karl Peters, and other Germany colonialists founded the German Colonial Society. They determined to make an actual Colony, and in great secrecy set out four men in disguise under Peters. They returned to Zanzibar dressed as poor emigrants. November 10th, they returned on the coast, and disappeared into Africa. Peters tells the story: They would send priests to a ship; invite him to dinner; get him drunk, and ask him to sign a document of "friendship". Then Peters would run up the German flag and fire a salute. All these treaties gave to Peters and his company for eternity all rights of sovereignty and land, houses, roads, mines, forests, rivers, etc. Peters arrived in Berlin in February, 1885, and immediately the Imperial Government granted a charter to The German Navigation Society and notified the nations. Then the German Company had acquired territories and sovereign rights in Africa West of the Kingdom of Zanzibar. The Sultans of Zanzibar protested, but Germany paid no attention to it. The English when notified suggested a conference for delimitating territory. The British East African Association was the instrument of English aggression. It was founded in 1885 and in 1888 received a royal charter as the Imperial British East African Company, and had some very influential men as Directors, and was substantiating the same group of people who had been working for British interests in Abyssinia. The German Government accepted Lord Salisbury's proposal, and in 1885, France finally and Great Britain were appointed Commissioners. They reported in June, 1886, and recognized the sovereignty of the Sultan over the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, and on the mainland of territory ten miles deep. The rest of the territory was divided into two rivers of importance, the Southern, of which came German East Africa, and the Northern British East Africa. Great Britain

30-1-129

Great Britain engaged to support negiotiations by which the Sultan should lease to Germany the Port of Dar-es-Salaam and Pangani. The Sultan, of course, was forced to agree, and the two groups of Capitalists seized these immense countries. In 1887 and 1888. They also took possession of the ten-mile strip on a lease for fifty years. British East Africa this time consisted of about 200,000 square miles of territory with 4,000,000 inhabitants. The priests on the coast objected to both the Germans and the British, and a rebellion broke out. Immediately, two British warships appeared and the rebellion was put down. Together with the Germans they blockaded the coast. The Germans on the pretense that they were suppressing the slave trade, helped with the military operations, while now the general division of the treaty between Great Britain and Germany had been to make upon ? the exact line between was not settled, and Germany proceeded to press her claims. By taking sides in a dispute at Witu, North of Zanzibar, he developed a claim to territory much further North than Great Britain was willing for her to have. At the same time, 1890, the Emin Pasha Expedition took place and Karl Peters appeared North of the Victoria Nyasaland in Uganda. This meant that Germany was trying to get hold of Uganda. The British immediately got busy. In 1889, the East African Company negiotiated with Soldier Adventurer, F. D. Lugard, to lead an expedition into Uganda. Uganda was an independent country. Neither Great Britain nor Germany had a shadow of a right there. As early as 1876, the ____ Missionary Society of Great Britain had sent missionaries and two of whom were killed but others ___. The missionaries were busy. The French Roman Catholics sent in missionaries. These three religions fought for mastry in Uganda, rousing natural suspicion on the part of the kings. In 1884, the British surrendered Bishop Hannington, and in 1885, he was killed by Mwanga, who had succeeded Mtesa as king. He was immediately pictured as a blood-thirsty tyrant. The Christians and Mohammedans tried to drive out Mwanga in 1888. They were defeated and Mwanga restored. There grew up, then, two parties; the French-Roman Catholic Party, and the English Protestant Party struggling for control. It was at this time that Lugard started inland without any legal power, but with an army and ____. Uganda was as large as the British Indies and had 2½ millions of the most advance people of Africa. Lugard formented civil war, anda ____ civil war ensued. Darcy tells of one incident.

36-1-130

30-1-131

(288-A. WOOLF)

"At the head of a considerable military force, Captain Lugard, of the British East Africa Company (Ibea), pemetrated as far as Mengo, the residemse of King Mwanga, and forced upon him a treaty of protectorate: then turning against the Catholics, he attacked them on some futile pretext, and drove them into a big island on Lake Victoria. There around the king and the French missionaries there had gathered for refuge a considerable multitude of men, women, and children. Against this harmless and defenceless population Captain Lugard turned his guns and Maxims. He exterminated a large number, and then, continuing his work of destruction, he gave full rein to his troops and adherents, who burnt all the villages and stations of the White Fathers, their churches, and their crops."

Mwanga was compelled to sign a treaty b which his whole sovereignty passed to the control of the British East African Company. Meantime, in England public opinion was not supporting the matter and Lugard was ordered home. He did not obey the orders at first, but in 1892, he returned to England and talked before missionary societies. The ____ missionary society raised nearly $60,000: the Arch Bishop of Canterbury asked prayer for the cause, and finally, in 1893, a Government Mission was sent out. They roundly denounced the activities of the British East African Company, but, nevertheless, in 1894, made Uganda a British Protectorate. The Church Missionary Society's report said that "this must be regarded as an answer to the church's prayer."

30-1-132

When England drove the French from Egypt during the Napoleonic Wars, she conceived the idea that Egypt ought to be British because it was the shortest route to India. After the withdrawal of the French, the British tried to land a force but were defeated by the Egyptians and withdrew for a quarter of a century.

Then, the French, with Lesseps dug the Suez Canal. This led to the impoverishment of Egypt through debt and encouragement of her rulers to squander money. So that, ostensibly to protect their interests, France and England established the Dual Control in 1876. Five years later the Egyptians revolted and in 1882, there was a riot against the government of Egypt in Alexandria. The French withdrew, but the English intervened and seized Egypt with the repeated assurance of speedily leaving. A revolt in the Sudan under the Mahdi, drove the English back and Egypt was free of them until 1898, when Kitchener, at the battle of Omdurman, over threw the Mahdi, and at the same time turned back the French at Fashoda by a threat.

31-11-17

In 1899, a treaty was made between France and Great Britain by which the whole Nile Basin was recognized as a British "Sphere of influence". Already the British had been busy in East Africa, and spurred by the appearance of the Germans, they seized the territory of the Zanzi, and through a company endeavored to administer British East Africa and Uganda.

French, English, and Germans; Mohammadanism, Catholicism, and protestantism fought for Uganda. Eventually, the British triumphed. After 1894, all this land came under the direct control of Great Britain and the trading companies gave up their rights to rule.

Italy In Africa

The Italian cities traded with North Africa after the fall of Rome. Italy did not make claims upon Africa until about 1860, when they moved to annexed Tunis; but the French seized Tunis and Italy had to satisfy herself with Tripoli. As early as 1870, she had coveted Abbysynia and the English had encouraged her after the revolution of the Mahdi. In 1896, the Italians and Abbysynians met at Aduah, where one-half of the Italian army was killed and most of the rest taken prisoner. Since that time, the Italians have contented themselves with sitting outside Abbysynia and looking on.

Germany In Africa

31-11-16

German Merchants traded with Africa in the seventeenth century, But the real beginning of German Africa was with the explorers of the nineteenth century, and the foundation of the German African Society in 1878. In 1883, agents of the German Colonial Society landed in East Africa and hoisted the German Flag over what became German East Africa. The British tried to make some protest but eventually, they had to recognize the colonies. The same summary manner, gave Germany the Camerones, Togo land, and South-West Africa, ~~which~~ she secured by arrangement with Portugal.

France In Africa

The French East India Company made claim to Madagascar in the seventeenth century. Missionaries were sent, but the Natives, lead by their Queen, tried to drive them out. The French kept interfering with the government and eventually declared a protectorate in 1886.

eventually the railroad should belong to the French Government. This aroused the Emperor Manilik. The French agreement was signed February 6, 1902, and May 15, 1902 the Emperor made his treaty with Great Britain on the boundaries of Abyssinia and the Nile Valley and the right of the Cape to Cairo railroad to pass through a part of Abyssinia. In other words Abyssinia blocked the further building of the railroad. It was then proposed that the railroad be made an International road. The Emperor summoned the Ministers in 1905 and supported this idea, and it is significant that the Italians were now represented. However, the dispute was brought to a quick conclusion because of the appearance of Germany on the scene. A German Consulate was established at Addis Ababa and the struggle for Morocco had begun. The conference at Algeciras took place in January, 1906. On July 6, 1906, the governments of France, Great Britain and Italy, signed an agreement. The three states bound themselves to respect the independence of Abyssinia. Abyssinia promised not to interfere with the upper waters of the Nile; and Italy got the right to extend her railway and telegraphic system into Abyssinia, and France got the right to construct the Djibuti-Addis Ababa railway. ~~But, with the perception that the Board of Administration should include their Abyssinia for Englishmen and for Italians. Abyssinia agreed to adhere to this December 13th, and~~ thus the economic struggle for imperialism in Abyssinia was brought to a close. It is significent, however, that in the back of the minds of Europe is still the idea of the conquest of Abyssinia. At the secret treaty of London, signed by Great Britain, France, Russia and Italy, April, 1915, through which the entrance of Italy into the war on the side of the Allies, was secured, This Clause appears: Should France and Great Britain extend their colonial population in Africa at the expense of Germany They will admit in principle, that Italy, has the right to demand compensation by way of an extending of her

31-11-18

THE BLACK MAN AND THE WOUNDED WORLD

RESEARCH MATERIAL

Last copy

Manuscript entitled:

THE BLACK MAN AND THE WOUNDED WORLD

by W. E. B. Du Bois

This manuscript is based upon material and books collected by the author between the fall of 1918 and the present.

Directly after the Armistice, the author was in France and in close connection with colored troops. He was also instrumental in assembling in Paris a Pan-African Congress with limited representation from a large number of Negro groups throughout the world. After he returned to the United States he continued the collection of material and the purchase of books.

On this basis he has prepared a manuscript which at present consists of 808 typewritten pages of paper of this size. A few of the chapters have not been finished and all of them will need rewriting and condensation. In addition to the narrative, there are a large number of notes and documents in manuscript.

The present manuscript (February 22, 1936) consists of the following chapters:

Chapter I - INTERPRETATIONS - 9 pages.

An attempt to enquire into the causes of the World War and the reasons why black folk were forced to take part in it.

Chapter II - THE STORY OF THE WAR - 18 pages.

A succinct attempt to epitomize the main movements of the war, especially with reference to colored troops and peoples.

Chapter III - THE WORLD OF BLACK FOLK -

This chapter is not written but will seek to show how the exploitation of the darker races by white Europe and America made their connection with the world industrial organization so close as to intensify their problems of race contact and internal group problems and set over against the problems of the white world.

47-11-121

Chapter IV - BLACK FRANCE - 43 pages.

A story of the condition of the black folk in French colonies at the beginning of the war and the way in which they were forced into the conflict; also the probable results of this action on white and black France and the whole colonial situation.

Chapter V - BLACK ENGLAND - 69 pages.

This chapter is incomplete and consists at present principally of the story of the participation of West Indians in the Mesopotamian campaign. It is based on a suppressed but authentic manuscript and shows the extraordinary friction of Egyptians, Anzacs, Englishmen, and Negroes in the effort to kill Arabs, Turks, and others for no clear reason. Since it was written several books have been published to show the participation of Negro troops in the armies of the Union of South Africa, and in East and West Africa. The interpretation shows how the participation of black troops intensified the Negro problems in the various English colonies.

Chapter VI - OTHER BLACK FOLK - 20 pages.

This is only partially written. It is the story of Negroes fighting with Belgians, Germans, Portuguese, Italians and Turks, in Africa and Europe. Its basis of fact is not as complete as in the other chapters and it will need further additions from recently published literature and State papers.

Chapters VII to XIX have to deal with Negroes in America.

Chapter VII - BLACK AMERICA - 16 pages.

The story of the Negro problem in the United States as it was in 1914 with a general statement of its growth and development.

Chapter VIII - THE CHALLENGE - 16 pages.

This chapter examines the hesitations, contradictions, and internal conditions of American Negroes when they were called upon to help in the war.

Chapter IX - THE DRAFT - 34 pages.

This chapter shows the difficulties and discriminations which arose in incorporating black men into the Federal army.

Chapter X - THE BATTALIONS OF LABOR - 37 pages.

The chief participation of American Negroes in the World War was their work as stevedores and this chapter gives the history of the various Labor Battalions, their camps, transportation difficulties and sufferings, the discriminations against them, and their accomplishments in work.

47-11-123

Chapter XI - THE EIGHTH ILLINOIS - 37 pages.

This is the study of a Negro Militia Regiment which became incorporated in the A.E.F. with Negro officers throughout. They had the extraordinary experience of being made part of the French army because the American army did not want them.

Chapter XII - THE FIFTEENTH NEW YORK - 21 pages.

This is a similar story of a New York Negro Regiment with white and colored officers. It was also incorporated in the French army at first and was one of the first Negro fighting units to land in France, where it faced anomalous and trying situations.

Chapter XIII - THE NINETY-THIRD DIVISION - 16 pages.

This is the story of two black regiments with white officers designed to form a colored division; but this division was never organized. These regiments also went into the French army and encountered difficult situations.

Chapter XIV - THE NINETY-SECOND DIVISION - 144 pages.

This is the longest chapter in the book and probably will have to be divided up and condensed. It is the story of the attempt to put into the World War, a separate division of Negro American troops with Negro line officers and white general officers. Its experiences both in formation and transportation, and treatment in France brought out, to the full degree, the extraordinary race problem of America as reflected and emphasized by war. The author has gone into this history intensively and has collected a large number of documents and much testimonies. It forms, in some respects, the kernal of the story and is continued in detail in the two following chapters.

Chapter XV - THE 365TH, 366TH, AND 367TH REGIMENTS - 108 pages.

This is the story of three of the regiments of the Ninety-Second Division covering their history in the United States and their movements and experiences in France.

Chapter XVI - BLACK OFFICERS - 114 pages.

This is the history of the 368th Regiment which became the center of controversy in the World War. The regiment and its officers maintain that every effort was made to discredit it and throw the blame upon the black line officers and that they were suddenly thrown into the Battle of the Argonne without preparation and without equipment. On the other hand numbers of white writers claim that the regiment was cowardly and lead by inefficient Negroes, and as a result a large number of these officers were court martialled; but all were eventually acquitted. The whole story shows the extraordinary interaction of war and race prejudice.

Chapter XVII - ARMISTICE - 45 pages.

This chapter shows the reaction after the War both in France and America and the incidents following the return of Negro troops together with the riots and clashes which had economic and industrial causes.

Chapter XVIII - THE WAR WITHIN THE WAR - 67 pages.

This is the story of what went on in the United States during and after the war in the treatment of Negroes in the camps and those outside the army.

Chapter XIX - BEHIND THE LINES)
Chapter XX - THE END) are not written.
Chapter XXI - THE BEGINNING)

These were planned at first as a summary of the factual material brought together in this study; but as the author has examined and gone over the work, his plans have changed and he now proposes two or more chapters here to show the utter failure of war as a solution of the race problem or of any other pressing problem. Rather he sees in the World War the cause of the depression and social anarchy which followed it and the urgent demand for the solution of race problems by the abolition of war and the concentration of attention and action on the underlying economic maladjustment.

4-7-11-135

Atlanta University.
February, 1936.

MANUSCRIPT entitled:

THE BLACK MAN AND THE WOUNDED WORLD

By W. E. B. Du Bois

This manuscript is based upon material and books collected by the author between the fall of 1918 and the present.

Directly after the Armistice, the author was in France and in close connection with colored troops. He was also instrumental in assembling in Paris a Pan-African Congress with limited representation from a large number of Negro groups throughout the world. After he returned to the United States he continued the collection of material and the purchase of books.

4/7-11-22

On this basis he has prepared a manuscript which at present consists of 808 typewritten pages of paper of this size. A few of the chapters have not been finished and all of them will need rewriting and condensation. In addition to the narrative, there are a large number of notes and documents in manuscript.

The present manuscript (February 22, 1936) consists of the following chapters:

Chapter I - INTERPRETATIONS - 9 pages

An attempt to inquire into the causes of the World War and the reasons why black folk were forced to take part in it.

Chapter II - THE STORY OF THE WAR - 18 pages.

A succinct attempt to epitomize the main movements of the war, especially with reference to colored troops and peoples.

Chapter III - THE WORLD OF BLACK FOLK -

This chapter is not written but will seek to show how the exploitation of the darker races by white Europe and America made their connection with the world industrial organization so close as to intensify their problems of race contact and internal group problems and set over against the problems of the white world.

Chapter IV - BLACK FRANCE - 45 pages.

A story of the condition of the black folk in French colonies at the beginning of the war and in the way in which they were forced into the conflict; also the probable results of this action on white and black France and the whole colonial situation.

Chapter V - BLACK ENGLAND - 69 pages.

This chapter is incomplete and consists at present principally of the story of the participation of West Indians in the Mesopotamian campaign. It is based on a suppressed but authentic manuscript and shows the extraordinary friction of Egyptians, Anzacs, Englishmen, and Negroes in the effort to kill Arabs, Turks, and others for no clear reason. Since it was written several books have been published to show the participation of Negro troops in the armies of the Union of South Africa, and in East and West Africa. The interpretation shows how the participation of black troops intensified the Negro problems in the various English colonies.

Chapter VI - OTHER BLACK FOLK - 20 pages.

This is only partially written. It is the story of Negroes fighting with Belgians, Germans, Portuguese, Italians and Turks, in Africa and Europe. Its basis of fact is not as complete as in the other chapters and it will need further additions from recently published literature and state papers.

Chapters VII to XIX have to deal with Negroes in America.

Chapter VII - BLACK AMERICA - 16 pages.

The story of the Negro problem in the United States as it was in 1914 with a general statement of its growth and development.

Chapter VIII - THE CHALLENGE - 16 pages.

This chapter examines the hesitations, contradictions, and internal conditions of American Negroes when they were called upon to help in the war.

Chapter IX - THE DRAFT - 34 pages.

This chapter shows the difficulties and discriminations which arose in incorporating black men into the Federal army.

Chapter X - THE BATTALIONS OF LABOR - 37 pages.

The chief participation of American Negroes in the World War was their work as stevedores and this chapter gives the history of the various Labor Battalions, their camps, transportation difficulties and sufferings, the discriminations against them, and their accomplishments in work.

47-11-23

Chapter XI - THE EIGHTH ILLINOIS - 37 pages.

This is the study of a Negro Militia Regiment which became incorporated in the A.E.F. with Negro officers throughout. They had the extraordinary experience of being made part of the French army because the American army did not want them.

Chapter XII - THE FIFTEENTH NEW YORK - 21 pages.

This is a similar story of a New York Negro Regiment with white and colored officers. It was also incorporated in the French army at first and was one of the first Negro fighting units to land in France, where it faced anomalous and trying situations.

Chapter XIII - THE NINETY-THIRD DIVISION - 16 pages.

This is the story of two black regiments with white officers designed to form a colored division; but this division was never organized. These regiments also went into the French army and encountered difficult situations.

97-11-24

Chapter XIV - THE NINETY-SECOND DIVISION - 144 pages.

This is the longest chapter in the book and probably will have to be divided up and condensed. It is the story of the attempt to put into the World War, a separate division of Negro American troops with Negro line officers and white general officers. Its experiences both in formation and transportation, and treatment in France brought out, to the full degree, the extraordinary race problem of America as reflected and emphasized by war. The author has gone into this history intensively and has collected a large number of documents and much testimony. It forms, in some respects, the kernel of the story and is continued in detail in the two following chapters.

Chapter XV - THE 365TH, 366TH, AND 367TH REGIMENTS - 102 pages.

This is the story of three of the regiments of the Ninety-Second Division covering their history in the United States and their movements and experiences in France.

THE BLACK MAN AND THE WOUNDED WORLD

Chapter XVI - BLACK OFFICERS - 114 pages.

This is the history of the 368th Regiment which became the center of controversy in the World War. The regiment and its officers maintain that every effort was made to discredit it and threw the blame upon the black line officers and that they were suddenly thrown into the Battle of the Argonne without preparation and without equipment. On the other hand numbers of white writers claim that the regiment was cowardly and lead by inefficient Negroes, and as a result a large number of these officers were court martialled; but all were eventually acquitted. The whole story shows the extraordinary interaction of war and race prejudice.

Chapter XVII - ARMISTICE - 45 pages.

This chapter shows the reaction after the War both in France and America and the incidents following the return of Negro troops together with the riots and clashes which had economic and industrial causes.

Chapter XVIII - THE WAR WITHIN THE WAR - 67 pages.

This is the story of what went on in the United States during and after the war in the treatment of Negroes in the camps and those outside the army.

Chapter XIX - BEHIND THE LINES*)
CHAPTER XX * THE END)are not written.
CHAPTER XXI - THE BEGINNING)

These were planned at first as a summary of the factual material brought together in this study; but as the author has examined and gone over the work, his plans have changed and he now proposes two or three chapters here to show the utter failure of war as a solution of the race problem or of any other pressing problem. Rather he sees in the World War the cause of the depression and social anarchy which followed it and the urgent demand for the solution of race problems by the abolition of war and the concentration of attention and action on the underlying economic mal-adjustment.

Atlanta University,
February, 1938

93-11-47

2nd edition
Copy with one Carbon

Manuscript entitled:

THE BLACK MAN AND THE WOUNDED WORLD

By W. E. B. DuBois

This manuscript is based upon ~~manuscript~~ material and books collected by the author between the fall of 1918 and the present. Directly after the Armistice, the author was in France and in close connection with colored troops. He was also instrumental in assembling in Paris a Pan-African Congress with limited representation from a large number of Negro groups throughout the world. ~~The Negro troops in France furnished him with a good deal of information and manuscript material.~~ After he returned to the United States he continued the collection of ~~such~~ material and the purchase of books. On this basis he has prepared a manuscript which at present consists of 808 typewritten pages of paper this size. A few of the chapters have not been finished and all of them will need rewriting and condensation. In addition to the narrative, there are a large number of notes and documents in manuscript. The present manuscript (February 22, 1936) consists of the following Chapters:

Chapter I - INTERPRETATIONS - 9 pages.

~~This is~~ An attenpt to enquire into the causes of the World War and the reasons why black folk were forced & take ~~took~~ part.

Chapter II - THE STORY OF THE WAR - 18 pages.

~~This is~~ A succinct attempt to epitomize the main movements of the war, especially their reference to colored troops & peoples. ~~in the final manuscript it could probably be omitted.~~

Chapter III - THE WORLD OF BLACK FOLK -

This chapter is not written but will seek ~~be an attempt~~ to show how the exploitation of the darker races by white Europe and America made their connection with the world industrial organization so close ~~that~~

~~despite everything they were drawn into the war, and~~ their ~~own group~~ and internal problems ~~thus intensified~~ and set over against the problems of the white world.

Chapter IV - BLACK FRANCE - 43 pages.

~~This is~~ A story of the condition of the black folk in French colonies at the beginning of the war and the way in which they ~~took part~~ in the conflict; also the probably results of this ~~cooperation between~~ white and black France.

Chapter V - BLACK ENGLAND - 69 pages.

This is incomplete ~~but~~ consists at present principally of the participation of West Indians in the Mesopotamian campaign. Since it was written several books have been published to show the participation of Negro troops in the armies of the Union of South Africa, and in East and West Africa. The interpretation shows how the participation of black troops intensified the Negro problems in the various English colonies.

Chapter VI - OTHER BLACK FOLK - 20 pages

This is only partially written, ~~and has about 20 pages~~. It is the story of the Negroes fighting with Belgians, Germans, Portuguese, Italians and Turks. Its basis of fact is not as complete as in the other chapters and it will need further additions from recently published literature and State papers.

Chapters VII to XIX have to deal with Negroes in America:

Chapter VII - BLACK AMERICA - 16 pages.

The story of the Negro problem in the United States as it was in 1914 with a general statement of its growth and development.

Chapter VIII - THE CHALLENGE - 16 pages.

This chapter examines the hesitations, contradictions and internal conditions of American Negroes when they were called upon to help in the war.

Chapter IX - THE DRAFT - 34 pages.

This chapter shows the difficulties and discriminations which arose in incorporating black men into the federal army.

33-11-98

Chapter X - THE BATTALIONS OF LABOR - 37 pages.

The chief participation of American Negroes in the World War was their work as Stevedores and this chapter gives the history of the various Labor Battalions, their camps, transportation difficulties and sufferings, and the discriminations against them, and their accomplishments in work.

Chapter XI - THE EIGHTH ILLINOIS - 37 pages.

This is the study of a Negro Militia Regiment which became incorporated in the A.E.F. with Negro officers throughout. They had the extraordinary experience of being made part of the French army because the American army did not want them. ~~This gave them an unusual opportunity but they lost most of their Negro officers.~~

Chapter XII - THE FIFTEENTH NEW YORK - 21 pages.

This is a smiilar story of a New York Negro Regiment with white and colored officers. It was also incorporated in the French army at first and was one of the first Negro fighting units to land in France, where it faced anomalous & trying situations

Chapter XIII - THE NINETY-THIRD DIVISION - 16 pages.

This is the story of two black regiments with white officers designed to form a colored division; but this division was never organized. The regiments also went into the French army and ~~went through various experiences.~~ and encountered different situations

Chapter XIV - THE NINETY-SECOND DIVISION - 114 pages.

This is the longest chapter in the book and probably will have to be divided up and condensed. It is the story of the attempt to put into the World War, a separate division of Negro American troops with Negro line officers and white general officers. Its experiences both in formation and transportation, and treatment in France brought out, to the full degree, the extraordinary race problem of America as reflected ~~in its troops~~ and emphasized by war. The author has gone into this history in extensively and has collected a large number of documents and much testimony. It forms, in some respects, the kernal of the story and is continued in detail in the two following chapters.

32-11-29

Chapter XV - THE 365TH, 366TH, AND 367TH REGIMENTS - 102 pages

This is the story of three of the regiments of the Ninety-Second Division covering their history in the United States and their movements and experiences in France.

Chapter XVI - BLACK OFFICERS - 114 pages.

This is the history of the 368th Regiment which became the center of controversy in the World War. The regiment and its officers maintain that every effort was made to discredit it and throw the blame upon this line black officers and that they were suddenly thrown ~~sent~~ into the Battle of the Argonne without preparation and without equipment. On the other hand numbers of white writers claim that the regiment was cowardly and lead by inefficient Negroes, and as a result a large number of these officers were court martialled, but all were eventually acquitted. The whole story shows the extraordinary interaction of war and race prejudice.

Chapter XVII - ARMISTICE - 45 pages.

This chapter shows the reaction after the War both in France and America and the incidents following the return of Negro troops together with the riots and clashes which had economic and industrial causes.

Chapter XVIII - THE WAR WITHIN THE WAR - 67 pages.

This is the story of what went on in the United States during and after the War in the treatment of Negroes ~~within~~ in the Camps and ~~without~~ those outside the army.

37-11-100

Chapters XIX, XX, and XXI are not written.

They were planned at first as a summary of the factual material brought together in this study, but as the author has examined and gone over the work, his plans have changed and he now proposes two or more chapters here to show the utter failure of war as a solution of ~~a major social~~ the race problem or of any other pressing problem. Rather he sees in the World War the ~~germ~~ cause of the depression and social anarchy which followed it and the urgent demand for the solution of ~~economic problems which shall include the solution of race problems and he proposes to interpret race problems in the light of the War as primarily~~ race problems by the abolition of war and the concentration of attention + action on the underlying economic ~~real~~ - adjustments

Atlanta University,
February 22, 1936.

Chapter 9. The Draft. 27 pages.

Chapter 10. The Battalions of Labor. Partially written. 20 pages.

Chapter 11. The 8th Illinois Regiment. 37 pages. This is the story of the only Negro regiment starting in the war with a full complement of colored officers. It was afterward brigaded with the French.

Chapter 12. The 15th New York. 21 pages. This is a story of the colored regiment of the New York National Guard with the white and colored officers afterward brigaded with the French.

Chapter 13. The 93rd Division. This is the story of the 371st and 372nd Regiments.brigaded with the French. 18 pages.

Chapter 14. The 92nd Division. This is the story of the only complete division of Negro troops in the American army during the World War. 144 pages.

Chapter 15. The 365th, 366th and 367th Regiments. These were a part of the 92nd Division. 101 pages.

Chapter 16. Black Officers. This is the story of the 368th Regiment, around which the greatest controversy raged. 114 pages.

Chapter 17. The Armstice and propaganda. 45 pages.

Chapter 18. The War Within the War. This is the story of various things that took place in the United States during the War and directly afterward. 67 pages.

In addition to this, there are planned one or two chapters of general conclusions and appendices of documents.

The general plan and argument of the work is to study the effect of war upon a laboring class, who in addition to their economic handicap, are the object of bitter and deep-seated racial prejudice. It seeks to show that with all the high ideals which the leaders of the war professed, the result of the war was to intensify prejudice and make economic adjustment more difficult. Out of the war the Negro got certain advantages because of the stopping of migration and his entrance into industry into the North. But this advantage is balanced by the disadvantage of the new emigation policy on the suppressed peoples and classes of the world. The net result of the war has been to intensify color consciousness throughout the world and to bring nearer the possibility of a war across the color line deep-rooted in economic gain.

47-4-20

Completed and revised, the manuscript should run to about 1,000 pages with perhaps 250 pages of documents.

To complete the manuscript the following work is necessary:

1. Further research in libraries, especially in Washington, on recent publications of literature and documents touching Negro troops.

2. Clerical help for re-writing the whole manuscript and arranging notes.

3. Classification and copying of documents.

After this the question of printing and publishing would remain to be settled. If I could have the services of 2 or 3 trained historical students during the summer of 1929 and two stenographers, the research and clerical work could be done and the manuscript ready for publication in the fall.

47-4-21

several minutes. The tree saved the men from serious injury and only slight wounds were received by the two men operating the gun. Lieutenant Seymore E. Williams of Company A 350th Machine Gun Battalion was in charge of the guns at the time of the attack and immediately recovered from the shock and resumed the firing.

The 351st Machine Gun Battalion was in this sector and actively participated in the defensive operations from August 29th to September 20th. No casualties resulted from these activities, no one was seriously wounded.

33-6-30

IN THE ARGONNE FOREST.

It was not until the 92nd Division entered the Argonne Forest Sept. 25th 1918 that it engaged in an extensive offensive operation. Headquarters were established at Beauchamp Farm and subsequently at Ste. Menehould. The French Divisions were fighting in this sector and preparations were being made for an extensive drive along the whole allied front extending from the Swiss border to the North sea. The 368th Inf. was designated by the Division Commander to go into the line and the fight started at 5:30 on the morning of Sept. 26th. The night of Sept. 25th was one of the greatest nights for artillery preparation that the war had witnessed since the arrival of the Ameridan forces in France. More than two thousand big guns thundered continuously for more than six hours and the reports from them resembled a terrific thunderstorm in the night and the pyrotechnics flashing in the darkness were indescribable. This preparation was necessary to destroy the enemy's barbed wire entanglements and to enable our fordes to move forward with less difficulty. This terrible bombardment was only a prelude to a more terrible advance, and the next morning at five o'clock the entire line extending from the Swiss border to the North sea surged forward with a grim determination to crush the Huns. This advance proved to be the beginning of the End of the great war. The 2nd Battalion of the 368th Infantry was selected to be the assaulting unit with companies F, G, and H in the assault wave and Company E in support. At 5:30 on the morning of Sept. 26th, an hour never to be forgotten by any of the men that took part in that terrible conflict, the three companies in the assault wave bounded over the top of their trenches with but one thought in their minds, that of winning the struggle, not to die in the attempt but to win. So on they rushed perfectly oblivious of the danger confronting them, oblivious of the bursting shells and murderous Machine gun fire from German machine guns and cannon. They were sandwiched in between French troops on the right and left. Company E followed the advancing troops at 9:30, four hours later, but with a perfect chain of liaison runners kept in constant touch with the advancing companies and knew the progress they were making. Their success in advancing was quite encouraging and almost all of the members of Company E lamented the fact that they were not permitted to go over with them at the start. In moving forward there was no need for Company E to exercise precausinn because the assaulting troops were far in advance. We crossed the first line held by the enemy at the beginning of the attack and from which they had been driven, but nothing was observed save scattered German helmets, hand grenades that resembled potato mashers and a few other articles of German soldier's equipment. There was an abundance of wire and a long line of partially demolished trenches. We continued our advance and soon came upon the enemy's second line of defense. Here we came in contact with the right platoon of Company H which was the right assault company of the Battalion. In moving through these trenches we came upon a member of Company H who had been shot by a German sniper and from that point on it became necessary to exercise considerable precaution. It was here that the Battalion Commander called for a strong patrol to go out and locate any resistance that might be encountered in our line of advance or its immediate vicinity. This patrol was organized under the leadership of First Lieutenant Oscar H. Smith and after a cautious but thorough scouting he reported that no enemy was observed. The advance was resumed but when Company E and that part of Company H which had been overtaken were moving up a narrow gauge railway they were fired upon by snipers and scattered burst of machine gun fire. Another patrol under the leadership of Lieutenant Smith was sent out but the terrain at this point was in favor of the enemy, there being a large stretch of dense wood almost impenetrable in which they were located. The left assault platoon of Company H swung off to the left and in going up a small draw between two wooded hills encountered a small force of the enemy and immediately opened fire killing two and wounding another before they escaped. Two platoons of the 368th Infantry's Machine Gun Company arrived at this time and two other patrols were organized and sent out, one under Lieutenant Smith and the other under Second Lieutenant Vincent B. Thomas. The latter patrol encountered the enemy in large force near a dugout, opened fire and soon the encounter took on the appearance of a real engagement. Here the enemy was firing on the patrol from the front and the flank with machine guns which were concealed in the dense wood. Company E suffered no casualties and Company H only three because the enemy's fire was directed over the heads of the troops. It appeared that we had been caught in a trap and since no support was available further advance was impossible. The Battalion Commander ordered our retirement and after considerable firing we were able to move back in an orderly manner. During our retirement an enemy air plane flying directly above us dropped hand grenades in our midst wounding eight members of Company E. After dark, because of the unfavorable terrain, it was impossible to keep in touch with the troops in front and as a result Company E and a part of Company H were compelled to spend the night in no man's land. Comfort was completely out of the question even for the wounded men, but only one of them died during the night. The time spent in this precarious position was fraught with many dangers:- No Man's Land was never a safe place in which to rest, but we were there and could do no better. During the night the Germans constantly sent up star shells and other illuminating pyrotechnics and swept the position with shell fire. The only thing that saved us from annihilation was the fact that the enemy thought that we were much further back than we were. We had moved back only 400 yards from where the last encounter took place. About two o'clock in the morning several enemy planes coasted near the ground over us in an effort to locate our position and it was with great difficulty that we kept the tired and sleeping soldiers from snoring.

Wave

33-6-31

33-6-32

33-6-33

During all of the time that Company E was supporting the assault Companies and fighting for its own existance, Companies F, G, and a part of H were fighting like real heroes. It can never truthfully be said of them that they failed to up hold the traditions of the race as brave fighters. They encountered stubborn resistance but nevertheless moved forward and did not yield a single foot of the ground captured. With the darkness came a suspension of intensive firing, trenches were again occupied and a little opportunity afforded the troops for reorganization and rest for a renewed attack the next morning.

On the morning of the 27th the attack was renewed with added vigor and determination if such was possible. Upon reorganization however, other units of the 2nd Battalion were placed in the assault line and occupied the trenches. Company E was the right assault Company with Company F on the left. With the advance were two sections of the Machine Gun Company and the fight started at eight o'clock a.m. The assault companies had advanced but a short distance when they encountered heavy machine gun fire delivered upon them from the front, flank and the dense woods. The companies were now in these woods and a good firing line was established and maintained with great difficulty. The enemy machine guns were finally located and the assaulting companies opened fire on them. They soon found themselves without rifle and hand grenades which were indispensable to a successful attack upon machine gun nests in the woods but the fig[illegible] a little more than two hours, the companies advancing all of t[illegible]

(1)

MAN

AN ESSAY TOWARD A HISTORY OF THE BLACK IN THE GREAT WAR

By W.E.BURGHARDT Du BOIS

The mayor of Domfront stood in the village inn, high on the hill that hovers green in the blue skyof Normandy; and he sang as we sang: "Allons, enfants de la patrie!" ~~+~~ God! How wesang! How the low, grey-clouded room rang with the strong voice of the little Frenchman in the corner, swing his arms in deep emotion; with the vibrant voices of a score of black American officers who sat round about. Their hearts were swelling-- torn in sunder. Never have I seen black folk-- and I have seen many-- so bitter and dissolusioned at the seemingly bottomless depths of American color hatred-- so uplifted at the ~~Vis~~-ion of real democracy dawning on them in France.

34-4-229

The mayor apologized gravely: if he had known of my coming, he would have me formally at the Hotel de Ville-- me whom most of my fellow-countrymen receive at naught but back doors , save with apology. But how could I explain in Domfront, that reborn feudal town of ancient memories? I could not-- I did not. But I sang the Marseillaise-- "Le jour de gloire est arrive!"

Arrived to the world and to ever widening circles of men-- but not yet to us. Up yonder hill, transported bodily from America, sits "Jim Crow"-- in a hotel for white officers only; in a Massachusetts Colonel who hates "~~N~~iggers" and segregates at every opportunity; in the frankly them

34-4-250

1 1/2

A N ESSAY ~~ON THE~~ HISTORY OF THE BLACK MAN IN THE GREAT WAR

BY W.E.BURGHARDT DU BOIS

The mayor of Domfront stood in the village inn, high on the hillthat hovers green in the blue sky of Normandy; and he sang as we sang:-- "Allons, enfants de la patrie!" God, how we sang! How the low grey-clouded room rang with the strong voice of the little Frenchman in the corner, swinging his arms in deep emotion-- with the vibrant voices of twenty-five black American officers who sat round about. Their hearts were swelling-- torn in sunder. Never have I seen black folk so bitter and disillusioned at the bottomless depts of American color hatred-- so uplifted at the Vision, the reality of real Democracy in France.

The mayor apologized gravely: if he had known of my coming he would have received me formally at the Town Hall-- me, whom few of my fellow-countrymen at aught but kitchen doors save with apology! But how could I explain in Domfront, that feudal town of ancient memories? I could not-- I did not. But I sang the Marseillaise-- "Le jour de Gloire est arrive!"

Arrived in the world, and to ever wider circles of men-- but not yet to us. Yonder up the hill the white Americans officers had a hotel to themselves; the colonel, from Massachusetts, hated "niggers" frankly and "jim-crowed" them on all occasions. The General, from Georgia, who openly and officially stigmatized his black officers as no gentlemen, by ordering them never to speak to French women in public or receive the spontaneously offered social recognition. All this ancient and American race hatred and insult in a purling sea of French sympathy and kindliness, of human uplift and giant endeavor, amid the mightiest crusade humanity ever saw for Justice!

This, then, is a first attempt at the story of the Hell which war, in the fateful years of 1914-1919, meant to Black Folk, and particularly to American Negroes. It is only an attempt, full of the mistakes which nearness to the scene and many necessarily missing facts, which only time can supply, combine to ~~emphasize~~ foil in part. And yet, written now in the heat of strong memories, it contains truth which cold delay can never bring back. Later, in the light of official reports and supplementing information, I shall revise and expand this story into a volume for the popular reader; and still later, in the passage of years, I hope to lay before historians, the documents and ~~carefully gathered~~ statistics and sociologists

I "Contre nous de la tyrannie L'etendard sanglant est levé!"

and in the place of skulls,

II and with a corps of coworkers, Consisting of officers and soldiers and scholars,

upon which my final views are based.

III

31 20 10
28
51=
40=4850

34-4-231

To everyone war is, and, thank God, must be disillusion. This war has disillusioned millions of fighting white men — disillusioned them with its frank truth of dirt, disease, cold, wet and discomfort; murder maiming and hatred. But the ~~Coloured~~ Negro disillusion of American troops was more than this, or rather it was this & more — the flat, frank realization that however nobly ~~its~~ her hosts, ~~its~~ her great duty, is to hate "Niggers."

as conceived by an astonishing number of able men, brave and good, as well as of other sorts of men, ~~its great duty~~

Not that this double disillusion has for a moment made black men doubt the wisdom of their wholehearted help of the Allies. Given the chance again they would again do their duty. But these young men see today with shrewd eyes and strained faces the true & bitter visage of the Negro problem in America.

— for have they not seen and known France!

— — —

~~AMERICA~~

This, then, is the story of the Black Man in the Great War-- told roughly and in broad outline, with many mistakes and much to be filled in. It is a story as heart-breaking as that old Greek tale over which we pored in other days-- of Cyrus and ~~10,000~~ ten thousand caught between foe and foe. Of its first and perhaps greatest chapter, but a word: When the German host-- grey, grim, irresistable, poured through Belgium, out of Africa France called her Sons-- they came : hundreds of thousands of black Senegalese-- volunteers , not drafted, and they hurled the Boches back across the Ourcq and the Marne on a ghastly bridge of their own dead. It was the crisis-- four long, bitter years the war wore on; but Germany was beaten at the first battle of the Marne and by Negroes. ~~Beside~~ Beside the Belgians, too, stood, first and last, ~~30,000~~ thirty thousand black Congoese, not to mention the black troops who conquered German Africa and fought in Arabia under the English and the Black French Colonials in the French armies.

But here it was principally a story of fighting and generous reward, except, of course, with the English in Africa, where there was the usual stories of cruelties and neglect. But the story ~~of story~~ of stories is that of the American Negro. Here was a man who bravely let his head could not follow; who for the first time, as a nation within a nation, ~~within a nation~~ did its bitter duty because it was its duty, knowing what it might expect but scarcely ~~dreaming~~ foreseeing the whole truth.

We gained the right to fight for civilization at the cost of being "Jim-crowed" from the beginning; we gained ~~1000~~ five thousand officers by submitting doggedly to insult; the majority of our boys were drafted as laborers, put under "nigger-drivers" from southern turpentine camps and worked like slaves in France-- 12 and 14 hours a day; half-clad ~~poorly fed~~, wretchedly housed, beaten, "Jim-crowed" and insulted, and yet they saw the Vision; they saw a nation of splendid people ~~raped~~ threatened and torn by a ruthless enemy; they saw a democracy which simply could not understand color prejudice. They received a thousand little kindnesses and half-known words of sympathy from the puzzled French; French law and custom stepped in repeatedly to protect them, and the only thing they learned to hate and fear was the average white American! But ~~they~~ they worked-- God! how they worked! Everybody joins to testify to this-- the white slave-drivers, the Army officers, the French, the visitors-- all say that the American Negro was the best laborer in France, of all the world's peoples gathered there; and if American food and materials saved France in the end from utter exhaustion, it was the Negro stevedore ~~that~~ who made that aid effective, ~~after the white engineers had opened the way~~.

All this was expected. America knows ~~in its sober moments~~ the value of Negro labor. Negroes knew that in this war as in every other ~~place~~ war they would have the drudgery and the dirt; but with set teeth they determined that this should not be the end and limit of their service. They did not make the mistake of seeking to escape ~~all~~ labor, for they knew that modern war is mostly ordinary toil; they even took without protest the lion's share of the common labor, but they insisted from the first that black men must serve as soldiers and officers. The white Negro-hating oligarchy ~~was~~ were willing to have some Negro soldiers-- the privilege of being shot in real war being one which they were easily persuaded to share-- provided ~~the~~ the blacks did not get too much notoriety out of it. But against Negro officers they set their faces like flint. The dogged insistence of the Negroes, backed eventually by ~~the~~ decision of Secretary Baker, encompassed the first defeat of ~~the~~ this oligarchy and nearly ~~1000~~ two thousand black officers were eventually commissioned. Then the battle began and it divides itself into four parts: ~~1st~~, First an effort to deprive Negroes troops of ~~their~~ thoroughly Negro [illegible]rs;— and so early, to fight Cruel and [illegible] when his heart at first repeated use of the Senegalese as "shock" troops in France. Their dead comrades covered fields like grass and their wounded died two often and uninterested fed

the unexcited

3

First and foremost, war is war & military organization is & must be Tyranny. That is, perhaps, greatest & most barbarous curse of war & the most pressing reason for its abolition from ~~our~~ civilization. As war is & must be the Company Officer is at the mercy of his superiors. The company officers of the Colored troops were largely colored; the field officers were invariably white with few exceptions (two or three Majors & one Colonel) while ~~Everything~~ the fate of the colored officers depended almost absolutely on those placed in his command. There was one man in the United States who by every consideration of justice & efficiency and long, faithful service should have been given the command of a division of colored troops. Colonel Charles Young is a graduate of West Point & by universal admission one of the best officers in the army. He has served in Cuba, Haiti, the Philippines, Mexico, Africa & the West with distinction. Under him the Negro division would have been the most efficient in the Army. He was and given a chance. He was not allowed even a minor command or a chance & act as instructor. On the contrary, the 92nd & 93rd Divisions of Negro troops were given commanding officers who found a half-dozen excuses either to evacuate Negroes or actively and persistently opposed colored officers under any circumstances. A certain number of these white officers from the first showed more time and ingenuity in making the best of the Negro

3 S 2 - D - 125

Immediately American military officials & legal precedent are antagonistic & cruelly unfair. Whether the charge is true or false the accused is determined officer hood and the manner of the Negro soldier limited, than they did in the having it with the Germans. These efforts fell under various heads; giving the colored officers no instruction in certain lines & then claiming that none were fitted for the work, as in artillery and engineering; persistently picking the poorest candidates instead of the best for examinations and tests so as to make any fool one sometimes; using court martials & efficiency boards for trivial offences & wholesale removals; subjecting officers and men to persistent insult and discrimination by refusing salutes, "Jim-Crowing" places of accommodation & amusement, refusing leaves, etc; by failing to supply the colored troops with proper equipment and decent clothes; and finally by a systematic attempt to poison the minds of the French against the Negroes and compel them to follow the dictates of American prejudice.

34-4-234

These are serious charges. The full proof of them cannot be attempted here, but a few examples will serve to indicate the nature of the proof.

Colonel Young, our only West Pointer, and by general consent one of the best officers in the U.S.Army, could have turned out a Negro fighting division equal to anything in Europe. He was promptly retired from active service and given active "duty" with nothing to do until after the armistice was signed, when he was given a camp of casuals! At the colored officers' training camp no instruction was given in artillery and a dead-line by which no one was commissioned higher than Captain, and officers with the hope that they would be more 362nd Inf. Reg.

Reg. Hq., Hq. Co., & Supply Co. — Villeneuve
Mach. Gun Co. — Le Haut
Bn. Hq. & Cos. A & B — St. Georges
Cos. C & D — Champgenetteux
Bn. Hq. & Cos. E, F, G, & H. — Javron
Bn. Hq. & Cos. I, K — Javron
Co. K. — Chevaigne
Co. M. — Villepail

360th Inf. Reg.

Reg. Hq., Hq. Co., Supply Co. & Mach. Gun Co. — Contrain
Bn. Hq. & Cos. A & B. — Meritte
Co. C — La Patte
Co. D. — Le Londin
Bn. Hq. & Cos. E, F. — St. Aignan
Co. G — St. Cyr-en-Pail
Co. H. — Les Chapelles
Bn. Hq. & Cos. I & K. — Madre
Co. K — St. Julien
Co. M. — La Baroche

34-4-285

The Chief of Staff of the only complete Negro division wrote of a U/S/ Senator, contrary of all army rules, a letter in which he said:

Colonel Tupes of the 372nd, Colored, Infantry started with persistent attempts of removing all his Colored officers before he had tried & known and left them. He wrote of, ~~G.H.Q aug 24~~ General Headquarters, August 24, 1918:

The Court martials of Negro officers were often outrageous in their contravention of common sense & military law, ~~courtesy~~. The experience of one Eastham will illustrate. Captain V. M. Daulé was a college man, with military training, who opened a Cafe in Des Moines — a very difficult accomplishment — and was from the first re —

92 Division

Divisional Hqrs. + Hqrs. Troop — Mayenne
183 Brig. Hqrs. — Lamballe
184 " " — Jaurin

365th Inf. Reg.

Reg. Hq., Hq. Co. Supply Co. + Mach. Gun Co. — Aux Frières
Bn. Hq. + Cos. A + B — " Des Pas
Co. C. — Conesmes
Co. D. — Ceaucé
Bn. Hq. + Cos. E. F. + G. — Le Housseau
Co. H. — Dissenne
Bn. Hq. + Cos. I + K. — Le Haïd
Co. L. — St. Mars
Co. M.

366th Inf. Reg.

Reg. Hq., Hq. Co., + Supply Co. — La Chapelle
Mach. Gun Co — Hardanges
Bn. Hq. + Cos. A + B. — Aron
Co. C. — Graon
Co. D. — Marcillé
Bn. Hq. + Cos. E. + F. — Chaufour
Co. G. — Mont Frenil
Co. H. — St. Fraimbault
Bn. Hq. + Cos. I. + K. — Le Hoziès
Co. L. — Le Ribay
Co. M. — Charchigné

garded as an efficient officer by his fellows, but the Major of his battalion was from Georgia, and recently graduated from West Point. This ~~captain~~ Captain was too independent to suit him. He suddenly ordered him under close arrest and after long delay preferred 25 charges against him. These he afterward reduced to 7, continuing meantime to heap restrictions and insults onthe accused, but untried, officer. Instead of breaking arrest or resenting his ~~his~~ treatment the officer kept cool, hired a good colored lawyer in his division and put up so good a fight that the court martial acquitted him and restorred him to his rank. Many colored officers marked for slaughter were less fortunate; some were naturally incompetent, but these were not so often molested as the better officers and more independent men. Here, however, as so often afterward, the French stepped in, quite unconsciuosly, and upset careful plans. While the American officers were convinced of the Negro officers' incompetency and were beseiging General Headquarters to remove them en masse, the French instructors at the Grandecourt Training School, where Captains and selected Lieutenants were sent for training, reported that the Negroes were among the best Americans sent there! It was evident that the French needed instruction in American prejudice.

As the Negro troops began moving toward the Vosges sector of the battle-front August 6, 1918, active anti- Negro propaganda became evident. From the General Headquarters of the American Army at Chaumont the French Military Mission was asked to send out, not simply to the French Army, but to all the Prefects (corresponding roughly to our governors and mayors) and Sous-Prefects of France, setting forth at length the American attitude toward Negroes; warning against social recognition, stating that Negroes were prone to deeds of violence, were America with degeneration, etc. The white troops backed this propaganda by warnings and tales whereever they preceded the blacks. All this misguided effort was lost on the French. In some cases peasants and villagers were seriously at the approach of Negro troops, but this was but temporary and the colored troops everywhere they went soon became easily the best liked of all foreign soldiers. They were received into the best homes, and where they could speak French or their hosts understood English they poured their story of injustice and wrong into deeply sympathetic ears. The impudent swagger of white American troops, with their openly expressed contempt for "Frogs" and their evident failure to understand the first principles of Democracy in the most democratic of lands, finished the work thus begun. No sounding words of President Wilson can off-set in the minds of thousands of Frenchmen the impression of disloyalty and coarseness which the attempt to force color prejudice made on a people who just owed their salvation to black West Africa! Little was published or openly said, but the circular on American Negro prejudice was quietly collected and burned! And in a thousand delicate ways the French expressed their silent disapprobation. For instance, in a provincial town a colored officer entered a full dining-room; the smiling landlady hastened to seat him (How natural!) with a table full of white American officers, immediately they began to show their displeasure. A French officer at a neighboring table filled with other French officers quietly glanced at the astonished landlady. Not a word was said, no one in the dining-room took any apparent notice, but the black officer was soon seated beside the courteous Frenchmen.

On the Negroes this double experience of deliberate and devilish persecution from their own countrymen, coupled with a taste of real democracy and world-old culture, was revolutionizing. They began to hate prejudice and discrimination as they had never hated it before. They began to realize its eternal meaning and implications. Far from filling them with a desire to escape from their race and country, they were filled with a bitter, dogged determination never to give up the fight for Negro equality in America, if it cost them their lives! If American color prejudice counted on this war experience to break the spirit of the young Negro, it counted without its host. A new radical Negro spirit has been born in France, which leaves us older radicals far behind. Thousands of black men have died for the lilies of France and they return ready to offer their lives in France that it grove the [illegible]. It was not the German barrage in front, but it was the American barrage of insult and discriminination in the rear that broke the spirit of the black troops in France. I have seen in black folk so intense and universal bitterness against studied and deliberate and unceasing injustice.

Copy

I

One colored officer, Walker, turned and exposed his unfair practices and the Court Martial revealed to an astonishing degree the way in which he had been favored. Lieutenant Henry Dunn of the 350th machine gun Battalion was employed at intelligence and secretarial work. He was dismissed & reinstated three times because the White officers who succeeded him could not do the work. Finally he was under arrest for one & one-half months and was dismissed from service, but General Headquarters GHQ investigated the case and restored him to his rank.

II

was brought to the attention of the French Ministry, and

American 7

The first Negroes to arrive in France were the Labor Battalions, comprising all told some

34-4-237

The Negro fighting units were the 92nd and so-called 93rd Divisions.

But the record of the Negro did not end with the honorable but incomplete record of the 92nd. The so-called 93rd Division was from the first a thorn in the flesh of the Bourbons. It consisted of Negro National Guard troops almost exclusively officered by Negroes - the 8th Illinois, the 15th New York, and Battalions from D. of C., Maryland, Ohio, and Tennessee. The Division was thus incomplete and never really functioned as a division. For a time it was hoped that Colonel Young might be given his chance here, but nothing came of this. Early in April when the need of the French for reenforcement was sorest, the black troops were hurriedly shipped to France. The 15th N.Y. became the 369th Regiment and was made apart of the 2nd French army. This Regiment was originally authorized by Governor Sulzer, but its foration was long prevented. Finally it was organized with ~~nearly all white~~ but with Negro officers. ~~officers, but with 5 Negro Negro officers. No sooner had the regiment reached France than the Col. S.~~

The 369th landed in France January ~~1st.~~, and went to the front at Verdun, where they were brigaded with the 153rd French Division. Colonel Hayward had all his ~~few~~ colored officers transferred by ~~G.H.Q.~~ General Headquarters order before the Champagne drive, except the bandmaster and chaplain. In the Champagne drive 200 were killed and 800 wounded and gassed. The regiment went into battle with the French on the left and the Morrocans on the right, and ~~They~~ got into ~~their~~ own barrage by advancing faster than the other units. They were in line 7& 1/2 days, when 3-4 is usually the limit. They were American colored unit in battle and perhaps the first ~~colored or white.~~

34-4-238

8 5 7 5 in a state of irritation many times

vote. The regiment was on the edge of revolt but it was restrained by the influence of the non-commissioned officers-- very strong in this case because the regiment was all from New York and mainly from Harlem-- and especially because being brigaded with the French they were from the first treated with on such terms of terms of equality and brotherhood that they were eager to fight. There are charges that Colonel Heyward and his white officers needlessly sacrificed the lives of the men. This, of course, is hard to prove but certainly the casualties in this regiment were heavy and in the great attack in the Champagne, in September and October, and afterward in the Vosges, they were 191 days under fire-- a record for any American regiment. They received over 170 citations for the Croix de Guerre and Distinguished Service Crosses and were the first unit of the Allied armies to reach the Rhine, Nov. 18, with the 2nd French Army.

The 371st Regiment was drafted from S.C., and had white officers from southern the first. They were mobilized at Camp Jackson Oct. 5-17, and embarked for France April 9, from Newport News. They were trained at Remercourt-aux-Ports (Meuse) and left for the region near Bar-le-duc June 5. They arrived in the Argonne June 22nd. They were brigaded with the 157th French division, 13th Army Corps. and They were in the battle-line, front and reserve, until the Armistice was signed. They had many citations for bravery.

The 372nd Regiment consisted of the 9th Colored Battalion from Ohio, a the First Seperate Battalion from D.C., and four companies, Mass, Conn., Md., and Tenn. They had , at first, one colored Major, and all colored Nine Company officers, except the heads of the Supply , M.G., and Headquarters Companies. The colored Major was relieved March 21, and the regiment started for France March 30. They were over 6 weeks and near Bar-le Duc for training. The officers were sent ahead for advance reconnaissance in the Argonne forest May 14-19. They were on patrol duty and under instruction. The Regiment arrived, May 26, and were brigaded with the French XXXX 63rd Division, under General Echochard. In August the Colonel of the regiment, Tupes, recommended to General Headquarters a policy of replacing colored by white officers, which was approved. By Oct. 27th all the colored officers were transferred, sent home, etc., except one captain, two dentists and two chaplains.

After one month they were transferred to the 157th Division 9th Army Corps.

The first batch of colored officers were was transferred Sept. 12, when X 21 were ordered before efficiency boards. Of these 9 were discharged, 11 sent to Blois for reclassification and one (afterwards killed in battle) was returned to duty. Notwithstanding this the Regiment went into the Champagne battle with 50% of its officers colored. After the battle and after the Division had commended officers and men of the Regiment highly and the whole regiment was cited for bravery, but the citation was held up by G.H.Q. After the division had been relieved on the battle-front all the colored officers were relieved except the physicians and one lieutenant. The Regiment then went to the Vosges sector and remained in a quiet sector (LAVALLINE) until the end.

4 officers killed in C. Fully.

dentists + chaplain.

one battalion?

with ninth Argonne May 26 - with third Champagne-Marne June 4

* 9 and 92nd division + after 3 days sent to 370th 2 at school @ Gondrecourt divisions where went

The colonel Captain, Pryor, whose company was the best and most commended in the Regiment was given honorable release for "age" with and promotion

& this found the anti-Negro propaganda clear and fairly consistent and unopposed; General Headquarters has not only sent out instructions in Negro prejudice & the French but also consented to wholesale removals of officers, army, Tank Engineers & Infantry on the mere ground of color. Even the French in at least one case have been persuaded that Negro officers are the cause of certain inefficiencies in Negro units.

a change came with the advent of the 370th Regiment.

34-4-239

Undoubtedly the cruel losses of the 369th Regiment were due in part to the assumption of the French at first that the American Negroes were like the Senegalese; these half-civilized troops could not in the time given them be trained in modern machine warfare,- but rushed at the enemy almost with naked hands. The resulting slaughter was horrible. Our troops tell of great black fields of stark and crimson dead after some of these superhuman onrushes-- and this blood-bathed sacrifice saved France. It was this kind of Fighting that the French expected of the black Americans at first, and white American officers did not greatly care so long as they got the glory. It was another story, however, when the 370th Regiment came. This was the famous 8th Illinois, and it had a full quota of Negro officers, from the Colonel down. It had seen service on the Mexican border, it went to Houston, Texas, after the Thirteen had died for Freedom, and was treated with wholesome respect. It was sent to Newport News for embarkation; once Colonel Dennison refused to embark his troops and marched them back to camp because he learned they were to be "Jim-Crowed" on the way over. Arrived in France, the Regiment was brigaded with the French 59th Division of the 10th Army. When at the first encounter they did not adopt the tactics of "shock" troops, the white Americans took their cue and inspired a speech which the French General which the colored men could not understand. It was not long, however before the General publically apologized for his first and hasty criticism and afterward repeatedly commended both officers and men for their bravery, intelligence and daring. This Regiment received more citations than any other American Regiment for bravery on the field of battle. There was, of course the fly in the ointment; the effort to substitute white officers was strong and continuous, notwithstanding the fact that many of the black officers of this Regiment were among the most efficient in the American Army. First the colored Colonel, the ranking Negro officer in France, was sent home. The reason of this is not clear. Some say health, some say prejudice. some even hint at "cold feet". At any rate Colonel Dennison was replaced by a white Colonel who afterward accepted a Croix de Guerre for an exploit which was actually performed by a Negro officer while the Colonel was sitting snugly in his tent. The men of the Regiment openly jeered him, crying out: " Blue Eyes ain't our Colonel -- Duncan's our Colonel!" referring to the colored Lieutenant-Colonel. But the white Colonel was diplomatic: he let the colored officers run the Regiment, posed as the Moses of the colored race(to the open amusement of the Negroes) and quietly tried to induct white officers. " I cannot understand why they sent this white lieutent," he said plaintively to a colored officer; the officer at that moment had in his pocket a copy of the Colonel's telegram asking General Headquarters for white officers! But the armistice came before the Colonel suceeded in getting but two white officers,- his brother as Major without a battalion command and the lieutenant. The organization that ranked all America in distinction remained, therefore, a Negro organization, for the white Colonel was only "commanding" and Dennison is still [illegible]

[illegible] went to Grand Villers (Meuse-Argonne) near Belfort since 27 – June 12; [illegible] near Cunnecy Bar-le-Duc (was 34th Div) to June 17; armed Liopaieres left 2 with front-line @ St Michiel (34th Divn) June 30 – July 3; back to Liguieres; July 5 to Ragicourt (in Meuse-Argonne) with 36th Divn; @ Vaquois sector; Argonne front (Germans evac July 12) stayed until Aug 16; [illegible] some help in battle with Stokes mortar platoon – commended by General Mittelhauser; then to rest camp, Fains, Aug 16 – Sept 1; then Marcuil sur Bourg with 59th (10th army (Gen Mangin)) (Somme front) Sept 1-14 in back line; trenches on Sept 16th @ Moisy-Fermes (near Mont Dessonges) now a part of Divisn – one of 39 Infantry Regiments – fighting Sept 16 – [illegible] – Oct 12,

The French easily misunderstood the situation at first and assumed that the Negro officers were to blame, especially as this was continually suggested to them by the Americans.

Then Regt [illegible] Oct 12 to Laon (recreation Oct 15)

(See X
No 1)

General Headquarters by this time had Regt to change its attitude and conf the Bambons. It announced that it was not the policy of the army to make wholesale removals simply on account of color and it allowed the citations for bravery of Negro troops to be approved.
Nevertheless, the [illegible] continued.

So much for the 93rd Division: Its troops fought magnificently in the Champagne, the Argonne and elsewhere and were given unstinted praise by the French and even commendation by the Americans. They fought well, but, despite the color of their officers — the 371st Reg. 371st under whites, the 372nd Reg under ~~both~~ whites & ~~both~~ colored, ~~&~~ the 371st Reg under colored were equally brave; except the 372nd Reg made the most conspicuous record. One might conclude under ordinary circumstances that it was a matter of efficiency in officers & not of race, but, unfortunately, the efficient colored officer had almost no chance even to try, except in the 370th Reg & ~~in~~ the Champagne battle ~~with~~ the 372nd Reg with a fair chance there is no doubt but he could have led every one of that Regiment to fight as well as the whites. It would pay the Commander to commend this all the more. Commanding officers in all these Regiments were negros.

The storm center of the Negro troops was the 92nd Division. The brigading of the 93rd Div with the French made wholesale attacks & deprecations different, since it was intrinsically annulled ~~annulled~~

34-4-240

351st. Reg. Heavy Field Artillery.

Reg. Hq. + Hq. Co. + Supply Co.	Contoire
Bn. Hq. + Cos. A + B.	"
" " " C + D.	"
" " " E.	Thetroef
French Mortar Bn.	Autreigny

Services.

3/7 H. Ammunition Train ~~Motor Section~~
Train Headquarters — Dommartin
Bn. Hq. + Cos. A, B, C, + D. — "

Horse Section
Caisson Cos. A + B. — Dommartin
Major C. C. — " Mobile Ord. Repair Sh. J. — "

by the generous appreciation of the French & 92nd by Americans, was damned as a complete Negro division, manned by Negro company officers. Everything depended then, on the General & field officers as to how fair the experiment should be.

From the very first there was open & covert opposition and trouble. Instead of putting Colonel Young at the head, & with him General Ballou, was chosen & surrounded by Southern white officers & the dearest "nigger" officers. Gen. Ballou himself was well-meaning, kind hearted, vacillating, weak and of great ability and afraid of southern criticism. He was morbidly impressed by the horror of this "experiment" & harassed from the start & till the end of his tenure by orders and counter orders. He sought & made his Negro officers feel personal responsibility for the Houston outbreak; he tried & accused them indirectly of German propaganda & finally he virtually ordered them ~~something~~ & permit & contain

34-4-241

Services

Sanitary Train — Mayenne
Hqrs. Train & Military Police — " Supply Train — "
325th Field Signal Bat. — "
349th, 350th & 351st Mach. Gun Bns. — L'assay

167th Artillery Brig. Headquarters — Dompfront.

349th Reg. Light Field Artillery.

Reg. Hq., Hq. Co. & Supply Co — Dompfront
Bn. Hq. & Cos. A, B & C — "
" " " S. E & H. — "

350th Reg. Light Field Artillery.

Reg. Hq., Hq. Co. & Supply Co. — La Chapelle Moche
Bn. Hq. & Cos. A. — "
Cos. B & C — Juvigney-sous-Andaine
Bn. Hq. & Cos. D. & E. — La Chapelle Moche
Co. F — Genicslay

several humiliations & discriminations without protest! Thus, before the Division was fully formed Gen. Dallon had spread hatred & distrust among his officers & men. "Bad old Dallon stuff" became a by-word in the Division for anti-Negro propaganda.

The main difficulty lay in a common misapprehension in white men of the meaning & method of race contact in America. They sought desperately & rebelliously in the Division & in France the racial restorations of America ~~of time~~ on the theory that any new freedom meant "spoil" for blacks. But they did not understand the fact that men of the type who became officers do not protect themselves from continuous insult & discrimination by making & moving in a world of their own; they associate socially where they are given them welcome; they live for the most part beside neighbors who like them; they attend schools where they are not invented and they work where their work is appreciated. Of course, every once in a while they ~~[illegible]~~ frame & smile & resent encroachments upon their world — new discom-

34-1-242

365

Capt M.V. Battles

nations in Law & custom, and this is occasionally & not continuous. The world which Gen Ballou & his black officers tried to re-create for Negro officers was a world of continuous daily insult & discrimination to an extent that none had ever experienced. And they did this in a country where the discrimination was artificial & entirely unnecessary, & arousing the direst astonishment & mystification. In instances when the Headquarters Company / the Division assigned to elaborate at Brest, ~~it was found that~~ quarters in the best hotel were reserved for white officers & enlisted barracks, with hard beds & in the cold & mud, were assigned Negro officers. The colored officers went & their quarters & then returned to the city. They found that the white Americans made & made themselves comfortable in French had not taken their reservations had gone to quarters & frozen hotel. The black officers immediately explained and took the fine reservations!

34-4-243

The fighting units of the Negroes were in the 92nd and the so-called 93rd Divisions. The 92nd Division consisted of four regiments of infantry: the 365th trained at Camp Grant, and drafted from Illinois Washington, Oklahoma, California, and North Carolina and Ohio--showing how the race seperation law mixed the colored regiments and eliminated all local esprit du corps. The 366th regiment wsa mainly from Southern States and at Camp Dodge, Ia. The 367th was recruited from New York, and the South and trained at Camp Upton; Recruits from Maryland D. of C. and Tenn. formed the 368th at Camp Meade, Md. The Field Artillery for the Division was decided on at the last moment, after much hesitation. Three regiments, the 349th, 350th, and 351st were started at Camp Dix, N.J. As no Negroes had been trained in Artillery it was claimed immediately that none were competent. Nevertheless, some were finally found to qualify. Then it was claimed that technically trained privates were impossible to find. There were plenty to be had if they could be gathered from the various camps. Permission to do this was long refused, but after endless other delays and troubles, the Field Artillery finally with a few colored officers. Before the artillery was ready, the Division mobilized at Camp Upton, between May 28 and June 4, and all embarked by the 10th for France.

All arrived at Brest by June 20, and immediately the Jim-crowing began-- the white officers going to hotels, and the colored to unprepared barracks where they refused to stay. A week later the whole Division went to Bourbonne-les-bains where they stayed in training until August 6. Here a determined effort at wholesale replacement of colored officers took place. Fifty white lieutenants were sent to the camp to replace Negroes. "Efficiciency" boards began to weed out colored men. The experience of one Captain is an example. He was re-

[illegible] colored as [illegible] much inefficiency, due to lack of [illegible], training & the leaving of their units. But in the case of the Negro officers repeatedly the race question came to the front & permission was repeatedly asked to remove them, because they were colored, while the inefficiency charge was a wholesale one against their race & nature.

G.H.Q. by this time, however, had settled down to a policy of removing individual rather than wholesale accusations, & while this made a difference yet in the army no officer could hold his position long if his superiors for any reason wanted to get rid of him. While there, many of the waiting white lieutenants went away, the colored officers began to be systematically restricted in number.

Beginning the 6th of August the 92nd Div began to occupy the Vosges sector of the great Allied battle-line, from St. Die to Rayon l'Etappe, where they stayed until September 20. It was a quiet sector, with only an occasional German raid to repel. Beginning September 16th the Division began to move to the Argonne, where the great American drive to cut off the Germans was to take place. The colored troops were not to enter the front-line s, and were entirely unequipped, as General Pershing himself afterwards said, for battle service. Nevertheless, the 368th Regiment which arrived in the Argonne Sept 24, was suddenly sent into battle on the battle line on the morning of the 26th. As this is a typical instance of the discrimination of Negro officers & troops, it deserves recital in detail.

It is the story of the failure of white field officers to do their duty & the partially successful & long-continued effort of company officers & men to do their duty despite this. That there was inexperience & incompetency among the colored officers is probable but it was not confined to them & in their case the greater responsibility lay elsewhere! for it was the plain duty of the field officers: first, to see that the men were equipped for battle second, to have the plans clearly explained, at least step by step, to the company officers & to third, to maintain liaison between battalions & between the regiment and the French & other American units

34-4-245

Here follows the story as it was told to me point by point by those who were actually on the spot. They were earnest, able men, mostly lieutenants & Captains, & one could not doubt, there in the dim, smoke-filled tents about de Mans, their absolute earnestness & frankness.

16 49

The 368th Regiment went into the Argonne September 24 and the drive were put into ~~started~~ on the morning of the 26th. They ~~were brigaded with the French~~ duty was ~~for this battle and their~~ "combat liaison" with the French 37th Division and the 77th (white) Division of Americans. ~~The second Battalion went in-~~ ~~to battle first, then the third, and then the first.~~ The Regiment as a whole was not equipped for battle in the front-line. They had no artillry support until the 6th day of the battle; they had no hand grenades, no rifle trombones, no signal flares, no airplane panels for signaling, no maps, and were at no time given definite objectives.

The Second Battalion entered battle on the morning of the 26th, Major Elser in command; all the ~~line~~ company officers were colored;
F Company went over the top at 5:30 A.M. H Company, which Elser himself was, went over at 12:30, noon. Advancing 4 kilometers the Battalion met the enemy's fire. The Machine Gun Company silenced the fire, but Major Elser, who had halted in the woods to collect souvenirs from dead German bodies, immediately withdrew part of the Battalion to the rear in single file about dark with notifying the rest of the Battalion. Captain Dabney and Lieutenant Powell of the M.G. Co. led the rest out in order about 10 P.M. (over)

The wire-cutting shears given them were absolutely useless with the heavy German barbed wire, and they were finally able to borrow only 16 large shears which had to serve the whole attacking battalion. finally they had

Next morning Elser commended the M.G.Co. for extricating the deserted part of the Battallion, and moving forward again at 11 A.M., sent two companies over the top at 4P.M. Without liason. With the rest of the battalion again, these companies went forward 1 &1/2 Post of Command
kil. Major Elser stayed back with the ~~P.C.~~ Enemy fire and darkness again stopped the advancing companies and Captain Jones fell back 500 metres, and sent a message to the Major asking reinforcements (about 6 A.M. on the morning of the 28th. Jones stayed under snipers' fire until about 3P.M. and ~~although~~ no answer to his request came from the Major, Jones went over the top again and retraced the same 500 metres. Heavy machine gun and rifle fire now greeted him. He took refuge in near-by trenches and his men began to drift away in confusion, ~~being now lost so far as the other battalions~~ were concerned.

Meantime on the 27th, 4:30 P.M., the Third Battalion moved forward. It was commanded by Major Norris, a white New York lawyer, a graduate of Plattsburg with no experience on the line. ~~There advance c~~ companies of the battalion advanced ~~about~~ 2& 1/2 kil. and about 6:30P.M. were fired on by enemy machine guns. The Major who was in ~~the rear~~ with one company and a platoon of machine guns, ordered the machine guns to trenches 75 yards in the rear. ~~In this case as in the whole movement~~ Major Norris' orders were confused and the company as well as the platoon retreated to the trenches, leaving the firing line unsupported. Subjected to heavy artillery, grenade, machine-gun, and rifle fire during the whole night of the 27th, and being themselves without artillery support or grenades, the firing line broke and took refuge in the trench with the Major, where ~~xxNxxtxxx~~ all spent a terrible night under rain and bombardment.
~~Nextxxxxxingxxtxexx28txxatxx7x30xAxMxxtxexfiringxlxexxxxrefarmedxand~~ ~~advxxxedx2&1/2xxilxx~~ Next morning, the 28th, at 7:30 A.M., the firing-line was restored and an advance ordered. The ~~weary~~ men led by their colored ~~line~~ company officers ~~grimly~~ responded. They swept forward 2& 1/2 kil. ~~and~~ but advanced beyond both French and Americans on the left and right. Their field officers failed ~~them utterly. Not only did they fail~~ to keep liaison with the French and American white units, ~~but they~~ even lost track of their own 2nd Battalion which was dribbling away in one of the front trenches. The advancing firing-line of the 3rd Battalion met a withering fire of trench mortars, 77s, machine guns etc. They ~~have~~ no artillery support ~~still~~,

(Still had)

A) When the broadside opened on the 26th, Major Elder stood wringing his hands and crying: " What shall I do! what shall I do!" At night he deplored the occurence and said it was all his fault.

All this time the Major was in the rear. On the 28th he was releived of the command of the Battalion and entered the hospital for "psycho-neurosis" ~~& the physicians' name for plane funk~~. Later he was promoted to Lt. Colonel and transferred to a labor Battalion!

B

or "Shell shock" — a ~~Simplasm~~ Disease which Often covers a multitude of sins.

34-4-248

and being, in advance, received the German fire front, flank, and rear, ~~there is nothing to do but retreat and after 5 hours of shilling pun~~ the line breaks at 12:30 and retreat to the support trench where the Major also reprimanded the colored officers severely. They reported the intense artillery fire, and their lack of equipment; their ignorance of objectives and their lack of maps for which they have asked. They are ordered to reform and take up positions, which they do. Many contradictory orders pass to the company commanders during the day: to advance, to halt, to hold, to withdraw, to leave woods as quickly as possible. Finally at 6:30P.M., they are ordered to advance. They advanced three kil. and met exactly the same conditions as before - heavy artillery fire on all sides. The company commanders are unable to hold their men ~~who break in confusion~~ and the Colonel ordered the Major to withdraw his battalion from the line. Utter confusion resulted - there are many casualties and many gassed. Major Norris withdraws, leaving a platoon under Lt. Dent on the line and ignorant of the command to withdraw. They escape unaided during the night.

From the 26th to the 29th the 1st Battalion under Major J.N. Merrill were in support of regiment in the front-line French trenches. On the night of the 28th they prepared to advance, but after being kept standing ~~waiting~~ under shell fire for two hours, they were ordered back to the trenches. A patol was sent out to locate the third battalion, but being refused maps by the Colonel they were a long time on the quest and before they returned the 1st battalion was ordered to advance on the morning of the 29th. By 1P.M. they had gone one mile when they halted to find Major Merrill, ~~who was~~ finally located after two hours' search. ~~Meantime~~ A French Lieutenant had guided them to positions in an old German trench. Major ~~Merrill at last appeared and~~ ordered them forward 600 yards to other deserted German trenches. Terrific shell fire met them here, and there were many casualties. They stayed in the trench during the night of the 29th and at noon on the 30th were ordered to advance. They advanced 3 kil. through the woods, ~~through~~ through shell and machine gun fire and artillery barrage. They dug in and stayed all night under fire. On Oct. 1st the French artillery came up and put over a barrage. Unfortunately it fell short and the battallion was caught between the German and French barrages and compelled hastily to withdraw.

The regiment was soon after releived by a French unit and taken by train to the Marbache sector. Major Elser of the 2nd Battalion made no charges against his colored officers, ~~but his own responsibility to them;~~ Major Merril made no charges; but Major Norris on accounts of the two breaks in the line of the 3rd Battalion on the 28th ordered 5 of his colored line officers court-martialed, a Captain, two First Lieutenants, and a Second Lieutenant. Only one case - that of the Second Lieutenant, had been decided at this writing. He was found guilty by the court-martial, but on review of his case by G.H.Q. he was acquitted and restored to his command.

La Perouse

Quai Richmond

This effort of the 368th Regiment was seized upon by Army gossip and widely heralded as a "failure" of ~~Colored~~ Negro troops & particularly of Negro officers. Yet the same sort of troops & many Negro officers in the Champagne & afterward in the Argonne under French leadership covered themselves with glory. The real failure in the initial Argonne drive was in American field strategy which was totally unequal & German methods & hard to learn by bitter experience. It is worse than useless to write off the first experience & the discredit of ~~Colored~~ Negro troops & commissioned officers who did all that was humanly possible under the circumstances.

34-4-249

The 365th, ~~&~~ 366th and 367th Regiments did not enter the battle-line at all in the Argonne and the whole Division after the withdrawal of the 368th was, beginning noon Sept 29, transferred to the Metz sector preparatory to the great drive on that fortress, which was begun, rather needlessly, as the European war ended, on the day before signing the Armistice, Nov. 10. According to plan, the 56th White American Division was on the ~~right~~ left, the 92nd Division in the center & the French on the right.

26
27
28
29
30
1
2nd.
12 M.
12 30
3 A M 2½ 6 30
1 A M
5½-12½
6:30
2½
7:30 AM
4K
3 A M.
1½ K
6 A M
11 AM
10 A M.
2nd
4 30 A M
3rd
1ST

The 367th Regiment led the advance & forged ahead of the flanking units; but this time brave field direction led them back, and for the first time they were reinforced by their own Oregon Field Artillery.

34-4-250

principally, and trained at Camp Upton. They left the U.S. June 10th and were trained at Bourbonne-les-Bains,; they then occupied aquiet s sector in the Vosges andin September went to the Argonne where thy were in reserve. In Oct. they went to the Metz sector and took part in that d drive, where their position was next thewhite 56th division (Ontheir left) with the 365th and the 366th on their their right. The 367th led all the American regiments in the advance, and after the Armistice, the First Battalionwent to Noveant (LORRAINE) with the Army of Occupation, Nov. 30 to Dec. 5 and received the first French prisoners returning from Germany, Beside the four Infantry Regiments the 92nd Division had the usually other units.

The 325th Field Signal Battalian, attached to Division Headquarters, was composed of 4 companies organized at Camp Sherman. They had 10 colored and 20 white officers. They were in France at Bourbonne-les-Bains and then went to the Vosges. They were split into detachments and attached to regiments under a Chief Signal Officer. While at school at Gondricourt, July 13-August 18, they made one of the best records of any unit. Many were cited for bravery, and they were most efficient in their work.

The 167th Field Artillery Brigade consisted of 2 regiments of light artillery (75s) trained at Camp Dix (the 349th & 350th) and one regiment of heavy artillery (the 351st) trained at Camp Meade, who used 155 howitzers. They experienced extraordinary difficulties in training: there can be no doubt but that deliberate effort was made to send up for examination in artillery not the best, but the poorest equipped candidates. Difficulty was encountered in getting Colored men with the requisite technical training ~~inducted into the~~ service. If the commanding officer in this case had been as prejudiced as in the case of the engineers and other units, there would have been no Negro Artillery. But Colonel Moore, although a Southerner, insisted on being fair to his men. The Brigade landed ni Brest June 26th and at Monmorillon (Vienne) They were favorites in the town and were received into the social life on terms of perfect equality. There were 5 colored company officers and 8 medical officers. ~~The~~ The officers were sent to school at La Cortine and ~~made a good record.~~ The brigade went into battle in the Metz drive and did ~~their~~ work without a hitch, despite the fact that they had no transport facilities for their guns, and had to handle them largely by hand.

The 317th Ammunition Train, which was attached to Division Headquarters , but was under the artillery in battle, was organized at Camp Funston in December, and had 1333 officers and men, divided into 2 battalions, one motor and one horse, with 7 companies. There 33 colored officers and 3white. The battalion landed in France June 27 and went to Montmorillon, and the artillery training school at La Cortine with the Field artillery. The Colonel in charge of this French school said that the work of the colored Artillery Brigade was better at the end of two weeks than that of any other American unit that had attended the school. They arrived at Marbache Oct. 18 and took part in the Metz drive. They had charge also of the corps ammunition dumps. During the drive all the officers were colored and Major Dean wasin command. General Sherbourne, one of the few commanding officers fair to Negro troops warmly commended the work of t the artillery. No general court martial took place in the organization from the beginning and no efficiency boards sat. This was one one of the very few units in which Negroes were promoted--4 being made Captains, 3 first lieutents, 11 second lieutenants, and one a Major. Near the close of the war, 35 colored lieutenants commissioned at Camp Taylor, arrived in France and were sent to school near Nantes. They were subjected to many ~~sorts of~~ indignities ~~and insults~~ by the American officers and men-- compelled to enter the class-room after the whites, refused leaves to town, reprimanded for conversing with the women of the city , who were anxious to be kind and sympahtetic to the obviously oppressed strangers. Notwithstanding all this the men made good records, and joined their command after the armistice.

The 317 Engineers were assembled at Camp Sherman in Dec., with 1350 officers and men. There 2 battallions, and all the officers were colored except 4 field officers. The commanding officers however were from the first determined to get rid of the Negroes. On May 10 ~~all~~ the colored captains were relieved, and sent to the 365th and 366th regiments The regiment came to France in June and was trained near Bourbonne-les-Bains until July 20. On July 22 all the remainign colored officers except 2 lieutenants, the chaplain, and the medical officers were relieved at the repeated requests of Col. Brown of Georgia and Lt. Col. Finch of Texas, ~~who had formerly been with the regiment~~ but had been transferred

This regiment went to the Vosges in August, and then to the Argonne, do- excellent technical work in building and construction. All but one company wer attached to the 4th army corps until Dec. 22, Only Company E remained with the 92nd division.

The 366th Field Hospital was a colored unit with only 2 or 3 whites. They handled 10,000 cases during the Metz drive, 4 weeks, and were rated best in the A.E.F. Lieutenant Wright, the colored physician in charge, was promoted to a captaincy.

Of the assisting agencies the only one that paid any attention to Negro troops was the Y.M.C.A. ~~The Red Cross paid them practically no attention.~~ The few that came to Red Cross hospitals were , with a few exceptions, not only "jim-crowed" but ~~insulted~~. The white ~~xxxxxxxx~~Y.M.C.A. secretaryes usually refused to serve Negroes in any way. Very few Colored secretaries were sent and an attemt was made at first to get rid of the best of these on the ground that their beliefs on the manhood rights a and human equality of Negroes ~~xxxxxxxxx~~ were "seditious". Matters were greatly improved when a colored man was placed in general charge of the colored work. He was never , however, furnished enough men and only 3 women for his vast field.

On one subject the white commanding officers showed more solicitude than on the organization and fighting efficiency of the troops. That was the relations of the colored officers and men with the women of France. They began by officially stigmatizing the Negroes as rapists; They solemly warned the troops in speeches and general orders not even to speak to women on the street; they ordered the white military police to spy no the blacks and arrest them if found talking with French women. The white troops taking their cue from all this senseless pother, spread tales and rumors among the peasants and villagers, and sought to chastise Negroes and offending women. One ~~xxx~~ officer, a high-minded gentleman, graduate and Phi Beta Kappa man of aleading American institution, was court- martialed for keeping company with a perfectly respectable girl of a family of standing in one of the towns where Negroes were quartered, and while G.H.Q. did not uphold the court-martial, they took occasion severely to reprimand him and remove him to a labor battalion!

The result of all this a-do was simply unneccessary bitterness among Negroes and mysification among the French. The Negroes resented bepublically stigmatized by their own country as unfit for decent association with decent people, and the French men and women much preferred the courtesy and bonhomie of the Negroes to the impudence and swagger of the ~~average~~ whites. In practically every French town where the Negro troops stayed they left close and sympathetic friends among men , women and children.

While the 92nd division was in France , there were 14 trials for attacks on women, and ~~16~~ of these were acquitted. Of the other 8, 3 men were convicted of simple assault, leaving ~~5~~ possible cases of grave crime against women; of these three are still undecided at this writing, one has been acquitted by the court but the verdict has not been reviewed, and ONE man has been found guilty and hanged. It is only fair to add that this man belonged to a labor battalion and was sent to the division simply for trial,. No other American division in France has a better record in this respect.

34-4-252

22e 92nd dumm received distinguished service crosses, of which

(23)

el was only "commanding" and Col- 6 onel Dennison is still titular Colonel.

The 371st regiment was a drafted unit ofsouthern colored men with white officers and colored under oficers. It was also brigaded with the French, saw much service and was frequently cited for bravery in battle. The other battalions of colored national gaurd troops formed the 372nd regiment who were brigaded with the 152nd division of the French Fourth Army from July to December. They had originally nearly a full quota of colored officers. The majors and some of the captains were eliminated in the U.S., and in France the work went on, Captain Pryor of the former Company L, 6th Mass. had by general admission the best trained company in the regiment and the one that received the most citations-- but he was discharged by an "Efficiency Board" on account of age, and without promotions. Others were transferred to steyedore regiments etc. until the 372nd was left with not more than a half dozen black officers.

Neary all the colored officers wre also eliminated in the 317th colored engineers, and strong effort was made to disband the whole regiment; but some colored officers remained, togethers with excellent non-commissioned officers and men who became expert in radio-telegraphy, signalling, building and construction of allkinds.

This is a partial and preliminary statement of the patr the Negro played in the great war. There is much in the tale that is missing, and some mistakes to be corrected by fuller information and reference to documents. But the main outlines are clear: A nation with a great disease set out to rescue civilization; it took the disease with it in virulent form and that disease of race hatred and prejudice hampered its actions and discredited tis finest professions. No adequate excuse for America's actions can be offered: granted that many of the dismissed and transferred officers wre incompetent there is no possible excuse for the persistent and studied harrowing of admittedly competent men to which every black officer testifies with a bitterness unexampled in Negroo American history; there was no excuse for the persistent refusal to promote Negroes despite their reords testified to even by the French; there wasno excuse for systematically refusing Negro officers and soldiers a chance to see something of greater and more beautiful France by curtailing their leaves, and quartering them i n the back districts. On the other hand not a black soldier but is glad he went: glad to fight for France the only real white democracy; glad to have anew clear vision of the real inner spirit of American prejudice. The day of camouflage is gone .

This histoy will be enlarged and expanded, embellished with maps and pictures and with the aid of an editorial board consisting of the leading Negro American scholars and the most distinguished of the black soldiers who fought in France will be issued by the N.A.A.C.P. in three volumes in honor of the first great struggle of the modern Negro race for liberty.

34-4-253

Colonel

Foreign legion
Red Cross — Hospitals

"A great impression was made upon both sections of the Nigerian public by the departure of the Negro Nigerian contingent for the War in East Africa. These men were going some 5,000 miles from their homes to fight for the Empire. They had already done splendid work in the Cameroons. Their loyalty even attracted attention and comment from the French Press in the adjoining protectorate of Dahome" (West Africa, March 18, 1917.)

'A tribute, indeed, ought to be paid to the loyalty of all the tribes in British Nigeria, both Muhammadan and pagan, and this notwithstanding the very active propaganda of the enemy among our Muhammadan troops. Appeals printed in Arabic, and alleged to emanate from the Sultan of Constantinople, were distributed throughout Northern Nigeria and the Northern Cameroons, usually enclosed in bottles and attached to trees, but the attempts to influence Fula, Hausa, Songhai or Kanemi were utterly futile.(P. 28)

The Buluwayo Chronicle told of the heroism of an Angonia sergeant in the Northern Rhodesia Police during the early fighting on the Anglo-German frontier in East Africa. An officer and five negro soldiers had been killed, and many more wounded in a surprise attack by the Germans, who were in considerable force. But the Germans received a severe drubbing from our Negro soldiers. Being in great force, they were able to get their killed and wounded away, but the white officer who was killed, fell in long grass. The Negro sergeant stood over the body, firing with his rifle, and calling to his comrades not to let the 'bwana" fall into the enemy's hands. He stood his ground under heavy fire, and eventaally got the officer back under cover. That officer was a Belgian, and although twice wounded had refused to leave the firing-line. The native sergeant in question was recommended for the D.C.M. The newspaper correspondent reporting the incident, added, "I have heard of men with dusky skins being pure-white inside, and I have certainly had proof of that on more than one occasion on this border." (P.66-67) units left Mayenne on the 29th of January, passing through the forwarding camp at Le Mans and arriving at Brest the first week in February. The first transports left Brest bearing our troops homeward on the 5th of February and were followed by others throughout the month and until the

The preparation for returning to the United States consisted in getting all organization records in perfect condition, delousing and reissuing to each man a complete equipment and new clothing. Upon completion of this work the troops were moved to Brest to await orders to sail.

Three miles outside the city of Brest is located the famous Pontenezen Barracks.where thousands of troops were stationed. The area around these barracks was being enlarged to accommodate the returning American soldiers. Roads were being repaired and new ones being constructed. Buildings for administration purposes and living quarters were being rapidly completed. Thousands of soldiers were living in thousands of tents all eagerly waiting for orders to embark.

The Fifteenth New York was the first to sail followed by the Eighth Illinois. In the mean time the 371st and the 372nd Infantries moved out. The several organizations of the 92nd Division were the last of the colored fighters to leave France.

On this occasion General Pershing reviewed the troops of the Division for the last time before its embarkation for the United States. In the course of his address to the officers and soldiers of the Division, the Commander-in-Chief, General Pershing, said:

"I want you officers and soldiers of the 92nd Division to know that the 92nd Division stands second to none in the record you have made since your arrival in France. I am proud of the part you have played in the great conflict which ended on the 11th of November, yet you have only done what the American people expected you to do and you have measured up to every expectation of the Commander-in-Chief. I realize that you did not get into the game as early as some of the other units, but since you took over your first sector you have acquitted yourselves with credit, and I believe that if the armistice had not become effective on the 11th day of November, the 92nd Division would have still further distinguished itself. I commend the 92nd Division for its achievements not only in the field, but on the record its men have made in their individual conduct. The American public has every reason to be proud of the record made by the 92nd Division."

The Army officers school opened Aug 1 @ Langres for 8 weeks. Each of 4 regts of the 93d Div were ordered to send ten men. The 369th Reg sent 10 & the 372nd Reg sent but. None of men were sent from the other regiments, & General Smith, of area where school was, complained that none were sent. Ten finished & were given commissions. Sent 370th Reg. at the 2nd army officers school 92nd & 93rd Div sent 63 men. Of 63, 55 finished, & 20 were sent to the 370th Reg & the rest to the 92nd Div. They made a fine record.

34-4-246

34-4-254

rebukes after coming of Capt. John T. Priest who was assigned to 1st battalion. Stokes relieved right after; (Major R.M. Stokes' slow).

Oct 24 the Division went again in the front-line near Grand Luh. 1 & 2 Battalions in outpost & 3 in reserve; (Col. Roberts was mixed battalions so as to put French Colonels for second front line & Col. Roberts for reserve (& not named by Third)— orders from Division; under shell & M.G. fire; Shell on A Co Nov 3 (34 killed 52 W); Nov 5 enemy withdrew; Commendation from General Vincendon & personal thanks. All 3 battalions of regiment alternated in front line; Co C took battery @ Val St. Pierre; (awarded army citation); 2 Second Battalion held Beaume & Quennetton & 3 Third Bat. @ Armistice was across Belgium frontier NW; Rocroi;

(16 DSC to regiment;)

about 75 Croix de G

The general Courts Martial of the 370th Negroes is Colored: Lewis E. Johnson was Judge Advocate; Lt R.A.J. Shaw & Lt L.C. Washington, Assts; Lt Col. O.B. Denison, President; Frederick Abbott, Asst. Adj. Gen. first after preliminary training Pending — Only 1 case of murder — no rape.

X No 1

6th Sept 15 the Reg. was in the Vaussaillon area; 4 triple communications with 2 Saxon Regiments – took Mt Descuiges & adjacent woods; severe fighting; gained all objectives, ~~fighting~~ up to Sept 22; given sector alone Sept 22 on Canal L'Oise et l'Aisne Canal (from ~~Bois~~ L'Ecluse in front of the point of the Bois de Mortier to point on Canal 300 metres of the Crossing of the Pinon - Braucourt Road) Attack on L'Ecluse Sept 27 - Oct 4 before enemy driven back.

The Reg. lost ~~many lost~~ but it was not demoralized & the morale was good. Objectives were gained Oct 4-12; still fighting @ L'Ecluse Oct 12. general advance; enemy retreat; 1st and 2nd Bat. complimented by Gen. Vincendon (3rd in reserve) (Stokes + Patton) ordered to rest Oct 14. Gen. Vincendon

15th Inf Bde
372nd

On September 15 the Regiment was in the Vauxaillun area; four Rifle Companies with two French Regiments took Mt. Deseinges and adjacent woods; severe fighting; gained all objectives, fighting up to September 22; given sector alone September 22, on Canal L'Oise et Aisne (from L'Ecluse in front of the point of the Bois-de-Mortier to point on Canal 300 metres of the crossing of the Pinon - Brancourt Road) attack on L'Elluse, September 27-October 4, before enemy was driven back.

34-4-256

(diagram)

370th ?

The Regiment lost men, but it was not demoralized and the morale was good. Objectives were gained October 4-12; still fighting at L'Ecluse October 12; general advance; enemy retreat; First and Second Battalions complimented by General Vincendon; ~~(3rd in reserve) (Stokes and Patton)~~ ordered to rest, October 14. General Vincendon rebukes after coming of Captain John T. Prout, who was assigned to First Battalion. Major Stokes was relieved right after, (Major R. M. Stokes's story). On October 24, the Division went again in to the front-line, near Grand Lup; First and Second Battalions in support and three in reserve; mixed Battalions, so as to put French Colonels for second front-line and Colonel Roberts for reserve (and not much of that) orders from Division; under shell and machine gun fire; shell on A Company, November 3 (34 killed and 52 wounded); November 5, enemy withdrew; commendation from General Vincenden. All three Battalions of Regiment alternated in front-line; Company C took battery at Val-et-Pierre; Army citation; Second Battalion helped at Beaume and Aubenton and Third Battalion ~~at~~ when the Armistice came was across Belgian frontier, N.W. Rocroe; ~~15 D.S.C.~~ sixteen distinguish Service Crosses to Regiment; about ~~75~~ seventy-five Croix de Guerre. The general court martial of the 370th Regiment ~~Infantry~~ was ~~is~~ colored; Lewis E. Johnson, ~~was~~ Judge Advocate; Lieutenants ~~Ha~~ ? Shaw and ~~Lieutenant~~ L. C. Washington, Assistants; Lieutenant-Colonel Otis B. Duncan, President; appointed by General Pershing just after preliminary training. There was only one case of murder; no rape!

(diagram)

34-4-255

A82

Mrs. James L. Curtis began her work atCamp Upton the day before Christmas, 1917, being in charge of the women who came for training in the new Hostess House. She remained there for three months.

34-4-209

The illiteracy of the soldiers was especially noticeable and their partings from their families led Mrs. Curtis to want to carry on her work abroad.

Mrs. Curtis was appointed through Mrs. Slade, with the understanding that only rich women were going and that she must furnish her own equipment and fifty dollars a month; passage would be free.

Through the influence of Mr. Fred Moore this rule was modified and when Mrs. Curtis reached France, she found that all the women except the very rich were being paid one hundred dollars a month. Mrs. Curtis furnished her own first equipment, but everything else when she got to France was furnished by the Y.M.C.A.

Mrs. Curtis went over on the French liner, landing at Bordeaux, on the sixteenth of May, 1918. She was the only colored passenger.

Ten days' conference was held in Paris on the needs of the work.

Mrs. Curtis' first [redacted] service was at the canteen at St. Sulpice, during May and June.

At St. Sulpice there were three or four thousand colored soldiers and nearly the same number of whites. The colored soldiers were all stevedores and engineers.

On two or three of the streets in front of the most conspicuous barracks facing the county roads concrete walls had been laid and decorated with large white concrete dice, two feet square.

Very severe rules were in vogue with regard to the colored troops, especially as to talking with white women. No colored soldier could talk even with his washerwoman without having a white [redacted] non-commissioned officer present.

The colored soldiers were restricted to visiting only one village, but there they were not allowed to talk to any French women, and white military police enforced the rule.

Terrible tales about the colored soldiers had been spread among the French.

33-4-210

Before Mrs. Curtis arrived, a French girl, clerk in a store, had been attacked by a white soldier. Her screams brought a colored soldier to her rescue, and he took her home. The colored boy was immediately transferred from the camp. Up to the time when Mrs. Curtis left, the white soldier had not been punished.

There was one case of an attack on a French woman by a colored boy, the day before Mrs. Curtis left.

While the colored soldiers were working, white non-commissioned officers exclusively were employed. There were a few non-commissioned colored officers in the kitchens and in the barracks. White and colored soldiers worked the same hours and had the same foodm but they did not work together.

At another camp, Bassin, there were about 10,000 Negroes. The whole base was under General Scott of Texas.

General Scott had set aside a special house of prostitution for Negro soldiers, and disease was being widely spread among them. Mrs. Curtis went down to see the sick soldiers and while there had a conversation with one of the Y.M.C.A. secretaries, - Kidd, a son-in-law of General Armstrong, and former teacher at Hampton.

Mr. Kidd told Mrs. Curtis that he was then writing to Major Moton and that the colored secretaries who were over there represented the wrong type of Negro. Mr. Kidd and Mrs. Curtis had some plain words with each other.

Mr. Miller, a colored chaplain with the grade of First Lieutenant, together with Y.M.C.A. secretary Bullock and Chaplain Rogers, also a First Lieutenant, then went to put matters before General Scott.

General Scott invited them tocome right in, saying that he was from Texas, and used to "niggers." Afterward a number of officials came and took the sworn statements of the chaplains and Mr. Bullock.

34-4-211

A few days later all the colored workers were ordered to Paris - Bullock, Peale, Wiley, James and Mrs. Curtis. This was late in June. They were told that they were out of favor with the Army, and were ordered home. No charges were stated. The official gave them no chance to make any reply, and the men started in and got their movement orders. Mrs. Curtis refused and went to the Embassy.

At St. Sulpice attempts were made to keep the white soldiers and the English soldiers from coming tothe Y.M.C.A., but the workers made no discrimination.

Mrs. Curtis immediately went to the American Embassy, whewe she was known, and told the secretary the conditions at St. Sulpice.

The secretary promised to get Mrs. Curtis an audience with Mr. Carter, the head of the Y.M.C.A.

The next day Mr. Carter had an interview with Mrs. Curtis and exhibited about fifty pages of charges of all sorts against the five Y.M.C.A. workers.

Some days afterward the other men were sent for, but in no case were all the charges read to them.

They were finally interviewed by the Y.M.C.A. lawyer, who asked various questions, showing that he had got his information from Mr. Kidd.

After ten days, without any additional information as to the charges, they were all reassigned, Mrs. Curtis going to Haussimont.

Mrs. Curtis was on her way to the front with the Fifteenth, New York, or the Eighth Illinois; but on account of the drive she could not go and stayed at Haussimont with ~~xxxx~~ white soldiers.

Afterward Mrs. Curtis went to St. Nazaire, from August to December. There were about 7,000 colored troops here, - engineers, stevedores, labor battalions, etc.

34-4-212

It was at St. Nazaire that Mrs. Curtis specialized in food and gained a reputation throughout the Army.

The white chaplain, formerly at. St. Sulpice, was also at St. Nazaire. He was a Southerner, and thought that colored people ought to be kept in their place. There were several other white chaplains who made it their duty to preach race ~~xxxx~~ inferiority and the separation and segregation of the colored troops in France.

Special effort was made to make Mrs. Curtis discriminate against the white soldiers, but she refused to do so, saying that she had come to serve the Army.

They tried to make her discharge two white girls who were with their mother and brother helping her. The girls, who were said to be too young to work with Mrs. Curtis, went over to the white Y.M.C.A., two blocks away, and were employed without any hesitancy.

The treatment of the colored troops at Montoir, where there was a battalion of colored troops who took care of themselves, was such that they secretly avenged every affront to the colored troops. This led to better treatment.

Most of the non-commissioned officers at St. Nazaire were colored.

Some of the colored troops were sent over clad in the left-~~xxxx~~over Spanish American War blue uniforms. No white soldiers were so clad. It made the colored soldiers a laughing stock. Afterward they were given over-alls.

Mrs. H. Curtis
208 W. 134th St

3/6/8

Mrs. James L. Curtis began her work at Camp Upton the day before Christmas, 1917, being in charge of the women who came for training in the new Hostess House. She remained there for three months.

The illiteracy of the soldiers was especially noticeable and their partings from their families led Mrs. Curtis to want to carry on her work abroad.

Mrs. Curtis was appointed through Mrs. Slade, with the understanding that only rich women were going and that she must furnish her own equipment and fifty dollars a month; passage would be free.

Through the influence of Mr. Fred Moore this rule was modified and when Mrs. Curtis reached France, she found that all the women except the very rich were being paid one hundred dollars a month. Mrs. Curtis furnished her own first heavy equipment, but everything else when she got to France was furnished by the Y.M.C.A.

Mrs. Curtis went over on the French liner, landing at Bordeaux, on the sixteenth of May, 1918. She was the only colored passenger.

Ten days' conference was held in Paris on the needs of the work.

Mrs. Curtis' first service was at the canteen at St. Sulpice, during May and June.

At St. Sulpice there were three or four thousand colored soldiers and nearly the same number of whites. The colored soldiers were all stevedores and engineers.

On two or three of the streets in front of the most conspicuous barracks facing the county roads concrete walls had been laid and decorated with large white concrete dice, two feet square.

Very severe rules were in vogue with regard to the colored troops, especially as to talking with white women. No colored soldier could talk even with his washerwoman without having a white non-commissioned officer present.

3/6/25

The colored soldiers were restricted to visiting only one village, but there they were not allowed to talk to any French women, and white military police enforced the rule.

Terrible tales about the colored soldiers had been spread among the French.

Meantime, before Mrs. Curtis arrived, a French girl, clerk in a store, had been attacked by a white soldier. Her screams brought a colored soldier to her rescue, and he took her home. The colored boy was immediately transferred from the camp. Up to the time when Mrs. Curtis left, the white soldier had not been punished.

There was one case of an attack on a French woman by a colored boy, the day before Mrs. Curtis left.

While the colored soldiers were working, white non-commissioned officers exclusively were employed. There were a few non-commissioned colored officers in the kitchens and in the barracks. White and colored soldiers worked the same hours and had the same foodm but they did not work together.

At another camp, Bassin, there were about 10,000 Negroes. The whole base was under General Scott of Texas.

General Scott had set aside a special house of prostitution for Negro soldiers, and disease was being widely spread among them. Mrs. Curtis went down to see the sick soldiers and while there had a conversation with one of the Y.M.C.A. secretaries, - Kidder, a son-in-law of General Armstrong, and former teacher at Hampton.

Mr. Kidder told Mrs. Curtis that he was then writing to Major Moton and that the colored secretaries who were over there represented the wrong type of Negro. Mr. Kidder and Mrs. Curtis had some plain words with each other.

Mr. Miller, a colored chaplain with the grade of First Lieutenant, together with Y.M.C.A. secretary Bullock and Chaplain Rogers, also a First Lieutenant, then went to put matters before General Scott.

General Scott invited them tocome right in, saying that he was from Texas, and used to ~~"niggers."~~ darkies Afterward a number of officials came and took the sworn statements of the chaplains and Mr. Bullock.

3/6/33

A few days later all the colored workers were ordered to Paris - Bullock, Peale, Wiley, James and Mrs. Curtis. This was late in June. They were told that they were out of favor with the Army, and were ordered home. No charges were stated. The official gave them no chance to make any reply, and the men started in and got their movement orders. Mrs. Curtis refused and went to the Embassy.

At St. Sulpice attempts were made to keep the white soldiers and the English soldiers from coming tothe Y.M.C.A., but the workers made no discrimination.

Mrs. Curtis immediately went to the American Embassy, where she was known, and told the secretary the conditions at St. Sulpice.

The secretary promised to get Mrs. Curtis an audience with Mr. Carter, tha head of the Y.M.C.A.

The next day Mr. Carter had an interview with Mrs. Curtis and exhibited about fifty pages of charges of all sorts against the five Y.M.C.A. workers.

Some days afterward the other men were sent for, but in no case were all the charges read to them.

They were finally interviewed by the Y.M.C.A. lawyer, who asked various questions, showing that he had got his information from Mr. Kidd.

After ten days, without any additional information as to the charges, they were all reassigned, Mrs. Curtis going to Haussimoht.

Mrs. Curtis was on her way to the front with the Fifteenth, New York, or the Eighth Illinois; but on account of the drive she could not go and stayed at Haussimont with ~~xxxx~~ white soldiers.

Afterward Mrs. Curtis went to St. Nazaire, from August to December. There were about 7,000 colored troops here, - enginners, stevedores, labor battalions, etc.

34-4-213

It was at St. Nazaire that Mrs. Curtis specialized in food and gained a reputation throughout the Army.

The white chaplain, formerly at. St. Sulpice, was also at St. Nazaire. He was a Southerner, and thought that colored people ought to be kept in their place. There were several other white chaplains who made it their duty to preach race ~~xxxx~~ inferiority and the seperation and segregation of the colored troops in France.

Special effort was made to make Mrs. Curtis discriminate against the white soldiers, but she refused to do so, saying that she had come to serve the Army.

They tried to make her discharge two white girls who were with their mother and brother helping her. The girls who were said to be too young to work with Mrs. Curtis went over to the white Y.M.C.A., two blocks away, and were employed without any hesitancy.

The treatment of the colored troops at Montoir, where there was a battalion of colored troops who took care of themselves, was such that they secretly avenged every affront to the colored troops. This led to better treatment.

Most of the non-commissioned officers at St. Nazaire were colored.

Some of the colored troops were sent over clad in the left-~~xxx~~over Spanish American War blue uniforms. No white soldiers were so clad. It made the colored soldiers a laughing stock. Afterward they were given over-alls.

3/6/19

When a convoy of soldiers arrived sick with the influenza, the colored men were at first treated well in the hospitals; later screens were put up to separate them from the whites. One man asked the nurse if there would be screens put up in the trenches. Finally, a high official came along and had the screens taken down.

Late in December Mrs. Curtis went to the leave area at Chambery. This was the first leave area which the colored soldiers had had. Before this very few colored soldiers had had leaves.

When Mrs. Curtis arrived at Chambery, the white troops had not left, and she found that a regular propaganda had been carried on to set the people against the colored troops.

There had been formed at Chambery a committee of white French women to work with the American white women who were the Y.M.C.A. workers. The woman who was at the head of the leave area for white troops, Miss Gertrude Davidson and a Miss Haynes, a graduate of Vassar or Smith College, called this committee together and told them that she thought it was her duty to let them know what the situation was in the United States, - that there was no social intercourse between the races and that a white woman who shook hands with a colored man would be disgraced and that white and colored women had no connection. She asked the white women to observe the same rule with the colored troops and colored workers when they came there.

Mlle. Montrillion, Professor in the local college, was vice-president of the committee. She rose and protested in this meeting, saying that she could not understand the way in which the United States Government treated some of its citizens, that she thought the word Christian ought to be taken out of the Association's name, that she had been among the first to welcome the white workers and that she would be among the first to welcome the black workers. She, therefore, left the meeting.

Through Mlle. Montrillion's efforts, six women teachers from the college volunteered their efforts and several ladies from the town.

Mrs. Curtis alone was replacing eleven white women. Mrs. Slade said that in the whole organization, Mrs. Curtis' work was the larger. Her work was used in the lectures.

3/6/34

Mrs. Haynes, however, told the servants not to speak of the black women as ladies; they were not ladies, - they were always servants.

One of the Y.M.C.A. secretaries who was afterward at the head of the leave area ~~and who became a good friend of Mrs. Curtis~~' went around among the town people and warned them against the colored ~~troops~~ troops. He told the shopmen that they would steal; he told the hotelkeeper that they were not used to good accommodations, and would attack the women, etc. The whole town was stirred up. The principal of the college and some of the chief officials had been given orders that Miss Haynes felt that the teachers ought not to associate with the colored soldiers. So the teachers came there at the risk of their jobs.

During the time that the boys were at Chambery, January 1 to June 1, there was not a single rape, house breaking or burglary ~~or theft~~. The White girls danced with them and the Mayor had a reception for them - I think that several cases of the boys taking things from each other -

The colored troops were invited to the funeral of D'Annunzio's friend, and furnished the music.

At Chambery the troops made various excursions to the Black Madonna of Savoy, Hannibal's Pass, to the birth place of Rousseau and through Aix-le-bain. The Prefect's wife had a reception for the Y.M.C.A. and the military authorities in the Palace of Savoy.

When Mrs. Curtis and Mrs. Hunton were leaving Chambery for the Pan-African Congress, they were in uniforms and occupied seats in the first compartment. An American Captain and Lieutenant were shown seats there, as the only seats left on the train. The Captain said, "Do you suppose I am going to ride here with these damn niggers?"

When Mrs. Hunton and Mrs. Curtis were in Paris there were two air raids in one night. At the second raid, they were late in getting down to the sub-cellar of the hotel. There were only two seats left, on part of a bench. Three American Red Cross workers who occupied the rest of the bench got up when these ladies sat down.

Time and time again Red Cross workers and Y.M.C.A. Workers and Army officials left the table.

After Chambery Mrs. Curtis went to Romaigne, where the dead soldiers were being buried.

There was danger of munity at Romaigne among the colored soldiers. They had been detailed to bury the dead, a task which the white soldiers had refused to do. The particular occasion for the mutiny arose from the ~~fxxking~~ filling in and camouflaging of a cemetery for the benefit of General Pershing, who was there on the thirtieth of May. Afterward the troops were ordered to open this and bury the dead.

The men were very unhappy and cocoa was being sold to them ~~fxr~~ at ~~txx~~ ten cents a cup. Mrs. Curtis arranged for cold drinks and made 3,000 doughnuts a day, which were given away.

There came near being mutiny at the camp afterward. The Knights of Columbus put up signs for white and colored soldiers on their two ~~txxxx~~ tents. The colored boys tore the signs down and dared anyone to put them back or to enter either tent. One of the officials ordered the military police to draw their guns and disperse the crowd. The colored boys went up the hill and said they had guns, too. At this critical juncture the Colonel ordered the white military police to ~~the~~ quarters and put camp under the charge of colored military police, and this stopped the trouble. After twenty-four hours the white military police were restored. Later two Negro boys were shot, but not killed. This led to another uproar, but it was finally quelled by the distribution of cigaretts and chocolates, etc.

3/6/35

At Romaigne ~~German~~ German prisoners nursed the sick colored boys. The Red Cross nurses confined their attentionto the white boys. Over the German prisoners were non-commissioned colored officers. There were 2,000 white troops there who, ~~drew~~ drove the trucks and worked in the coffin factory and as military police. There were 8,000 Negro troops.

The process of re-burying the dead was as follows: the troops would go over the ground through the Argonne Forest in battle formation until an American ~~cross~~ cross was found; when a grave was found, some soldiers would dig up the half-putried bodies and put the remains in a sheet, searching them for identification marks. Other would go perhaps one or two miles for a coffin and the bodies would be put in the coffins and another long journey taken ~~through~~to the truck and the boys would ride home on the truck. Reveille was sometimes at three and sometimes at five, and the men would stay out sometimes as long as twenty-four hours.

The stench of the returning workers was terrific. No disinfectants were used. There was ~~large~~ much sickness among the troops, but not many deaths.

(INSERT) At St. Sulpice ~~Nazaire~~ the mess hall was set aside for the colored boys to openly gamble in at night.

after she got to France, was furnished by the Y.M.C.A.

She landed at Bordeaux May 16,1918 and proceeded to Paris where there was a 10-days conference on the needs of the work. During May and June she was assigned to the canteen at St. Sulpice. Here there were between three and four thousand colored soldiers and about the same number of whites. The colored men were all stevedores and engineers. Mrs. Curtis was astonished to find that on two or three of the streets in front of the most conspicuous barracks of the Negro soldiers and facing the county roads, concrete walls had been laid and decorated with large white dice about 2ft. square. The rules with regard to the colored troops were very severe especially as to their talking with white women. A Negro could not even talk with his washerwoman without having a white non-commissioned officer present. They were restricted to camp and could visit regularly only one of the many villages round about and there the military police busied themselves in seeing that the Negroes did not talk to white women. Terrible tales about the Negroes had been spread among the French and the French women undoubtedly suffered from the soldiers. There was one case of attack on a French woman by a colored boy. There was another case where a French girl clerk in a store had been attacked by a white soldier and a colored soldier had rescued her and taken her home. The colored boy was immediately transferred from the camp and up to the time Mrs. Curtis left, the white soldier had not been punished.

All the non-commissioned officers except a few in the canteens and in the barracks were white. The white and colored men had the same hours of work and the same food but did not work together. The whole base was under General Scott of Texas and he had set aside a special house of prostitution for Negro soldiers. Disease was widespread. These conditions led the two colored chaplains, who were graded as first lieutenants, together with the Y.M.C.A. secretary, Bullock, and Mrs. Curtis to make complaint. Mrs. Curtis had a conversation with one of the white Y.M.C.A. secretaries, Mr. Kidder, son-in-law of the late General Armstrong and a former teacher at Hampton. Kidder complained of the attitude of the colored secretaries and said that he was writing Major Moton to say that the wrong type of Negro had been sent over as secretaries. He and Mrs. Curtis had some plain words.

32-3-21

Meantime the chaplains and secretary went to General Scott. General Scott invited them to come right in, saying that he was from Texas and was used to "darkies". Afterward a number of officials came in and took the sworn statements of the chaplains and Mr. Bullock A few days later all the colored workers were ordered to Paris late in June. This included Bullock, Peele, Wiley, James and Mrs. Curtis. There they were told briefly that they were out of favor with the Army and were ordered to go home. No charges were made, no chance was given by the Y.M.C.A. officials to make any reply, and the men started in to get their movement orders.

But Mrs. Curtis rebelled and went to the American Embassy. There her status as the widow of a former United States diplomat gave her entree and she told the Secretary of the Legation of conditions in St. Sulpice. Through him she obtained audience with Mr. Carter, head of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Carter exhibited about fifty pages of charges of all sorts against the five Y.M.C.A. workers. Afterward the men were sent for and some of these charges read, but in no case was all the charges read nor were copies given to the accused secretaries. Later the law officer of the Y.M.C.A. interviewed the secretaries and asked various questions the tenor of which showed it had gotten much of its information from Mr. Kidder. Ten days went by and then, without further information, all of the secretaries were reassigned. In this way the attempt to get rid of the colored "Y" workers in France collapsed and they were allowed to

Chapter 4

BLACK FRANCE

"Modern France is no longer bounded on the south by the Mediterranean but by the Congo . A. Guignard, in the 'Revue des deux Mondes,' June, 1919. Pages 849-79.

The population of darker France has been estimated at about 43 millions of people. This includes 9 million Arabs and mulattoes in northern Africa, 17 millions of blacks in French West Africa, and French Equatorial Africa, and in the territory taken from the Germans and now under the control of the French. It also includes three and one half millions of the people of Madagascar and Somaliland and 14 millions in Indo-China. To these must be added the population of the French West Indies and Guiana with about one half million people. Black France comprises then some 20 millions of people and colored France 23 millions more. Of these colonists the French government employed nearly a million colored men in the great war of whom 695 thousand were fighting men and 238 thousand laborers. Of these black Africa furnished 185,152 fighting men while the rest came from northern Africa, eastern Africa, the French West Indies and Indo-China. Alfred Guignard writes:

"Among the unexpected factors in our success, there stands forth, not yet as decisive, but still much more than merely useful and emerging with a very honorable place, the military aid brought us by our colonies, some 600,000 soldiers or workmen. It was a discovery. The dogma of the short war, which made the Great War so long, and also, let us confess it, our proverbial ignorance of those cold and hot acres, which have become today vast empires, caused us five years ago to qualify as "mere rambling" the very idea of counting on forces so far away. Necessity forced us to appeal to them, and among them, to the one most within reach and also one of the most effective -- the black troops.

Their place in the ranks of the poilus in the course of the war became increasingly larger. Without impediment, the plastic Soudanese peasant adapted himself to the conditions of the European struggle. In his rough hands the most improved weapons replaced the bow and arrow of his ancestors. He learned how to fix without fright upon his good natured, amused face the gas-mask, astonished only that the white demigods were such ferocious enemies. He lost neither his fatalisms, not his inherited bravery.

In 1918, as soon as the fine weather had brought back to our western front the Senegalese battalions, which had spent the winter under milder skies, they caused remark even more than ever. In Rheims in ashes, but unconquered, on the Marne, at Mont de Choisy, the German rage broke itself to pieces against their mettle and their indomitable tenacity. From spite the newspapers from beyond the Rhine tried to avenge the humiliating reverses of their Stoss-truppen by sarcasms and heavy pleasantries. On their side, our Africans did not fail to repeat the offence. At every minute of the last quarter of an hour, the press was full of their deeds of valor."

This is not the first war in which France has used colored troops. In the 17th century about two thirds of the militia in the French islands were colored men, and slaves formed part of nearly every military expedition making a distinguished record. In 1697, for instance, they took part in the assault on Carthogena and were liberated by the King in gratitude. Marshal Saxe incorporated in his famous body guard numbers of black West Indians and mounted them on white horses. The troop became so popular that its green uniform was handed down for a century to the French Dragoons. The marshal was so taken by the black troop that he submitted to the King a plan for a whole black army.

44-4-220

Victor Hugues, governor of Guadalupe, during the revolution enlisted two thousand colored troops with whom he preserved a colony which had been abandoned by Paris. But especially noted was the Royal African Regiment forming the Battalion of Pioneers and composed of black troops, thrown into France during the upheavals in the West Indies. They forming a corps d'elite in the Napoleonic army, fought the English at Gaeta, in Fra Diavolo in Calabria, the Cossacks in Russia, and all Europe in the great battle of Leipzig. Segur, in his Souvenirs d'un Aide-de-Camp de Napoleon, pays homage to the careless bravery of the blacks of the Royal African Regiment. Colonel Malenfant said in 1814:

"There are those who do not cease to say that Negroes are cowards! Let them ask 30,000 Franchmen who have seen the black regiment in the colonies and at the siege of Gaeta, the blacks of San Domingo and the French colonies. There is not an officer, not a soldier, who has not admired the excessive audacity of that regiment."

"At the siege of Gaeta they performed prodigies of valor, and the balls carried them away in rows; they were not more shaken than the most intrepid Frenchmen; they ran to the shells, and with turf in their hands, prevented them from exploding.

In 1808, a company of blacks, commanded by a white captain and a black subaltern, was sent as a mobile column into the mountains of Calabria. They were attacked by more than 1500 Calabrians. The company took a position and fought with a coolness worthy of their chief and of themselves. Having no cartridges, having lost 50 of their number, they were asked to surrender. They refused. "What! Surrender? What! The Royal African Regiment dishonor the French army? No," said the Negro lieutenant and all the others.

"But, we are surrounded!"

"Charge with bayonets, Captain, and we will pass through these brigands."

The captain had the weakness to yield, but the Negroes did not want to lay down their arms. Arrived at their destination, and believing themselves in safety, they were shot down with their captain.

This horrible action so enraged the Africans that we did not dare to send the regiment into Calabria, for fear it would kill every one."

41-4-281

Chapter 4

BLACK FRANCE

Modern France is no longer bounded on the south by the Mediterranean but by the Congo . A. Guignard, in the 'Revue des deux Mondes,' June, 1919. Pages 849-79.

The population of darker France has been estimated at about 43 millions of people. This includes 9 million Arabs and mulattoes in northern Africa, 17 millions of blacks in French West Africa, and French Equatorial Africa, and in the territory taken from the Germans and now under the control of the Franch. It also includes three and one half millions of the people of Madagascar and Somaliland and 14 millions in Indo-China. To these must be added the population of the French West Indies and Guiana with about one half million people. Black France comprises then some 20 millions of people and colored France 23 millions more. Of these colonists the Franch government employed nearly a million colored men in the great war of whom 695 thousand were fighting men and 238 thousand laborers. Of these black Africa furnished 185,152 fighting men while the rest came from northern Africa, eastern Africa, the French West Indies and Indo-China. Alfred Guignard writes:

"Among the unexpected factors in our success, there stands forth, not yet as decisive, but still much more than merely useful and emerging with a very honorable place, the military aid brought us by our colonies, some 600,000 soldiers or workmen. It was a discovery. The dogma of the short war, which made the Great War so long, and also, let us confess it, our proverbial ignorance of those cold and hot acres, which have become today vast empires, caused us five years ago to qualify as "mere rambling" the very idea of counting on forces so far away. Necessity forced us to appeal to them, and among them, to the one most within reach and also one of the most effective -- the black troops.

Their place in the ranks of the poilus in the course of the war became increasingly larger. Without impediment, the plastic Soudanese peasant adapted himself to the conditions of the European struggle. In his rough hands the most improved weapons replaced the bow and arrow of his ancestors. He learned how to fix without fright upon his good natured, amused face the gas-mask, astonished only that the white demigods were such ferocious enemies. He lost neither his fatalisms, not his inherited bravery.

In 1918, as soon as the fine weather had brought back to our western front the Senegalese battalions, which had spent the winter under milder skies, they caused remark even more than ever. In Rheims in ashes, but unconquered, on the Marne, at Mont de Choisy, the German rage broke itself to pieces against their mettle and their indomitable tenacity. From spite the newspapers from beyond the Rhine tried to avenge the humiliating reverses of their Stoss-truppen by sarcasms and heavy pleasantries. On their side, our Africans did not fail to pepeat the offence. At every minute of the last quarter of an hour, the press was full of their deeds of valor."

This is not the first war in which France has used colored troops. In the 17th century about two thirds of the militia in the French islands were colored men, and slaves formed part of nearly every military expedition making a distinguished record. In 1697, for instance, they took part in the assault on Carthogena and were liberated by the King in gratitude. Marshal Saxe incorporated in his famous body guard numbers of black West Indians and mounted them on white horses. The troop became so popular that its green uniform was handed down for a century to the French Dragoons. The marshal was so taken by the black troop that he submitted to the King a plan for a whole black army.

44-4-27a

Victor Hugues, governor of Guadalupe, during the revolution enlisted two thousand colored troops with whom he preserved a colony which had been abandoned by Paris. But especially noted was the Royal African Regiment forming the Battalion of Pioneers and composed of black troops, thrown into France during the upheavals in the West Indies. They forming a corps d'elite in the Napoleonic army, fought the English at Gaeta, in Fra Diavolo in Calabria, the Cossacks in Russia, and all Europe in the great battle of Leipzig. Segur, in his Souvenirs d'un Aide-de-Camp de Napoleon, pays homage to the careless bravery of the blacks of the Royal African Regiment. Colonel Malenfant said in 1814:

44-4-3

"There are those who do not cease to say that Negroes are cowards! Let them ask 30,000 Franchmen who have seen the black regiment in the colonies and at the siege of Gaeta, the blacks of San Domingo and the French colonies. There is not an officer, not a soldier, who has not admired the excessive audacity of that regiment."

"At the siege of Gaeta they performed prodigies of valor, and the balls carried them away in rows; they were not more shaken than the most intrepid Frenchmen; they ran to the shells, and with turf in their hands, prevented them from exploding.

In 1898, a company of blacks, commanded by a white captain and a black subaltern, was sent as a mobile column into the mountains of Calabria. They were attacked by more than 1500 Calabrians. The company took a position and fought with a coolness worthy of their chief and of themselves. Having no cartridges, having lost 50 of their number, they were asked to surrender. They refused. "What! Surrender? What! The Royal African Regiment dishonor the French army? No," said the Negro lieutenant and all the others.

"But, we are surrounded!"

"Charge with bayonets, Captain, and we will pass through these brigands."

The captain had the weakness to yield, but the Negroes did not want to lay down their arms. Arrived at their destination, and believing themselves in safety, they were shot down with their captain.

This horrible action so enraged the Africans that we did not dare to send the regiment into Calabria, for fear it would kill every one."

Chapter 4

BLACK FRANCE

"Modern France is no longer bounded on the south by the Mediterranean but by the Congo". A. Guignard, in the 'Revue des deux Mondes,' June, 1919. Pages 849 - 79.

34-4-154

The population of darker France has been estimated at about 43 millions of people. This includes 9 million Arabs and mulattoes in northern Africa, 17 millions of blacks in French West Africa, and French Equatorial Africa, and in the territory taken from the Germans and now under the control of the French. It also includes three and one half millions of the people of Madagascar and Somaliland and 14 millions in Indo-China. To these must be added the population of the French West Indies and Guiana with about one half million people. Black France comprises then some 20 millions of people and colored France 23 millions more. Of these colonists the French government employed nearly a million colored men in the great war of whom 695 thousand were fighting men and 238 thousand laborers. Of these black Africa furnished 185,152 fighting men while the rest came from northern Africa, eastern Africa, the French West Indies and Indo-China. Alfred Guignard writes:

"Among the unexpected factors in our success, there stands forth, not yet as decisive, but still much more than merely useful and emerging with a very honorable place, the military aid brought us by our colonies, some 600,000 soldiers or workmen. It was a discovery. The dogma of the short war, which made the Great War so long, and also, let us confess it, our proverbial ignorance of those cold and hot acres, which have become today vast empires, caused us five years ago to qualify as "mere rambling" the very idea of counting on forces so far away. Necessity forced us to appeal to them, and among them, to the one most within reach and also one of the most effective -- the black troops.

Their place in the ranks of the poilus in the course of the war became increasingly ~~longer~~ larger. Without impediment, the plastic Soudanese peasant adapted himself to the conditions of the European struggle. In his rough hands the most improved weapons replaced the bow and arrow of his ancestors. He learned how to fix without fright upon his good natured, amused face the gas-mask, astonished only that the white demi-gods were such ferocious enemies. He lost neither his fatalisms, nor his inherited bravery.

34-4-155

In 1918, as soon as the fine weather had brought back to our western front the Senegalese battalions, which had spent the winter under milder skies, they caused remark even more than ever. In Rheims in ashes, but unconquered, on the Marne, at Mont de Choisy, the German rage broke itself to pieces against their mettle and their indomitable tenacity. From spite the newspapers from beyond the Rhine tried to avenge the humiliating reverses of their Stosstruppen by sarcasms and heavy pleasantries. On their side, our Africans did not fail to repeat the offence. At every minute of the last quarter of an hour, the press was full of their deeds of valor."

This is not the first war in which France has used colored troops. In the 17th century about two thirds of the militia in the French islands were colored men, and slaves formed part of nearly every military expedition making a distinguished record. In 1697, for instance, they took part in the assault on [redacted], and were liberated by the King in gratitude.

Carthagena

Marshall Saxe incorporated in his famous body guard numbers of black West Indians and mounted them on white horses. The troop became so popular that its green uniform was handed down for a century to the French Dragoons. The marshall was so taken by the black troop that he submitted to the King a plan for a whole black army.

34-4-156

Victor Hugues, governor of Guadalupe, during the revolution enlisted two thousand colored troops with whom he preserved a colony which had been abandoned by Paris. But especially noted was the Royal African Regiment forming the Battalion of Pioneers and composed of black troops, thrown into France during the upheavals in the West Indies. They forming a Corps d'élite in the Napoleon army, fought the English at Gaeta, in Fra Diavolo in Calabria, the Cossacks in Russia, and all Europe in the great battle of Leipzig. Segur, in his Souvenirs d'un Aide-de-Camp de Napoleon, pays homage to the carless bravery of the blacks of the Royal African Regiment. Colonel Malenfant said in 1814:

"There are those who do not cease to say that Negroes are cowards! Let them ask 30,000 Frenchmen who have seen the black regiment in the Colonies and at the siege of Gaeta, the blacks of San Domingo and the French colonies. There is not an officer, not a soldier, who has not admired the excessive audacity of that regiment."

"At the siege of Gaeta they performed prodigies of valor, and the balls carried them away in rows; they were not more shaken that the most intrepid Frenchmen; they ran to the shells, and with turf in their hands, prevented them from exploding.

In 1808, a company of blacks, commanded by a white captain and a black subaltern, was sent as a mobile column into the mountains of Calabria. They were attacked by more than 1500 Calabians. The company took a position and fought with a coolness worthy of their chief and of themselves. Having no cartridges, having lost 50 of their number, they were asked to surrender. They refused. "What! Surrender? What! The Royal African Regiment dishonor the French army? No," said the Negro lieutenant and all the others.

34-4-152

"But, we are surrounded!"

"Charge with bayonets, Captain, and we will pass through these brigands."

The captain had the weakness to yield, but the Negroes did not want to lay down their arms. Arrived at their destination, and believing themselves in safety, they were shot down with their captain.

This horrible action so enraged the Africans that we did not dare to send the regiment into Calabria, for fear it would kill every one."

20)

~~One writes me:~~ ~~LA CROIX ROUGE~~ B-15

"Few people fully appreciate the heroic service rendered by the First Aid Men of the Medical Department. To the front, in the trenches, over the top, through the thickest of the fight they go with their comrades rendering the best of care to any who, overcome by fatigue or pierced by the bullet of the enemy, may fall on the field of battle. To an unexperienced man the most terrific fight of all against "Shrapnel," which flies from the monstrous shell sent forth by the Huns for the destruction of human lives, is at first a bit unnerving. When they are approaching one takes a long breath, for it seems almost the last because of that chilly feeling which you can not describe, but our men march on. Now an Austrian Eighty Eight sends forth shells which have the crash, ziz and double explosive for concusion which is really heart rendering. There is a "Bang" that will take the pep out of most any man, but still we are advancing under fire and fighting our way through the barrage. By and by a direct hit is made, some of our comrades have received a severe wound or some one is pierced by a Sniper's bullets. Then comes the cry along the line or throughout the trench, "Medical man to the front," and in responce to the call there is an answer from some one crouching near by or in crawling distance of his patient. ~~Who?, Why?, and What?. These words with only one thought, to preform his duty regardless of the task, how great it may be.~~

" Who?, The First Aid Man of the Medical Department.
" Why?, To save the life of his Comrade.
" What?, Nothing of hinself, for his very next move may end ~~resent~~ his own life.

"He takes the chance to reach the friend, pal or whoever he may be to preform his duty. Then he is busy administering first aid treatment or for what the case may require. Gased, Wounded, a Broken bone or any critical condition that exists in the horrows of War. We have faced horrible scenes and witness human slaughter of our comrades when called to emergency duty. After our first treatment our wounded are sent from the field to our Battalion Aid Station in the rear, or transported in some way to an ambulance en-route to the hospital. Back in the hospital they are given ~~dental~~ care and rest. Far behind the lines, away from the sound of huge guns, they are left, but their comrades who perhaps will never see them again continue their great drive in battle. "Old Doc" as the boys call us is now forgotten, but he is still in action and on the job. Some do not realize that first treatment rendered on the battle field, however small or great it may have been; has resulted in saving a comrade's leg, arm, or even his life. On the front or behind the lines Doc is there on all occasions performing his duty in behalf of his fellowmen. ~~The loss of many of these men in action would be most serious for the Army in regards to the protection and health of our soldiers.~~

3/11/58

" There have been occasions while in action in the "Argonne Forest", when only one medical man was stationed with (250) men and Officers of one company to render first aid treatment. Each Medical Detachment of the fighting units never exceeded (52) men in action distributed among our regiment of three thousand or more Line Men. This shortage accounts for the importance and the necessity of every man in our department preforming his duty when called upon. A small group with mighty deeds to preform under the administration of our Superior Officers, we are indeed a busy set. "Dangling" for a place is the expression used by our boys in seeking shelter or a resting place when possible. United as one firm and unmoveable structure, the Line Men and the Medical Men have stood like a stone wall against the penetrating forces of the "Terrific Huns." In pressing onward and performing the duty of good soldiers and strong honorable men of our race, we have demonstrated to the world our "Loyalty"."

ago to qualify as "mere rambling" the very idea of counting on forces so far away. Necessity forced us to appeal to them, and among them, to the one most within reach and also one of the most effective -- the black troops.

30-12c -19

Their place in the ranks of the poilus in the course of the war became increasingly ~~longer~~ larger. Without impediment, the plastic Soudanese peasant adapted himself to the conditions of the European struggle. In his rough hands the most improved weapons replaced the bow and arrow of his ancestors. He learned how to fix without fright upon his good natured, amused face the gas-mask, astonished only that the white demi-gods were such ferocious enemies. He lost neither his fatalism, nor his inherited bravery.

In 1918, as soon as the fine weather had brought back to our western front the Senegalese battalions, which had spent the winter under milder skies, they caused remark even more than ever. In Rheims in ashes, but unconquered, on the Marne, at Mont de Choisy, the German rage broke itself to pieces against their mettle and their indomitable tenacity. From spite the newspapers from beyond the Rhine tried to avenge the humiliating reverses of their Stosstruppen by sarcasms and heavy pleasantries. On their side, our Africans did not fail to repeat the offence. At every minute of the last quarter of an hour, the press was full of their deeds of valor."

(Grunwald)

A DOUBLE SACRIFICE (1914)

34-4-153

It was then in this stunted form - two "experimental" battalions - that the vast projects of a Black Army sustained the supreme test. What could such a tiny human wave expect in the ocean of multitudes facing it to test its valor? Sacrifice, a particular specialty of the black soldier. Such was its lot, in the autumn of 1914, in the icy fogs of Flanders.

Whenever there was in the course of the war hard work to do, there would be seen the bronze silhouettes of the Senegalese sharpshooters. The honor of having been employed as ~~sharp~~ shock troops resulted in their always being in the "good place". They attacked the Germans on the Somme between July and November 1916. The situation of the Germans was regarded as impregnable, but the colonials and the Senegalese took it. The assault was launched by the French and the dash of the blacks was admirable. The 58th Colonial regiment had 197 killed in three days, 674 wounded and 120 missing. And at the same time they took more than

34-4-152

~~January 3-10, 1919.~~ At the Grande Hotel, Negro Affairs

Previous to the time when the Moderne Hotel was placed on "off limits" colored officers coming to Division Headquarters and having to remain overnight found ~~that no accomodations were available at~~ the Moderne Hotel full and went to the Grand Hotel ~~to secure accomodations~~, they were promptly informed that it would not be possible to accomodate them, and the owner would not hesitate to tell them that they had been ordered not to permit colored officers to have accomodations. The following incident occurred immediately after the arrival of the Division at Mayenne which shows the method pursued:

President Hope of Morehouse College and Lieutenant McKaine of the 367th Infantry arrived in Mayenne and went to the Grand Hotel to secure rooms, not knowing of the order that had been issued relative to the separate hotels. When they saw the proprietor President Hope who looks like a mulatto man was informed that he could secure a room, but that it would not be possible to accomodate Lieutenant McKaine. When asked the reason for such action he informed Mr. Hope of the order.

On the night after the Moderne Hotel was placed "off limits" Lieutenant Shaw went to the Grand Hotel to see a staff officer, and in passing through the cafe saw white officers drinking champagne and cognac, which were forbidden drinks. He also observed several white officers in company with women who were known as prostitutes, which absolutely against orders

33

34-4-101

It was not , however ,an easy ~~task~~ task to convince France of the practworth of black soldiers. Guignard says: (1919)

Born at the epoch of Fachoda, the first idea of black troops links the names of General de Gallifet, then Minister of War, and generals -- at that time Captains -- Mangin, just back from the Marchand Mission, and Gourard, the vanquisher of Samory. Time passed. The idea had no result. But, in 1908, Lieutenant-Colonel Mangin, became chief of staff of West Africa, took it up again, foreseeing this time a general European war. His propositions, strongly recommended by his superiors, General Audeoud, commander-in-chief of the troops of French West Africa, and General Achinard, commanding the army corps of colonial troops, and warmly commended on two occasions to the war offices by General de Lacroix, met with no response, in spite of the favorable reports of the Governor-General of Algiers, of the Resident of Tunis, and of General Voyron, one of the most experienced officers in our colonial wars.

This silence determined Lieutenant Colonel Mangin, in September, 1900, to reach public opinion through the press. The effect was immediate. A veritable abundance of articles and of interviews, for the most part favorable, brought the question of black troops suddenly into full publicity. Prospective politicians gave resounding interviews on

(2)

Let us now leave for at last a for the last time the 92nd Division is together & functioning as a unit. We will then proceed to examine its

Within the Ninety-Second Division Headquarters there were several departments. Aside from the Chief of Staff and the General's Aide-De-Camp, the most important of these departments were the Adjutant General's Department, Inspector General's Department, Judge Advocate General's Department, Quarter Master's Department and the Medical Department. Each of these departments had its corps of assistants and the officers at the head of the various ~~Depts.~~ departments constituted the Division's Staff, and were frequently called in by the Commanding General of the Division for consultation on matters pertaining to their respective offices. There were seven colored officers, assistants in the several departments and two Army Field clerks at the time the armistice was signed. They were Captain Charles Ecton, who had charge of the Statistical Section, First Lieutenant Ewell W. Clark, assistant to the Personnel Adjutant, First Lieutenant Toliver T. Thompson Division Historian, First Lieutenant Charles A. Shaw, Message Center, First Lieutenant Clarence B. Curley Assistant to Division Quarter Master, Lieutenant Clarence A. Guillot, Interpreter, and Lieutenant Alexander E. Williams, Assistant to Division Adjutant. Army Field Clerk Isaac Braithwait was stenographer in the Adjutant General's Department and Thomas A. Andrews was in the office of the Division Quarter Master.

~~22~~

DIVISION JUDGE ADVOCATE'S OFFICE.

34-4-111

At the head of this Department was Major Adam E, Patterson, the only colored officer on the Division's General Staff. Major Patterson was commissioned Captain at Fort Des Moines, Iowa and assigned to command Company "A" of the 365th Infantry at Camp Grant, Illinois. He trained his Company for overseas service in the United States and in France behind the lines, and was not relieved of his command to take up the duties of trial Judge Advocate ~~for~~ of a General Court Martial ~~of~~ for the Division until August 14th, 1918, although he had been on duty with the Court since the middle of July. He was assigned as assistant Division Judge Advocate September 1st, but performed the duties of Division J.A.

22

~~office did not cease to function until the office was closed, [illegible] Sept. 1919.~~

22

~~in that capacity~~ until promoted to the rank of Major and assigned by the Judge Advocate General's Department as Judge Advocate for the Ninety Second Divison, October 5th, 1918.

Captain Austin T.Walden of Georgia, an officer of splendid legal ability, was ~~x~~ made Assistant Judge Advocate for the Division upon the promotion of Major Patterson, and from September 1st until the Division was preparing to embark for the United States prosecuted all important cases that arose within the divisional area.

Lieutenant Wesley H.Jamison of Topeka, Kansas, was on duty in the office of the Division Judge Advocate for a period of six weeks ~~prior~~ before the Division ~~sailing~~ sailed for America. His chief duties consisted in examining General Court Martial records of trials and writing legal opinions.

34-4-112

Major
Battalion Sergeant Benj. A.Greene of ~~Mt. Byron~~ Mound Bayou, Miss., ~~was~~ a graduate of Harvard Law School, was assigned to the Division J.A. Department in October, 1918, from the 317th Ammunition Train, upon the recommendation of Major Milton T.Dean and Lieutenant Alexander E.Williams, and his legal ability soon enabled him to become an expert in the examination of records of trials and in writing legal summaries. It was said by Major Patterson, head of this department, that the most difficult records were given to Battalion Sergeant Major Greene for review.

Regimental Sergeant Major Jerrymiah Southwell was an indispensable fixture in this department and had charge of the review of all Summary and Special Court Martial records, averaging approximately two hundred per month. Sergeant Southwell was also custodian of all the files and records of the Judge Advocate's office.

The Division Judge Advocate functioned as the legal adviser for his Division, rendered all legal opinions, detailed members for General Court Martial trials and ~~the~~ appointed trial Judge Advocates upon the order of the Commanding General. He examined all records of General Court Martial trials to determine their legal sufficiency to support the findings and sentences of the Court, ~~and~~ wrote a summary of the evidence, and made recommendations to the Commanding General as to what his actions in ~~the~~ each case should be. The Judge Advocate's Office did not cease to function until the officers were discharged at Camp Meade, ~~Md.~~ March 1st, 1919.

There was one thing that struck us all as we started on our first hike in France, and that was the excellent condition of the roads. That impression was deepened every where we went in France, for their roads are wonderful and evidence a care in building and maintenance unknown, generally, throughout America. This is due principally to two things, military and industrial necessity. Before the age of steam France was a great battle ground and some of the roads through it had their beginning in the days of those great road builders, the Romans, about the time of Julius Ceasar. Napoleon who realized the great necessity for quick mobility for armies fostered road building. Since the days of steam however the railroad lines connect only the most important villages, towns and cites, the net work of rail being not nearly so closley woven as in America where nearly every hamlet has some railroad line running through it. In order to facilitate constant communication therefore not only have the old roads been maintained but new roads have been built and with the same painstaking care as in early days. They played one of the great factors that helped an allied victory.

34-4-107

As our columns marched along this warm day, other things struck our notice forcibly, such as the intense cultivation of the fields; the use of allavailable land; the lack of great waste places as in our own country; the lack of huge disfiguring sign boards; the presence of parapets of sod which marked the boundries of the peasant's fields from those of his neighbor; the stone cottages roofed with red tile and with the universally present stack of manure at the front and a beautiful garden and flower plots in the read; the lack of young men in the towns behind the lines; the employment of women of all ages and old men in the fields and factories. These things set us to thinking and comparing them with conditions over home, diverting our minds somewhat from the anticipation of the part we were to play in the great conflict.

34-4-102

34-4-105

Efforts were then made at getting provisions for supper for the men. It was here that those who could speak French employed it to good advantage in procuring such delicacies as eggs, milk and jam until our reserve rations could be brought up. The peasants of the country side came flocking around and those who had articles to barter were finding quick slaes, the sign language and American silver being employed as the chief medium of exchange.

The division rested in this area for four days before moving to its training area around Bourbonne-les-Bains. While here the boys established friendly relationships with the people and picked up little French idioms and phrases which they usefully employed in contact with the native population in succeeding stations. We rested in this beautiful quiet region from the 26th day of June to the 11th day of August 1918 and during this time the officers and men came into contact with the people who formed the real back bone of the French nation, the bourgeoise and peasants of the prosperous class. However scattered throughout this department were the homes of various aristocrats of the old royalist school, and among them some of our officers were quartered or as the French say, billeted. In no case was there any difference in the treatment accorded our soldiery whether billeted with peasant or with aristocrat save in an ability by the latter to render comfort and material pleasure to a greater degree.

34-4-103

country such a law or custom would probably cause quite a bit of friction and at first there might be a tendency towards evasion, but in France the custom is an old one and as far as we were able to discern was accepted without complaint, and among the humbler people welcomed as a means of bringing additional revenue in to the family till. The rates are fixed by the French government and were one franc or about 18 cents in American money per diem, for an officer who was furnished a comfortable bed and linen and the room; about ten centimes or about 1 cent for enlisted men, who were simply furnished a clean loft or attick although often times hay as well. If there were more rooms than were required for officers, as was often the case, the non-commissioned officers usually occupied them, the government paying one half franc per day and the non-commissioned officers another half franc, if he desired linen.

34-4-106

34-4-104

29th September.

1. Co. G was relieved on the morning of the 29th and returned to the positions along the Vienne le Chateau and La Harazee road.

2. Two platoons of F Co. which withdrew on the evening of the 28th moved along tramway running south to 294.2--272.0 occupied trench Du Cimetiere near this point and held this position until relieved on the 29th about 11 o'clock.

3. Scout Platoon moved out of the Bn. sector on the morning of the 29th about 11.30 a. m. after that unit had been relieved by the 1st Bn. of this regiment.

4. Cos E & H had already been sent to the rear, the remainder of the day of the 29th and the day of the 30th was spent in reorganizing and equipping the several units.

30-5-18

THIS REPORT WAS COMPILED FROM PERSONAL OBSERVATIONS, AFTER CONSULTING THE DIFFERENT ORGANIZATION COMMANDERS AND CHECKING ON REPORTS RENDERED BY THEM.

(signed)Max A. Elser

Max A. Elser

Commanding Bn.

of the front covered and the necessity for advancing by small groups, the Battalion Commanders could only influence a small part of their command.

I personally conducted a reconnaissance to a point further to the front than had been reached by either battalion during the attack on the 27th of September. I had with me only my Regimental P.C. Personnel. We encountered Machine Gun fire but pressed into the German Lager position, capturing two machine guns and nine prisoners and broke up a number of rifles.

30-5-10

At that time I assumed, and reports indicated, that the battalion were also pressing to the front. This proved to be true only as to small detachments, and especially to parts of the 3rd Battalion which advanced the first day approximately as ordered.

The 2nd Battalion, supported by ½ Machine Gun Company, 368th Infantry, signally failed in its assigned mission- both on the 27th and the 28th of September. The C.O. of Company "E" states in his report (referring to the 27th September) "The day was spent in reorganizing the Companyand awaiting orders. Received orders on the evening of September 27th to detach one platoon to form connection between the right of Company "H" and a mixed post further to the right. The remainder of the company was in support. On account of heavy machine gun fire and gas shell fire we were unable to send out this platoon. Neither were the two companies able to advance." Special attention is invited tothe rest of his report (Hereto appended).

The C.O. Company "H" states in his report, "On September 27th we took up a position in the rear of Zeppelin trenches. On September 28th we advanced up railroad track to cemetery 272.09-293.06. We gained contact with the enemy at this point, but was held up by a nest of machine guns. Was unable to get in connection with company on my right."

On the 27th of September the C.O. 2nd Battalion ordered Companies

. . . . . .

Braun

A careful reading of the unsatisfactory and incomplete reports of Company Commanders will show how the companies and battalions utterly failed to carry them out, and, as I firmly, believe, without justification, and due almost entirely to the inefficiency and cowardice of the company officers who repeatedly withdrew their companies and platoons, without orders and without suffering losses which could possibly justify such action.

4. The character of the terrain and the German defense system made the advance depand entirely on the aggressiveness and leadership of the company and platoon commanders.

In this they failed and whatever advance they made was usually due to the presence and energy of the battalion commanders. Owing to the extent

30-5-9

"F" and "G" in first line and Companies "E" and "H" in support. On the 28th of September he ordered Companies "E", "F", and "H" in front line and Company "G" in support.

Attention is invited to the fact that I personally with a small party of my P.C. personnel on the late afternoon of the 27th September entered this same zone over which the 2nd Battalion was supposed to have advanced and captured two machine guns and nine prisoners in Zeppelin trench and Boche Lager position to the North of the point referred to above.

30-5-11

My party advanced north along the light railway just to the east of the Fribourg Boyau, and thoroughly explored the Lager position near railway intersection (numbered 3629 on attached map). Had my orders been carried out this position would have been in rear of the 2nd Bn. prior to the time of my reconnaissance.

The C.O. Company "G" states (referring to the 27th September) "The Company moved back about 400 yards to position where it remained all day." (And referring to 28th September) "After which the company was ordered to take up position in front of Bn. P.C. as reserve to Company "H" at the line of trenches at Bois de Finland" (presumably Finlande Trench). "At 3 p.m. the company was called up to support Company "H"?. The company marched in rear of Company "A"? on the railroad and remained there until ordered to remove by the Commanding Officer and take up line of resistance on railroad."

From Elser. At 293.60-271.80; Sept.27;16.04 H; No.4: To Brown.

My advanced troops are located in Damas Trench line running easterly and westerly. Company "G" arrived 15:50 H. Placed in line at left of Company "F".

Elser.

From C.O.2nd Bn.; At Damas Trench; 293.60-271.80; Sept. 27; 17:50 H; No 6. To Brown.

Am moving forward to next trench.

Elser.

From C.O. Co. "G"; At Bois Long; 271.25-292.25; Sept.27; 14:30 H; To C.O.2nd Bn.

We are checked by enemy M.Gs. 200 meters north of Bois Long via B-9 trail. M.Gs, are firing at every movement our soldiers make in cutting their wire. They have a good position. Two of my platoons are trying to go through at the above place now, but I don't think they will make much headway because I am up close and can hear the Machine Guns firing.

From C.O. 2nd Bn.; Sept. 28; 5:50; To Brown.

At 5:10 rifle fire, possibly forty rifles opened on us directly opposite our P.C. 150 meters- also vidious M.G. fire. We are trying to get to trenches to our left.

30-5-13

28th September

1. On the morning of the 28th Co. G was resupplied with rations and water and placed temporarily in reserve. About 14.30 o'clock 2 platoons were sent forward to support Co. H near 294.6--272.5; the remaining 2 platoons were sent forward later to the same point and remained in position

30-5-14

9. 30-5-15

From C.O. 368th Infantry. At 292.65-271.65. Sept. 28, 7.20 H. No. 31. To Major Elser.

(Delivered personally).

Major Elser will send two patrols at once to reconnoiter the Ravine De Mitrailleuses - Ravin De Bel Abri - Tr de Damas -along the general line of Tr de Suede - Tr de Kronprinz. Reconnaissance will be continued until contact with the 308th on our right is secured and information gained regarding their leading units on our right. Patrols will be commanded by officers.

By order of Colonel Brown:

James T. Burns,

O&I. Officer.

30-5-16

From J.B.W.N.; At Bn. P.C.; Sept. 28; to Mr. Anderson.

Send two platoons to support "H" Company at once. Have them come here at once.

Williams.

Two platoons have reported by V.B.C.P. at 3:00. Please let me know if you want other two and myself.

Anderson. 30-5-17

The next morning (27th)

at 9:25 Smith through Goodloe reported that the 1st Battalion of the 308th had halted the afternoon before at 5:30 because it met resistence. It began to move forward at 6:00 o'clock. The wounded were still passing through. 30-5-7

Told W. E. B. Du Bois at Le Mans, France

368

Went to Argonne Sept. 24. Drive started morning of 26th. Were brigaded with French front for this work. (other regiments 365, 366 and 367 were in rear clearing up)

Mission was "combat liaison"

White 37th

White 77th Amer.

French Div.

368

2nd battalion went first

2bn
3 bn } entered
1 bn } line

1st battalion at bridge in column of fours. Major J. N. Merrill in command. 26th to 29th in support of regiment and were in French front line trenches

43

13

Sept. 23) The 1st Battalion a portion of the Supply Company detachment of the Field Signal Battalion, and pickups arrived at CIVRY ARGONNE and marched to LA NEUVXILIE and then later in the day to BOURRONVILLE. The entire regiment marched from BOURRONVILLE at 20 H 30 for CAMP SOUNAIT.

30-5-46

The Regiment arrived at CAMP SOUNAIT at 9.00 H and went into billets. The regiment was reported to 1st D. C. P. French in accordance with instructions contained in letter from the 1st Army Corps Headquarters to the Commanding General, 92nd Division, dated 23rd September, 1918, and was assigned to the Brigade commanded by Colonel Durand. At 21.00 H the regiment marched from CAMP SOUNAIT to the front assigned to it on the RIGHT BANK OF THE AISNE, NORTH of VIENNE-le-CHATEAU and La HARAIRE, and on the following day took the following positions:

30-5-46

P. C. of the Regiment-LaCAPINIERE
2nd Battalion P. C. - La PONNTIERE
3rd Battalion P. C. - La PLACARDEKKE
1st Battalion P. C. - La HAUTE BATIS

From C. O. Co. "I" 368th Inf.; At De La Tour; 26th Sept.; 4130 p.m.; No.12; By Foot Messenger to C.O. 3rd Bn.

I have never lost contact with Companies "E" and "H". I established a line of relay posts at 1:00 p.m. "H" Company was so far ahead of my front line it was reported to me at 4:15 that Companies "H" and "E" were in the enemy's second line trench surrounding a M. G. Estimated distance from our front line- about 1 mile North. I have no map of this position. Therefore I ..... ~~(Balance of message is missing)~~

30-5-8

Co. E.

The 29th and 30th of September were occupied in reorganizing the company, giving them equipment, clothes, etc.

(Signed) Richard Simmons,

Captain 368th Infantry.

4/26/19

6. I realize fully your feeling of shame that an organization led by you should have failed either in courage or leadership. Frankly I do not wish to lose your services with the 184th Brigade nor do I wish you to take a step as serious as the one you contemplate without giving you an opportunity for further reflection. I, therefore, return your application herewith and desire that you reconsider the whole matter in the light of what I have written above.

2/26/133

W. H. Hay

WHH/el

Brigader General, U.S.A.,

Commanding.

5th Ind.

Hq. 184th Brigade, 92nd Division, A.P.O., 766, October 10, 1918. - To Commanding General, 92nd Division.

1. Forwarded, inviting attention to the within letter and preceding it against all its enemies whomsoever they may be. It is not only the right but also the duty of the negro to fight for our common country.

Of the 5,000,000 men to be raised at least one tenth or 500,000 should be negroes. What is to be done with this large number of men? Is the nation to be deprived of such a large force just because they are negroes; or, on the other hand, are they to escape the burden imposed upon them by the Constitution when they were granted full citizenship? There is only one answer to this question and it is no. Consideration of National Policy as well as of military necessity dictated the decision of the President when he ordered that in the application of the draft all negroes should be treated the same in every respect as white men were to be treated; and the assignment of white officers in the grades of general, field and staff officers was inevitable because there were no colored officers capable of filling those places.

2/27/134

Ch. Bmnt. " The regiment deserves commendation for its successful performance of the move from the St. Die Sector, constant night marches with half its allowance of animals, short rations for men and animals due to failure of the 92nd Division to supply us as directed.

" It deserves commendation for successfully performing its original mission of liaison between the 38th (French) Corps and the 77th Division(U. S.).

" It deserves commendation on a whole for successfully advancing as rapidly as did the French units on our left, in spite of the many difficulties encountered. " +

2/26/136

(4)

* official report

13

I am far from satisfied with the actions of many individual officers and men and the lack of the aggressive spirit and the will to advance and conquer displayed by the great majority of ~~the~~ officers and men.

The resultant inertia was too great for the 3rd Battalion Commanders and the Regimental Commander alone to overcome. I have taken the necessary disciplinary measures to rid the service of the worse cases but without the leadership of efficient officers, who are not in constant fear for their own personal safety, it is worse than useless to expect aggressive, determined work on the part of the enlisted men.

I have asked for white officers because I knew that sufficient efficient colored officers were not available. There are a number of efficient colored officers and I have given commendation where deserved, but I have also condemned where it seemed to be necessary.

2/26/137

The black army was the creation of General Mangin. His idea was first to create a force capable of meeting colonial needs so as to relieve French soldiers of distant expeditions. Secondly, in the event of a European War, to give France troops on which she could rely and who would offset her decreasing birth rate. Since Mangin was not listened to, only 35,000 Senegalese were enlisted in 1914 and many of these were of inferior quality and physique. Then the government began to work in feverish haste, but the results were poor. The chiefs sent the worst material, and indeed, all tribes were not equally suited for war. The first season, troops were decimated on the Marne and the Yser while the new drafts showed up badly. A camp for their training was established at Fréjus. The blacks were slow to understand but diligent, willing, but hard to teach, awkward but persistent. But they were not afflicted with nerves and had a fine swing to their walk which made them imposing soldiers. At the attack on Berri-au-Bac, October 15, 1914, the troops engaged were badly recruited and poorly instructed. But they made a brave attack.

34-4-69

The defense at Dixmude was made in November. The Colonel of the regiment, Merienne-Lucas, reports as follows:

(Séché, Page 100)

34-4-120

2/26/152

At the same meeting General Sherburne roused enthusiasm by telling of the success of the Negro artillery which he had commanded. His command not only met all the exacting demands made upon it, but was highly praised by military authorities. The most spontaneous praise came from the intelligence officer of the German division opposite who came over at the close of hostilities. He refusedto believe that the artillery which had been opposed to him had not been French artillery.

2/26/158

From Norris; At P.C.;Sept. 26,1918; 2:05 H; No.6; Runner; To Brown.

Considerable gas reported from support line of first position on our right flank. No mention of casualties. Nothing else to report.

Norris

2/26/156

I Sept 26

On Sept. 26 the company moved forward and occupied position occupied by Co. "H". Three platoons occupied support position and one platoon maintained liaison with Cos. "E" and "H" as they moved forward.

2/26/157

L Sunday 27

On Sept. 27th 2 officers and 40 men were ordered to relieve Company "F", 368th Infantry, on outpost duty 1 kilometer North of the Vienne-le-Chateau - La Harazee Road; this detachmeht was relieved at 9:00 a.m.; in accordance with orders, the company began, at 11:00 a.m. to follow Co. "I", 368th Inf., at Battalion Reserve at 800 meters North on right of Vienne-le-Chateau - Binarville Road. At 7:00 p.m. we halted 400 meters south of the Moreau Ravine, where we remained until 5:30 p.m. Sept. 28.

U. S. Army Field Message

From: Norris

At: P. C. entrance trench Stutt Gart

Date: 27 Sept./18 Hour 1:30 No: 37 How Sent: Runner

To: C. O. Co. "M"

Dommence advance at once

Norris

2/7/19

2/26/160

From Capt. Smith; C.O. Liaison Combat; September 26;16:30 H; Runner; To C.O. 2nd Bn.,268th.

1st Battalion of 308th Inf. has advanced about 3 miles (attacking line). 1 prisoner brought in showing insignia on collar of 122 Inf. at 16:30 H. All prisoners have been very old men poorly clothed. (Relayed by Southern). 17:05 H. Goodloe.

2/26/161

From Capt. Smith.; C.O. Liaison Combat; 9:26 H; Runner; To C. O. 2nd Bn. 368th.

1st Bn. 308th halted, 17:30 H. Met resistance. Reported moving forward at 18:00 H. Wounded from front line still passing as going to Evacuation Station.

Goodloe.

2/26/162

FromnCaptain Smith; September 26,1918;9:00 H; At C. O. Liaison Combat; To C.O. 2nd Bn., 368.

In touch with 1st Bn. of 308, through C. O. 2nd Bn., 308. 1st Bn. 308 has advanced about 3 kilometers. Prisoners coming in. 2 Officers and 4 soldiers have passed us. Information from prisoners is that our artillery fire is ruinous, Insignia on collars of prisoners was "122"

Goodloe.

. . . . . .

25
2726/152 I

Operations Report, "I" Company, 368th Inf., for period Sept. 26 - 30, inc.

On September 25, left support position at Placardelle, at 9:00 p.m. and took position in support of Company "H" 368th Infantry, along the Vienne-le-Chateau - La Harazee Road, North of Biesme River.

16.

2726/164 25 L

Operations Report of "L" Company, 368th Infantry, for period Sept. 25-30, 1918, inc.

Sept. 25 the company, as Battallion reserve, moved into position at crest of hill 1 kilometer East of Vienne-le-Chateau.

ing he reported that no enemy was observed. The advance was resumed but when Company E and that part of Company H which had been overtaken were moving up a narrow gauge railway they were fired upon by snipers and scattered burst of machine gun fire. Another patrol under the leadership of Lieutenant Smith was sent out but the terrain at this point was in favor of the enemy, there being a large stretch of dense wood almost impenetrable in which they were located. The left assault platoon of Company H swung off to the left and in going up a small draw between two wooded hills encountered a small force of the enemy and immediately opened fire killing two and wounding another before they escaped. Two platoons of the 368th Infantry's Machine Gun Company arrived at this time and two other patrols were organized and sent out, one under Lieutenant Smith and the other under Second Lieutenant Vincent B. Thomas. The latter patrol encountered the enemy in large forde near a dugout, opened fire and soon the encounter took on the appearance of a real engagement. Here the enemy was firing on the patrol from the front and the flank with machine guns which were concealed in the dense wood. Company E suffered no casualties and Company H only three because the enemy's fire was directed over the heads of the troops. It appeared that we had been caught in a trap and since no support was available further advance was impossible.

. When the broad side opened up Elser wrung his hands. "What shall I do" he cried and without waiting to notify the rest of the battalion he immediately withdrew his part of the battalion to the rear in single file about dark.

Captain Dabney and Lieutenant Powell of the Machine Gun Company led the rest of the men out about 10 P.M. of the 26th after silencing the enemy fire.

. During our retirement an enemy air plane flying directly above us dropped hand grenades in our midst wounding eight members of Company E.

From M.A.Elser; At 2nd Bn. P.C.; Sept. 26;5:05 H; No.6;Foot Messenger; To Brown.

The mixed post on my left reports all in position. A French Officer in command. Company "G" reports no enemy movement. "F" and "H" - N.T.R., except a few gas shells. It is possible to detect slight gas here occasionally. The scouts of the advance patrol are cutting the passage now. Grenades, etc,, have arrived, not all unloaded. If the trombloms are there have not found them yet.

M.A.E.

From M.A.E.; Sept.26; 5:10 H;Runner from 308;3rd Battalion support; To Brown.

I am at point 272.80-294.45 with Companies "H" and "E" and 4 machine guns. we killed two Boche here and captured one wounded and their machine gun and ammunition. Am reconnoitering German trenches here. Will try to establish liaison with Companies "F" and "G" also the first line troops of the 308th on my right.

2/24/18.

From M.A.E.; Sept. 26th; 6:35 H; Foot Messenger: To Brown.

"H" Company (right) reports platoons are working way into the Boche wire; no Boche.

M.A.E.

From M.A.E.; Sept. 26th; 6:45Hour; Foot Messenger; To Brown.

Please arrange to have my two water carts go for water. It is rumored that source has been gassed. N.T.R.

M.A.E

From M.A.E.; Sept. 26; 6:55 H; Foot Messenger; To Brown.

N.T.R.

M.A.E.

. . . . . .

From C.P. 368th Inf.; At Sapiniere; Sept. 26;' H 35; Phone and messenger; To C.O. Brigade.

Patrols of Center Co. leading Battalion working of enemy wire at 7:35. Still going forward at 8:05. No Boche encountered. Mixed post on right reports supporting Bn. of regt. on our right is moving forward.

Brown.

. . . . . .

From C.O. 368th Inf.; At Sapiniere; Sept. 26; 9 H 30; No. 22; Phone and Messenger; To C.O. Brigade.

2/26/169

P.C. leading Bn. moved forward of our wire. 1st platoon "F" Co. across enemy front line.

Brown.

. . . . . .

From C.O. 368th Inf.; At Sapiniere; Sept. 26; 10 H 35; No. 24; Phone

2/26/170

Sept. 27th - Four of the combat wagons returned from the La Renarde Farms with - 20,000 rounds of chauchat ammunition and 2,000 V.B. grenades. The Regimental Munitions Officer along with a French guide made a visit to the Farms to locate pryotechnics that were claimed to-be there but was unable to find any at that time after a through search with the guide. The following issue was made that date:- 200 rounds of Stokes Mortar Shells to the Stokes Mortar Platoon. 500 of Cal. 45 to the Signal Platoon.

2/26/171

From C.O. 368th Inf.; At P.C.; Sept. 28; 14:30; No.38; To Major Elser. Give bearer present position of your cmmpanies by coordinates as well as trench and geographical names. Be as definite as possible. This information isqvery necessary and important.

Brown.

2/26/172

to the Major for reenforcements.at 6 A.M. on the 28th having waited and sent a message Jones all night. He received none. He waited under Snipers fire until 3 P.M. without food or water and then went over the top again and went forward about 500 meters. He met heavy machine gun and rifle fire from the enemy and fell back a few yards to the trenches. He fell back a few yards to the trenches but in the rain and disorder the men began to drift away. All this time the Major stayed back at the post of command and on the 28 was relieved of the command of the battalion and entered the hospital for shell shock.

From C.O. 2nd Bn. 368th Inf.; At P.C. 293.60-271.80;27th Sept.; No. 7 Runner; 17:20 H; To C.O. 3rd Bn.

Am moving forward.

Elser. (per J.B.W.).

2/24/173

From Elser. At 293.60-271.80; Sept.27;16.04 H; No.4: To Brown.

My advanced troops are located in Damas Trench line running easterly and westerly. Company "G" arrived 15:50 H. Placed in line at left of Company "E".

Elser.

From C.O.2nd Bn.; At Damas Trench; 293.60-271.80; Sept. 27; 17:50 H; No 6. To Brown.

Am moving forward to next trench.

Elser.

2/24/174

Co. E

The day was spent in reorganizing the company and awaiting orders. Received orders on the evening of Sept. 27th to detach one platoon to form a connection between the right of Company "H" and a mixed post further to the right. The remainder of the company was in support. On account of heavy machine gun and gas shell fire we were unable to send out this platoon. Neither were the two companies able to advance. This situation was made known to the Battalion Commander and orders were received to enter the front line trenches of the Germans at 5:00 a.m. the morning of the 28th.

Captain R. Simmons

2/26/175

From M.A.E.; Sept.26; 10.05 H; To Brown.

My first line is against the Boche wire. I am now at my original P.C.

M.A.E.

2/26/176

September 26th; Mr. Brown.

Have caught up with "H" Company. Wire is very dense. Will maintain liaison as well as I can. Elser. 12.1 9H.

2/26/177

From Co. M; At Boyau 11- Boyau Transversal; 26th Sept.;1:30 p.m.; No.1; To C.O. 3rd Bn.

Company "G" and French on left not progressing. "G" Company and 1 platoon M.G. Company in front line trenches. 3 platoons Co. M in boyau 11 and boyau transversal. (relayed by Southern:. R.A.Williams, Captain.

2/26/178

Sept. 26; 16:20 H; C.O. Brown.

I am trying to get a definite location of M.G. encountered by "F" Company.

L.O. 2nd Bn.

2/26/179

Mr. Brown:

"K" is in third line trenches in "F" sector with two wounded; no prisoners. This is what information was obtained verbally from the C. O. of "K". Other wise situation the same.

Sept. 26;15:00 H. L.O. 2nd Bn.

line. I placed these two companies in the Bosche trenches near 294.3--272.1. Patrols sent to the front and flanks reported no sight of the enemy and no contact with Infantry Regiment 308th on the right.

4. The advance from this point started about 13.15 o'clock, following the general route of the tramway running north from near this point. The advance was covered by patrols and no enemy was met with until a position near 294.4--272.9 was reached; here the leading patrol killed 3 of the enemy and captured 1, also took a light machine gun. The companies halted here and there was active patrolling and reconnoitering On request of our avion (by signal) our position was indicated to him. One of our patrols picked up near the rear of Co. "E", (which was in support,) 2 privates of the 308th Infantry who had gotten lost in the woods. A message had been sent to the Commanding Officer of the 368th Infantry when the advance began about 13.15 o'clock. The wounded prisoner captured was sent back with a special detail accompanied by the 2 privates from the 308th Infantry with a message to their battalion commander of the 308th Infantry on my right, requesting his location by coordinates and informing him of my location by coordinates. I also requested him to inform the special detail of a route to return to Vienne le Chateau with the prisoner. No reply was received from this message to the 308th Infantry. Later in our advance one of our patrols was fired on by an enemy machine gun, killing one man and creating considerable confusion in addition. A Boche plane flew very low over our position and dropped 2 or 3 bombs about this time but no one was injured.

To C.O. Brigade.

Front Bn. is against Boche wire and working their way through. Support Bn. now moving in eschelon formation into original French front line position. With no tools nor artillery preparation passage of enemy's wire very difficult.

Brown.

. . . . . .

From C.O. 368th Inf.; At Sapiniere; Sept. 26; 11 H 42; No. 25; Runner and Phone; To C.O. Brigade.-

One platoon center Co. leading Bn. reached tramway at point 293.10-271.35 when they were fired on by M.Gs. in trench de Dumas at point 293.10-271.55 at about 11:00 H. Later enemy artillery fired on them. At 11 H 30 they retired to original front line trenches of center company. One killed and four wounded. Other patrols working in wire and in enemy trenches.

Brown.

. . . . . .

From C.O. 368 Inf.;At Sapiniere;Sept.26;17 H 50;No.27;Phone and Messenger;To C.O. Brigade-

Left units leading Bn. held up by M.G. fire from approximately 93.10-71.15. They are now in position in our front line trenches. Have requested destruction of these positions by artillery tonight.

Brown, Colonel.

About 12.30 p.m. message was received from the Commanding Officer directing the platoon commander with his unit to report to the Bn. P. C. which was at this time near 294.05--271.95, this point was reached about 2.30 p.m. From this position the platoon moved forward past the Finlande trench to the Karl trench about 294.20--272.5. It was just about dark at this time and since liaisons with Cos. G & F could not be established by order of the Commanding Officer, they returned by way of Boy de Kehl to the tramway and from thence to the Damas trench where they remained during the night.

2/26/182

5. Co. H. with two platoons in trench Suede sent forward another platoon to trench Tringle near 294.4--272.3. The two platoons in trench Suede moved forward to trench Courland near 294.4--272.1 at 12 noon. There was some artillery and machine gun fire on this position; no liaison could be established with units on the right or left. Co. E was in support and this position was occupied until 3 o'clock the morning of the 28th when both companies E and H moved to the Damas trench in a position near 293.1--272.6, being resupplied here with rations andwater.

6. E Co. was in a position in support of H near 294.5--272.1, reaching this position about 12 o'clock. There was some artillery fire and heavy machine gun fire, one platoon of E Co. working east through the Courland trench endeavored to get liaison with the 308th Infantry to the right but without success. This Co. remained in support of H Co. until about 3 o'clock the morning of the 28th when it moved to a position in the Damas trench near 293.1--271.6, here they too, were resupplied with rations and water.

3rd (Morris) Battalion, in accordance with plan, supported the advance of the 2nd Battalion and occupied the trench system vacated by the latter battalion when it moved forward at H hour, which position it continued to hold after the 2nd Battalion had passed through it on its withdrawal. 1st (Merrel) Battalion (Divisional Reserve) moved forward late in the day from HAUTE BATIS to P. C. CAPINERE.

2/76/187

From C.O. 368th Infantry. At 292.65-271.65. Sept. 28, 7.20 H. No. 31.
To Major Elser.
(Delivered personally).

Major Elser will send two patrols at once to reconnoiter the Ravine De Mitrailleuses - Ravin De Bel Abri - Tr de Damas -along the general line of Tr de Suede - Tr de Kronprinz. Reconnaissance will be continued until contact with the 308th on our right is secured and information gained regarding their leading units on our right. Patrols will be commanded by officers.

2/76/184

By order of Colonel Brown:

James T. Burns,

O&I. Officer.

From M.A.E.; Sept. 26;7:25 H; No. 1; Foot Messenger; To Capt. Burns.

Re Water carts. All I want is for some officer there at headquarters to arrange a plan to obtain water. After the carts are filled they will report here to me. I will tell them what to do. But to get them filled promptly is important.

M.A.E.

From M.A.E.; September 26,1918; 7:50 H; Foot Messenger: To Brown

Am getting ready to move my P. C. forward. Have authorized my first line companies to do the same. I am sending them 10 messages an hour on liaison. N.T.R.

M.A.E

From M.A.E.;Sept. 26;8:05 H; Foot Messenger; To Brown.

"F" Company reports two patrols working in Boche wire at 7:35. Still going. No Boche. M.A.E

From C.O. 2nd Bn.; At 2nd Bn. P.C.;26th Sept.;31 H; Runner; To C.O.368th Inf

Yes we have sent out strong patrols. Location of P.C. given French Captain who will inform you.

M.A.E.

19.20

2/24/18

At P.C. 2nd Bn.; To C.O. 2nd Bn.

We are up in the trenches and it is quite crowded there if shelling should occur.

Thomas.

Co. H.

On September 27 we took up position in rear of Zeppelin trenches, and on September 28 advanced up railroad track to cemetery at 272.09-293.06. We gained contact with the enemy at this point but were held up by a nest of M.Gs. Was unable to get in connection with company on my right. It was while at this point that I received orders from the C.O. 368th Inf. that I had been relieved of command of the company.

2/24/18

(Signed) Bob Thomas,
Captain 368th Infantry.

Co. F

On the 27th of September the company formed in attack in Ravin de Bel Abri with Company "G" on my right. We advanced about three kilometers when our advance was stopped by M.G. nests. We engaged the enemy in fire fight for about one hour. During the fighting liaison communication with "G" Company was lost. We held our position until the next morning (Sept. 28) at 9:00 o'clock.

2/24/18

Capt. J N James

3. On the morning of the 27th F Co. took the position in the Finlande trench between Boy de Kehl and Boy von Mudre. From this position advanced along the general line of Boy de Mudre to the Tirpitz trench reconnoitering the ravine of the Charlottenta; advancing later to a position directly in front of the Falkenhayn trench and astride Boy de Manioc. This position was occupied until about 21 o'clock being subjected to stick bombs, Stokes mortar and machine gun fire during the entire period. About 22 o'clock the company withdrew to the Zeppelin trench near the point where it meets Boy de Manioc and remained in this position until about 5 a. m.

4. The Scout Platoon moved forward with Co. G on the morning of the 27th to a position just south of trench de Euphrate about 9 a. m.

2/26/188

Next

morning 27th, Elser, after commending the Machine Gun Company and without criticising the battalion in any way, moved out at 11 o'clock and sent two companies over the top about 4 P.M., and without providing for liaison with the rest of the battalion.

2/26/189

27th September.

1. Co. "G" moved forward the morning of the 27th, took position just south of trench De Euphrate being held up at 292.25--27.0 by machine gun. Connection with the French on the left was established at this point about 9.00 a.m. The Co. being to the left of its correct position withdrew under instructions by way of the Ravin de Mitrailleuses, took a position in trench de Finlande at point 293.75--272.1 about 4 p.m. At 4.30 p.m Cos. F.& G began an advance to the Fripitz trench, G Co. was on the right. This trench was reached near 294.0--272.7, liaison with Bn. P. C. and with Co. F could not be maintained. During the night there was heavy artillery and machine gun firing on this position and at 4 a.m. Co. G withdrew to the Finlande trench but was unable to get liaison with Co. F.

2/26/190

Co G

On Sept. 28, the company was ordered to take up position in front of Battalion P.C. as reserves to Company "H" at the line of trenches at Bois De Finlande. At 5:00 p.m. the company was called up to support Company "H". The company marched in rear of Company "H" on the railroad and remained there until ordered to remove by the Commanding Officer and take up line of resistance on railroad. The company took up line of resistance and remained at alert the entire night and was relieved the next day (29th) at 10:00 a.m. by a French Colonel.

2/26/191

(Signed) Leon M. Anderson,
1st Lieut., 368th, Infantry

2. The order of the attack for the morning of the 26th was issued to all organization commanders the evening of the 25th. Special instructions being given for opening gaps in our wires during the night. On advancing from the French Trenches the morning of the 26th much wire was met with by all organizations, and owing to the fact that none had wire cutters considerable disorganization resulted in the companies, especially in the matter of liaison. "E" Company was directed on the morning of the 26th to follow and support Company "H".

2/26/192

As much time had been consumed decided to push these companies out into the Bosche trenches and to make a reconnaissance to determine the situation in front of the right of my

2/26/193

From P.C.; To Major 2nd Bn.

Please let me know if any of my platoons are in there. I am waiting to get the Company together. We are being shelled now.

J.W.J.

2/26/194

To M.A.E.

I have arrived at point where I can't go any further until I have flanked those guns that are holding me up. I cannot do anything at all with the men.

Map Reference- 273.10-293.10.

Thomas.

Received the order re the hour of reporting. Will keep you posted.

M.A.Elser.

From M.A.Elser; September 25;11.35 H; No.2; Foot Messenger. To C.O. Brown

Group for mixed post left here going to their position at 11.15. Scout Platoon at "G" Company P.C. is a local support subject to my order only. Norris never located in trenches we spoke of. We put on our gas masks at 11.29, but there was no gas. No answer to my No.1 message.

M.A.Elser

2/26/195

2.

From Norris; At New P.C.; 25th Sept. 23.02 H; No. 3; To Brown.

Everything in position. Smith and platoon from "K" going to mixed post to arrive by 1:00H. Shrapnel now falling on P.C.

NORRIS.

2/26/196

~~3. In attempting to advance my Battalion P. C. the morning of the 26th to a position in the rear of companies "G" and "F" I was unable to get liaison with either company;~~ neither was I able to get liaison with my advance post, or company "H" laterally on account of wire and other obstacles. I then returned to the rear of the lines and moved up in behind of companies "H" and "E", on the right, of my line to a position Co. "H" had reached in the first German trench."

2/26/199

MESSAGES

From M. A. Elser; Sept. 25;5.50 H; To Brown.

Patrols are cutting through wire. Have reported no contact no enemy movements. Have sent them word to speed on to their work.

M.A.E.

From M. A. Elser; To Brown; Time 6.05 H.

Mixed post on my right has its liaison with the left battalion of 308. N.T.R.

M.A.E.

From M.A.E.; Sept. 25; 10.21 H; No. 21; To Brown.

Am going to move P. C. to point 271.25-293.45. Will reorganize my liaison along the road running east - west between our trenches and the Boche trench. Jones reports at 9.26 that he is losing touch with his platoons. Request Norris to give me a company to go to my new P.C. (O.K. by phone to Norris).

From M.A.Elser; September 25; 11.00 H; No. 1. By Foot Messenger.

The 2nd (Elser) Battalion went over the top on the morning of September 26. Company F single file with Captain Jones went over the top at 5:30 A.M. Companies G + H followed — H keeping on the right. They advanced four kilometers and met the enemy fire, but the Machine gun platoon of battalion silenced at this fire. Company E, with Elser himself, ~~although due to go over the top at 5:30 did not actually start until~~ went over the top at 12:30. Being back of the assaulting line Elser with his men halted in the woods hunting for German souvenirs.

We crossed the first line held by the enemy at the beginning of the attack and from which they had been driven, but nothing was observed save scattered German helmets, hand grenades that resembled potato mashers and a few other articles of German soldier's equipment. There was an abundance of wire and a long line of partially demolished trenches. We continued our advance and soon came upon the enemy's second line of defense. Here we came in contact with the right platoon of Company H which was the right assault company of the Battalion. In moving through these trenches we came upon a member of Company H who had been shot by a German sniper and from that point on it became necessary to exercise considerable precaution. It was here that the Battalion Commander called for a strong patrol to go out and locate any resistance that might be encountered in our line of advance or its immediate vicinity. This patrol was organized under the leadership of First Lieutenant Oscar H. Smith and after a cautious but thorough scout-

2/26/200

. . . . . .

Operations Report, "H" Company, 368th Inf., for period Sept. 26 - 30, inclusive.

2/26/201

On September 26, 1918, I received orders to advance Northward with Company "H". We advanced and gained contact with the enemy at Triangle trenches 272.04-294.03. The advance was continued North to Falkenhayn trenches 273.01-294.04. At this point an engagement took place. We captured one man, killed two, and took 1 M.G. Lost 1 man. At night we returned to the Company P.C.

Capt B. Thomas

Operations Report, "E" Company, 368th Inf., for period Sept. 26 - 30, 1918, inc.

2/26/202

After the bombardment of the night September 25-26, the company, minus 1 platoon and 28 men left behind for liaison, made an advance. On reaching the German 2nd line we were joined by Company "H" and from there continued until very near their 3rd line. About 5:30 p.m. we were attacked by the enemy and on account of heavy M.G. fire, grenades, and bombs dropped from aircraft, were forced to withdraw. In this slight action the company suffered nine men wounded, and in the effort to bring all of them safely in, became separated from the head of the column. We were compelled to remain the night of September 26-27 in No Man's Land, reaching our original position about 9:30 a.m. Sept. 27.

Captain R. Simmons.

2/26/203

1. September 25th, 1918 companies "G", "F" and "H" occupied the French Trenches in the sector north of the Vienne Le Chateau - La Harazee Road, in the order named from left to right, with Company "E" in reserve behind Company "G". The Scout Platoon was sent to a position immediately in rear of Company "G" the night of the 25th. A mixed post was on my left flank connecting with the French Troops and another was on my right flank connecting with the 308th Regiment of the 77th Division.

Co G

. . . . . .

2/26/204

Operations report, "G" Company, 368th Inf., for period Sept. 26 - 30, 1918, inc.

On Sept. 26 the company took up position in the front line trenches at the point 71.5, 92.5 (Foret D'Argonne Map) in the Bois de Long Woods. The day and a part of the night were spent in reconnoitering and wire cutting in front of front line trenches under machine gun fire. Patrolling and wire cutting were successful.

Lieut L M Anderson

2/28/1

1.
6.

SECRET.

P.C. 368th Infantry,
Sapiniere
26 September 1918.
24.35 H.

OPERATIONS ORDER
No.38

Map Reference: Foret D'Argonne.

1. The following addition is made to paragraph 6, Operations order No 37:

(d) This Battalion will insure liaison with the supporting battalion of the 308th U.S. Inf. on its right, by detailing a platoon of Infantry and a Machine Gun Section under the command of an officer to report at Cote 215 (49.09) at H minus 4 hours and by connecting patrols.

2. This order is in conformation of orders given verbally and by message at 21.00 H on the 25th.

By order of Colonel Brown:
James T. Burns.
Captain 368th Infantry,
O. & I. Officer.

2/28/3

From Elser; At 2nd Bn. P.C.; September 26th, 1918; Hour-01 27½; No.3; (LiaisonF.M.). To C.O. 368th Infantry.

No more Boche shells . If we want artillery, will let you know. Thank you.

M.A.Elser

2/28/4a

Co. F.

We remained until daylight, when we withdrew to the Finlande trench, where we remained until we received orders to withdraw to the Company P.C. On the 29th and 30th of September, 1918, Company "F", 368th Infantry, was in reserve.

Sept 29

2/28/4

Casualties. On the 26th- 2 killed, 6 wounded; 27th- 1 killed, 10 wounded; 28th- 2 killed, 15 wounded; missing- 1 Corp. and 2 Privates (since Sept. 26).

(Signed) J.W. Jones,
Captain 368th Infantry.

5. My orders for the operations on the 27th were as follows:

2/28/2

(Message). From C.O. 368th Inf.; At Sapiniere; 26th September, 1918; At 17.00 H; No. 28-Phone and Messenger; To C.O. Brigade.

2/28/6a

Sept. 27, 1918, ½ company joined 2nd Bn. and ½ joined 3rd Bn. both parts of company advancing beyond Breslau trenches. On Sept. 30, 1918, all units ofcompany returned to Vienne-le-Chateau and reformed.

Total casualties 17 (wounded); killed, none.

(Signed) Joe Dabney,

Captain, 368th Infantry.

2/28/6b

Report of part taken by the 37 M.M. Platoon, 368th Infantry, in operations of the Regiment from September 25 - 30, 1918.

1. From September 25th to 9 a.m. September 28th, the 37 M.M. Platoon was commanded by 1st Lieut. Joseph E. Martin, 368th Infantry.

2/28/6

The Army Officers School opened August ~~one~~ 1, at Langnes, for eight weeks. Each of the four Regiments of the 93rd Division ~~were~~ was ordered to send ten men. The 369th Regiment sent ten and the 372nd Regiment sent one. None ~~were~~ was sent from the 370th and 371st ~~other~~ Regiments. ~~General Smith, of area where school was, complained that more~~ new ~~were not sent~~. Ten of the candidates finished and were given commissions and sent to the 370th Regiment. At the ~~2nd~~ second Army Officers School the 92nd and 93rd Divisions sent ~~63~~ sixty-three men. Of ~~63~~ these, ~~55~~ fifty-five finished; ~~and~~ ~~20~~ twenty of whom were sent to the 370th Regiment and the ~~rest were sent~~ remainder to the 92nd Division. ~~They made a fine record.~~

3/13/43

The return voyage was not as agreeable as the first trip across the Atlantic but the knowledge that Germany and her allies were whipped ~~in x~~ and the joy in the fact that we were returning to our homes more than compensated for the rough sea encountered. No lights were extinguished as on the first trip, smoking was permitted at all times and places and there were fewer details for fatigue and guard duty. There were fewer drills and no vigilence squads to watch for sub-marines.

The officers and enlisted personnel plainly showed ~~the~~ lack of personal responsibility that characterized their first voyage.

There was more sea sickness among the soldiers and officers on the return trip than there was on the first, due to the rough sea encountered. At times the wind blew at the rate of approximately one hundred miles per hour. Huge waves that resembled great mountains as the prow of the big ship sank with a receding swell only to rise again upon another, rose to heights estimated at from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five feet.

Upon reaching the United States the several organizations were temporarily stationed at the various debarkation camps until the men were organized into groups to be sent to camps nearest their homes to be discharged.

(4)

II. (a) The mission of the 92d Division is to hold the line of resistance of the MARBACHE SECTOR. This mission will be executed with the spirit of the offensive. No commanding officer will permit the occupation of his sub-sector to become passive. No opportunity will be lost to harass and weaken the enemy by activity in patrolling and control of no man's land. All plans will contemplate readiness for resumption of the offensive.

(b) On account of the importance of holding the region on XON and due to the terrain conditions the Sector is to be organized in an unusual manner and dispositions are necessary to meet a condition which requires a line of resistance in close proximity to the outpost line of observation.

To compensate for this absence of echelonment in depth, a barrier zone will be established in front of the STE. GENEVIEVE heights line.

3/6/21 Qmc

Next we were withdrawn to another defensive sector where we remained until the armistice; having some minor engagements against any enemy who had no offensive intentions.

3/6/21

was absolutely contrary to orders.

Attached herewith is G. O. 40 issued December 26, 1918, when the Division was in the forwarding area. Attention is called to paragraph 5 (e). After this order was put into effect it created quite a deal of comment on the part of the French population who felt that it was a reflection on the French women. Attempts were made to have this order revoked, but to no avail.

****

Co's "B" and "C" of the Motor Battalion, and Motor Battalion Headquarters arrived at the 92nd Division Headquarters at Bourbonne les Bains August 6, 1918. The remainder of the Train reached Division Headquarters at Dieulouard, Meurthe and Moselle, October 18, 1918.

Since arrival over seas the organization has been stationed at the following places:

The Train with the exception of the Horse Battalion, Pontanezen Barracks, June 27 to July 1; Montmorillion, Vienne, July 3, to July 6, Camp Cardonne, St Leomer, Vienne July 6 to August 14, 1918; the Horse Battalion rejoined the remainder of the Train at Camp Cardonne, moving there from Brest, thru Pontanezen Barracks; Camp La Courtine, Creuse August 15, to Oct 15; Dieulouared, Meurthe and Moselle, Oct 18 to Oct. 28, Marbache, Meurthe and Moselle, Oct 28 to present.

Headquarders Motor Battalion and Co's "B" and "C" of the Motor Battalion were detached at Camp Cardonne on July 23 and sent to Marseilles, France, remaining there from July 26 to August 2. This detachment has been stationed as follows since it's separation; Baurbonne les Bains August 6 to August 12:

Bruyeres August 13 to August 23, Raonl Etape August 24, to September 22; Argonne Forest near Fleury September 24, to September 30; Ste. Menehould October 1, to October 7; Belleville, October 8, to present.

January 10-20, 1919.

3/6/1e

When Dr. DuBois was in Mayenne he asked that Lt, Shaw get in communication with Capt, Roy Nash (white) Adjutant of the 350th F. A. informing him that he (Dr. DuBois) would pass through Domfront that evening, and desired to see him. Captain Nash received the message and met Dr. DuBois as per his request. On the same evening that Dr. DuBois arrived at Domfront a dance was being given by the Town Mayor for the officers of the Artillery Regiment. Capt. Nash invited Dr. DuBois to attend as his guest, and the invitation was accepted. All of the officers who attended the dance were white and all of the ladies were the French ladies of Domfront. The next morning Captain Nash was relieved as Adjutant of the Regiment.

At the time the order came to cease firing on the morning of November 11th at 11 o'clock the 367th Infantry had not sustained a single man killed.

The world knows that the Negro soldiers are good fighters. It has been proven in all previous wars and was clearly demonstrated in the war that has just ended. They marched forward with grim determination to prove to the world that bravery and valor in war are not the heritage of any particular race but the indiscriminate gift of God to all men. The Negro in common with all other American soldiers made the supreme sacrifice that democracy might not perish from the face of the earth.

3/313-0

Total killed, Officers - 6 - men 106

See appendage attached A. E. F.

3/3//3 Note

CASUALTIES, 92nd DIVISION

**** ******* ****

	Officers	Soldiers
Killed	6	106
Died of Disease		40
Died of Wounds	1	31
Deaths, Other causes		4
Severely Wounded	6	199
Slightly Wounded	10	344
Gassed	39	661
Missing		28

10

1416

4

Killed and Wounded

(14)

1919

A PROPOSED HISTORY AND SURVEY OF THE AMERICAN NEGRO DURING THE GREAT WAR.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has made a preliminary appropriation of $2,000 for the compilation of a History of the American Negro in the Great War. They have asked Dr. W.E. B. DuBois as Director of Publications and Research of their organization to plan and begin the carrying out of this work. Dr. DuBois has made the following proposals:

(1) That every effort be made to unite in the prosecution of this work the leading scholars and writers of the Negro race, and such Negro officials as have been intimately connected with the recent events. With this in mind he has invited the following persons to join him on an Editorial Board: Emmett J. Scott, Assistant to the Secretary of War; George E. Haynes, Director of the Bureau of Economics, Department of Labor; Carter G. Woodson, Editor of the JOURNAL OF NEGRO HISTORY; E. C. Williams, Librarian of Howard University; Colonel Charles Young, U.S.Army, retired; J. E. Moorland, International Committee of the Y.M.C.A.; Eva Bowles, International Committee of the Y.W.C.A.; John Hope, Special Inspector in France, colored Y.M.C.A.; Benjamin G. Brawley, Dean of Morehouse College; R. R. Wright, Jr., Editor of the CHRISTIAN RECORDER; Kelly Miller, Dean of Howard University; W. T. B. Williams, Field Agent of the John F. Slater Fund.

(2) That representatives of the leading organizations interested in and working among colored people should be called together in order to make an effort to collect a fund of at least $10,000 for the proper financing of the History.

(3) That the object of the work should be (a) to preserve the facts in regard to the American Negro in the Great War (b) to interpret these facts in a readable, popular way (c) to make a survey of the present condition of the Negro and his needs in the reconstructing following the war.

34-4-129

collecting facts. These committees would be distributed one in each state, one in each cantonment, one in each large city and one in each county where there is considerable Negro population (c) ~~t~~ an Editorial Board, ~~mentioned above~~. This Board would arrange and plan a History something as follows: ~~A~~ a preliminary volume of a popular character, giving a rapid survey, and designed for general sale; three volumes of documents and records and experiences; a fifth volume, dealing with welfare and philanthropic work; and a final volume, which would be a summing up and forecast of reconstruction.

34-4-130

This is simply a tentative proposal and liable to change, according to the amount of money raised and the opinion of the Editorial Board.

April 14, 1919

THE BOOK

Correspondence
Peabody - Scott - Woodson
Stockbridge
The Thanksgiving Suggestion
Telephone to Scott
Late answer
Friday midnight to Washington
Early visit to Scott 9 A.M.
Visit to Creel's office 10 A.M.
Visit to Secretary of State Office 10:30 A.M.
Pictures 11 A.M.
Visit to Scott 12 M.
Moton's quest
Visit to Creel - 12:30 P.M.
Visit to Secretary of State - 1 P.M.
Visit to Secretary of State - 3 P.M.
Passport at 4 P.M.
Office telephone to Scott
Arrive at 10:30 P.M.
Packing and Embarkation
Morning start with auto
Whitehall Street
Custom House
French consul - McClure
Custom House
Office and cab
French consul
$7.00
Baggage room
Back for registration
Creel
Motor
Scott
On board at 2 P.M.
The ORIZABA
Jim-Crow
The people
McClure - M.Glass
The N.Y.World, etc.
Lectures - The ORIZABA Me
Moton
The Moton Problem
The fight among the correspondents
Brest - Paris
Paris
Mourning
Sugar
Bread
Weather
Prices
Early closing, crowded trains
Hotel du Cloitre Et Honore
Chope de l' univers

34-4-113

34-4-114

The Moton Problem
His travels and letters
T. Jesse Jones
Colonel House
Pershing
My Pass
Hope and Toul
Mud and cold - Tim Brimm
Y.M.C.A.
Truck
Etenenim and Scroggins
Crowded trains
Tickets
Spingarn - Xmas Dinner
Mme. Calmon-Levy
Herr and Otlet
Lippman and R. Stannard Baker
Jackson - Diagne
The language difficulty
The question of haste
The difficulty of understanding
Letters from home
History of Troops
My second pass
The two weeks
G.H.Q.
Captain Boutte
Visiting troops
(92nd at Maron
The family)
370th at Le Mans
371st and 372nd at Le Mans
368th at Le Mans and Brest
367th at Le Mans
369th at Le Mans and Brest
H.Q. at Mayenne
349th and 351st at Dourfont and Ambriere
Transients at Paris
The Intelligence Bureau
The spirit of the troops
The officers, white and colored - saluting Boutte
Sleeping in camp
Hunting hotels
Transportation
The question of the front
The battlefields
Chalons
Chateau-Thierry
Rheims
Verdun
Toul - breakdown.
Nancy_
Pont-aMousson
Battle of Metz
Rayon l'Etappe and friends
St. Die and family
The line held
Home by Epinay and Bourbonne les Bains

34-4-115

- Chaumont and train
- Mrs. Hunt
- Visitors to Congress
- Y.M.C.A. secretaries

Congress

- First memoranda
- Visit of Diagne to front
  - Trocadero
- Clemenceau and Pichon
- The dinner
- The place
  - A bureau
  - Question of expense
- Fredericks
  - Second meeting
  - The second postponement
  - Grand Hotel - Mrs. Hunt
    - Printing
      - Invitations
      - Pneumatic
  - Speakers and audience
    - Cab hire
  - Jackson and Diagne
    - Clerks and typewriting
    - Letters from home
  - First session
    - The dinner
      - Russell and Walling
    - The resolutions
      - Diagne's reaction
      - Van Oberbergh
    - Otlet - Belgium, Portugal - general talk
    - ILLUSTRATION artist
  - The third session
    - Dead-lock on resolutions and surprise
      - The Colonial office
      - The old friend
    - The committee
    - Candace
  - The final session and bills

Aftermath

- Publicity
  - French (Temps)
  - American
  - Cable and cable notes
- Attacking the Peace Conference
  - Printing resolutions, etc.
- Prime Ministers
  - Diagne and balk
  - Simmons
  - Final agreement
  - Clemenceau, Vandervelde and Dandrade
  - Time
  - The great chance
  - Boisson and Ligne dract d' lopouse
  - I go

SOS - YMCA (1) (17)

Bullock

7. Belin, Mayor Dompierre, district

Moving Picture @ Bordeaux — Negroes as savages dressed modern - war with a "revolt" quelled. French people seeing it. Bullock present. No answer.

34-4-265

9 m men; 1500 white & 1500 colored (505 + 506 Engineers — all officers & non-coms white @ St Sulpice. ~~2~~ 2 two others had colored non-coms 2 co. 312 companies (col. non coms) 5 companies in all. All white ~~2 system~~ officers, Camp commander + Col. would not allow boys to work on Col. YMCA Put up with French labor (7 wks) worked in mess halls. Others (workers) sent (several men + Miss Curtis) Wylie started & show a French party of) workers' ~~wife~~ wives + daughter. Stopped by M.P., Camp Commander denied that there was any rule against working with white women. Was told Wylie had arms around woman — a lie. Clifford Miller came as chaplain (Lt.) Officers objected. Rogers came also as chaplain + another. Rogers wanted no salutes

34-4-266

P.M. Gills of unwritten order @ & white women & men. Brot up matter @ Y M C A. Conference. Mrs. Vincent Astor very helpful (Colored boy killed) Portrait of athletic director that southern conditions showed heroic. White chaplain complains & talks on race question. Bullock replies coldly - bullies them on by raw statements "Too bad that Amer. white is treating negro so as & make him ultimately a traitor". What caused they obj? Kill. - the way of getting negro. The white girls - lonesomeness & c Chaplains hope & go & Gen. Winfield Scott of Tex. over base section No 2. Asked for colored non coms. - kept out ~~drummed~~ of cafés in & a nearby town. Define status of Colored soldier in Camp. "I like darkies - but - " women are whole trouble. Insecticide gone sent. Truck came for Y M C A baggage. Refused & go until ordered regularly. Finally secretary told he & had been hearing a strange doctrine. Showed letter from General & Inspector that had been talking of intermingling of races. He was enraged & sorry. Ridder was secretary at Bassens & Mrs. C. was asked & speak there. Overtures tactfully worked & get them back out went & see Barnes. He said they must go home (Chs S - B. cmdg Poole James Wiley) & Refused Charges. Refused & go without charges. Put in Edmunds hands & he inquired into who they were in the states. Edmunds told they had complained as & food housing & c. They had not. Given temporary assignments. No further word

(Outside) H. — (1.) 978-4

Brest — 4000 — no col. officers except one chaplain (sent.) some col. non-com. loading & unloading docks — loading trains. Many white stevedores dirt floors — wooden barracks — food good some rough & canteen offices — others good (YMCA — Lt Jenkins col. chaplain of S.C., Waller Nelson YMCA. secretaries N.C. Univ Camden Knoxville.) Some terrible treatment (see Traylor, Atlanta a.v. Col by shot gun (see Jenkins) Fact read by whites

St Nazaire 5-10 thousand — good quarters in town & fairly good elsewhere. good food. Wooden & dirt floor barracks. Merilees, & other places for camps. Loading & unloading docks & railroad yards - Biggest AEF railroad yard. Col. dentists & one or two colored officers. Some non-coms including Sergeant. Kimball of York (YMCA sec. in U.S.) was Sergeant. Biggest YMCA. — 3 huts all colored sec. Some Merilees stevedores came as early as 2 years ago

Vernon, Melun & ~~Givors~~ 2-300 at V., Melun 500-1000 (mine since) Traylor, Dayton. O. & Earnest Richardson Princeton & Colorado &c at Melun. No col. officers & did not transit ~~col~~ secretaries.

Givors 7 or 8 000. Largest segregating plant in France & railroad yard. YMCA & Army warehouse machine shops. Small town — Chemicals & white & black soldiers — organized like a factory. No col. YMCA sec. (except), No officers ~~& non-coms~~, Rosenwald checks in September — "Col do not ~~look~~ drink fair chance — & do not give them fair chance" &c

34-4-267

34-4-268

2 Lis assumed Negroes. (Wiley, see from Secretary) only colonel rec. left. Col. secretary now asked for. No rule as to non-coms. - detailed on Cathedrals. One Pa. man used all colored non-coms - cleaned home & yard of any cowboy in camp. 2 col. secretaries. Not many clerks. Worked in separate gangs but some general kinds that Negroes got assigned work - but in real fine times as at work Dep. also place near G. - for assembly

Boadeaux

St Sulpice, Bassens, Genicart, Ancona etc)

15 - 20000 Negroes sometimes as many as 40000 (Extended as far as Pyrenees, along mines etc.) Worked in shifts day & night, Quadry & Hinckley, auto assembly airplane, Wareheuses (14 miles of warehouses at St Sulpice) Colored chauffeurs. Valley as many as three Infantries Some col. officers at St Sulpice & Ancona (Capt Brown Cleveland, Capt Hadley Nashville, Lt Hill, Kans. Chaplain C.L. Miller) Good many non-coms. Y.M.C.A. - Carey Mrs Curtis, Bullock, Craighead, Green (N.C.), Wiley, Misses Davis (Evansville) Sadler. One office kind comfortable clubrooms "Quiet & seclusion" Collection was made Chaplain. After armistice (from March 18 - Oct 18) colored secretaries asked again. But few available Kidder was even recommended to be kindly rudenced. Now 6 col. Sec.

Few deaths guicen & col. soldiers - quarantining for disease & disinfections. White women fraternal cause long hours. Educational programs - football - theatres movies etc.

34-4-220

Wood chuckers in 3 Pyrenees.

Rochefort 600 men - YMCA cal hut - some non coms (Hall, St. Paul) Seaport - ~~more~~ more whites than colored, a nice ballet one

La Rochelle mostly white - 3 miles out is La Pallice a sea port - many ships - 3-5 thousand Negroes - 24 hours a day in shifts loading & unloading ships. Some whites. ~~Few~~ No offices - few non coms. Rough town drunkenness & stringent rules - unhopeful in town. Effort to keep them out of brothels (Col. soldiers make friends with women & children)

Marseilles ~~5~~ 5000 men - ~~Few~~ loading & unloading ships - moves noon & midnight - some detachments coming & going but not excluded (Area normally in city - 27 companies) Own band, transported in trucks) No offices & few non coms.

(Sanitation, Morale & Base intelligence & S.O.S.)

Le Mans Recently men & returned wounded (1000 or less)

Tours 1000 men or less; airplanes & railroads, woodworkers, few non coms of any.

Verdun 5000 - salvage - in region of 20 miles around, Qual. Non coms - chaplains, dentists (Cobb, of St Joseph Mo.) [George V. Cloud, Knoxville, & Kansas - Sergeant Major - reg. army)

Chaumont ~~150~~ 3-4000 (region extends to Switzerland)

Roadbuilding - dump men supplies, ammunition &c fine sector du centre in Argonne heights - worked

Chalcipeaux

Col. more comes & fair treatment (Sadler)
S. manned of this Cold. - stench of the current officer who was drunk - reported and never called me. Much wood chopping near Sundersland. Whales also Valdahon [ordnance school] 1000 col - servants & laborers - 2 col. Lieutenants - Walker, Cleveland Jackson, Bell. eat in officers commons at sep. table. - others soldiers in woods. Sick horses, especially (D.C. Ross atlanta)

Beaune A.E.F Univ. - 15-20,000 enrolled - of these 20 a mine colored. At mid 1000 col. laborers (Wright)

90-mile-Ville 8000 col., Big supply camp more horses, clothes, food. Many mules. Some more comes - 1 chaplain (Robinson, Methodist West) YMCA sec. Jackson, Leader Louisville, Ky. (Sterling Ross of Atlanta)

Bar-le-duc during more one of the assaults & the argonne - many hundreds col. Also Lieut - engineers, re-enlistment (Lieut Jones - colored boys did wonders of this) roads ammunitions Clearing mine. - More comes, in engineers

Nantes 2000 col. sea port Some stevedores. Colored teaching Negroes and of city. C.S. Ross of Lime home Sergeant (Oscar Mitchell, Benton Harbor, Mich. Sergeant in office)

Issoire Area Aix les Bains, Chalonnes, Chambery, Grenoble YMCA. Some clashes - as a result Chalonnes & Chambery arrests several colored soldiers - day time arrest of Aix les bains etc Running colored people -

34-4-271

4-5th a week - 10 acc. Other arrest Jan 15 - 7 days Leave Bivouac 4th Div. 1 W.H.D Christmas

Wood [illegible] work was worst — merchant redress Captain charmed region kills soldier — drunk and [illegible] and weeping. Another officers kicks one to [illegible] death
St clair the chaplain who runs Y.M.C.A. in mud Envelope costumes Wanderjung

34-4-269

D5-17

Liste des Maires.

D5-17

- BORDEAUX Gironde
- SAINT NAZAIRE Loire Inf.
- LIVERDUN Meurthe & Moselle
- FRESNES/MARNE Marne
- BELLEVIELE Meurthe & Moselle
- BREST Finistere
- MARSEILLE Bouches du Rhone
- MARBACHE Meurthe & Moselle
- LOISY Meurthe & Moselle
- MANS Sarthe
- SAINT DIE Vosges
- BOURBONNE LES BAINS Allier
- RAYON L'ETAPPE Vosges
- SERQUIEU Hte Marne

3/15/3

- (Domremy
- (Nancy
- (Montmédy)
- (——)

D5-17

3/15/2

Dr. DuBois' Questionnaire to French Mayors of towns having Negro troops.

with 15 Responses.

368 (1)

Went to Argonne Sept 24

Drive started morning of 26th were brigaded with French first for this work

(Other regiments 365, 366 & 367 were in rear cleaning up)

Mission was "Combat Liaison"

↑ ↑

White 37th ↑ White 77th armies.

French div. 368

2nd Battalion went front

2 bn
3 bn
1 bn
} entire line

3/3/6

~~Brought back in order~~ 7 met first of bn under Elder went forward.
~~and~~ & halted in woods (Louvencourt) met enemy fire. M G Company
Relieved fire. Without Wait
Elder immediately withdrew ~~him~~ first of bn. To rear in single file picked up knowledge of rest of battalion about dark. Rest was taken taken out in order by Capt Dabney
& Lt. Powell of M G Co. about ~~Early dawn~~ midnight 10 A.M. of 26th.
Next morning 27th ~~the~~ after command by M G. Co. & without reporting battalion ~~sent~~ Elder moved out at 11 & sent 2 companies over the Crk about 4 A.M.

2/3/17

2nd Bn. extend line moving off 21st ~~over to C 5.30 AM~~ Major Elsey in Command all other Colonel Officers Admiral & Kilometre ~~Refers~~ meet enemy fire. ~~Refers of 366th M G silence fire with battalion withdrawn~~ (Equipment of 36th Brigade — not a single grenades — no artillery fire. Not a rifle bombs — no flares — no aeroplane panels for signals — no maps — no definite objectives.)

Hartley in disorder, 1st half under Elsey broke away entirely first other half under Capt Pabney & 1st Power of M G Company was

7 Co. over 5th C 5.30 — H Co with Elsey went over 12.30 — dug at 5.30 Capt Elsey with Gore

~~Could~~ in vain. Everything discouraged & battalion drifted away
~~Later~~ Major Elliott took all
Other home & I was relieved of Command of Bn. on 28th Entered hospital 28th for "Psycho-neurosis".
3/3/18
I M.C. Stetson fell back in charge of regimental P.C.
(Major Elliott went headquarters opened up on 26th Elliott wrung his hands — what shall I do
At night deployed ourselves — all his fault — wouldn't happen again — Commended M.C. next day)

Middlemist Liaison with Right Bn. Went forward 1½ kilometres stopped by enemy fire. Darkness ~~Fell back~~ Major Lloyd back with P.C. Cadden Jones, Emmett, Bell Fwd about 500 meters. ~~Stood Bell among 28~~. with 2 compass Sent message to Major for new ~~instructions~~ @ 6 pm 28th. Reed none. Jones ~~went over left~~ Lloyd under compass fire with 3 Sections to ford - no water - went over left again & went forward the same 500 meters. Heavy M.G. & rifle fire from enemy. Fell back a few yards & trenches. Men drifted away

3/3/15

3rd bn. moved out @ 4.30 pm. on 27th. (Note of missing ~~in~~ of Orders & Casualties) 3 companies in front line. Other Co. & 1 platoon of M.G. in support with Major. Companies advanced about 2½ kil. About 6:30 p.m. whole bn. fired upon by enemy M.G. Major ~~etc~~ killed support. M.G. platoon ordered back to trenches 75 yds in rear. Orders confused — all support retired to these trenches. Enemy support of 27 suspected & heavy artillery grenade M.G. & rifle fire of enemy. Front line ~~& support~~ (3 companies) breaks intense artillery fire (trench mortars 775, + M.G. + c) (no artillery fire 368 at all. Lose liaison with French + 2nd battalion + are ahead of both Trenches + Artillery support + fire from left + right rear as well as flank + front. About 12.30 p.m. line breaks, many men + a few officers retreat + rear of Major's P.C. in support trench. (Notes major of 3rd bn.) (orders with no maps — contradictory orders) Those officers reformed + questioned + report intense fire + own lack of equipment. Ordered

3/3/18

(had only rifles) Many men rush back & entrench behind all night under rain & fire — terrible night.

Next morning 28th at 7.30 fire line restored & advance ordered (9th Lancs lined them but lost touch with 2nd battalion on right & none touch 77th division)

go forward 2½ kilometers. Next

[1 Platoon (Co M. 3rd Bn.) as for in advance at all times that commander Lt Dent receives none of orders & could draw when Battalion left line night of 28th Platoon left there all night. Battalion Major took no items & left them. Evacuated night of 28th]

3/3/18

1st Battalion

[Morris only a headquarters officer — a Philadelphia gentleman & businessman keeping diary not trained as professional —
B.Y. Morris, NY Lawyer)

& return & ~~advance~~. take up positions. Many orders from behind
Major & Company commanders, e.g.
& advance — & halt — & hold — & withdraw — same words as quickly as possible. Ad 6.30 h on 28th order & advance, Ad. 3 Kil.
meet same conditions with same results. Major ordered by Col. & withdraw battalion from line. Utter confusion, MG fire & rain, many casualties & many gassed (8 km)

~~Left & advance with line &~~
~~grenade sees battalion in Col. & &~~ ~~form~~

Battalion reported works by Col.)
Patrol ~~from~~ returned at mg Sd. Be fore this & withdrawn knowing whereabouts of 3rd bat. The 1st was ordered & advance @ 9.30 AM Advanced 1 mile by 1 pm. Halted & tried & found battalion commander for 2 hours. French Lt.
~~Conducted us to Gen~~ but them on position in old German trench
Major appeared & ordered them forward 600 yds & deserted Germ trenches. Terrific shell fire.
Casualties. In trench all night of 29th. Noon 30th ordered & advance

1st Battalion at Bridge in Col 4s. Major J. N Merrill in command. 26th - 29th in reserve of regiment & trench line Ypres front line trenches Patrol X advance on night of 28th. 2 hrs under shell fire daily - ordered & relieved trenches. Start and arrival of 29th. ~~XXXXX~~ (Patrol & front 3rd went thro woods (3 co in line, ✕ M.G. 1 in centre, ✕ M.G.) 3 kil. Shell ✕ M.G. fire ✕ artillery barrage Dug in ✕ stayed all night under fire.

Our artillery (Friendly) came up & Over 1 Bde fired 2 Bde. Carry'd between both barrages. Relieved by Saxons & ordered out of line Major send word — did not land.

Assembled in dug — ✕ taken by train & Marbache area

Charged under 75th artillery
Law (Correction & abandonment)

2 Breaks in 3rd battalion

No changes in Court
Martials in 2nd & 1st Bgs.

5 C.M in 3rd Meeting

1 Cadet. 2 1st Lt & 2 2nd.

1 2nd Lt. has been vacated
(R.E. Johnson.

371

Drafted from S.C. No Col.
Offrs. Lowden is Field Offrs
Mob @ Camp Jackson Oct 5-17
Embark for France April 9
from N. News. Landed @ Brest
Went to Rembercourt-aux-
Pots (Meuse) for training
(all Col. now Comd) Left Jun 5 for Vedettes (near Bar-le-duc) Left in front, arriving Argonne June 22 with 157th French div.
13th army Corps. In battle line, reserve & front, till armistice

3/13/31

371

Comdt marines

Col. ~~Lilly~~ P.L. Miles

3/3/32

372

Is Tupelo insane?

Nervous breakdown

Rate annum

Cibul Tracks 92nd Comm'd

3/11/61

Where have been:

1 Case — hanged — date

Battalion unit of 92nd only conviction [illegible]

hanged on 18th of Jan 15

[3 cases pending final determination]

9 track for attempt —

3 sentenced 12 months under

6 acquitted for similar assault

(one)

Many calotes

[1 acquitted, pending
final determination

14 cases:
1 hanged
6 acquitted
3 remitted until arrest
3 pending
1 acquitted – pending

Black Folk & The War of the World

Du Bois
- Regular edition — $2.00
- Extension Edition - Maps & pictures — $3.00 with extension for 2 other volumes — $7.50

Williams & Du Bois
- Vol 2 — Documents maps & pictures 3.00
- Vol 3 " " " 3.00

12 books @ $1 each, to ... and
1 part every 2 months

3/14/57

1919

Folder A - Memos.

" B - The Meeting in Paris

" C - Correspondence

" D - Newspaper Clippings

Folder of duplicate resolutions etc

This material has been organized

RL

42/84/1

[Enc.]

CARNEGIE LIBRARY
E. C. WILLIAMS, Librarian

Howard University

Washington, D. C.

J. STANLEY DURKEE, A. M., Ph. D
President
EMMETT J. SCOTT, A. M., LL. B
Secretary-Treasurer

3/14/55

A few general works on the Great War

New York Times Current History 20 vols. 1915-19.

Dpyle, A. C. History of the Great War. 4 vols. now out. Doran. $2.50 each.

March, F. A. History of the world war. Winston. $3.25 (Contains many official reports, etc.)

Buchan, J. Nelson's History of the war. Nelson. About 23 vols. now out.

Collier's History of the war. 8 vols. Collier. $24

N. Y. Times Midweek pictorial. War of the nations. Portfolio in rotogravure. 528 pages. 1919. $13.

Harper's pictorial library of the world war. Harper. 1919. subs.

Simonds, F. H. History of the World War. Doubleday. (Rev. of Rev.) 4 vols. now out.

Chambrun & Marenches. American Army in the European Conflict. Macmillan. 1920. $3.

Complete history of the colored soldiers in the World War. paper. 1919. Bennett & Churchill. 373 Fulton St., Brooklyn. $1

Hampton N. & I. Institute. Brief sketch of the Negro and Indian in the Great War. paper. Hampton. 1919.

Lynk, M. V. Negro pictorial review of the great world war/ 1919. Memphis. 20th Century Art Co. $1.50

3/13/39

War Memoirs

Barnum

Ennis

Thomas (Baltimore)

E E Thompson

Companies "A", "B", "C"
All colored officers
Company "D"
1 white officer
5 colored officers
Medical Detachment
2 colored officers
Attached
1 colored officer

167th Field Artillery Brigade Headquarters F & S
18 white officers
1 colored chaplain

2/23/37

A 79

3/6/12

Negroes in Aviation

Story of a man & a drop of water made of round shell

Wm Pagnall

W
A2

2/2/37

Thanks

to 317. Engineers

Sig. IV

W
A2

3/20/36

The

317. Engineers

Sig. IV

W
A2

2/27/37

to 317 Engineers

Sig. IV

W
A 13

Chaplain Sinclair, 317 Engrs delivering the prayer.

Portland

Nov. IV

3/20/18

W
A 13

Thanksgiving [illegible] 317 Engrs
[illegible]

Portland

Nov. IV

11/28/18

W
A 13

See under "M"

Band 317 Engrs. 41

11/21/18

W
A 13

317 Engineers

Lt. Wm Robinson
Chaplain Singleton
Capt. W. H. Thompson

11
A 13

369th Inf.

A 14

325 Field Signal Bn

W
a 14

325th Field Signal Bn.
Stringing wire in No man's land
Biviers, France.

2/20/42

Env. IV

W
a 31

Flag of 15th N.Y. (369th Inf.)

(2 views)

2/20/42

Large photos

W
a 14

"Jakela Tautrum" presented by the 325th F. Signal Battalion
Jan 21-23/19 at Mayence, France

11½ X 10½

299K

2/20/42

W
a 31

369th in France.

2/20/42

